The estimated stock of subsidiary coin in the country March 1, 1900, was $80,346,414, of which $5,308,841 was in the Treasury. The estimated stock on November 1, 1901, was $90,613,512, of which $8,464,829 was in the Treasury, which shows a net absorption by the country of $7,111,110 in twenty months. The act of March 14, 1900, limits the stock of subsidiary coin to $100,000,000, and in view of the steady demand upon the Treasury it is apparent that this limit should be raised. It is not improbable that before another Congress shall have opportunity to act the growing needs of the country will have absorbed the entire coinage authorized. On November 1, 1901, the stock of bullion acquired under the act of July 14, 1890, was 51,763,642 standard ounces. If enough of this were coined into dollar pieces to take up the Treasury notes issued for its cost, there would remain 15,539,345 standard ounces, which, converted into subsidiary coin, would give $19,321,113. It is suggested that the limit of the country's stock of subsidiary coin be raised to $120,000,000.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman know why he only asked for a hundred and twenty millions? I have the official statement, and the reason he did not ask for more, although he thought there should be more, was that he did not want to create any opposition, and so he asked for what he absolutely had to have. Now, he says that it is far better to go on and take off the limit because there is no way in which the discretion can be exercised injuriously.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. The gentleman has spoken to-day in antagonism of the silver dollar. If an antagonistic Secretary of the Treasury should occupy the chair what would be the result? Many bad things have been done financially by a hostile official occupying a position like that. Under this bill, giving unlimited power to coin the silver dollar into subsidiary coin, what a power the Secretary of the Treasury would have. Suppose the gentleman from Connecticut was the Secretary of the Treasury, and as he is hostile to the silver dollars, what would he do?

Mr. HILL. Precisely what the bill says I should do. I would coin the dollars just as fast as the public demanded the subsidiary coin, and no faster, and no Secretary of the Treasury could do anything different, because he is limited in his power to the requirements of the public. There is no other way.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Did I not understand my friend to say that if he had it in his power he would melt the silver dollars into bullion?

Mr. HILL. I would if I had it in my power, but this law does not give any such power.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. You have just stated that the Secretary of the Treasury thought best to go further and take off the limit to the amount of subsidiary coin, and your bill does remove the limit. If you were the Secretary of the Treasury, and with a Congress in your favor, you might do it, you might carry out your wish.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is only the skirmish of what is coming. We have another bill, it may not come up at this session, but the great probability is that it will come up in the next session, destroying forever a favorite money of the people—and that is the greenback. It may not come up now, but it will no doubt have the consideration of this Congress at the next session. It was only two years ago that this Congress passed an act regulating the money of this country. It was prior to the Presidential election, and all the Republican stump speakers in the country went upon the stump telling the people that we had at last settled the money question. They said we have established and fixed the gold standard and that the money question was forever settled and everything was in good condition. Here it is two years hence we see bills introduced and we hear of trouble with our different kinds of currency, that everything is wrong, and the whole financial system needs perfecting. How can we have confidence in our friends on the other side when they change so very rapidly. I believe in a liberal amount of change money. But we have a large amount, certainly we will have legislated for a sufficient amount when we have carried out the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, I am willing that we should pass legislation as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and am willing that we go even farther by authorizing him to use all of the silver bullion in the Treasury for subsidiary coin to meet the demands of the country, but I can never consent to give him the power to melt down silver dollars into small coin. The amount of this bullion on hand is sufficient to increase the small coin some $60,000,000, which increase would be ample to meet the country's wants for some years to come. But my friend from Connecticut tells us what foreign countries are doing. It seems to be implied that we must imitate and ape foreign countries in our financial affairs. I believe the gentleman spoke of Germany, with two or three dollars per capita of subsidiary coin.

Mr. HILL. Three dollars and a half.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. I want to say that the United States has more banks and depends more upon checks than any other country, and does not need so much subsidiary coin. And, then, what occasion is there for conferring this great power upon the Secretary of the Treasury to coin these dollars into subsidiary coin? Suppose he should decide that we need $3 or $4 per capita, and should accumulate a surplus which would lie dormant in the Treasury and cease to be useful for active circulation. Under the present system the bullion and the silver dollar are performing a most desirable service as a medium of circulation. When the dollar is not used then silver certificates are issued against them, as well as against the bullion, in bills of small denominations, which are eagerly sought after as a most convenient and desirable circulating medium, only 2½ per cent of the entire stock of silver certificates of the Government, as I have shown in the earlier part of my remarks, remaining in the Treasury, that amount being really necessary, the balance being out in active circulation. Now, I desire to give a statement of the general stock of money of the Government, showing the amount in the Treasury and in circulation May 1, 1902.

	General stock of money in the United States.		Held in Treasury as assets of the Government.
	Apr. 1, 1902.	May 1, 1902.	Apr. 1, 1902.	May 1, 1902.
Gold coin (including bullion in Treasury)	$1,178,540,790	$1,183,652,727	$244,858,050	$242,945,286
Standard silver dollars	536,113,305	537,603,809	19,351,261	19,076,975
Subsidiary silver	93,417,944	95,299,190	10,725,509	12,444,591
Treasury notes of 1890	33,993,000	32,638,000	61,881	89,427
United States notes	346,681,016	346,681,016	9,987,171	8,572,902
National-bank notes	357,476,407	356,987,399	9,141,233	8,992,718
Total	2,546,192,462	2,552,862,141	294,145,105	292,111,899

	Money in circulation.
	Apr. 1, 1902.	May 1, 1902.	May 1, 1901.	Jan. 1, 1879.
Gold coin (including bullion in Treasury)	$635,194,761	$637,432,952	$329,240,795	$96,262,850
Gold certificates	298,487,979	303,274,489	253,259,799	21,189,280
Standard silver dollars	69,179,452	69,403,330	68,846,545	5,790,721
Silver certificates	447,582,592	449,123,504	430,573,522	413,360
Subsidiary silver	82,692,435	82,854,599	80,253,077	67,982,601
Treasury notes of 1890	33,881,119	32,548,573	51,795,097
United States notes	336,693,845	338,108,114	337,610,118	277,008,511
Currency certificates, act of June 8, 1872				33,190,000
National-bank notes	348,336,174	348,004,681	343,725,282	314,359,398
Total	2,252,047,357	2,260,750,242	2,195,304,235	816,236,721

Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the clause in this bill to melt down silver dollars and convert them into subsidiary coin is rather intended as a stab at or the beginning of the destruction of the legal-tender silver dollar than an honest effort to supply a really needed increase in the minor coin of the country. While this attack is being waged against the silver dollar, a bill favorably reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, known as the Fowler bill, to which I have already alluded, is pending. That bill covers four distinct propositions, as follows: To redeem the silver dollars in gold; to permit national banks to issue their own currency, based on assets; to allow the establishment of branch banks in all parts of the United States, and to retire or destroy United States notes commonly known as "greenbacks." That bill is far reaching, most objectionable, and dangerous. It is the beginning of a well-ordered plan to upset all of our present financial laws, to strike down all classes of our money but gold and bank currency. Why should we interfere with the $537,000,000 silver? It is performing a noble service and is dependent upon itself. The amount is fixed by law, and the most rabid monometallist can not now have any apprehension as to its safety and soundness. It adds to our circulation $7 per capita. And why retire the $346,000,000 greenbacks, one of our most convenient and favored moneys, a money that has taken such high position and stood the test since 1879? It costs the Government no interest to circulate it and adds $4 per capita to our circulation.

The total per capita of silver and greenbacks is $11 and fixed in amounts; therefore I will ever vote to maintain this circulation, for I can not see anything better to take its place.

I am discussing the Fowler bill as well as the Hill bill, because the two are closely connected, both having the same identical purpose, namely, the complete change and overthrow of our banking and money system. What is to take the place of greenbacks when retired? Here comes the serious and dangerous part of the Fowler bill. It gives power to the national banks to replace it with an issue of currency equal to the amount of the banks' capital. In addition to that, it empowers these national banks to establish branch banks over the county, thereby enabling a few of the large city banks soon to control all the banking business of the country.

In fact, it is expected that the ultimate result will be that one large parent bank, with agencies all over the entire country, such as now exists in Canada, Germany, France, Russia, and England, will be established. This provision of the bill would strike down our original American system of finance and banking. Why are we called on to give up all of our orjginal system and follow others when we have been so prosperous, rapidly outgrowing all other countries not only in great enterprises and wealth, but in our banking system. Great stress is paid to the Canadian system of branch banking. We find the capital of these banks twenty-five years ago was $66,800,000, and to-day it is $67,480,000, showing an increase of but little over half a million dollars and a total surplus to date of $36,900,000, while the national banks under our system have grown in the past twenty-one years as follows:

	1880.	1901.
Capital	$457,000,000	$955,000,000
Surplus	120,000,000	279,000,000
Deposits	967,000,000	3,661,000,000

The act of March 14, 1900, specially encouraged country banking by permitting the establishment of national banks in small towns with the small capital of $25,000. Just two years later we are asked to reverse this position and destroy these banks by authorizing the large city banks to establish branch banks over the country.

Who controls the great banking institutions to-day? It can not be successfully disputed that half a dozen of the largest banks of New York City, which have already absorbed some of the smaller banks of the same city, with capitals ranging from five to eleven million dollars, with deposits of fifty to one hundred and twenty-five million dollars each, are now owned and controlled by and known as the banks of the oil, sugar, and steel trusts and great railroad mergers. Now, Congress has passed laws antagonistic to these same trusts. The Fifty-sixth Congress, at its last session, passed a bill to subdue trusts; yet they grow daily in defiance of all law. The President, through the Attorney-General, is now prosecuting the railroad mergers and the meat trust; yet in the face of these efforts, by the provision of the Fowler bill, you would give power, invite, and legalize the consolidation of banks, with full power to issue money, to establish branch banks, and control the entire banking business of the United States. These banks would issue all the paper money, thus forming one of the most extensive, gigantic, and legalized money trusts. It would be but natural under the invitation extended by this provision of the bill for these large banks at once to form themselves into such immense corporations to control the banking business of the country. It would be one of the greatest trusts of the world.

It is a most serious matter that oil, sugar, steel, meat, and many other commodities of the country are monopolized and controlled by trusts. What will be the consequences when the circulation of all our paper money is in the hands of these same trusts? They could contract or inflate the currency, name the rate of interest at will, produce panic, destroy country banks, and take the money from the country to the cities, the people having but two privileges, one to deposit, the other to borrow at the rate named by the banking trust.

The independent banks of the country are owned by local capital and feel the deepest interest in and encourage and promote all enterprises that tend to build up the home town or city and surrounding country, while the concentrated or parent city banks, dominated and owned by these large trust schemes, would naturally supply the wants of these enterprises first and let the country have the overflow. The concentrated banks' only interest in the country would be to make money through its many agencies. This provision of the bill aims a blow at the liberty and independence of the people.

Let us not legislate to concentrate and to "Morganize" the banks and money of our country, thereby creating great money barons, but rather let the Government control the money and only permit banks to issue notes when properly secured and safeguarded by the Government. The production of gold in the world the past few years has been great, but in the United States it has been phenomenally so, reaching the high point in January last of $1,110,800,000. This, added to our other money, gives us the liberal and splendid circulation of $28.48 per capita. With this large stock of gold on hand, which grows daily, with every prospect of a continued increase, strongly protecting every phase of our finances, we should cease continually tinkering with the greenbacks and silver dollars, both fixed in quantity by law, and like every dollar of all our money, good beyond criticism. [Loud applause on Democratic side.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask a similar privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the time for general debate on the other side has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. It has; and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has three minutes.

Mr. HILL. I will surrender those three minutes and ask that the bill be taken up under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements, and thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding, and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, is hereby repealed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. The discussion of this bill to-day has covered a wide field; and it is well to bear in mind that in one section this bill provides for three specific things: First, that the bullion now in the Treasury shall be coined into subsidiary coin; second, that after that silver bullion shall be so coined and when the public necessity shall require it the Secretary of the Treasury may cause standard silver dollars to be coined into subsidiary silver coin; third, that the limit of $100,000,000 upon the amount of subsidiary coin shall be repealed. The Government has now on hand an amount of silver bullion——

Mr. BELL. Does not the bill provide that no further silver bullion shall be coined into silver dollars?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have stated that the bill provides for coining the present stock of bullion into subsidiary coin. As that is all the silver bullion out of which silver dollars could under existing law be made, my statement necessarily included that of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BELL. Yes; if you coin it all now.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The silver bullion now in the Treasury, when coined into silver dollars, would make $47,063,493. It would, if coined as subsidiary coin, make $50,320,608.

The first question is whether this bullion ought to be coined into standard silver dollars or into subsidiary silver coin. We find that it will produce more when coined into subsidiary coin than it will as standard silver dollars, and to that extent it is an inflation of the currency of the country, not a contraction, as complained of on the other side of this Chamber. Let us see, then, which would be the more advantageous for this Government—to coin it into standard silver dollars or into subsidiary coin.

In determining that question it becomes desirable to know what demand there is for these various forms of money. The United States Government now has coined 539,791,805 silver dollars. Of these, $69,403,330 are in circulation, or about one-seventh. The United States has coined into fractional currency now a little over $95,000,000. Of these, six-sevenths are in circulation among the people. Look at the contrast. Of the silver dollars six-sevenths are in the Treasury and one-seventh among the people; of the subsidiary silver coin six-sevenths are circulating among the people and one-seventh is in the Treasury.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I scarcely have the time, but I will yield for a moment to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Are not the silver dollars in the Treasury represented and in circulation through the medium of the silver certificates?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That question has been answered repeatedly to-day, and therefore I decline to answer it again.

I have here before me a statement, which I will insert in my remarks, of the subsidiary silver coin in circulation, in the Treasury and in the country on July 1 of each year from 1890 to 1901, and on May 1, 1902.

Statement of subsidiary silver coin in circulation in the Treasury and in the country July 1 of each year from 1890 to 1901 and May 1, 1902.

Date.	In circulation.	In Treasury.	Total.
July 1—
1890	$49,507,786	$27,317,519	$76,825,305
1891	53,195,300	24,653,400	77,848,700
1892	57,714,402	19,807,076	77,521,478
1893	59,350,291	18,064,832	77,415,123
1894	52,567,373	23,682,552	76,249,925
1895	54,415,773	22,438,661	76,854,434
1896	54,584,997	21,386,510	75,971,507
1897	53,860,303	21,958,066	75,818,369
1898	57,722,767	18,404,843	76,127,610
1899	62,522,398	12,344,154	74,866,552
1900	68,942,809	13,920,873	83,863,742
1901	71,634,112	18,188,659	89,822,771
May 1, 1902	82,854,599	12,444,591	95,299,190

This covers the end of the fiscal year for each of the years enumerated and covers the 1st day of this month, and it shows that there is less subsidiary coin in the Treasury on the 1st of this month than there was on the 1st day of July of any year since the year 1890, save only July 1, 1899.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, we find, then, that this Government, having coined nearly 540,000,000 standard silver dollars, is only able to keep in circulation about 70,000,000 of them. Can there be any question as to whether the most demand is for subsidiary coin or for standard silver dollars?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How much of our gold is in circulation in the shape of gold certificates?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not recall the exact amount.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, several hundred million dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It has varied from almost nothing to some hundreds of millions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it is objectionable to circulate our silver in the form of silver certificates, why is not it objectionable to circulate our gold in the form of gold certificates?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is no objection to circulating silver in the form of silver certificates that I know of.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought the gentleman was objecting to it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That he was trying to get rid of the silver dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken. I was not trying to get rid of the silver dollars. The truth is, we have two uses to which we could apply this bullion. If we apply it in one line, there is a demand for it, and if we apply it in the other line it appears there is no demand for it. It further appears that if we apply it in the line in which there is no demand, we have then got to buy silver in order to use that silver in the place where the demand does exist, and I submit that the real object and the real purpose of these gentlemen in opposing this bill is to force upon this Government further silver purchases to make fractional currency.

They say that the silver certificates are in circulation, but what is the function of the silver? The silver dollar is a standard dollar by law, but it is a token dollar in fact, and what is the object of issuing paper certificates to represent token dollars? If the paper certificate is good to represent 61 cents, why may it not just as well represent 100 cents? What is the utility in a 39-cent dollar as a basis for the issuance of paper currency? If the Government is able to maintain by its fiat money at 100 cents that is intrinsically worth 39 cents, I am unable to see why it could not by its fiat maintain at par an equal amount of money that had no intrinsic value.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is not the silver dollar full legal tender for debts?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And subsidiary coin is only limited legal tender?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then for what reason should we convert full legal-tender money, as the silver dollar is, to limited legal-tender money, as the subsidiary coin is?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman was giving attention to what I was saying he would have discovered that I was discussing the proposition of coining the silver bullion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The gentleman was discussing also in favor of coining the silver dollar into subsidiary coin.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will give my reasons for that, if I am not interrupted. Now, this bill further provides that when that silver bullion shall have been exhausted, that if the public necessities require it, silver dollars may be coined into fractional currency. Not until the public necessities require it, and not until all the bullion has been exhausted, does this bill provide for that, and when that time comes for every dollar of money that is destroyed in this way, $1.07 will be issued by the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How soon does the gentleman think that necessity will arise?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not know when, nor do I care. Whenever that does come, in place of resulting in contraction, it means that for every silver dollar retired $1.07 of fractional currency shall be issued and added to the circulating medium of this country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Which is not full legal-tender money.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Which is a legal tender for a limited amount, and redeemable in full legal tender, so that one who has it can get legal tender for it at any time he wants to and to any amount that he wants to.

Now, I am surprised at the attitude of gentlemen upon the other side, because they seem to think this is a contraction measure, when to a limited extent it is an inflation measure. This bill provides for coining silver into subsidiary currency, and subsidiary currency not being of the full weight of the standard, it will make more subsidiary currency than it would standard currency, and more of this blessed silver money we have been hearing so much about than would be made under existing law.

Now I have gone over most of the reasons why I think this bill ought to pass. It ought to pass, because this silver bullion is demanded in subsidiary currency and is not demanded in standard dollars.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman from Connecticut, in discussing this bill this morning, said that the bullion which would be coined into subsidiary coin would supply the needs of the country for the next ten years.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. THAYER. Or nearly that.

Mr. HILL. No.

Mr. THAYER. And that as a physical proposition it would require about that length of time to coin it.

Mr. HILL. I did nothing of the kind. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I decline to yield any part of my time to a settlement of the question between these two gentlemen as to what the gentleman from Connecticut said.

The bill provides that dollars that do not circulate may be taken and utilized by being coined into money that will circulate. It further provides that there shall be no arbitrary limit upon the amount of subsidiary coin. Why should there be such a limit? There is no such limit upon gold. Why should this country put a limit upon the amount of money of a given denomination that can be issued by law? Why should the Government by law provide that not more than $100,000,000 of subsidiary silver shall be issued, if as a matter of fact the public necessities require more? This does not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to coin any of these silver dollars until the public necessities so require.

Now, there is one matter that I should like to call attention to, and then I am done. A minority member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, Mr. COCHRAN, has filed a report in which he says this measure is in furtherance of the general policy of contraction which has been observed by the Treasury Department for over thirty years. I want to say first that this bill provides for no contraction; that in so far as it affects the volume of the circulating medium of this country it provides for its increase; that it provides that every dollar issued under it shall be a limited legal tender, and fully redeemable in full legal tender, and does not operate in any sense to contract the cur-rency.

But that statement, made in this report, is of equal fairness and equal accuracy with the rest of the statement made in the report to which I refer. In the thirty years to which the gentleman refers there has been no contraction of the currency at any time, except during the Administration of President Grant, to the extent of $35,000,000, and from the date of that contraction to this hour there never has been such a contraction.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the gentleman to say that this works no contraction of the currency.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is what I said.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And that if all these silver dollars are turned into limited-tender silver, that that limited-tender silver will be redeemable in full legal-tender money?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, take the condition to-day. We have about $2,000,000,000 of legal-tender money, of which $600,000,000 are silver dollars. Now, assume that that $600,000,000 are turned into subsidiary silver and are redeemable, as the gentleman says, in full legal-tender money. I will ask whether there will not then be of full legal-tender money only $1,400,000,000 instead of $2,000,000,000?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would answer that that would not be true for numerous reasons.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And whether that would not work a contraction of the legal-tender money to the extent of $600,000,000?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would answer that if the gentleman's first proposition is incorrect, as I have said it is, it follows that a deduction based upon the assumption of its truth would be filled with the original error.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. You ask me if a certain matter is true and I tell you no; and then you ask if the condition you have assumed would result in a certain and particular way.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Why is it not true?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like the gentleman to point out the fallacy in my statement.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The fallacy is that this bill does not provide for coining all the silver dollars into fractional currency. It expressly prohibits it except to the degree authorized by this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And therefore it can only be done to the extent that the public necessities require.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And who is to be the judge of the public necessity?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And that puts the power into his hands to coin it all if in his judgment there is a necessity for it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCCLEARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On May 26, 1902:

H. R. 2316. An act to correct the military record of Albert Boker.

On May 27, 1902:

H. R. 11353. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 192. Joint resolution fixing the time when a certain provision of the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1903, shall take effect; and

H. R. 8587. An act for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes.

On May 28, 1902:

H. R. 750. An act granting a pension to Martin Essex;

H. R. 3829. An act granting a pension to Mary Ann Merrow;

H. R. 4089. An act granting a pension to Ada L. McFarland;

H. R. 4204. An act granting a pension to Hester A. Furr;

H. R. 5553. An act granting a pension to Nancy E. Hardy;

H. R. 5554. An act granting a pension to Egbert A. Stricksma;

H. R. 6021. An act granting a pension to William Kaste;

H. R. 6663. An act granting a pension to John York;

H. R. 7085. An act granting a pension to Hannah H. Graham;

H. R. 7541. An act granting a pension to Annie Shinn;

H. R. 8341. An act granting a pension to Hannah C. Chase;

H. R. 12054. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Burrill;

H. R. 307. An act granting an increase of pension to John L. Branson;

H. R. 671. An act granting an increase of pension to Orra H. Heath;

H. R. 1046. An act granting an increase of pension to John J. Martin;

H. R. 1129. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Shaffer;

H. R. 1695. An act granting an increase of pension to Christopher C. Perry;

H. R. 1696. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick A. Condon;
H. R. 1715. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry P. Hudson, formerly Henry P. Dow;
H. R. 1724. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel F. Thompson;
H. R. 2563. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert R. Strong;
H. R. 2661. An act granting an increase of pension to Oswald Ahlstedt;
H. R. 3238. An act granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo Weeks;
H. R. 3292. An act granting an increase of pension to Arthur H. Perkins;
H. R. 4451. An act granting an increase of pension to George K. Thompson;
H. R. 5020. An act granting an increase of pension to Courtland C. Matson;
H. R. 5219. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Donne;
H. R. 5865. An act granting an increase of pension to John C. Campbell;
H. R. 5911. An act granting an increase of pension to Gilbert G. Gabrion;
H. R. 6063. An act granting an increase of pension to John Brill;
H. R. 6172. An act granting an increase of pension to Friedrich Weimar;
H. R. 6721. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Ray;
H. R. 6750. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Hoxie;
H. R. 7228. An act granting an increase of pension to Christian Christianson;
H. R. 7229. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Dunning;
H. R. 7401. An act granting an increase of pension to William Brown;
H. R. 7897. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael J. Daly;
H. R. 7918. An act granting an increase of pension to James C. Pettee;
H. R. 8106. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel J. Mahoney;
H. R. 8401. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry E. Murphy;
H. R. 8409. An act granting an increase of pension to Cyrenus Larrabee;
H. R. 10488. An act granting an increase of pension to Kate W. Milward;
H. R. 10821. An act granting an increase of pension to Abby T. Daniels;
H. R. 11133. An act granting an increase of pension to James D. Lafferty;
H. R. 11170. An act granting an increase of pension to William Kunselman;
H. R. 12978. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Smith;
H. R. 13019. An act granting an increase of pension to Marietta Elizabeth Stanton;
H. R. 13036. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Greenhalgh; and
H. R. 13371. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles D. Palmer.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COINAGE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GROW. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "coin," in line 9, add "Provided, That the subsidiary coins shall be half dollar, quarter dollar, and 10-cent, and 5-cent pieces; each of the aforesaid pieces shall be an aloquit part of a dollar of 412½ grains."

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, the present subsidiary coins in silver are proportionate parts of a dollar, 384 grains instead of 412½ grains. If I understand aright, for coins that are used in the Philippine Islands, if we made the half dollar of this proportion of 412½ grains, they could be used in place of the coin that is now being used there. In that case our American coin would go into circulation, taking the place of the Mexican coins they use there; and in that way we could put a large amount of silver in circulation that would probably never come home.

Now, we redeem the subsidiary coins in gold, and therefore the weight would make very little difference with us. It circulates with us with very little trouble, because it is redeemed in gold. But if we have to have a coinage circulate with that of another country, it must have the same weight of silver, otherwise it would not circulate with it. It would be redeemed in gold as our present subsidiary coin is. Then we could make our 5-cent pieces of silver instead of nickel, and the nickel could be used for cents instead of copper. The copper is not worth now the amount it circulates for, and we are using a subsidiary coin that is worth less than the amount it represents. We want to circulate silver in money by making it in the proportionate parts of a dollar—2 halves, 4 quarters to the dollar, and 10 dimes to the dollar, and 20 5-cent pieces to the dollar—thus giving a silver coin for a nickel coin, so that our large 5-cent pieces can not be confounded with a quarter. You can not tell as to which it is if a man's eyesight is poor, without close inspection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer another amendment, on line 9, after the word "coin," "which shall be full legal tender for all debts, public or private." Now, I wish to test the sincerity of the gentleman from Iowa, who says that if all the silver is coined into subsidiary coin——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I desire to make the point of order against that amendment.

Several MEMBERS (on the Democratic side). Too late.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I asked recognition of the Chair as soon the gentleman stated his amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I submit the point of order is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman's point of order to be that the amendment is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not stated my point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My point is that the point is made too late.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I addressed the Chair, and the Chair did not hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one amendment now pending, and the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada would not be in order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is the point I make.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask that the amendment be again read. We could not hear it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would like to know what amendment is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report for the information of the gentleman from Nevada.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I move to amend the amendment by adding the following words: "which shall be full legal tender for all debts, public and private."

Mr. HILL. I make the point of order against the amendment to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will state the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the following words: "which shall be full legal tender for all debts, public and private."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, I wish to test the sincerity of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HILL. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can make his point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a bill to increase the subsidiary coin, not to change its character in any way whatever.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want to inquire whether it is in order to make a point of order after discussion has commenced?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made the point of order before any discussion had commenced on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. COCHRAN. The point of order was made after the gentleman from Nevada had addressed the Chair.

Mr. HILL. The point of order was made before the amendment was read.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman made the point of order after the gentleman from Nevada had addressed the Chair and was proceeding with his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. This matter is entirely within the discretion of the Chair, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Connecticut to make the point of order before any discussion occurred on the amendment. The Chair will now hear the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman from Connecticut made his point of order first before the reading, and then after it was read, so that the gentleman is correct when he said he made it before the amendment was read.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the bill now pending before the House is a bill to increase the subsidiary coin, and the amendment provides for giving it an entirely different character. I think it would be just as proper under the provisions of this bill to move, as an amendment, to take away the legal-tender quality of the outstanding silver dollars simply because the item of "silver dollar" is mentioned in the bill. The bill contemplates no such action, and the amendment offered does not seem to me to be germane to the bill for increasing the existing form of currency. I do not question the germaneness of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I would like to be heard on it before it comes to a vote.

Mr. NEWLANDS and Mr. COCHRAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. COCHRAN. To speak to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I purpose discussing the point of order, and I presume it will be in order after I am through for the gentleman from Missouri to take it up. This bill provides for the coinage of subsidiary silver. What is subsidiary silver? Subsidiary silver is silver money of a smaller denomination than one dollar. We are providing for this subsidiary coinage, and it is entirely competent for us to determine its legal-tender quality, whether it shall be unlimited or whether it shall be limited.

In addition to that it is proposed by this very bill to change the full legal-tender silver into limited-tender silver. It is entirely competent for us to declare that in making the change into the silver of the smaller denomination the legal-tender quality of the silver shall not be lost. Here is a clear question under this law as to whether this silver that is to be coined is to be full legal tender or limited legal tender. That is not settled by the bill as it stands, and an amendment making the point clear is plainly in order. Subsidiary coin is not now full legal tender, but it has been so in the past, and it would be strange indeed if we could not by amendment make the subsidiary coin contemplated by this bill a tender for all debts. To my mind the amendment is clearly germane.

The gentleman from Iowa insists upon it that there would be no contraction, if this bill passed, if $600,000,000 of silver dollars were changed into subsidiary silver of limited tender; that the volume of money would not be contracted. While it is true that the total volume of the full legal tender and limited tender will not be changed, it will still remain $2,000,000,000, but it will not be two billions of full tender money. What will we have? Fourteen hundred millions of full legal tender and six hundred millions of limited legal tender—$2,000,000,000 under our present system of full legal-tender money—greenbacks, gold, and silver, every dollar of which can be held as bank reserve, every dollar of which can be used as the basis of bank credit, every dollar of which can be given an efficiency of $5 in the credit extended by the bank check and deposit system, and yet the gentleman insists that when he has diminished this legal-tender money to the extent of six hundred millions that can be held in bank reserves, money that can be used as the basis of credit—that in reducing it from $2,000,000,000 to $1,400,000,000 he is not working a contraction of the currency.

I call it trifling with reason to present such arguments as that, and I wish to test the gentleman's sincerity as to his contention that there is no difference between limited tender and full legal tender. If one is the counterpart of the other, one just as good as the other; if he intends to work no contraction of the volume of legal-tender money in this country, let him vote for this amendment, which places every dollar of this small silver on a basis with the other money of the country, retaining the volume of legal-tender money at two billions instead of reducing it to fourteen hundred millions. It is an amazing contention, Mr. Chairman, that in changing the form of our silver coinage we may not at the same time provide that the full legal tender of the coin shall be preserved.

Mr. COCHRAN. This bill is supplementary to existing legislation relating to subsidiary coinage. Existing laws define the legal-tender qualities of subsidiary money. It seems to me that a ruling to the effect that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] is not germane would be most extraordinary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to be heard for just a minute on this point of order.

It will be observed by the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], and also the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], to that amendment take effect after the word "coin," in line 9; and the words preceding the amendment are these:

And thereafter, as public necessity may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin.

There is no question that silver dollars are full legal tender. Is it possible, then, that when we are providing for the melting down of coinage which is full legal-tender money and recoining it into other money we can not say that the money thus recoined from legal-tender dollars shall also be full legal tender? That is all I wish to say.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule and does not desire to hear any further discussion on the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right, if the Chair is going to rule my way.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania follows the word "coin," in line 9, and to that amendment the gentleman from Nevada offers an amendment providing that this subsidiary coinage shall be full legal tender. The coin that this amendment proposes to declare shall be full legal tender is to be made or recoined from full legal-tender silver dollars. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada is germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and therefore the Chair holds it in order. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada would be to practically restore the legislation which existed prior to 1853 on the question of the full legal-tender quality of subsidiary silver, and it would put the United States in opposition to the experience of the civilized world.

Now, I have simply to represent the case as it is, that while other nations are decreasing their legal-tender silver this amendment proposes that our silver 5-cent pieces, our dimes, our quarters, and our half dollars shall immediately be transformed into legal tender; not only legal tender but unlimited legal tender beyond the extent of the standard silver dollar. I want the gentleman from Nevada to understand the full purport of his proposition, that under the terms of his amendment, if it passes, the United States bonds can be paid in 25-cent pieces. With that statement of the case I am perfectly willing to leave it.

Mr. GROW. Did the Chair rule that the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada was in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided—that it is germane and in order.

Mr. GROW. Then I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON and others objected.

The CHAIRMAN. There being objection, the amendment, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is doubtless aware, can not be withdrawn.

Mr. HILL. I call for a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada.

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I will not follow my friend from Missouri in going over questions from Coin's Financial School, but I would like to call the attention of the committee to the amendment and the specific proposition now before the committee.

The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] is to insert in line 9 a proposition to coin from 50-cent pieces down to 5-cent pieces of subsidiary coin under this act, that the silver bullion at present may be thus coined, that silver dollars may be also coined into the same kind of subsidiary coin if needed hereafter. That is his proposition, providing for 50-cent pieces down to 5-cent pieces. The gentleman from Nevada offers an amendment to the amendment, which is as follows:

Which shall be full legal tender for all debts, public and private.

The effect of this will be that this subsidiary coin we provide for would be legal tender for all debts public and private. You might have half dollars in your pockets which would be a legal tender for all debts public and private, but if you had a half dollar coined under the former law, it would not be legal tender except in limited amounts. So you would have the absurdity of having two kinds of subsidiary coin, one of which would be legal tender for all debts public and private and the other a limited tender.

It seems to me that is all the question there is before the committee. Gentlemen go back into the discussion of 1894, 1895, and 1896. That has been relegated to the tomb of the past, never to be revived on either side of the Chamber. But we should address ourselves to the specific question that is before the committee, and it seems to me no gentleman, even though a Democrat or a Populist, ought to vote for this amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. LACEY. I suppose I shall have to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, stated to the Coinage Committee that this "chicken feed" of 5-cent pieces, quarters, dimes, and half dollars are taken into consideration in making up the per capita of circulation. Does not the gentleman think that if that is done that this "chicken feed" or subsidiary coin should be made full legal tender?

Mr. LACEY. I think not, because it has less metal in it. We put less silver in it away back fifty years ago, in order to keep it from being melted down or sent abroad.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman want the silver sent abroad anyway—get rid of it?

Mr. LACEY. We are not needing to send it abroad. We have use for it here. The purpose of the bill is this: There is frequently not enough of small change. My friend from Tennessee will remember that he spends more of this small change than anything else. He has to break his bank bill and put it into small coin.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; I am not one that goes through the gilded halls or through Wall street with the very rich, like my friend from Iowa. I am down on the ground floor with the plain people, and I feel very much at home there. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. I am glad to see that my friend is down among the plain people. I supposed he was a plutocrat, for he carries that unctious look most of the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman from Iowa is the first man that I ever deceived with my looks. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. But seriously, Mr. Chairman, I want to get the House down to the plain proposition before us. It is now proposed to have another kind of legal-tender money as subsidiary silver coinage. I will ask my friend whether he thinks that there ought to be two kinds of subsidiary coinage—one 25-cent piece, for instance, which will be a limited legal tender, and another 25-cent piece an unlimited legal tender?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman does not state correctly the effect of the amendment. Now, here is a letter from the Director of the Mint dated May 15, 1902, which says:

> Subsidiary silver coin—dimes, quarters, and halves—are legal tender for $10 in any one payment.

That is the present law, he says.

Now, we do not have two kinds——

Mr. LACEY. The proposition here is that we shall have two kinds. I hope my friend will come up with the "plain people"——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I will not use that much time, unless I have the assistance of my friend from Tennessee, which I hope I shall have.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, this official letter dated May 15, addressed to myself, states that we have but one kind of subsidiary coin——

Mr. LACEY. That is not a legal tender except for a limited amount.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is a legal tender to the amount of "$10 in any one payment."

Mr. LACEY. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] provides that this particular coinage to be put into circulation under this bill shall be a legal tender for all debts to an unlimited amount. Consequently, if the amendment becomes law, we shall have two kinds of subsidiary coinage. Is not that correct?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not at all; because this act amends or repeals all laws inconsistent with it.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is so declared at the end of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. The language of the amendment is "such coin."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the construction of the gentleman from Iowa is correct, we can easily remedy that by further amendment.

Mr. LACEY. I think my friend from Tennessee would certainly be willing to concede, when his attention is called to the plain letter of this amendment——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can we not change that, if necessary, by further amendment? Up to 1853, half dollars, quarters, dimes, and half dimes were legal tender in "all payments whatsoever." Now, does the gentleman think that we are any better than those people who made that law and continued it in force down to 1853. And these coins struck before 1853 remained full legal tender up to June, 1874. Should not we have the benefit of making that currency full legal tender, inasmuch as we are the people who have to use it?

Mr. LACEY. We may not be any better; but we are alive and able to attend to these things in this day and generation in the light of later experience, which has taught us that it is best to have a subsidiary coinage a little lower in its legal-tender character than other money, so that it may be treated as a token, and may stay at home.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the gentleman wants to get rid of it. If my friend wants to send it abroad and get rid of it, let him vote that way and send it abroad. We have plenty to spare, I dare say.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I understand, the gentleman from Iowa objects to my amendment——

Mr. LACEY. I object to the form of it, because I think it will effect perhaps what the gentleman has not intended.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman, as I understand, objects to the amendment upon the ground that if it be adopted there will be two classes of subsidiary money—one the $86,000,000 now in circulation and bearing a date prior to the present, and the other the $600,000,000 authorized by this act and bearing a date subsequent to the enactment of this bill. Now, I ask the gentleman whether he is in sympathy with the purpose of this amendment, which is to prevent the $600,000,000 of full legal-tender silver now existing and about to be converted into subsidiary coinage by this bill from being reduced to a limited legal tender and thus losing its debt-paying capacity? I ask the gentleman whether he is in sympathy with the purpose of the amendment; for if he is, the form may be readily modified, if it be defective.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask the gentleman a question. I think there may be time for him to answer before my five minutes expire. I will ask him whether the effect of his amendment will not be to make two kinds of subsidiary coinage—one a legal tender generally and the other not?

Mr. NEWLANDS. But, admitting that——

Mr. LACEY. I would like the gentleman to answer the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Admitting for the sake of argument that the $86,000,000 already issued would be a limited legal tender, but that the $600,000,000 to be issued under the amendment would be a full legal tender, I ask the gentleman whether he is in sympathy with the purpose of the amendment, which is to retain the debt-paying capacity of the $600,000,000? If the gentleman is in sympathy with the purpose of the amendment, it can be readily changed in form so as to suit his views.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman asks me whether I am in favor of issuing $600,000,000 of fractional silver currency, I will answer, certainly not. No such amount will be needed. He is assuming now something will be done that no one ever thinks of doing and that the bill does not contemplate, that is not involved in the bill, and then says, if that is so, what would you think about it? I am trying to bring my friend down to the plain proposition that he has brought before this committee, and am trying to find out whether he is in favor of it in the form in which he has drawn it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is the gentleman in favor, I ask him——

Mr. LACEY. I am in favor of making the subsidiary coin a limited legal tender.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of giving the Secretary of the Treasury discretionary power——

Mr. LACEY. Oh, certainly; it is perfectly safe.

Mr. NEWLANDS. To change six hundred millions of whole debt-paying money into six hundred millions of limited debt-paying money—token money?

Mr. LACEY. There is no such proposition.

Several members asked for a vote.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an opportunity to argue the amendment which I have had the honor of introducing. My previous argument was to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to state to the gentleman that the purpose of this amendment is to prevent $600,000,000——

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield to a single question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes, if the gentleman will extend my time.

Mr. HILL. I will ask that your time be extended.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

Mr. HILL. I would like to know from the gentleman himself whether his amendment applies simply to the subsidiary coin which is to be recoined from the dollar, or whether it applies to the whole volume of subsidiary coinage?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the gentleman that as framed it will probably be construed to apply only to the silver coined under this act—the new coinage.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one more question? Does the gentleman himself think it would be a wise proposition to have two kinds of subsidiary coin?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would rather extend the full debt-paying capacity to all of it.

Mr. HILL. Then why does not the gentleman change his amendment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well, I will change it if the gentlemen on that side will give me any sympathy or support at all, but this is a mere quibble. You are endeavoring to defeat my proposition.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from Connecticut would raise the point of order.

Mr. HILL. Of course I shall.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman is trying to defeat my amendment. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is endeavoring to defeat the beneficial operation of this amendment by mere quibbling. He proposes to allow the proposition robbing $600,000,000 out of two billions of its full debt-paying capacity to go through simply because he fears that there may be two kinds of subsidiary coinage. They are perfectly distinguishable—the currency heretofore issued and the subsidiary coin hereafter to be issued. It will be merely a question of dates. I say it will be perfectly easy to make it extend to both, but I do not propose to be trapped into an amendment which may be declared out of order by the Chairman upon the ground that it relates not only to the silver to be coined under this act, but to the silver heretofore coined.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is clearly distinguishable.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would rather have two kinds of subsidiary coin, a small part of it without full debt-paying capacity and a large part with full debt-paying capacity, than to have it all with a limited debt-paying capacity. I would rather have this contradiction in the subsidiary coin than rob $600,000,000—one-third of the present money volume of the country—of its full debt-paying function. That is the proposition I want the gentleman to face, and not evade it by quibbling. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, then, in my remarks upon the main bill I called the attention of the House to the fact that at the close of the civil war we attempted this currency tinkering, this retirement of full legal-tender money and the substitution of something that was not full legal tender, just as you propose to do now. At the close of the war, having passed through that great struggle successfully, with a bright and brilliant future before the entire country, we concluded to retire the greenbacks which had been issued and which had a full debt-paying capacity, and what did you propose to do? Back those greenbacks gradually, as France did with her paper money after her great war with Germany, by both silver and gold? No.

Your effort was to substitute bank currency which had not a full debt-paying power, which was not a legal tender, and what was the result? You destroyed about $300,000,000 of greenbacks and you substituted five or six hundred millions of national bank notes, and the five or six hundred millions of national bank notes did not fill the place of the three hundred millons of greenbacks, because the bank notes were not legal tender. Why? Because every dollar of those greenbacks in the reserve at the banks was the basis of $5 of credit. Three hundred millions in the banks meant fifteen hundred millions of bank credits, credits to customers against which they could draw their checks, and as you drew out that three hundred millions of greenbacks and destroyed them you destroyed fifteen hundred millions of bank credit, and what did you substitute for it? Four or five hundred million dollars of other bank credits, differing only in form.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from Nevada be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks that the time of the gentleman from Nevada be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, by retiring the three hundred millions of greenbacks you destroyed fifteen hundred millions—five times the quantity of bank credits—and what did you substitute for it? You substituted a different form of bank credit in the shape of a national-bank note, of no full legal-tender quality, not entitled to be considered as the reserve of a bank.

No bank could take a dollar of it and issue $5 of credit upon it, as it could against a greenback; and so for $1,500,000,000 of bank credits, of which the $300,000,000 of greenbacks were the base, you substituted four or five or six hundred million dollars of bank notes, not having the same debt-paying capacity, not having the same full legal-tender quality, and the entire country went upon the shoals of bankruptcy from 1873 to 1878, from which the country was only rescued by the moderate increase in the metallic volume of the currency of the country, brought about by the passage of the Bland Act. And so in 1893 you sought to do what? Not to substitute some instrument of credit for legal-tender money, but you sought to repeal the Sherman Act, the successor of the Bland Act, and to put a stop to that moderate and sustained flow of new money that was entering this country.

Panics are created in two ways. One is by a checking of the accustomed supply, the other by a retirement of a portion of the existing volume. In 1893 you checked the moderate and accustomed supply by the repeal of the Sherman Act. In 1873 you not only checked the moderate supply by refusing coinage to silver, but you substituted, as you propose to do now, for a portion of the full legal-tender volume of money a credit device of no full debt-paying capacity. Just as you propose to substitute now for $600,000,000 of silver, having a full debt-paying capacity, $600,000,000 of small coin that can only be used in the small transactions of life in the payment of debts amounting to not more than $5.

How paltry are the five-dollar debts as compared with the great masses of debts—the debts of a hundred dollars, of a thousand dollars, of a million dollars, of billions of dollars that are pressing upon this world. While only a small amount of limited legal tender is required to satisfy these small debts, it requires a very large amount to satisfy these large debts and sustain the great volume of credit based upon it. So, I tell you, that although the application of the same principle of contraction under this bill may be moderate and gradual and its accomplishment may take a series of years it will have the same effect as the substitution of bank notes for full legal-tender money in 1873 and the same effect as the stopping of the accustomed flow of new money in 1893. Whether you prevent the new from coming in or whether you destroy the old, both are contractions, having in view the increasing population and the increasing demands of business.

If you are with us in a disposition to defeat the retirement of $600,000,000 of legal-tender money, we can easily make it effective by framing a substitute here for this amendment, assuming that no point of order is made against it; but I refuse to present a substitute to which, perhaps, a point of order may be made. The amendment which I have offered will make the present bill harmless by preserving the full legal-tender quality of all the money coined under it, and for that reason the amendment should receive the support of every member who is honestly opposed to a contraction of our money supply.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on July 1, 1901, there was of general stock of subsidiary silver in the Treasury and in circulation only $89,822,771, the sum of $10,587,557 being in the Treasury and $79,235,214 in circulation.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. There would be the same propriety in making copper cents legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private, as to make 5-cent pieces full legal tender. The idea, from a business standpoint, of providing by law that a debtor might pay a debt of a million dollars in 5-cent pieces! It would make the legislation absurd and ridiculous.

As to two kinds of subsidiary coin, supposing the amendment I propose is adopted. It does not apply to any coinage already made. It only applies to future coinage, and either one of them under existing law in certain amounts would be legal tender. That would not be changed. Certain amounts of them could be used, but you could not apply 5-cent pieces to the payment of a large debt, which would make a ridiculous business transaction.

Subsidiary coinage is not for large business transactions. Therefore its legal-tender quality is only applied to small amounts, and they would be redeemable in gold. Whether there was the same amount of silver in one case as in another would make no difference. Both would circulate with us, one just as well as the other; but if they were to circulate outside of this country, the coin must have about the weight of the coin you want it to displace in other circulations; and my only object was that we should make the American coin in such shape and form as to be adapted to the Eastern trade—coins that they are accustomed to. And if I was right in my opinion about our 50-cent piece made in this form, it would have about the same quantity of silver as similar coins now circulating in China and India. If they came back again, they would be redeemable in gold, and if they went into use there it would absorb so much of our surplus silver. But to make subsidiary coin full legal tender without limit for all debts, public and private, would be, as a business proposition, ridiculous and absurd.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12704, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6037. An act granting increase of pension to William C. Holcomb;

H. R. 7560. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Butler;

H. R. 2623. An act granting increase of pension to John Smith;
H. R. 12779. An act granting an increase of pension to George Chamberlin;
H. R. 12422. An act granting an increase of pension to David Topper;
H. R. 11288. An act granting an increase of pension to William E. Ball;
H. R. 11124. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Scott;
H. R. 5475. An act granting increase of pension to August Schill, alias August Silville;
H. R. 5551. An act granting increase of pension to Charles Edward Price Lance, alias Edward Price;
H. R. 12983. An act granting an increase of pension to Eleanor Emerson;
H. R. 5248. An act granting a pension to Francis A. Tillotson;
H. R. 9794. An act granting a pension to Zebulon A. Shipman;
H. R. 4542. An act granting pension to Eliza J. West;
H. R. 9833. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret McCuen;
H. R. 13614. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. White;
H. R. 8487. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. Crist;
H. R. 13037. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis W. Anderton;
H. R. 9695. An act granting an increase of pension to Evaline Jenkins;
H. R. 13211. An act granting a pension to Melissa Burton;
H. R. 6718. An act granting increase of pension to Andrew R. Jones;
H. R. 2286. An act granting increase of pension to Mary Etna Poole;
H. R. 2289. An act granting increase of pension to Pitsar Ingram;
H. R. 8134. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Dunn; and
H. R. 12428. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth G. Getty.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 3208. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain license taxes; and

S. R. 87. Joint resolution to permit steam railroads in the District of Columbia to occupy additional parts of streets in order to accommodate the traveling public attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in October, 1902.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 5913. An act granting a pension to Cherstin Mattson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, for ten days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. NEEDHAM obtained leave to extend his remarks on the bill H. R. 14511, this day passed.

SALMON FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

By unanimous consent, the reference was changed on the bill (H. R. 14464) to amend the laws relating to the salmon fisheries of Alaska from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to the Committee on the Territories.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the conference report on the bill H. R. 14018, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report and statement will be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The report of the conference committee is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 7, 10, 12, 23, 38, 39, 42, 43, 47, 50, 57, 62, 63, 71, 73, 74, 82, 83, 85, 87, 88, 89, 95, 96, 112, 114, 117, 124, 125, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 158, 159, and 161.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 8, 11, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 26, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 44, 45, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 59, 60, 61, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, 76, 77, 79, 80, 81, 86, 92, 93, 94, 100, 105, 107, 109, 113, 115, 120, 122, 123, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 132, 134, 135, 136, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 154, 155, and 157; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$165,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$900,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may exchange the present site for a new site, without additional cost or expense therefor to the Government, and erect the said building thereon;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "value," in line 2 of the amendment, insert ", not exceeding $175,000,;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 10, line 12 of the bill, strike out the word "fifty-four" and insert in lieu therof the word "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the amendment after the word "therein," in line 4 of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "United States post-office and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., from $278,881.38 to $328,881.38;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert: "United States post-office at Kalamazoo, Mich., from $78,236.74 to $128,236.74;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "from," in line 2 of the amendment, strike out the words "fifty-eight thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$71,807;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "drawn," in line 7 of the amendment, strike out the words "by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert in section 5, page 25, after line 12, in the bill, the following: "United States post-office at Moberly, Mo., $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert in section 5, page 25, after line 16, in the bill, the following: "United States post-office at Columbia, Mo., $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$125,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "and ten" in the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$165,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from is disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$125,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in section 5, page 25, after line 10, in the bill, the following: "United States post-office and other governmental offices at Crookston, Minn., $4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "eighty," in the amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in section 1, page 4, after line 11, in the bill, the following: "United States post-office and court-house at Scranton, Pa., from $273,190.85 to $363,190.85;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert as a paragraph the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not purchase a site in either of said cities until satisfied that the price therefor will permit the execution of all the provisions of this section in each of said cities within said limit of cost for site and building, respectively."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 108: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the site selected shall consist of not less than an entire block or square of ground in said city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the site selected shall consist of not less than an entire block or square of ground in said city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following: "United States post-office and custom-house at Traverse City, Mich., $6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 116: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "United States," in line 1 of the amendment, insert the words "post-office and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 118: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the words proposed to be stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment and insert after the word "company," in line 16, page 27 of the bill, the following: ", and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the supreme court of the District of Columbia upon petition of said company to inquire into, hear, and determine the amount of the actual cost and expense to the company for the removal of its tracks from E street by reason of the provisions herein contained, and to enter judgment against the United States and the District of Columbia jointly, in such sum as may be so ascertained as aforesaid, and either party shall have the right of appeal from such judgment as in other cases;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 28, line 2, of the bill, after the word "he," insert the following: "and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, acting jointly;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 131: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That 'An act to provide for enlarging and improving the United States Government building at Macon, Ga., and to appropriate $48,000 therefor,' approved March 2, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the post-office and court-house building at Macon, Ga., to be extended and enlarged so as to provide necessary accommodations for the post-office, courts, and other branches of the Government service, and to purchase additional ground on Third and Mulberry streets, in his discretion, for this purpose, and that the total cost of all said improvements, changes, and repairs, including the purchase price of such additional ground, shall not exceed the sum of $156,000: Provided, That the limit of cost of such additional land shall not exceed $31,000.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert "and seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 141: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$675,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment, after the word "settlements," strike out the words "is hereby appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be paid from the amount herein authorized;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 153: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert in line 19, page 42, after the word "at," the following: "Honolulu and Hilo, Territory of Hawaii; Albuquerque, N. Mex., and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 160: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 160, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment strike out the words "have prepared" and insert in lieu thereof the word "prepare;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 162: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Change "Sec. 25" to "Sec. 24;" and in line 1 of the amendment, after the word "constructed," insert the words "enlarged, or extended;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change "Sec. 24" to "Sec. 25;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 164: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 164, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change "Sec. 25" to "Sec. 26;" and the Senate agree to the same.

DAVID H. MERCER,
CHARLES W. GILLET,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
F. E. WARREN,
J. L. RAWLINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Increase over House bill of $25,000 for public building at Anniston, Ala.

On No. 2: Senate recedes.

On No. 3: Increase over House bill of $100,000 for branch mint at Denver, Colo.

On No. 4: Increase over House bill of $15,000 instead of $90,000, as requested by the Senate, at Beaumont, Tex.

On No. 5: Increase over House bill of $20,000 for public building at Burlington, Iowa.

On No. 6: Change in phraseology; no additional expense.

On No. 7: Senate recedes.

On No. 8: Increase over House bill of $15,000 for public building at Joplin, Mo.

On No. 9: Increase over House bill of $25,000, instead of $75,000, as requested by the Senate, for public building at Butte, Mont.

On No. 10: Senate recedes.

On No. 11: Increase over House bill of $500,000 for custom-house at New York City.

On No. 12: Senate recedes.

On No. 13: Allowing an exchange of site without cost to the Government, instead of allowing an unlimited price for new site, as provided by Senate, at Elizabeth City, N. C.

On No. 14: Limits condemnation proceedings to $175,000, instead of no limit, as provided by the Senate, in Richmond, Va.

On No. 15: Increase over House bill of $50,000, instead of $100,000, as requested by the Senate, for court-house at Portland, Oreg.

On No. 16: Retains United States courts in building.

On No. 17: Increase over House bill of $100,000 for public building at Memphis, Tenn.

On No. 18: Increase over House bill of $50,000 for public building at Dallas, Tex.

On No. 19: Change in phraseology limits size of ground.

On No. 20: Increase over House bill of $2,000 for public building at Rome, Ga.

On No. 21: Increase over House bill of $2,000 as limit of cost for additional ground at Rome, Ga.

On No. 22: Increase over House bill of $50,000 for public building at Springfield, Ill.

On No. 23: Senate recedes.

On No. 24: Senate recedes.

On No. 25: Increase over House bill of $50,000, instead of $60,000, as requested by the Senate, for public building at Kalamazoo, Mich.

On No. 26: Increase over House bill of $45,000 for public building at Omaha, Nebr.

On No. 27: Increase over House bill of $32,000 for public building at Greensboro, N. C.

On No. 28: Strikes out the word "provided."

On No. 29: Strikes out lines which are included elsewhere in the bill.

On No. 30: Insertion of language construing parts of section No. 1.

On No. 31: Increase over House bill of $900,000 for custom-house at San Francisco, Cal.

On No. 32: Substitution of language eliminated elsewhere in the bill.

On No. 33: Senate recedes.

On No. 34: Authorizes public buildings at Oklahoma City, Okla., at a cost of $50,000.

On No. 35: Limits cost of public building at Guthrie, Okla., to $50,000, instead of $100,000, as carried in the House bill.

On No. 36: Eliminates language which is inserted elsewhere.

On No. 37: Increase over House bill of $75,000 for public building at Ogden, Utah.

On No. 38: Striking out provision for Oil City, Pa., and inserting the item in section No. 4.

On No. 39: Senate recedes.

On No. 40: Transferring Rock Hill, S. C., to section No. 4.

On No. 41: Transferring Martinsville, Va., to section No. 4.

On No. 42: Senate recedes.

On No. 43: Senate recedes.

On No. 44: Reduction of $5,000 from House bill providing for public building at Harrison, Ark.

On No. 45: Increase over House bill of $20,000 for public building at Batesville, Ark.

On No. 46: Striking out the words "and court-house," at Colorado Springs, Colo.

On No. 47: Senate recedes.

On No. 48: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Torrington, Conn., instead of $20,000, as requested by Senate.

On No. 49: Increase over House bill of $25,000 for public building at Athens, Ga.

On No. 50: Senate recedes.

On No. 51: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Ottawa, Ill.

On No. 52: Provides for public building at Meriden, Conn., at a cost of $100,000.

On No. 53: Provides for Oil City, Pa.; transferred from section No. 3.

On No. 54: Provides for public building at Kirksville, Mo., at a cost of $40,000.

On No. 55: Provides for a public building at Marblehead, Mass., at a cost of $40,000.

On No. 56: Provides for a public building at Oak Park, Ill., at a cost of $35,000.

On No. 57: Senate recedes.

On No. 58: Provides for a site at Moberly, Mo., to cost not exceeding $5,000, in lieu of Senate provision for building and site to cost $40,000.

On No. 59: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Stillwater, Minn.
On No. 60: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Greenville, Tenn.
On No. 61: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Maysville, Ky.
On No. 62: Senate recedes.
On No. 63: Senate recedes.
On No. 64: Provides for a site for public building at Columbia, Mo., at a cost not to exceed $5,000, in lieu of Senate provision for building and site to cost $40,000.
On No. 65: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Elkhart, Ind.
On No. 66: Increase over House bill of $5,000 for public building at Muncie, Ind.
On No. 67: Provides for a public building at Dekalb, Ill., at a cost of $65,000.
On No. 68: Increase over House bill of $5,000 for a public building at Richmond, Ind.
On No. 69: Provides for a public building at Anderson, Ind., at a cost of $80,000.
On No. 70: Increase over House bill of $15,000 for a public building at Hammond, Ind.
On No. 71: Senate recedes.
On No. 72: Transfer of a proviso.
On No. 73: Senate recedes.
On No. 74: Senate recedes.
On No. 75: Increase over House bill of $25,000 for a public building at Sherman, Tex., in lieu of Senate increase of $50,000.
On Nos. 76 and 77: Transfers from section No. 3 provisions for public buildings at Rockhill, S. C., and Martinsville, Va.
On No. 78: Increase over House bill of $20,000 for public building at Battle Creek, Mich., in lieu of Senate increase of $30,000.
On No. 79: Increase over House bill of $25,000 for public building at Biloxi, Miss.
On. No. 80: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public bilding at Nashua, N. H.
On No. 81: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Atlantic City, N. J.
On No. 82: Senate recedes.
On No. 83: Senate recedes.
On No. 84: Increase over House bill of $40,000, instead of $55,000, requested by Senate, for public building at Grand Forks, N. Dak.
On No. 85: Senate recedes.
On No. 86: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for a public building at Westchester, Pa.
On No. 87: Senate recedes.
On No. 88: Senate recedes.
On No. 89: Senate recedes.
On No. 90: Increase over House bill of $10,000, instead of $20,000, as requested by Senate, for public building at Georgetown, S. C.
On No. 91: Increase over House bill of $5,000, instead of $15,000, as requested by Senate, for public building at Flint, Mich.
On No. 92: Increase over House bill of $25,000 for public building at Charlottesville, Va.
On No. 93: Increase over House bill of $75,000 for public building at Superior, Wis.
On No. 94: Increase over House bill of $10,000 for public building at Baraboo, Wis.
On No. 95: Senate recedes.
On No. 96: Senate recedes:
On No. 97: Increase over House bill of $50,000 for public building at Huntington, W. Va., in lieu of Senate increase of $75,000.
On No. 98: Allowing $4,000 for site at Crookston, Minn., instead of $75,000 for site and building, as provided by Senate, and transfers item of Crookston to another section.
On No. 99: Provides for public building at Gainesville, Tex., to cost $70,000, instead of $80,000, as requested by the Senate.
On No. 100: Provides for a public building at Laramie, Wyo., to cost $100,000.
On No. 101: Decreases cost of public building at Scranton, Pa., to $90,000, instead of $100,000, as requested by the Senate.
On No. 102: Increase over House bill of $25,000, instead of $35,000, as requested by the Senate, for a public building at Laredo, Tex.
On No. 103: Strikes out item limiting cost of sites.
On No. 104: Provides for site at Yankton, S. Dak., to cost $7,000, instead of $7,500, as requested by Senate.
On No. 105: Provides for site at Muscatine, Iowa, to cost not to exceed $15,000.
On No. 106: Provides for site at Albuquerque, N. Mex., to cost not to exceed $10,000.
On No. 107: Increase over House bill of $40,000 at Spokane, Wash.
On No. 108: Senate recedes, with an amendment.
On No. 109: Increase over House bill of $40,000 at Tacoma, Wash.
On No. 110: Senate recedes, with an amendment.
On No. 111: Substitutes Traverse City, Mich., for Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., and provides for site.
On No. 112: Senate recedes.
On No. 113: Increase over House bill of $8,000 for public building at Hamilton, Ohio.
On No. 114: Senate recedes.
On No. 115: Provides for site at Champaign, Ill., to cost not to exceed $15,000.
On No. 116: Provides for site at Natchitoches, La., to cost not to exceed $5,000.
On No. 117: Change in phraseology, without affecting limit of cost, Washington, D. C.
On No. 118: Limits cost of site, Washington, D. C.
On Nos. 119, 120, and 121: Change in phraseology, without affecting limit of cost, Washington, D. C.
On Nos. 122 and 123: Decreasing limit of price of sale of public building at Kansas City, Mo., from $300,000 to $260,000.
On Nos. 124, 125, 126, and 127: Affecting the public building at St. Louis, Mo., without changing the limit of cost.
On No. 128: Strikes out limit of cost for site at Wheeling, W. Va.
On Nos. 129 and 130: Limits price for sale of old public building at Wheeling, W. Va., to $125,000.
On No. 131: Increase over House bill for public building at Macon, Ga., from $72,000 to $154,000.
On No. 132: Increase over House bill of limit of cost for additional ground in Toledo, Ohio, $12,000.
On No. 133: Increase over House bill of $25,000 instead of $40,000, as requested by Senate, for site in Des Moines, Iowa.
On No. 134: Decreasing size of site.
On Nos. 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, and 147: Relates to public building at Los Angeles, Cal., and makes an increase over House bill of $350,000.
On No. 148: Amendment for public building at Winston-Salem, N. C., which was stricken out in conference.
On Nos. 149, 150, 151, and 152: Are simply changes in section numbers.
On Nos. 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, and 159: Refer to investigation of postoffices in different parts of the United States.
On No. 160: Provides for plans for public building at Columbus, Ohio, to cost not to exceed $5,000.
On No. 162: Provides fire limit.
On Nos. 161, 163, and 164: Change in section numbers.

Net authorization as passed by House	$15,820,450
Net authorization as passed by Senate	19,889,150
Net authorization as reported from conference	19,425,450
Decrease on Senate amendments in conference	1,149,500

DAVID H. MERCER,
CHARLES W. GILLET,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place this letter from the Director of the Mint in the RECORD, so that it may be read by members of the House for their information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from the Director of the Mint. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear what the request was.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The request is to print in the RECORD, for our information, a short letter from the Director of the Mint touching the pending matters in the bill that we have been considering in the Committee of the Whole to-day.

The letter referred to is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, May 15, 1900.

Hon. GEORGE E. ROBERTS, Director of the Mint, City.

DEAR SIR: Will you please, to-day, if possible, and if not, as quick as you can, answer the following questions for me?

1. What is the amount of seigniorage (and in what metal) now in the Treasury of the United States?
2. How did it get there, and under what law?
3. What is the value of same in ounces (and what measure do you use)?
4. How many dollars can be coined of this silver bullion?
5. To what amount is our subsidiary or fractional coinage legal tender?
6. Please give the names of these coins and let the amount for which they are legal tender follow after each name. For example: Nickel tender for $—. Dime, tender for $—.
7. What is the amount of such coinage or coins now in the Treasury of the United States? How much is in circulation?
8. What season of the year is this coinage most in demand?

Yours, very respectfully,

JNO. W. GAINES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, May 15, 1900.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES, House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries of current date the following is respectfully submitted:

As to questions one, two, and three you are informed that the amount of silver bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, on hand at the mints May 1, 1900, was 36,400,670.47 fine ounces troy. The cost was $32,935,134. This bullion would coin in silver dollars $47,063,493; in subsidiary silver coin $50,320,608. All silver bullion purchased by the Government is carried on the books of the Treasury at cost and the seigniorage declared on each month's coinage and paid into the Treasury. If the silver bullion on hand May 1 were coined into silver dollars it would give a seigniorage of $14,128,309, and into subsidiary silver $17,385,484.

The amount of silver subsidiary coin outstanding May 1 was $95,299,190. Minor coins—that is, 1-cent bronze and 5-cent nickels—are legal tender for 25 cents. Subsidiary silver coin, dimes, quarters, and halves are legal tender for $10 in any one payment. The amount of subsidiary silver coin in the Treasury on May 1, as per circulation statement inclosed, was $12,444,591. The season of the year which calls for the greatest amount of subsidiary silver and minor coins are the months of August, September, October, November, and December, and the mints are frequently pressed to their utmost capacity during these months to meet the demand for small coins.

Respectfully,

R. E. PRESTON, Acting Director of the Mint.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill for five days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that all members may extend their remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill for five days. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want this to go into the RECORD for the benefit of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of William A. Walker against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Mary C. Slosson, administratrix of estate of John N. Slosson, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of H. B. Lansden, administrator of estate of Martha W. Lansden, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MOODY of Oregon, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2003) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2277); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committtee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14383) to validate certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico with reference to the issuance of certain bonds, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2278); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8325) to finally adjust the swamp-land grants, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2279;) which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 238) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the House results of recent surveys of the Uintah Indian Reservation in Utah, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2280); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2769) to fix the fees of United States marshals in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2281); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. McCLEARY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16) to provide for the erection of a bronze equestrian statue to the memory of the late Brigadier-General Count Casimir Pulaski at Washington, D. C., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2282); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3745) granting an increase of pension to George Kerr, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2260); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 305) granting an increase of pension to George Heinzman, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2261); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5869) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin White, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2262); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5907) granting a pension to David S. Taylor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2263); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8447) granting an increase of pension to John McArthur, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2264); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12026) granting an increase of pension to Bailey W. Small, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2265); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12039) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Brown, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2266); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12921) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Adams, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2267); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13457) granting an increase of pension to John S. Crosser, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2268); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13468) granting a pension to Joseph S. Hess, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2269); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14140) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hunterson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2270); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4300) granting an increase of pension to Ann Comins, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2271); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3997) granting an increase of pension to Otis A. Barlow, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2272); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3032) granting a pension to Samuel J., Christopher, and Jane Vickers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2273); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5206) granting an increase of pension to John M. Wheeler, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2274); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5065) granting a pension to Jemima McClure, reported the same without amendment, acccompanied by a report (No. 2275); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4064) granting an increase of pension to Betsey Gumm reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2276); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14205) granting an increase of pension to John Hendrick—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10543) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbel—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPRON (for Mr. BULL): A bill (H. R. 14761) for the purchase or construction of four or more submarine torpedo boats of the most improved design—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BROMWELL: A bill (H. R. 14762) amending section 963, chapter 22, of the code of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CASSEL: A bill (H. R. 14763) to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 for militia called into the military service by the governor under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BLACKBURN: A bill (H. R. 14764) to establish United States courts at Wilkesboro, N. C.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THOMAS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 14777) for the judicial ascertainment of claims against the United States—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARTLETT: A resolution (H. Res. 278) requesting the Secretary of War to furnish to the House what salary or other compensation has been paid to Gen. Leonard A. Wood, late governor-general of Cuba—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TONGUE: A resolution (H. Res. 279) granting the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands leave to print—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 14765) granting a pension to Thomas Cory—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14766) granting an increase of pension to John B. Ellett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 14767) granting an increase of pension to Boston Dillion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14768) granting a pension to Edgar Woolfolk—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14769) granting a pension to Mary S. Downey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 14770) for the relief of James S. Harber—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. IRWIN: A bill (H. R. 14771) granting an increase of pension to Samuel K. J. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14772) for the relief of John Hale—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LACEY: A bill (H. R. 14773) granting an increase of pension to James W. Byers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: A bill (H. R. 14774) granting a pension to John C. Clarke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEVILLE: A bill (H. R. 14775) granting an increase of pension to Conrad G. Boehme—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 14776) granting an increase of pension to John McVicar—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 14778) granting an increase of pension to Marcena C. S. Gray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOY: A resolution (H. Res. 275) to equalize the pay of the conductors of the elevator in the House wing of the old Library space—to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL: Sundry petitions of posts of the Grand Army of the Republic of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Minnesota, Montana, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming, and Indian and Oklahoma Territories, urging the passage of House bill 13986, to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROMER: Resolutions of Republican County Committee of Westchester County, N. Y., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of North American Gymnastic Unions, of Pittsburg, East Pittsburg, and Allentown, Pa., in regard to House bill 12199—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of O. B. Rice Post, No. 71, Department of Wisconsin, favoring House bill 13986, to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Resolutions of Third Ward Democratic Club, of Brooklyn, N. Y., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of Warham Easley, of Loudon County, Tenn., for reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Martha P. Underwood, to accompany House bill to remove the charge of desertion against the record of John Underwood—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of James S. Gleghorn, vice-president of Pennsylvania Drug Clerks' Association, Allegheny, Pa., favoring the adoption of the metric system as the standard of weights and measures—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of Eli Hemphill Post, No. 135, of Tarentum, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, favoring a bill to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of St. Stanislawa Kostka Polish Society, of Carnegie, Pa., favoring the erection of a statue to the late Brigadier-General Count Pulaski at Washington—to the Committee on the Library.

Also, petition of criers and bailiffs of the United States courts in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, asking for the passage of Senate bill 5735, relating to the compensation of certain officers in the United States courts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Petition of Ernest Stalhuth, of Columbus, Ind., in support of House bill 123, for the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. HAMILTON: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Grand Rapids, Mich., favoring a reorganization of the consular service—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HAY: Petition of James Gordon, of Augusta County, Va., asking that his claim be referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. IRWIN: Petition of numerous citizens of the State of Kentucky, in favor of House bills 178 and 179, for the repeal of the tax on distilled spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 14323, granting a pension to A. Hausman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LACEY: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to James W. Byers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAHONEY: Resolution of Sacred Heart of Jesus Society, No. 1, Polish Alliance, Chicago, Ill., favoring the erection of a statue to the late Brigadier-General Count Pulaski, at Washington—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. NEVILLE: Evidence in support of House bill 14439, granting a pension to Franklin Peale—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUMPLE: Petition of Buffalo (Iowa) Turn Verein, protesting against the passage of House bill 12199 in its present form—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: Petition of citizens of the State of Kentucky, in favor of House bills 178 and 179, for the repeal of the tax on distilled spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SPERRY: Resolutions of Westchester County Republican Committee, of New York, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 29, 1902.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

INAUGURATION OF THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticutt) laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of State; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 23, 1902.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of an attested copy of the Senate's resolutions of May 21, 1902, reading as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Senate views with satisfaction and expresses congratulation at the appearance of the Cuban Republic among the nations of the world.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to transmit to the President of the Cuban Republic a copy of these resolutions."

In accordance with the request of the resolutions, it has given me pleasure to forward an engrossed copy thereof to the minister of the United States at Habana for transmission to the President of the Cuban Republic.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

RURAL DELIVERY LOCK BOXES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, pursuant to a clause in the Post-Office appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, a report as to the advisability and practicability of purchasing and adopting a uniform metal lock box at a price not to exceed 50 cents, for the purpose of selling the same to patrons on rural free-delivery routes at cost; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of an opinion from the Comptroller of the Treasury regarding the payment of salaries of Government officials and informing the Senate that in accordance with that opinion a committee had been appointed to revise the present Government salary tables to conform thereto; which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, certain information relative to quarters rented by the Department of Agriculture, giving the location, area of floor space occupied, and the annual rental thereof; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDING OFFICER announced his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. 712) granting an increase of pension to John Housiaux;

A bill (S. 1038) granting an increase of pension to Gustavus C. Pratt;

A bill (S. 1464) to establish storm-warning stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan;

A bill (S. 1797) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Russell;

A bill (S. 2168) granting an increase of pension to Charles O. Baldwin;

A bill (S. 2457) granting an increase of pension to Warren Y. Merchant;

A bill (S. 2511) granting an increase of pension to William Phillips;

A bill (S. 2535) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Joseph;

A bill (S. 2551) granting a pension to Amelia Engel;

A bill (S. 2697) granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Baldwin;

A bill (S. 3063) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Edge, alias Jason Edge;

A bill (S. 3551) granting an increase of pension to John P. Collier;

A bill (S. 3888) granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Hubbard;

A bill (S. 3998) granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Kimble;

A bill (S. 4240) granting an increase of pension to Calvin N. Perkins;

A bill (S. 4415) granting an increase of pension to Vesta A. Brown;

A bill (S. 4638) granting a pension to Helena Sudsburg;

A bill (S. 4642) granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery;

A bill (S. 4655) granting an increase of pension to Oliver K. Wyman;

A bill (S. 4706) granting an increase of pension to William Harrington;

A bill (S. 4712) granting an increase of pension to Eliphlet Noyes;

A bill (S. 4729) granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Hall, alias William Knapp;

A bill (S. 4730) granting an increase of pension to George W. Youngs;

A bill (S. 4732) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Hazzard;

A bill (S. 4758) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Doane;

A bill (S. 4759) granting an increase of pension to Martha Clark;

A bill (S. 4766) granting an increase of pension to James P. McClure;

A bill (S. 4790) granting an increase of pension to Stephen A. Seavey;

A bill (S. 4829) granting an increase of pension to Nimrod Headington;

A bill (S. 4853) granting an increase of pension to Amos Moulton;

A bill (S. 4862) granting an increase of pension to James Welch;

A bill (S. 4871) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Worthen;

A bill (S. 4983) granting a pension to John W. Smoot;

A bill (S. 5106) granting an increase of pension to Horace L. Richardson;

A bill (S. 5152) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin, alias Marion M. Martin;

A bill (S. 5153) granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham;

A bill (S. 5202) granting an increase of pension to Jennie M. Wagner;

A bill (S. 5209) granting an increase of pension to Hannah A. Van Eaton;

A bill (S. 5371) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan O. Thompson;

A bill (S. 5669) granting a pension to Charlotte M. Howe;

A bill (S. 5670) granting a pension to Samuel H. Chamberlin;

A bill (S. 5759) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Crooker;

A bill (H. R. 989) to authorize the Light-House Board to pay to Chamblin, Delaney & Scott the sum of $1,704.46;

A bill (H. R. 2857) granting an increase of pension to Frances C. Haughton;

A bill (H. R. 6330) granting an increase of pension to William D. Tanner;

A bill (H. R. 6625) granting increase of pension to Mary S. Downing;

A bill (H. R. 7397) granting a pension to Louisa White;

A bill (H. R. 9606) granting a pension to Charles Blitz;

A bill (H. R. 10144) to donate to the State of Alabama the spars of the captured battle ships Don Juan d'Austria and Almirante Oquendo;

A bill (H. R. 10782) granting a pension to Ole Steensland;

A bill (H. R. 10995) to regulate the introduction of eggs of game birds for propagation;

A bill (H. R. 12418) granting a pension to Matilda C. Clarke;

A bill (H. R. 13395) granting a pension to Arthur J. Bushnell;

A bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

A bill (H. R. 14589) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902;

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 113) authorizing the use and improvement of Governors Island, Boston Harbor; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 172) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the Morgan Memorial Association, of Winchester, Va., certain revolutionary trophies at Allegheny Arsenal, Pittsburg, Pa.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by C. R. McKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 14511) to authorize the relinquishment to the United States of claims and patented lands within the national parks in the State of California, and to permit the settlers and owners thereof to secure other lands outside of said parks, in accordance with section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

A bill (S. 3208) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain license taxes;

A bill (H. R. 2286) granting an increase of pension to Mary Etna Poole;

A bill (H. R. 2289) granting an increase of pension to Pitsar Ingram;

A bill (H. R. 2623) granting an increase of pension to John Smith;

A bill (H. R. 4542) granting pension to Eliza J. West;

A bill (H. R. 5248) granting a pension to Francis A. Tillotson;

A bill (H. R. 5475) granting increase of pension to August Schill, alias August Silville;

A bill (H. R. 5551) granting increase of pension to Charles Edward Price Lance, alias Edward Price;

A bill (H. R. 6037) granting increase of pension to William C. Holcomb;

A bill (H. R. 6718) granting increase of pension to Andrew R. Jones;

A bill (H. R. 7560) granting an increase of pension to George W. Butler;

A bill (H. R. 8134) granting an increase of pension to James H. Dunn;

A bill (H. R. 8487) granting an increase of pension to John M. Crist;

A bill (H. R. 9695) granting an increase of pension to Evaline Jenkins;

A bill (H. R. 9794) granting a pension to Zebulon A. Shipman;

A bill (H. R. 9833) granting an increase of pension to Margaret McCuen;

A bill (H. R. 11124) granting an increase of pension to Mary Scott;

A bill (H. R. 11288) granting an increase of pension to William E. Ball;

A bill (H. R. 12422) granting an increase of pension to David Topper;

A bill (H. R. 12428) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth G. Getty;

A bill (H. R. 12779) granting an increase of pension to George Chamberlin;

A bill (H. R. 12983) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor Emerson;

A bill (H. R. 13037) granting an increase of pension to Francis W. Anderton;

A bill (H. R. 13168) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. 13211) granting a pension to Melissa Burton;

A bill (H. R. 13614) granting an increase of pension to William H. White; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 87) to permit steam railroads in the District of Columbia to occupy additional parts of streets in order to accommodate the traveling public attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in October, 1902.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kentucky, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Territorial Statehood Convention of Arizona, praying for the enactment of legislation admitting the Territory of Arizona into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DUBOIS presented a petition of the Federated Trades and Labor Council of Boise, Idaho, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of Pocatello Lodge, No. 198, International Association of Machinists, of Pocatello, Idaho, remonstrating against the granting of contracts to foreign firms and contractors for the construction of Government vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 560, Retail Clerks' Protective Association, of Pocatello, Idaho, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented memorials of Pocatello Lodge, No. 198, International Association of Machinists, of Pocatello, and of Local Lodge No. 560, Retail Clerks' Protective Association, of Pocatello, in the State of Idaho, remonstrating against the adoption of the President's order relative to Government employees seeking to better their condition; which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. PENROSE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Philipsburg; of Division No. 80, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Philadelphia, and of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, all of the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry Baptist ministers of New York; of the Harvey Congregational Church, of Harvey, Ill., and of the First Baptist Church of Harvey, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, both spirituous and malt, on the premises and in the immediate vicinity of all immigrant stations; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of 48 citizens of Philadelphia County, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation granting a service pension to those who served in the Army of the Union during the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5049) for the relief of Sylvester S. Van Sickel, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1866) for the relief of Herbert O. Dunn, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 81) to enlarge the use of electric conduits in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, which was instructed by a resolution of the Senate of February 27, 1901, to investigate the cost of public arc lighting, submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,000 for grading V street from North Capitol street to Lincoln avenue, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, accompanied by a report, and moved that the amendment and report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4183) granting an increase of pension to Oceana B. Irwin, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4374) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Shreeves, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9496) granting a pension to Forrest E. Andrews, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5968) to authorize the promotion and retirement of the present senior major-general of the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9592) granting a pension to Emily Briggs, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12865) regulating the use of telephone wires in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3442) to correct the record of John O'Brien, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9870) to correct the military record of Reinhard Schneider, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PENROSE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11591) for relief of Stanley & Patterson, and to authorize a pay director of the United States Navy to issue a duplicate check, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

STATUE OF MAJ. GEN. WILLIAM J. SEWELL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 100) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for an equestrian statue of the late Maj. Gen. William J. Sewell, United States Volunteers, to report it favorably, without amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to deliver to the governor of the State of New Jersey, at Trenton, N. J., if the same can be done without detriment to the public service, such condemned bronze cannon as he may deem proper, not to exceed 15,000 pounds in weight, to be used in the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of the late Maj. Gen. William J. Sewell, United States Volunteers.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 6016) for the suppression of train robbery in the Territories of the United States and elsewhere, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 6017) to establish a United States commissioner's court at Okmulgee, Ind. T., and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DEBOE introduced a bill (S. 6018) granting an increase of pension to William J. Chitwood; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DUBOIS introduced a bill (S. 6019) granting a pension to John W. Jackson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6020) granting a pension to Charles L. Felch; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 6021) granting an increase of pension to Esther D. Haslam; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 6022) for the relief of the estate of Augustus Catchings, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment relative to the construction and repair of barges, yard craft, and lighters for the transportation and handling of coal, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the bandmaster at the Naval Academy from $1,080 to $1,420, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4848) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMANDA C. MITCHELL.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Amanda C. Mitchell, mother of Phelps Mitchell, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PREVENTION OF SALE OF INTOXICANTS.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hearing before the Committee on Immigration on the bill (S. 3968) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in immigrant stations and other public buildings be printed as a Senate document, and that there be printed 2,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Immigration.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the conference report which I made last night on the river and harbor appropriation bill may now be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

[The conference report appears in the proceedings of the Senate of yesterday.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the pill (S. 2276) to fix the time of holding the circuit and district courts for the southern district of West Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the appointment of a committee of conference upon the matter of the message of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and had appointed Mr. DALZELL, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee members of the committee on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President of the United States to return to the Senate the bill (S. 173) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 14189) to permit the occupancy of the Public Printing building by the Grand Army of the Republic; and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 28th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 89) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn.;

An act (S. 2782) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River by the Washington and Oregon Railway Company;

An act (S. 5406) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland of Aiken County, S. C., to the mainland of Richmond County, Ga.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 46) to provide for printing 5,000 copies of the consolidated reports of the Gettysburg National Park Commission, 1893 to 1901, inclusive.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 593) for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of a National Sanitarium of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 14511) to authorize the relinquishment to the United States of claims and patented lands within the national parks in the State of California, and to permit the settlers and owners thereof to secure other lands, outside of said parks, in accordance with section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2295, being the Philippine government bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], who desires to make a request, and then, if the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is entitled to the floor, will allow me, I have some amendments I desire to propose to the pending bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have an epitome of historical events and official and other communications in connection with the Philippine controversy which I had intended to ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my remarks, and I now make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent to print with his remarks made on a previous day a certain document which he sends to the desk. Is there objection?

Mr. FORAKER. What is the nature of the document?

Mr. PATTERSON. An epitome of historical events and official and other communications connected with the Philippine controversy. They are perfectly proper, and I am satisfied that no Senator would make any objection.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to the request, and only asked the question I have for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the permission requested by the Senator from Colorado is granted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I was going to make a further request, that by reason of the convenience they may be to a number of Senators, the matter I have submitted be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator from Alabama takes the floor, I wish to offer some amendments to the bill, to none of which, I think, there will be any objection. They are amendments agreed to by the majority of the Committee on the Philippines yesterday afternoon.

In section 1, on page 1, line 10, the last line on the page, I move to strike out the word "Philippines" and insert "Philippine Islands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 1, on page 2, line 12, before the word "provided," I move to insert the words "and herein."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, at the end of section 1, I move to insert as a new section what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. That no law shall be enacted in said islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the laws.

That in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be heard by himself and counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to have a speedy and public trial, to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf.

That no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without due process of law, and that no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

That all persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient surties, except for capital offenses.

That no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted.

That no person shall be imprisoned for debt.

That the privilege of the right of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, except in cases of rebellion, insurrection, or invasion the public safety may require it.

That no ex post facto law or bill of attainder shall be enacted.

That no law granting a title of nobility shall be enacted, and that no person holding any office of profit or trust in said islands shall, without the consent of the Congress of the United States, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, queen, prince, or foreign state.

That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

That the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.

That neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist in said islands.

That no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

That no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall forever be allowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it would not be better to put into that amendment a provision securing the right of trial by jury?

Mr. LODGE. That amendment embodies the instructions to the Commission issued by President McKinley, and which are confirmed by the bill as it stands. The committee thought it better to put them in explicitly in words.

The right to bear arms and the right of trial by jury were omitted deliberately by the committee—the right to bear arms, owing to the disturbed condition that exists in the islands, and the right of trial by jury, because the committee were satisfied, on the testimony of Governor Taft and others, that the time had not yet come to compel the Commission to grant that. They have gone so far as to provide for what is known as assessors to sit with the judges. Governor Taft thought it was unwise, and he satisfied the majority of the committee of the fact that it was unwise, to go further at this time. Those two provisions were omitted from President McKinley's instructions and the majority of the committee thought it best not to embody them with the rest of the bill of rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 3, on page 3, after line 21, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 3, after the word "approved," at the end of line 21, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to amend or repeal an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 11, on page 7, line 15, after the word "provided," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, on page 7, in line 15, after the word "provided," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That a single homestead entry shall not exceed 40 acres in extent or its equivalent in hectares.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 33, on page 17, line 13, being the first line of the section, after the word "under," I move to insert the words "the clauses of;" so as to read:

That proof of citizenship under the clauses of this act may consist, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In the same line, after the word "act," I move to insert the words "relating to mineral lands."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 33, on page 17, line 13, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert "relating to mineral lands."

Mr. BACON. I ask that that may be read, so that we can understand how the language will read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 33. That proof of citizenship under the clauses of this act relating to mineral lands may consist, in the case of an individual, of his own affidavit thereof; in the case of an association of persons unincorporated, of the affidavit of their authorized agent, made on his own knowledge or upon information and belief; and in the case of a corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, or of the Philippine Islands, by the filing of a certified copy of their charter or certificate of incorporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 5, on page 31, after line 8, I move to insert as a new section what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 8, on page 31, it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That the beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of all rights to water in said islands, and the government of said islands is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations for the use of water and to make such reservations of public lands for the protection of the water supply and for other public purposes not in conflict with the provisions of this act as it may deem best for the public good.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 64, on page 38, line 11, after the word "authorized," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 64, on page 38, line 11, after the word "authorized," it is proposed to insert the words "subject to the limitations and conditions prescribed in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 65, on page 38, line 21, after the word "parcels," I move to insert the words "and in such manner."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In the next line, line 22, after the words "affect the," I move to insert the words "peace and," so as to read "affect the peace and welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 65, on page 39, line 17, after the words "Philippine Islands," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 65, on page 39, line 17, after the words "Philippine Islands," it is proposed to insert the words "or any local authority therein or of," and strike out the word "and;" so that if amended it will read:

And said bonds shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the government of the Philippine Islands or any local authority therein, or of the Government of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority in the United States or the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the committee has considered the question of the right of Congress to exempt from taxation in the States bonds issued by the government of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. LODGE. The committee have considered that question, that point having been raised, and the committee were of opinion that, as we have made similar exemptions in cases of bonds in Territories, we were at liberty to do so in this case.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will note, Mr. President, that the question of precedent would not control that matter, unless it be a precedent set by the Supreme Court. While I do not assume, of course, to say definitely and positively that the committee is in error—and I would not assume to do that under any circumstances—I shall be very glad, before this debate ends, if the committee will indicate upon what rule of law that opinion is based. I will not ask the Senator to do it now, of course, but I hope he will do it before the debate closes.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be very glad to look into it, and of course the committee will be glad to do so, but the remarks of the Senator do not apply to the amendment which I propose.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment I propose simply relieves the bonds from taxation by local authority in the islands.

Mr. BACON. I understand that. I only took the liberty of calling attention to it now because my attention was attracted by the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, the committee have had that point under consideration, and there really may be some doubt about it.

Mr. BACON. I am frank to say that my opinion is the other way; but, of course, it will not weigh in the balance against the combined opinion of the Senators composing the committee. I should like very much, however, to be enlightened on that question.

Mr. LODGE. In section 66, on page 40, line 4, after the word "prescribe," I move to insert——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Chair understands that the pending amendment has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. LODGE. I thought it had been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment which has been submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 66, on page 40, line 4, after the word "prescribe," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 66, page 40, line 4, after the word "prescribe," it is proposed to insert:

subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 5 of the same section and on the same page, after the word "purchaser," I move to insert the words "of any parcel or portion of said lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 71, on page 43, line 11, after the word "issue," I move to insert the proviso which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 71, on page 43, line 11, after the word "issue," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That if said bonds or any portion thereof shall be paid out of the funds of the government of said islands, such municipality shall reimburse said government for the sum thus paid, and said government is hereby empowered to collect said sum by the levy and collection of taxes on such municipality.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, in section 72, line 16, after the words "United States," I move to insert the words "first had;" so as to read "with the approval of the President of the United States first had."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In the same section, on page 44, line 2, I move to strike out the word "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read "provided in section 68 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In section 75, on page 45, line 3, after the word "issue," I move to insert the proviso which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. In section 75, on page 45, line 3, after the word "issue," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That if said bonds or any portion thereof shall be paid out of the funds of the government of said islands, such municipality shall reimburse said government for the sum thus paid, and said government is hereby empowered to collect said sum by the levy and collection of taxes on such municipality.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand that all the amendments which are being proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts have been considered by and reported from the Committee on the Philippines?

Mr. LODGE. They have been.

Mr. BATE. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. In section 76, on page 46, line 15, after the words "gross earnings," I move to strike out "or of net profits."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. That concludes all the amendments I now have to offer. There are one or two more not yet decided on by the committee which may be presented hereafter.

I now ask that a reprint of the bill may be made as amended, and that the clerks may renumber the sections, as two new sections have been inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut). The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the bill as amended may be reprinted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, there are some features of this bill which will cause me to vote against it, because I do not believe they are warranted by the Constitution, if they are not changed or have not been changed by the amendments which have been just offered and to which I have only had an opportunity of listening as they were read from the desk.

I approve the purpose of the measure and believe that it is a decided improvement on the state of the law now controlling the islands of the Philippine Archipelago.

I am satisfied that the purpose of the bill is to secure good government in those islands and that it is neither intended to abridge the liberties of the Filipinos nor to promote the interests of any class or of any individuals who have or expect to have any special interests in the Philippines. Believing this, and that it is a decided movement in the direction of securing peace in the islands, I will support the bill by my vote if the features that I believe are unconstitutional are changed or stricken out.

My view of the situation is so well expressed in an editorial of the Birmingham News of May 8, 1902, a leading Democratic journal of Alabama, that I will quote it:

THE WAY TO PEACE.

It is a practical and not sentimental question presented in the Philippines. The situation in the Philippines has been much obscured on the one hand by the ill-considered attacks of those seeking political advantage and on the other by the indiscriminate partisanship of those defending the Administration. Brushing aside the rubbish, these facts stand clearly in view.

At no time since Dewey's victory at Manila could the United States escape the responsibility devolving upon it by that event without making itself the laughing stock of the civilized world and laying itself open to more serious complications with those countries that would be eager to profit by the distracted state of the islands. Nor can this country, with proper regard for national honor aud humanity at this time, resign the peaceable and friendly natives to the cruel mercies of the barbarous insurgents. The country has put its hand to the plow and can not turn back.

If human testimony is to be believed, the insurgent Filipinos are past masters in the art of treachery and skilled workmen in the trade of assassination. Is it a wonder that at times lex talionis has been invoked?

No humane man can countenance torture or murder; but there is no evidence that either has been the policy of the American Army. "There are some brutes and weak men," to use the language of Governor Taft, "in the Army." Let them be punished, but, in the name of honor and patriotism, visit not their sins upon the brave soldiers and civilians who are risking health and life for the flag of their country.

Humanity, honor, and duty combine to hold the United States to its course. Peace in the Philippines is to be desired. It can be obtained in but one way, and that is by subduing the insurrection.

The insurrection can not be subdued by declaring that it is a war for liberty, and that the "past masters in the art of treachery and skilled workmen in the traffic of assassination" are noble patriots at war with a brutal oppressor.

The insurrection is broken and will cease to exist, as it exists now only in the form of predatory warfare, if Congress is firm in the duty of providing for the Filipinos just government in accordance with those constitutional principles that are the vested rights of American citizens.

The ladrones and bolomen, who are kept in the field by conspirators who employ them as bushwhackers, will quit their brigandage when their employers are convinced that they are to receive no encouragement from our divided counsels and heated antagonisms. They do not seem to realize the fact, or else they do not believe it, that we intend to establish peace, law, and good government in the Philippines. They do not comprehend as we do, and as we playfully practice it, the great science of practical politics.

We know that good, firm, sincere, and permanent government is demanded by every interest in the Philippines, and that Congress and the people will maintain it.

At this critical moment we should not venture to introduce into this measure or to leave in it any new or doubtful principle of government. And Congress should not resolve itself into a court of inquiry or a court-martial, as an incident of this legislation, to try officers of our Army who have not been summoned to answer charges that are not preferred against them in due form, but are made in the heat of discussion.

That is not "the way to peace in the Philippines," and no such issue necessarily arises upon any part of this bill. The matter is only collateral, and conceding all that has been charged against the officers of the Army in this debate for the sake of the argument, if it is all just it only shows in a clearer light the duty of Congress to provide a better government for the Philippines.

The question of our title to ownership and sovereignty in and over the Philippine Islands, at least in a moral sense, is put in issue by the substitute offered to the bill by the minority of the committee.

As I am convinced that the United States has a perfect title to those islands in morals and in law, I could not vote for that substitute, even if it was so framed as to be in accordance with the principle on which it is based.

We have a plain and simple alternative that is not and will not be presented for the decision of Congress. It is this: If the treaty of Paris is a burning torch, a consuming fire that is destroying the people of the Philippines and is also threatening general conflagration in the States, let us extinguish it by repealing that treaty in so far as it relates to the Philippines. If we are not ready to do this, let us go along in the simple duty of executing the treaty and creating good government in the territory it cedes to the United States.

The treaty of Paris was ratified on the 6th day of February, 1899, and an insurrectionary attack was made on the Army of the United States at Manila on the 4th day of February, 1899, before the vote of ratification was had in the Senate.

The United States was in the military occupation of Manila under agreement with Spain to protect the city and the people pending negotiations for peace between belligerents and had refused to permit Aguinaldo's forces to occupy the city.

Whether the attack of February 4 was intended to prevent Spain from ceding the Philippine Archipelago to the United States or to prevent the United States from accepting the cession, it was wholly ineffectual. It did not intercept or defeat the power to pass the right of dominion from one sovereign to the other, either by conquest or agreement.

In point of military strength it had little force, and in point of international right it had none, for no nation had recognized the so-called Philippine republic as being in legal existence, even as a de facto government.

If Aguinaldo had in fact driven Spanish dominion from the archipelago so that it was no longer sovereign there, did he also destroy the power of the United States, under the laws of nations, to hold Manila under the peace protocol of August 12, 1898? If so, he worked a miracle in the development of a national power that no other man ever attempted. If Spain was unable to cope with his forces it does not follow that he could destroy by an edict the power of the military and naval forces of the United States that had sunk Montejo's fleet and occupied Manila.

Whether we bought the sovereignty or conquered it, what we did was in strict accordance with the law of nations.

The sovereignty unquestionably was in Spain when the cession was ratified by the vote of our Senate, and no existing power or recognized right had interposed to prevent the cession.

The case is like that of Mexico when we acquired sovereignty over a vast area by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo with force and arms and by purchase, although contending factions in that Republic denied the power of the existing government to make the cession.

There is not enough in the pretensions of Aguinaldo to authorize me to regard that cession of sovereignty as being void.

The treaty of Paris being obligatory, it must be obeyed until it is repealed or abrogated. As no such movement has been instituted or even threatened, I must still regard that treaty as being in full force and effect.

I find in that treaty several continuing obligations and guaranties that the United States is bound to execute. Among these is the protection of the property and safety of Spanish subjects in their persons and business vocations and in the freedom of religion and the right of the people to choose their nationality. I find also an obligation that "the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants in the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress."

This novel provision has a deep significance to those people. It means that they shall not remain permanently under the government of military rulers in accordance with the laws of nations.

Congress must provide civil government for them, and this obligation continues while we hold the islands. I am in favor of legislation by Congress because we have agreed to provide it.

A term of ten years is also provided by Article VI of the treaty, during which we guarantee that Spanish subjects and ships shall have equal rights with citizens of the United States in Philippine ports as to tariff duties and charges on shipping.

That period has not expired, and it will be more prudent to discuss the emancipation of the archipelago from American authority when that time has elapsed. Until that event we are bound to hold the entire archipelago in order to comply with our treaty agreement. So that those people must put up with the alleged inferior quality of liberty and the slavish dependence that the United States has bestowed on 45 sovereign States of this Union for ten years at least, or we must violate our treaty with Spain.

It seems to me that this condition might well have postponed the discussion of our future duty to the Filipinos, in respect of their emancipation from the supposed hardships of our dominion, until we could be at least safe in making them free.

Looking back to the day of the ratification of the treaty of Paris, I am forced to ask myself the question whether my vote for ratification has been justified by the events to which that treaty gave birth. I voted for the treaty of Paris as it came from the hands of the negotiators, without amendment or explanation, and I voted against all resolutions that attempted to attach conditions to that treaty, believing that if such conditions were proper to be attached to its execution the treaty should not be ratified.

The question I ask myself is forced upon me by the attitude of some of my fellow-Democrats, who charge that the administrative history of the Philippines has been nothing but evil and is due to the policy that is called "expansion," as a natural if not a necessary result, and that the vote for ratification of the treaty of Paris carried with it these inevitable consequences.

It was at this point that the line of separation was established, when the treaty was ratified, which to-day is the line that separates the friends of the treaty from its opponents. The opponents of the treaty reproach its friends for having supported it, while they do not propose to repeal any of its provisions. They place the whole question in the shape of a national curse that is irrevocable, when they could get rid of all the alleged evils by repealing the parts of the treaty that relate to the Philippines. Of this they seem to be afraid. They do not offer to repeal or abrogate the treaty.

I might answer, in reply to these reproaches, that no evil consequence has resulted from such growth, either to our Government or to the inhabitants of those countries affected by it, and I might excuse the mistake, if any was made, by pointing to the fruits of our expansion in the occupation of Oregon by the Clarke and Lewis expedition; or in Alaska, by the purchase of that wonderful region of the reserved forces of nature from Russia; or in Mexico, by a war that still seeks justification in some great national necessity; or in Hawaii, as an act of paternal affection, and in Porto Rico, which has been made happy by our free institutions, and has even been granted the extraordinary power of repealing a tariff law enacted by Congress.

To justify any apparent misfortune in the case of the Philippine Archipelago, I might also point out the success of those wonderful strides that have resulted from our honorable desire for national growth; and I could refer to a cloud of witnesses in the newer States that have assembled around the old thirteen to testify in favor of this established Democratic policy that has made the grand Republic stronger and more glorious with each accession.

But no mistake has been made in pursuing this established national policy. There is no evil that can be justly attributed to it, and no injustice, in comparison with the vast amount of good that has resulted from it, and no hardship, except such as must attend every human effort in the great task of civilization that the Creator has laid upon us.

I would add to this great testimonial in favor of the beneficent growth of our national influence the glorious congregation of sixteen great Spanish-American Republics, from Mexico to Patagonia, that rejoice to-day in the consecration of Cuba to sovereign statehood, and to our own costly preparations to celebrate the centennial of the annexation of the Louisiana purchase.

I do not choose to find excuses for my vote for the treaty of Paris in these great Democratic and Republican precedents, or in the power and honor they have contributed to our Government, or in the blessings we have conferred on Alaska, Hawaii, Cuba, and Porto Rico.

Neither do I plead the necessity of the case, as I might well do, in selecting between the Paris treaty and a renewal of the war with Spain, after a peace of six months, with our armies disbanded and with the prospect of all Europe making common alliance against us.

I do not retort upon my accusing brethren that they did not attempt to amend the treaty of Paris by striking out all of its provisions that related to the cession of the Philippine Archipelago to the United States. An effort was made to amend the treaty so as to place these islands on a footing with Cuba, but the Senate voted it down, and no effort was made to abandon them to Spain or to repeal the cession of them to the United States.

I excuse those who now see a fatal policy in that cession, and thought they saw it then, from all accusation of weakness on that occasion, and I still excuse them for not trying to repeal that cession, when we know that the success of such an effort would throw the people of these islands back into the arms of Spain, whose tyrannies have made them its unforgiving enemies, and would have dishonored the policy on which that war was declared.

To have crowned such a war, waged for such generous purposes, with such a result would have dismayed stronger hearts than those even that beat in the bosoms of my Democratic colleagues.

I claim no excuse or justification for my vote for the Paris treaty, except that it was essentially right. I have no doubt that it will prove to be right that we have annexed the Philippines in the sense that it is profitable commercially, and that it will be the future home of millions of our countrymen. But this belief had no influence on my vote, and I do not wait for that justification. I need not wait, for the justification is already recorded in history.

Why was this annexation essentially right?

I will not answer this crucial inquiry by any effort at prophecy or by claiming that it was a duty devolved upon us by a special Providence.

I may believe, with perfect faith, in such divine leadership of nations and in our duty to follow it, but if such an attitude is assumed as an answer to any question that men have to decide, it must be supported by existing facts that all reasonable men can comprehend and not by prophecy or conjecture or any assumed inspiration as to the unknown.

On the facts that none can dispute I believe that it would have been no less a moral delinquency to have turned the people of those islands over to Spain than it would now be if we should turn them over to the men who will rule them if we should withdraw our sovereign authority from those islands.

I will say, then, that it was essentially right to annex the Philippines, because any other course would have been essentially wrong, on the basis on which we declared war with Spain, as it was expressed in our acts of Congress.

On that basis, and for the same reasons, we acquired Porto Rico and the Philippine Archipelago, in the same terms and in the same treaty of Paris, without consulting the people of either country or making them any pledges of future independent autonomy.

If it was right thus to acquire Porto Rico, it was equally right to acquire the Philippines; if it was a duty we owed to the people of Porto Rico to extend our sovereignty over them, it was a much plainer duty that we owed to the people of the Philippine Archipelago, in the condition in which we found them.

If it is our duty to permit the Filipinos to establish, now or hereafter, an independent national government, or to pledge the national faith that they may establish such a government in the future, it is equally our duty to make a like pledge to the people of Porto Rico and Alaska.

If the people of the seceded States in 1861 could have appealed to such a pledge on the part of the Government of the United States, or to the principle on which it must be based, that every people have the right to ordain for themselves the government they choose, the American Union could not have withstood the shock of the secession of the eleven great States of the South.

The doctrine of the right of these organized and sovereign States—four of which assisted in forming the Union—to resume their independence was settled against the States of the Union by the events of the terrible war that followed. So that, to settle that question in the organic laws of those States, nearly all of them have amended their constitutions and expressly disavowed that right.

I was a member of the Alabama convention that declared the independence of that State and resolved to withdraw from the Union, and voted for the ordinance of secession.

I was a soldier in the Confederate army that endeavored to sustain that right, and no soldier of the Revolutionary Army of 1776 was moved by a more patriotic sense of duty than I was in the service I was able to render.

Until my State, to which I owed and still owe the highest allegiance, changed its attitude on that subject, I was bound to the declaration that a sovereign State of the American Union had the right, for just cause, to withdraw from that Union. I held that the right to withdraw was an indispensable element in its recognized sovereignty.

I stood upon the doctrine of the sovereignty of the people of a State, organized in a sovereign government and represented by persons of their own selection, to institute government that they believed to be best suited to their prosperity and happiness.

I never thought that a Territory of the United States could possess such sovereign rights before Congress had authorized the people there to form such a government, and now I am compelled by the action of Alabama to deny to the people of a Territory, when organized as a civil government, the right to withdraw from the sovereign jurisdiction of the United States. Of course, we can not turn them loose as a wild, unorganized mob.

I must go still further, and deny that Congress can grant to any State, or to the people of any Territory, a right of withdrawal from the Union or from the jurisdiction of the United States and still hold Alabama bound in irrevocable bonds to the American Union. If this privilege is granted to one it must be granted to all alike.

I can find no authority for conceding rights to the Philippines that Congress must refuse to grant to Alabama.

The substitute proposed to this bill by the minority of the committee demands that at some future period the right shall exist in favor of the people of the Philippine Islands to receive their separate, sovereign independence from an act of Congress.

As the corollary of such right, if Congress should refuse to vote their independence when they conceive that the time has arrived when they are fully entitled to the performance of such a pledge, they would have, at least, the moral right to enforce their admitted legal rights, even by a resort to open war.

What would be thought of me, as a Senator, if I should copy the language of the pledge that is in this substitute, in a joint resolution, to provide for the future independence of Alabama, that is already sovereign, and is in full exercise of autonomous government? Who would rise here and assert that such a measure was within the delegated powers of Congress?

If I should keep my seat in the Senate after such an effort, I would have no hope of remaining in the Democratic party as a respectable member.

If I should state in the preamble of such a resolution that the people of Alabama are and of right ought to be free and independent, it would inspire the resolution with a trite but noble sentiment that would add nothing to its force as a sensible proposition. It would fall before the question, Has Congress the power to make such a pledge to Alabama? Which answers itself; and I could never answer the other question that is deep rooted in the nature of things, Why does Alabama desire a better form of government, or a more complete independence, or greater security against foreign invasion or domestic usurpation, than her people have, as a sovereign State of this Union? Alabama never desired, or sought independence, except as a means of protecting her rights under the constitutional guaranties of justice.

As to the people of the Philippine Islands, if that term by any euphemism or reckless abuse of speech can be applied to the few Tagalogs and Visayans that followed Aguinaldo, among the 8,000,000 inhabitants of the archipelago, they never had a pretense of organized civil gorvernment that was, in fact, based on the suffrage or even the implied consent of the whole people of these many inhabited islands.

This fact at once destroys the pretension that an organized civil government other than that of Spain ever existed in those islands before Dewey attacked the Spanish fleet, and as to its being republican in form, that idea is extinguished, unless a republic, which must be based on the will of the people or the consent of the governed, can be created by the edict of a single man.

As a military dictator, if Aguinaldo was such, his warfare was not for liberty, or national independence, or the overthrow of monarchy, or for republican institutions. It was a war for church reformation, a religious war, a sort of holy war with the secular priesthood—the friars—who stood next to the Crown and collected the taxes. There was no complaint as to the authority of the church, or that its altars had been profaned, but that the sacrifices demanded were exorbitant and the roast meats left over were not fairly divided.

His war was against the friars, because their exactions were tyrannical and their morals were depraving. He demanded their expulsion, because they were merciless toward the people, but he did not demand the overthrow of the church that licensed them or of the State that profited by their exactions upon the people. When he got an alleged promise of their expulsion, he was content to expatriate himself, on receiving 800,000 pesetos, of which half was paid him.

When we went to war with Spain a certain class of people—not one-fifth of the population of the archipelago—had recently been in this state of insurrection in two or three of the principal islands of the group, of more than a thousand in number, against Spanish authority exerted against them in an oppressive way by the secular priesthood of the established church. They had slain these friars by hundreds and had burned church property and inflicted upon communities the horrors of internecine warfare.

After Aguinaldo and his few followers were driven into the mountains Spain entered into a capitulation with them, in 1896. In that capitulation amnesty was granted to the insurrectos on condition that they would surrender their arms and return to peaceful vocations, which they did; and if Aguinaldo's contention is true Spain agreed to banish the friars from the islands, which that Government failed to do.

Aguinaldo and his associates in the leadership of this insurrection took a large part of $1,000,000 paid them by Spain to induce them to leave the islands and went into banishment, with a promise not to return to the islands. There was an actual condition of peace in the islands, by formal capitulation, when we declared war with Spain, yet there was lurking hatred on the part of the banished insurrectos, and a few of the Filipinos continued an irregular warfare for personal advantage or revenge. Their chief was in voluntary exile, and a few ladrones were pillaging for a living.

Aguinaldo spent much of the money paid him by Spain for peace in the purchase of munitions of war, intending to renew the conflict when opportunity should offer, and alleging the breach of the capitulation at Biacnabato as his justification. It is not necessary to inquire into the honesty or propriety of his purposes; but it is true, beyond question, that he made no active preparation to renew his warfare until Dewey had captured Manila.

After Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet he had no troops with which to occupy and hold Manila, and it stood him in hand, as a lawful expedient of military strategy, to permit Aguinaldo to return to the islands, to assist him to hold in check the Spanish forces. If a precedent was needed to justify this strategy of war, it was found in a like situation in Cuba and Porto Rico, but much more in point in our war with Mexico.

General Santa Anna had been banished from Mexico for political crimes, and we brought him as a national guest to New Orleans on a man-of-war and sent him to Mexico to weaken that sister Republic by political agitations. We did not make him President, but he claimed that the Mexicans did, and he immediately waged war against us with great ability and heroic valor. He was apparently our ally, but, in fact, our enemy, as Aguinaldo was, and every other Spanish subject was, under our declaration of war with Spain.

It is unjust to Admiral Dewey and is not complimentary to our own judgment as men of affairs that we should applaud Aguinaldo as a patriot, burning for the liberties of his people, who was misled and betrayed by Dewey when he was permitted to come to Manila. It is absurd to censure Dewey for refusing to recognize Aguinaldo as the president of a sovereign government in the Philippines. Had he done so he would have given aid and comfort to the declared enemies of the United States. This was the legal attitude of Aguinaldo and every other Filipino as it was created by act of Congress—the declaration of war—and Admiral Dewey had no power to change it.

Before Dewey left Hongkong for Manila Aguinaldo was secretly alert and active to find an opening to renew the conflict with the friars, but he did not dare to make the attempt openly. As soon as Dewey destroyed the fleet and suppressed the power of Spain at Manila, the embers of insurrection and the desire for pillage again burst into flame, and we then had the double necessity, created by the success of our arms, of driving out the Spanish sovereignty and also of preventing and suppressing internecine war in the islands between Aguinaldo's followers and other Filipinos, such as the Macabebes.

Dewey believed that Aguinaldo was sincerely devoted to the success of American arms and had no reason to suspect that he was only a self-seeking adventurer. He was cautious and careful, but he had not seen the capitulation of Biacnabato and had no just standard by which to measure Aguinaldo's character.

The permission given Aguinaldo to return to Luzon may have been a political mistake, but it was not an alliance between two governments, created by the act of a commodore of the Navy. Neither was it the crime of giving aid and comfort to the enemy. It could be nothing more than putting deserters into our line of battle.

If Aguinaldo intended to return to the islands and organize a government that was independent of the United States and of Spain, why did he ask permission of Dewey to return? The coasts of all the islands were open to his return if the people stood ready to join his standard and strike for independence. If he had such a purpose, he concealed it from Admiral Dewey.

No phase of our relations to the Philippine Islands has been so distorted by misconception as the undeserved consequence that is given to the alleged patriotism, influence, and power attributed to Aguinaldo as a political or popular leader of the Filipinos at the time of his return to Manila or at any other time. He has not, at any time, been the master of any situation in which he has figured. He has been a convenience to men of ability in working out plans that they have projected and were afraid to fight over, and there his consequence has ended.

While the insurrection of 1897 was progressing, and at the time of its beginning, Aguinaldo was one of several leaders in the military operations, but he was, at all times, under the control of Mabini and of those associated with him in organizing and controlling the revolt. They are able and learned men, who at least would have set up the form of civil government de facto in opposition to the sovereignty of Spain, and would have asked recognition of such from other governments if they had contemplated a struggle for independence. But they never reached that point, and they abandoned the revolt when they found that Aguinaldo had no such support from the people, who were divided into discordant factions, as could sustain an army with supplies, or increase its forces, or even recruit its losses when occasioned by causualties, sickness, or desertion. After a short, sharp struggle the insurgent forces were driven to the mountains, and Aguinaldo made the capitulation of Biacnabato in December, 1897.

I will submit a translation of that capitulation, captured by our Army, and ask that it may be printed as an appendix to my remarks.

Señor Paterno, a native of the islands and a devout loyalist, visited the camp at Biacnabato, to which Aguinaldo had escaped, and Aguinaldo, as leader of the insurrectos, intrusted to him the terms upon which he hoped that the fighting could be ended and amnesty obtained from the Spanish Government.

A paper was drawn up containing the terms of submission upon which Aguinaldo would surrender on the pledge of Spain to grant amnesty to his followers, and it was signed by Aguinaldo and two others of the military leaders. It was a power of attorney in effect to Paterno, authorizing him to conclude a capitulation with Captain-General Estrella. In pursuance of that authority, Paterno and Estrella agreed upon the terms, and Aguinaldo accepted them and the money to be paid him and his companions, and they went on a Spanish ship under safe conduct to Hongkong.

In the preparation of this power of attorney the effort was made to secure the incidental recognition of Aguinaldo as president of a republic, and some recognition of the existence of a governmental organization was attempted to be imported into that instrument, but they were all stricken out. In like manner a demand for the deportation of all friars was stricken out. The paper was signed in his own camp and taken by Paterno to Estrella. It contained such humble and supplicatory acknowledgments of submission to Spain as could only come from a contrite rebel or one who was well paid for a feigned humiliation.

A programme for carrying out the capitulation was then arranged with cautious particularity, which was also signed by Aguinaldo after it had passed under the scrutiny of careful negotiation.

It provided for the payment of 1,200,000 pesetas to Aguinaldo, of which he was to distribute 600,000, through Paterno, to his fellow-insurrectionists, excluding such as were not his followers, and the rest was payable to him in notes or drafts, to be handed over to him after he had escaped to a place of safety.

These notes were to be paid when he should notify the Government by cipher telegram that he had reached Hongkong, and from that place he was to notify his troops that the insurrection was at an end and that they were free to return to their homes.

He was afraid to confront the people he had led into insurrection, and accepted Spanish protection for the safety of his person and Spanish pesetas for the comfort of his conscience.

He left the islands by the permission of Spain to work out the penalty of his revolt and to "bring fruits meet for repentance" if he should ever return.

When Spain got into war with us he returned to the Philippines as the professed friend of the United States, by the permission of Admiral Dewey, and at once set up the title of president of the republic of the Philippines, which he had abandoned in the capitulation of Biacnabato. He then inaugurated, by his personal edict addressed to the people, the absurd pretense of a sovereign and supreme government, to the exclusion of all sovereign rights of Spain then at war in the capital of the islands.

Æsop's fox, in the fable of the fight between the lion and the bear over a captured carcass, represented the whole breadth of Aguinaldo's policy, in his effort to steal the prey from the contending forces, and it exactly typifies the individual selfishness of his raid. The laudations of his alleged patriotism and heroism that have been poured out in his honor here and elsewhere in the United States are as much out of place as if they had been uttered in honor of the fox in Æsop's fable.

That he was useful in obstructing the Government of the United States in a duty that it was compelled to perform is sadly true, but he was only a convenient instrument in the hands of conspirators to create antagonism to a wise, just, and necessary work that was also unavoidable. If Aguinaldo had died, another agent would have been found, for the junta at Hongkong have not committed to his personal fortunes the fate of their conspiracy to wrest the Philippines from the United States.

The fact of the existence and activity of this junta is established by the continuance of the war by ladrones, assassins, and pillagers after the leaders and all organized forces have surrendered.

These scattered bands of marauders, who attack their own people with a fierceness and cruelty that they do not dare to attempt toward the forces of the United States except when they are prisoners, are not fighting for liberty, but as the savage tools of the junta at Hongkong, whose members stalk through the United States at will and purchase munitions of war from our own people.

Agoncillo was here to send the electric message that would touch off the guns of Aguinaldo at Manila before the day the vote was to be taken in the Senate on the treaty of Paris. He escaped suddenly to Paris, when no one was pursuing, and he has been promoting war against the United States in the Philippines from that day to this, aided by others who have money and influence.

On the basis of our declaration of war with Spain, of which the battle at Manila was the first, it was impossible that we could abandon the prestige and the fruits of the victory won in that battle, or that we could leave the people within our military command exposed to civil, internecine war among themselves or the foreigners in Manila exposed to the dangers of sack and pillage.

If it had been possible, under other conditions, to abandon these islands to the perils of such an insurrectionary war, or if we had taken the dishonorable risk of leaving the people of other countries resident at Manila exposed to the dangers of rapine and pillage, after destroying the power of Spain to protect them, which would have aroused the whole of Christendom against us, there were still other American reasons that compelled us to complete the conquest begun at Manila, and to hold all the islands subject to our power, if we should be successful in our war with Spain.

I must declare my conviction that we would have reversed the most sacred and holy principle in our system of government and the real glory of our independence if we had abandoned Dewey's conquest of Manila without securing religious liberty to the islands of the archipelago. I must, on my conscience, further declare that, until freedom of religion is established in the island of Mindanao and the Sulu Archipelago, it will disgrace the United States through all the yet unwritten records of history if we withdraw our sovereignty from those islands.

The American reasons are twofold, and in both aspects they are irresistible to the people of the United States, why we could not abandon the Philippines to Spain, or to any other monarchic power, after our right by conquest was established in the archipelago.

Our relations with Spain have been peculiar and exceptional for three-quarters of a century.

Spain is the oldest survivor of the Bourbon monarchies of Europe, and has lost nearly all her foreign possessions in conflicts engendered by the conflict of despotism with the principles of this great Republic.

We have abstained from acquiring territory at her expense that the fortunes of war have placed in our reach, even in Cuba, but we have not relaxed the principles of government that have lost her all her dominions in America.

In a war with Spain, based upon the tyrannical oppressions of her monarchic system, when the fortune of war placed one of her persecuted provinces in possession of the United States, it was more than any Congress dared to do to abandon that province to Spanish control, and to permit the restoration of that monarchic power. This was more than any of my Democratic colleagues dared to avow or propose as an amendment to the treaty of Paris, and they are such intrepid men that I can leave this discussion at that point and declare that it was impossible.

The law of this Republic is, that any area of country that has once been within the declared and recognized sovereign power of the United States can never become subject to monarchic rule while we have the ability to prevent it.

Iturbide was Emperor of Mexico, but his dynasty crumbled to dust in the presence of the principles of republican government that Mexico borrowed or inherited from our organic law. Maximillian, with great States of Europe at his back, was crushed by the weight of this silent but all-prevailing power.

It was never true, and it is not true now, that the United States will consent that territory once within our sovereign jurisdiction shall be turned over to any other than a government republican in form. So the Philippines are forever dedicated to republican government by our war with Spain. What else may happen, a republic will exist there while we exist.

The other American principle that compelled us to hold to the Philippines was that we, as a people, having decreed the absolute divorce of church and state, could not afford to commit any people who might fall within our power to an internecine war in which an established church is in armed conflict with dissenters or nonconformists. We were forced to compel the keeping of the peace between the insurrectos and the friars, and could only do so by assuming sovereignty over both the warring parties.

It would be a terrible reflection to republicans of the American type and to the followers of Thomas Jefferson in political belief that the United States should be in the occupancy of a country consecrated to religious intolerance and after it had admitted to such a country a day's sunshine of the freedom of religion it should turn that country back to a sovereign power that would instantly put out that light and remand the people to the fetters of an established church. It is for this that I must plead my excuses to my Democratic brethren for insisting that this cardinal principle must be permanent in the Philippines.

With the friars in the Philippines, and their vast accretions of land—the wash of the tears of the people—left unprotected against the raids of Aguinaldo and his associates, we can readily see that the renewal of the struggle of 1896 would soon have desolated the islands of Luzon and Negros, as well as other islands, without giving any real protection to the freedom of religion or against future governmental oppressions. It was our unavoidable duty to prevent that.

Spain protected the church and its possessions as an integral part of the Government. When the power of Spain was destroyed, it became the duty of the United States to protect the property of the church against seizure and confiscation by the insurrectos, and the people against the secular powers of the established church.

In the constitutions promulgated by edicts of Aguinaldo the freedom of religion was claimed, but not the divorce of church and state, and it is beyond denial that the Spanish Government, with the moral and material aid of the established church, would never have permitted the realization of that dream through the unaided efforts of the insurrectos. Aguinaldo could no more have escaped from or defeated the power of the established church than he could, unaided, have withstood the power of the Holy Alliance. It was our arms that divorced church and state in the Philippines, a task that Aguinaldo could never have accomplished, even if he had ever attempted it. It has been all the time and is still impossible to divorce church and state in the Philippines, except through the sovereign power of the United States.

This principle is worth as much to the people of the Philippine Islands as it was worth to the Hollanders, as the result of the eighty years of war with Spain, and I do not know why it is not as much to the glory and honor of the people of the United States to have established free religion in those islands, beyond the power of men to destroy it, as to establish the principles of independent republican self-government in the 16 Spanish-American States.

I know of no part of the American plan of republican government that stands above the freedom of religion in the grand schedule of civil liberties, either in dignity or value.

If my vote for the treaty of Paris should prove to be my death warrant as a Democrat, my tomb will not be dishonored if it has the inscription, "The freedom of religion," that Thomas Jefferson wrote for his own tomb as the most cherished work of his great career.

When through the ages past and to come the horrors of the eighty years' war, with the martyrdoms and burnings at the stake, are counted against the glories that were thus earned in their emancipation from the power of this same established church, the noble Hollanders are and will be almost the envy of mankind, that they were called to suffer and die so gloriously.

They were not 4,000,000 people, and yet shall we forget that we have emancipated 8,000,000 of people from the same bondage, with the slight sacrifices we have been called upon to make?

Whatever else may or may not happen to the Philippines, we have dedicated those islands to the freedom of religion; we have unshackled them from the dominion of an established church, and no power will ever exist that can undo our work or remand them to that servitude, through the agencies of political or military power. I can not regret a vote in the Senate of the United States which God has blessed with such imperishable good.

Our Revolutionary struggle was not all political. It did not relate solely to taxation without representation or to ship duties or embargoes. What we most desired was freedom of thought, speech, sentiment, and religion.

As this self-assertion is related to government, we call it independence; as it is related to personal rights, we called it liberty, and the first demonstration of liberty of action was addressed to the highest and noblest privilege and duty of man—the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. The Revolution was not complete until the freedom of religion was established in the organic law.

If I should indulge an expression of my personal convictions as to the providential lead in this movement, I would go further and point out the first conflict of arms between the Moslems and the American Christians only three weeks ago, in which the followers of Islam have had their first lesson, which may prove to be the final one.

It might be, and it is my right to believe it to be true, that the tidal wave of the sentiment of resistance to wrong that was forced into movement by the exactions of an established church in Cuba has swept across the Philippine Archipelago and has reached the followers of Islam in Mindanao, and has established there the principle that it is not safe to human liberty that the alleged divine power and the secular power should be united in the head of any human government.

While I ponder, with a sad heart, the evils and abhorrent incidents of war, especially a war with an ignorant and a superstitious people, and while I have no tolerance for cruelty inflicted in the name of war, of which I have witnessed much, I can see that the people of the Philippine Islands are much further advanced toward deliverance from their troubles and infirmities than they were when Dewey fought in the Bay of Manila. I can see that an established church and government by edict have been forever banished from the islands.

This experience has been made harsh through disobedience to proper authority. That is always to be deplored, because it is needless and unwise, and causes the innocent to suffer with the guilty, but I suppose that it is not difficult to understand how a Jewish philosopher like the great Gamaliel could reconcile himself to the wars of extermination, whose history is recorded in the books of the Old Testament, when he reflected upon the great events for which they prepared the way.

But it may be said that the war in the Philippines shows no element of Christian charity, or of mere humanity, yet the necessity may, possibly, excuse frail humanity for its excesses.

The armies of Moses and Joshua were often led by the Lord of Hosts, and must have been right and needful, yet the holy wars of the Old Testament were the most cruel and relentless of any that history has recorded. They were wars of preparation, and such wars are always apportioned in their severity to the value of the results that follow them.

So Joshua smote all the country of the hills and of the south and of the vale and of the springs, and all their kings; he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the Lord God of Israel commanded.

If our military officers have been cruel in warfare they will be held accountable; but they did not create the evils that they have tried to suppress with too heavy a hand.

Our sufferings, as a people, in the war with Spain have been almost inconsiderable, because, I suppose, we have not deserved to suffer more in an honest and impartial effort to benefit others.

No hundred days of public war between powerful nations was ever followed by events of such importance to the world or to our own country, not even the hundred days of Napoleon's last campaign.

In the pride and glory of this marvelous success we have not offered a cup of bitterness or humiliation to any human being.

Much has been alleged that imputes to the Government a purpose to enrich its favorites at the expense of the people of the Philippine Archipelago. I feel that simple justice requires me to express my dissent to that statement. It is not sustained by the facts. On the contrary, there is a feeling of distrust toward men of enterprise and capital that is calculated to injure the islands by keeping the public lands unoccupied and by keeping out of the world's commerce the productions that would make its islanders prosperous and contented.

The day has passed in which large and fertile areas can be set apart to the occupation of those who live on the spontaneous productions of a rich country. The new day of the world's progress, in which nature was no longer the slave of the savage, dawned upon the coasts of the North Atlantic when the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, and upon the plains of the West when the chief—Chicago—surrendered his hut to the white man, who has followed it with a city that is greater in its power than the greatest cities of ancient times, and is yet in its infancy.

We look back upon these marvelous works with boundless pride and with no misgivings of conscience; yet we look forward to further progress in the same direction, with alarm at the toilsome and dangerous way that opens before us. And still we are marching forward.

In the history of this continent events have shaped the policies of our people that were beyond their control, and the people have responded to their requirements beyond the restraint or the control of the experts in statecraft.

The establishment of a rude home by a pioneer, in some attractive spot distant from the settlements and the murder of his family by the Indians, have often been the cause of the rapid development of great areas into a habitable and fruitful country. When he sought the privilege of supporting his family where the hand of nature promised kindly help, he was innocent of wrongdoing, and was ignorant of the great forces that his silent march in the wilderness would put in motion.

When Dewey was at Hongkong, on the 25th January, 1898, more than three months before the battle of Manila, a message was sent him by cable:

WASHINGTON, February 25, 1898.

DEWEY, Hongkong:

Order the squadron, except the Monocacy, to Hongkong. Keep full of coal. In the event declaration of war Spain your duty will be to see that the Spanish squadron does not leave the Asiatic coast, and then offensive operations in Philippine Islands. Keep Olympia until further orders.

ROOSEVELT.

It was the fleet, made ready under these orders, that fired the guns that were heard around the world.

The prescience that included in that order the duty of defending our Pacific coast and of making an attack on Manila had no more reference to conquest than the writer had to the fact that he afterwards as the President of the United States would thereby become the military or civil ruler of the Philippine Archipelago.

Yet in the event of war with Spain that order covered the whole field of strategy and drew after it the inevitable necessity of governing the Philippines, if Dewey should be successful in his offensive operations.

Admiral Dewey's movement began at that point and under that order, and it ceased when he turned over the government of the islands to the civil and military authorities of his Government.

The islands were full of Indians, as our country was when Washington surrendered his commission at Annapolis. And it would be quite as just to say that the Constitution of the United States was a barbarous edict because it provided for the government of the Indian tribes through regulations of commerce by acts of Congress as to contend that the purpose of the Government was robbery in assuming sovereign rights over the various tribes in the Philippines.

Those people are, some of them, no higher in civilization than our desert tribes of Indians, and none of them are higher in any respect than some of our civilized tribes. Indeed, considered ethnologically, they are tribes of Indians, except those who are of African origin.

The inhabitants of these islands are of negro and Indian origin in their broadest classification. The Negorotos and Negritos have unmistakable negro characteristics, and the Tagalogs and Visayans are quite as strongly stamped with the Indian character as it is exhibited in Aztec, Toltec, Mayo, and Eskimo tribes. The fiercer Indian tribes, such as the Sioux, Apache, Ute, and others, hardened by the climate and the rugged nature of the countries they inhabit, are only Tagalogs under a harder environment.

In one unmistakable trait their resemblance is very strong. They refuse to accept any language but their native dialect so long as the tribal relation exists. The Spaniards have labored for three centuries to make their language acceptable to these tribes in the islands of the archipelago, and they have so far rejected these efforts that only a few natives speak the Spanish language. So it is with the American Indians as to the English language.

The laws of the Cherokee Nation are still written in their own dialect, in the alphabet invented by Sequoyah, printed on Indian presses, and approved by the king. Yet that is the most enlightened Indian tribe in the United States. They are ready for statehood and deserve it, and only our racial aversion deprives them of that clear right.

For more than three centuries the Anglo-Saxon has been the schoolmaster of the American Indian, not because he desired to practice his pedagogy with the rifle and torch, but for some inscrutable reason which is so much in harmony with his sense of duty that his conscience makes no revolt even at its cruelties. Yet it is more in the seeming than in the fact that these duties have been cruel to our pupils.

After all, since we crossed the Alleghenies and to the south of the Ohio River with our pioneer population we have always paid the Indians for lands they nominally occupied and have given them homes on the best part of the public domain.

There are small tribes who are the richest people in the world, by a per capita distribution of their wealth.

The Filipinos call themselves Indians, and very much resemble Indians in their dealings with us.

I can not look back with a feeling of reproach over our hard experiences with the Indians, and I do not look forward to our dealing with them in the Philippine Archipelago with a feeling of dismay. If we have not been acting in the line of duty, we are grievously mistaken. If we have obeyed any command or followed any lead in this march of civilization, it has not been the spirit of evil that has controlled our movements, but the spirit of good, for our rewards have been great, and the blessings we have conferred on other races have been a far greater benefaction to them.

In the more notable campaigns of our Indians wars more than 300,000 lives have been lost and more than $500,000,000 has been expended; all because the Indians stood in the way of our progress in expansion. We wanted to remove them as obstructions to our growth. Having grown strong and free on lands they claimed as their heritage it is not too great a sacrifice to make for them, that we should make them as free as we are by removing impediments to their growth in the Philippines, even if it it has cost us $6,000,000 and 10,000 lives.

I do not quite believe that we are the sole and irresponsible masters of our destiny or that we are not compelled to follow the instincts—if we may so define the noble aspirations of the Caucasian races—that lead us to exertion and sacrifice for the benefit of mankind.

In our dealings with the Philippine Islands there was never a moment of time when we could have halted or could have reversed our movements without violating the instincts of our race and the duty of our Government.

At the time when Montejo's fleet was destroyed Dewey could not have withdrawn from Manila without inviting Spain to reoccupy it. Military strategy, which was the only question then presented, required Dewey to remain at Manila. He had no place or port where he could coal or supply his fleet if he remained on or near the Asiatic coast of the Pacific. All neutral ports were closed to his fleet for any belligerent purpose. His nearest home ports were in California.

By remaining at Manila he could coal his fleet and supply it. His withdrawal would have exposed Hawaii to certain capture and would have given Spain a military base 2,000 miles from our coast, while our commerce in the Pacific would have been exposed to Spanish interference.

It would have been, in every sense, dangerous, if not fatal, to our operations in the Pacific and to our western coast to have abandoned Manila. It was the only base of operations that Spain had west of the Azores or east of the Minorca Islands, near the Mediterranean Sea.

Cuba was not a base, because we kept it under close blockade. Manila was not a military base for Spain, because Dewey was there.

It was these facts in both instances that saved our Atlantic and Pacific coasts from being harried by the Spaniards.

Mr. McKinley had no military option but to hold Manila.

When Admiral Dewey had secured his victory, and with it the safety of our Pacific coast, and while the peace protocol was in force, we began to cast about us to find some way to lighten the task of disposing of the islands of the archipelago.

The first suggestion as to the easiest way to secure a naval station in the Philippines was to retain sovereignty over the Bay of Manila and, perhaps, the Bay of Subig, and yield all the other parts of the islands to the natives.

This plan I at first approved. A little reflection showed us that such a course would necessarily involve two prominent difficulties that we could not afford to create and very many others that would arise under such conditions. The first of these is that Manila is the national capital of the archipelago and the commercial mart of a vast sweep of the Orient. We could not occupy it and avoid constant friction with a native government in the sovereign control of the rest of Luzon.

A naval station would only be a part of the value of Manila to our people. As a mart of commerce with the other group of countries called the Orient, Manila would be more important to the people of the United States than Hongkong is to Great Britain.

Strategically and commercially Manila Bay is the key to the Pacific Ocean. I think no American has yet been so poor in spirit as to be willing to abandon it and deprive our country of its advantages as a commercial station in the Pacific.

The holding of Manila or Subig is the practical holding of the entire archipelago. If we were not otherwise bound by agreement to protect the islands against foreign invasion or domestic insurrection, our presence there, in the occupation of a great naval station, would compel us to protect and defend the entire group of islands under Tagalog rule.

Such will be the situation when we have established naval stations in the island of Cuba. If the Monroe doctrine had never been thought of, the national right and duty of protecting the territorial integrity of Cuba, when we establish naval stations on that island, will be complete. So it would be in the Philippines.

There is no form of suzerainty that we could exercise over the archipelago which, by any possibility, could be safe or profitable to the United States; and there is none that would not bring upon us the terrible burdens that suzerainty has loaded upon Great Britain in the Transvaal.

I am old fashioned enough in the style of my Democracy to deny utterly the power of the United States to employ its legislative sovereignty in the territory of another sovereign government and to participate there in civil rule.

The native inhabitants of the archipelago have a just cause of resentment toward us, which should be at once removed. It is because we refuse to admit them to citizenship and refuse to extend to them the personal guaranties that are fixed and everlasting covenants of personal rights and liberties to each individual who is a citizen of the United States, as is done in this measure. In this matter Congress is sadly guilty, and the Filipinos are bitterly conscious of the want of consistency between our professions and our practices.

In speaking of personal rights and liberties, I do not allude to those areas where the people are in open insurrection against the sovereignty of the United States. Insurrection, when it exists in force and under arms, is a form of war which the Government is compelled to put down, in order to preserve its sovereignty, which is the life of a nation.

In dealing with insurrection, the power of the nation must be paramount over all the guaranties of personal rights, and these rights may be suspended by competent authority, but not otherwise. But where such war is not declared to exist, and peace and subordination to law prevail, except among a few people, the personal rights of a citizen of the United States are supreme over all adverse laws and practices.

Under our statutes, a proclamation by the President is necessary to place any district in the legal attitude of being in a state of insurrection. The proclamation of the President is sufficient to create this legal and political condition of local war in a district that he declares to be in a state of insurrection, although the President can not declare war against a foreign government.

When I speak of the personal rights of Filipinos under the Constitution, I refer to such as are found in islands or districts that are not proclaimed to be in a state of insurrection, and I insist that each and all of the people in such districts are entitled to all the personal guaranties that exist in favor of citizens of the United States as they are defined in the Constitution. It is this law-abiding class to whom we have persistently denied the recognition of citizenship of the United States in the Philippine Islands, and while some are clamoring for the personal rights of insurrectionists under the Constitution they deny the rights of citizenship to all classes. It would seem that this has been done under the misconception that citizenship confers the right upon the citizen to participate actively as a factor in the conduct of government.

Political power, except as it relates to the basis of representation, has no connection with citizenship, and in that connection it is only passive and has no actual authority. A child has a political force or power as a factor in the basis of representation, in which basis the sovereign power resides, but it has neither political power nor the capacity to participate in giving political direction to that power; yet a child has all the personal rights of citizenship and an equal right to their enjoyment with the most influential person.

When we deny to the Filipinos the character of citizenship of the United States, we deny to them the right of demanding these personal rights and all political priviliges that might be based upon them. We demand their allegiance, which means obedience to law and the duty of making of sacrifice, even of life, that may be required to support the sovereignty of the Government; and in return we owe them protection, under the laws of nature and of nations, and the security of the personal rights and liberties guaranteed to all citizens of the United States under our Constitution. And all our agents and officers should be bound to secure to them these rights according to the legal conditions that exist in the places where they are found.

The better to secure these rights, every officer of the United States, or of any legal government in the Philippines, should be required to take the oath of office prescribed in the Constitution.

This is the true guaranty of fidelity that the Constitution provides, and it is the only one except punishment for official delinquencies. In this oath we introduce the fear of God as a foundation of all integrity in government.

It is our reluctance to admit the Filipinos to citizenship that has caused them to believe that Congress regards them, either with pity or disdain, as an inferior people. And such is the fact. It is gratuitous and unreasoning folly that leads us to deny citizenship, in the meaning of the Constitution, to any person who owes either natural or conventional allegiance to the United States.

Our precedents are all against the denial of citizenship on account of race or color or any previous condition, even of slavery. Our citizenship has always included, as a matter of fact, all the races of mankind, and it is illogical and unwise for us to abridge it by the exclusion of the Filipinos.

A citizen of the Philippine Islands, where our sovereignty is supreme, is a national nondescript, with no allegiance, and is as homeless a vagrant as if he were a prairie wolf.

It is time that we had laid aside some of our own groundless prejudices while we are asking the Filipinos to lay aside theirs. It is time that we had realized the fact that the principles of free, constitutional, republican government are as well adapted to the wants, necessities, growth, development, and contentment of the physical or natural man, who has the intellect to comprehend it, as the Christian religion is to his spiritual growth, and that a denial of the benefits of either to a sentient being is contrary to the spirit and purpose of both.

We can no more corrupt or deprave republican government by extending its blessings to those who are fitted or capacitated to understand and practice its principles than we can deprave the Christian religion by extending its plan of salvation to sinners.

In a republic it is not every individual who participates in the lawmaking or governing power, even by assisting in the choice of governors, judges, or lawmakers.

Only one in five of the actual population in the most enlightened communities exercises these powers; yet a republic is the safest for the rights and liberties of the nonvoting classes, because one-fifth of the people who vote owe their power to the same Constitution that protects the nonvoters against its abuse. They are all alike interested in the principles and in the integrity of the Government, although they may not exercise its powers.

In a republic the intelligence, fidelity, and virtue of the voter is the real security for the wisdom and justice of the government, and if the man who claims the office or function of voter, or for whom it is claimed, is not qualified to perform its duties, he is not thereby endangered in his personal liberties, nor is he thereby deprived of an equal enjoyment of the benefits of government any more than any other nonvoter, such as a child or a woman.

It is the right to aspire to the office of voter, or to any other office, and to qualify himself for place and power to be conferred upon him by his fellow-citizens, that gives a peculiar and incalculable value to citizenship in a republic. No citizen is debarred from these privileges, except through his personal want of qualification or his lack of the confidence of the people who choose men for office.

The whole value of that citizenship would be lost to him, as it would become pestiferous and destructive to the Commonwealth if he was permitted to enter upon the exercise of the governing power, as a voter, before he has the intelligence and knowledge that are essential to its proper exercise.

Therefore the process of converting a Spanish subject into a voter in an American Republic must be slow, as a rule, and must depend upon his growth in the knowledge of republican government. Give him citizenship, thereby exalting him to the plane on which his aspirations for power are lawful and commendable, and he becomes a free man in the highest sense of personal liberty. No freedom can be greater than that which capacitates man to rise lawfully from the lowest to the highest capacity of citizenship.

This precious liberty of freedom of mind and body is embodied in the citizenship of the United States, and there is no limit of lawful power to which its possessor may not be exalted by intelligence, fidelity, and virtue. Every citizen of the United States, whether native, adopted, or annexed, is entitled to the highest privileges, if they are accorded to him by a lawful electorate and are permissible under the Constitution and the laws. If we have not conferred the power to acquire these rights upon the Filipinos, our mission is a failure and our expansion is only the swelling of a dead or decaying body.

The true distinction between a citizen and a subject is not known in any other than a republican form of government. It is in citizenship that we find the true line of cleavage that separates free government and monarchy. Citizenship is the corner stone on which every liberty for the individual man must rest. Wherever citizenship is established republican government follows. It is true in Switzerland, in France, in the United States, and in all the Spanish-American States, the last one of which has just entered the family of States—whose citizens have attained to the high rank of citizens of Cuba after having been the subjects of Spain. Whatever errors may attend their policies or administration, the people of a republic are citizens, and will never degenerate to the lower character of subjects.

The United States can no more have subjects than it can have kings, and whatever laws or policies may be based on such a theory are absurd; they are a reproach to the history, the principles, and fair name of this the leading Republic of all history.

The first duty of Congress toward the Filipinos is to remove all doubt and distrust from this subject by a recognition of the citizenship of those people, which means only this, that they owe allegiance to the sovereignty of the United States, and that we owe them corresponding protection. It is the Republic and the Constitution that confers citizenship upon them, if they are natives, not as a gift, but as a birthright.

They will believe us and respect us if we firmly declare these relations to exist, and that they will be maintained with a strong, friendly, and just hand in all that is meant by American citizenship. On this foundation they will build in peace and security, with growing affections for our institutions of government and with pride in the honors of American citizenship.

When the people of the Philippine Archipelago, whether they are Christian, Moslem, or Pagan, understand that we are dealing with them on the fixed principles of our own Government, which does not recognize attainder of blood, or banishment to foreign countries, or the depraving of millions of people into the condition of subjects while they are the repositories of sovereign power, as a means of getting rid of evil men, but that we require the duties of citizenship from all to whom we owe protection, they will accept so much of our civilization as they are, from time to time, prepared to assimilate, and will grow up into the full stature of our citizenship. A republic has no foundation except the sovereignty of the people. When we abandon that we abandon the republic.

In our experiences with Indian tribes, which has been as trying as any in history, we have the most conclusive proofs of our capacity to civilize, Christianize, and enlighten the wildest of races and to elevate the most obdurate savagery that has ever existed in human form into enlightened citizenship. It has cost us much and it has extinguished some of the tribes through their perverseness, but the remnant is now about as great in numbers as the whole body of Indian population has ever been. Peace between the warring tribes has been firmly established, and they no longer attempt to make savage forays into peaceful settlements to inflict slaughter and rapine upon women and children.

We have not formally recognized their citizenship, as we should have done, under the mistaken idea that we could not afford to meet their savage warfare with measures of retaliation of a like character in dealing with them as citizens of the United States; that their character of citizenship forbade us from treating them as outlaws. It only gave us the better right to punish them for the abuse of that character. Indians who are taxed have always formed a part of our basis for the apportionment of representation. Filipinos who are taxed furnish the same constitutional basis in the distribution of political power.

It is only those who have not a law that are a law unto themselves. Those who have a law must obey it. They can become outlaws by yielding to savage instincts; but when they do so, the law of retaliation becomes justice, however painful its infliction may be, and it rests with the Government to declare the punishment due to outlawry.

Involuntary outlawry inflicted by a government upon any people is a national wrong of the most dangerous character. This is the condition we impose on the Filipinos when we deny them citizenship and rank them among the nations as a swarm of pariahs. Voluntary outlawry is the most atrocious sin a man can inflict upon society. It calls for the terrible penalty of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, such as we have sometimes been compelled to inflict upon our savage Indians, not by statute, but by the silence that gives consent, and such retaliation has been found necessary in the Philippines in some instances, to suppress ladrones and bandits who prey upon all who are defenseless, inflicting their most horrible revenges upon people of their own race.

Outlawry and its punishment is not unknown, even to the highest Christian civilization, and while its summary punishment is sometimes deservedly reprobated in the strongest terms as being unlawful and intolerable, it is not always rebuked by trial and judgment in the civil courts. It is not overlooked or forgotten. It is lamented and passed by in silence because, after all, the outlaw has suffered no more than justice when he is summarily executed.

When I reflect on such events in our own midst, as have been recently stated in the Senate, I am prepared to make some allowance for those whose duty compels them to deal officially with outlaws, at the peril of their lives, and who deal with such people in the performance of a public duty, without any feeling of private resentment or malice, and always with sorrow and regret. It is often the severest and most painful task of a soldier or a juror to inflict extreme justice on a culprit to prevent him from destroying the lives of innocent people who are otherwise unprotected.

What we have known and many have seen, in war and in peace, of the sudden wrath of the people descending like a bolt from the heavens upon beastly outlaws admonishes us to be forbearing in condemnation of the men we have sent out to confront these enemies of mankind, at the peril of their lives.

We are discreetly silent when the people, in mobs, inflict summary justice on outlaws; and we should be discreetly careful in our investigations before we declaim against the men we send out to confront outlaws and to punish them for their crimes. I do not believe that any American officer has maliciously inflicted harm on any body of Filipinos, or on any person, either by orders given to his subordinates or by the silent approval of their misconduct.

If outlaws have suffered, it is because they defy the laws, human and divine, and wreak their vengeance and satisfy their malice, cupidity, or lusts upon the innocent and defenseless. It is very difficult to restrain the soldiery or the people to the precise methods of legal procedure when they are forced to free the country of men who are voluntary outlaws.

The Senate has been engaged, through its committee, in collecting testimony as to the alleged outrages perpetrated by our Army in the Philippines, and Senators have seized upon each fact as it has been detailed by the witnesses to comment with severity upon the conduct of our officers in the field. If the Senate is possessed of full jurisdiction to pass judgment on these charges, which seem to have been confided by the Constitution and laws to courts-martial, a full, fair, and impartial trial of the accused officers is necessary to the honor of the country. We can not safely conduct such a hearing as a part of the measure now before the Senate.

Investigation by proper authority is demanded by the whole Army as a duty we owe to it, and they justly resent a partial inquiry and discussion conducted on a bill which does not necessarily call for such a discussion. Their mouths are closed, and they are not permitted even to appear at the bar of the Senate to answer these accusations.

There is a coloring in the whole debate on both sides of the Chamber, in which the officers of the Army have neither interest nor responsibility. In that view it is very unfortunate.

I do not know whether the accused officers are Democrats or Republicans, nor do I suppose that any Senator knows. I do know that the Army is more completely a representative body than the Congress of the United States. These officers come from every district and every territory in the United States, and bring with them the characteristics, the personal interests, and the pride of the people of those various political divisions.

This is the body of men that the Senate is accused of censuring on an ex parte examination of witnesses whose credibility is sometimes in doubt; and the whole people of the United States, represented by them, are said to be attacked in the character of their sons.

I do not believe that any Senator here desires to attack the whole Army, but that is the interpretation that the Army puts upon our action because we do not call them to account individually, and they deeply resent it. Some of these officers will never survive the infamy with which they are branded in this debate, unless a court of inquiry or a Congressional commission shall exculpate them; and even after they are acquitted their names will be a byword and a reproach. For one, I lament this situation as a national sorrow.

Enough has been said about the conduct of officers in the Philippines to require a strict and impartial investigation, conducted by the regular military courts constituted under the laws and regulations of the United States or by a joint commission of the two Houses, and if the Executive or any officer or soldier is responsible for the alleged crimes or irregularities, let him be dealt with according to law. But until these accused men are heard, on a fair trial, it is a fearful hardship that the Senate should proceed to try and condemn them.

It is not a question whether this line of action is necessary to the future government of the Philippines. If it was it would also be quite as important to inquire whether the people of the islands can withstand the marauders who have been the cause of a resort to these harsh measures if we should withdraw from the Philippines until we have tried the officers of our Army.

It is as much the duty of the Government to free the islands of bandits and marauders as it is to compel obedience to lawful authority on the part of its officers, or of those who resist the United States. The people who submit to the sovereign authority of the United States are entitled to protection against those who despoil and persecute them for that cause. The murder of a well-disposed Tagalog under our protection is as much a cause for retributive justice as the murder of a soldier. Left to their own protection these people could not withstand the persecutions of these lawless classes. They implore our protection, and we may have gone too far in the use of Filipino methods in extending it to them.

A court-martial, or court of inquiry, will certainly develop all that has been wrong or irregular in the conduct of our Army in the Philippines and will punish the offenders when guilt is established. Congress should await the action of these tribunals and proceed, with whatever power it possesses, to inquire and to legislate for the prevention of further wrongs, either by the insurgent Filipinos or by our officers, civil and military. If the regulations of the Army or the general orders of those in command are wrong, they should be changed. If they are right, obedience to them can not be wrong.

Two principal charges are made with reference to the conduct of our officers and men toward the Filipinos. The first is the use of the water cure to extort information as to concealed arms and as to the existence of insurrectionary plots.

Perhaps the most revolting feature of the water-cure plan of torture is the fact that it has been practiced on our captured soldiers by the miscreants who claim to be insurgents, and we have borrowed it from them for the purposes of retaliation. Its origin was in the Spanish inquisition, from which the Filipinos have learned much that they are compelled to unlearn before they can properly appreciate a government that is freed from the influence of such institutions.

The strait jacket and the water jacket in use in our prisons and other similar devices, such as the rawhide whip and the paddle, are of the same character and are used for disciplinary purposes. All of them are liable to serious abuse, yet they appear to be necessary in some cases. That they are cruel is not to be denied, but this brings up the old question whether it is humane to so adjust punishment, without reference to its severity, as to prevent crime. The world has struggled with this question since the days of Moses.

The highest duty of an officer in charge of an insurrectionary district is to reduce it to obedience to lawful authority. His duties relate to the prevention of crime rather than to its punishment, and no rules can be prescribed for the suppression of insurrection by preventive methods. They must be largely discretionary, and to be effective they must be retaliatory and adapted to the necessities of the situation. When they are discretionary duty, honor, and humanity require that the punishment should be merciful.

A threat of devastation by fire and sword, if it has the effect to deter insurrection, is a blessing rather than a curse to a district where insurrection is rife, although it may cover the officer who makes it with reproaches. Many a name, otherwise glorious in history, has been sadly tarnished by such threatenings.

Such threats were made, especially by Brigadier-General Smith, in Samar, but they seem not to have been extensively carried into execution, because the threat was, in a large degree, effectual to suppress the crimes that afflicted the island. If the country had been made "a howling wilderness," the fact would have been more disastrous to the policy of the Government than to the Filipinos, although it is the same direful infliction that the insurrectos were trying to visit upon their own people who refused to follow them in making war against the United States.

The Senate, in the consideration of this subject, is bound to give due weight and impartial consideration to all the facts that relate to it. The second form of repression that is complained of is the concentration of the people in camps.

After open and organized warfare had ceased in the several islands, a few ladrones and mercenaries remained under arms, with no other purpose than to plunder the country. They turned their weapons upon their own people and inflicted upon them every form of persecution. They burned villages, destroyed cattle, shot women and children without quarter or mercy, and forced the people to seek the protection of the American Army.

It was under such conditions, and to separate the friends of peace from these robber bands, that the plan of concentration in villages was adopted. It had no more resemblance to the Spanish plan of reconcentration in Cuba, that was instituted for punishment by starvation, than an almshouse has to a prison, or than the hand of a merciful woman has to the grip of a tiger. It was the only plan by which the people in the villages who were friendly to us could be separated from and protected against enemies in their midst, who were using them as a cover for attacks on the forces of the United States.

Nonintercourse between a district where insurrection exists and the people of a district that is not the theater of insurrection is enjoined and enforced by highly penal statutes enacted by Congress. This is impossible where the brigands consort with the people who are peaceful to find a shelter from the Army.

But what excuse can possibly be found in the conduct of the Army for the refusal of Congress to give proper government to the Philippine Islands? We must either govern them or abandon them, and the more the Army may have abused these people the higher is the duty of providing for them a better civil government.

I find in this bill the denial of citizenship of the United States to the Filipinos.

This is the worst form of imperialism, because it is the most radical. It reaches the individual and takes away from him the personal guarantees of rights and liberties, written in all our constitutions, and depraves him from the dignity of citizenship to the low condition of a subject, a feudatory, a serf, or a slave, according to the behests of those in power over him, without a nationality that can protect him.

When Democrats deny to the Filipinos the character of citizen it is in vain that they hold out to them the hopes of sovereign independence. If they are not fit to be citizens of the United States they are not worthy to be trusted with the organization and government of an independent republic.

I am the pledged foe of imperialism in every form, and especially in those forms in which it uses the power of the people to oppress the weaker classes by the abuse of the power of taxation. I admit that the expansion of our territorial area has furnished many opportunities for those abuses that follow the usurpation by Congress of powers that are not granted by the Constitution.

I admit that a state of war has enabled Congress to usurp those powers on some occasions, even to the extent of dismembering sovereign States and forcing amendments into the Constitution that lapse for the want of the support of the people. But the fault is in Congress, and not in the circumstances that have furnished the opportunity for displaying the fault.

Yet, as a Democrat, I witness with pleasure the fact that our expansion in Porto Rico has forced free trade between that island and the other States and Territories of the Union after an abortive attempt to obtain an imperialistic construction of the Constitution from the Supreme Court of the United States.

More perfect and specific security for personal rights and liberties are provided for in this bill than was given in our first Territorial government to people of our own blood in the great Northwestern Territory, but it is given on the false basis of a citizenship in the government of the Philippines, which is not a citizenship of the United States, or at least it is not so intended.

I also see that the impulse of national growth has so enlarged the scope of our national duties and responsibilities that the most powerful and voracious trust combination in the United States, nurtured by laws that were fitted to an attitude of sequestered selfishness and narrowness, is dying in the house of its friends. The sugar trust still lingers and fights for life, with desperation, but expansion has dealt it a death blow. So, in time, will follow the lasting peace that is about to close a long and destructive commercial war.

The Cuban reciprocity bill is the truce that promises peace, justice, and prosperity to our people and to the beloved child of our household—the firstborn heir of American independent sovereignty. And that is a fruit of expansion.

Cuba was recently an infant in our nursery, subject to our absolute power. She is now the only sovereign and independent State that was ever created by the will of another nation. We appear to have reached the time of predicted glory in which it is said that a nation shall be born in a day, and we appear to be the instrumentality through which that honor has been conferred upon the world through Christian civilization.

I can not witness such marvelous results with the least apprehension that any people will suffer harm from our efforts to bless them, or that we will be endangered by throwing around them the sheltering arms of our benevolence.

Another expected fruit of our forced expansion, which is to me as the shadow of a great rock in a desert land, is the rehabilitation of silver as a money metal in this bill of Republican parentage.

I have never for one moment doubted that silver would resume its place as a precious metal, to be coined into the money of redemption as soon as the necessities of the people could speak for them against the monopolistic power of those who are the masters of credit, public and private, and who seek gold as the one solvent of the debts that the great nations owe them—the consols, the bonds, the debentures, and the rents that are taxed upon the industries of mankind.

The Filipinos, it appears, are either too ignorant, or superstitious, or too hardened in a bad habit, or too poor to be able to get along without the use of silver money, and we must supply their necessities. Our industrial classes and our richer people, and even our Government, use silver coin and silver certificates in all their daily business; but we are so prosperous in the use of this cheap money that we are willing to believe that it is as good as gold, and we use it as if it was as good as gold.

The Filipino thinks that silver is better than gold for his business, and will not use gold or paper money.

It is a great blessing this bill provides for these ignorant people, that it adds a constant flow of silver coin into the volume of their money supply. Panics can make no headway against a currency that is constantly maintained by actual coinage of silver money, and the dollar being the largest coin, sudden inflation is not possible.

This lesson, taught by a necessity that has forced expansion upon us, will be carefully studied by millions of Americans who will understand and realize its value to industry. It sometimes happens that out of the mouths of babes and sucklings we are taught wisdom. While I regret that these new duties have forced us to repeat some old lessons in the suppression of savagery, I do not regret that new conditions have compelled us again to test the strength of the powers of our republican form of government and its ability to do justice to all who are citizens of the United States.

I need not go further than the threshold of this inviting subject to find sufficient reasons to confirm my faith in the benefits we are conferring upon the Filipinos and ourselves by the governmental power we exercise over and through them in their splendid country, and I would make the government in which they are to participate as completely under the protection of the Constitution, in all the rights that belong alike to all citizens of the United States, as if they were situated on the American Continent.

I would as cheerfully relegate the plains of the West to the tramp of the herds of buffalo, chased by the blanketed Indians, as to deny to American civilization and to the hopes of civilization in the Philippine Archipelago the opportunity to use the abundant riches of the many millions of acres of public lands in those islands.

Under laws patterned after our system of free homes for the homeless and the protection of the public lands from the monopoly that came near ruining Australia, we will furnish a refuge for millions of people on this continent who will follow the flag to that splendid country and will find there the opportunity denied to them here—to grow up into the full stature of free and responsible citizenship of the United States. This hope is a bright light in my conception of the future.

APPENDIX.

(1)

The agreement at Biacnabato between Aguinaldo and the Captain-General of the Philippines.

No. —. These translations show the progress of negotiations, and it certainly appears that the agreement as signed and executed stipulated nothing but a cash payment to Aguinaldo and a promise on his part to stay away from the islands and his agreement to see that the insurgents laid down their arms, which agreement was never carried out within the meaning of the act.

It seems to me to be evident that no promise of reforms, and certainly no project for the reform of the church, was agreed to, although, of course, nothing of the kind may have been discussed.

JOHN R. M. TAYLOR,
Captain, Fourteenth Infantry.

(2)

Senor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Chief of the Revolutionary Army of the Philippines:

The undersigned has the honor to present himself unexpectedly in your headquarters in Biacnabato, and states that he does so impelled only by his vehement love for the country in which he was born, to explain the many reasons why the hostilities caused by the revolution ought to stop, as to attain at present the whole of the desires which are sought to carry into effect it would be necessary to first ruin the Filipino people, and whoever boasts that he loves that people should remember that the Spanish Government holds in suspense the longed-for reforms solely because those very men continue to bear arms.

In truth, on various occasions I have heard the governor-general of the Philippines lament this suspension, as he is very desirous of establishing and unfolding during his command a new series of reforms bound to give satisfaction to the country, and if they are not everything which has been asked it is because it is impossible to root out in one day that which has endured for more than three centuries.

I have also repeatedly heard the most excellent Señor Marques de Estrella state that, understanding as nobody else could his obligations, he had placed himself at the head of the brigade which took the last trenches of Cavite so that he could have the right to pardon without any limitation, on account of which he dictated the proclamation of the 17th of last May and amplified it extensively in applying it to others, raising all the embargoes and even holding his arms open to receive deserters themselves.

Having, then, reforms and true pardon, I permit myself to counsel that a truce is advisable for the unfolding of the generous propositions and proposals of reform which now animate the Spanish Government, now represented in the Philippines by the very noble and fatherly Most Excellent Señor Don Fernando Primo de Revera and in the Peninsula by the great and liberal statesman, Most Excellent Señor Don Segismundo Moret y Predergast, author, in 1870, of the order of the abolishment of the religious sects, of the creation of the Philippine Institute, of the reforms of the University of Manila, and so many beneficient plans for the country directed toward giving representation in the Spanish Cortes to the archipelago and to liberate this people from the powerful dominion of the religious orders.

Such are the reasons which prompt me to present myself spontaneously at these headquarters, and I submit them to the high consideration of your excellency, so that you may deign to accept them for the termination of this fratricidal struggle by a convention of peace, which is bound to assure the prosperity of our beloved country.

PEDRO A. PATERNO.

BIACNABATO, 9th of August, 1897.

(3)

Translation of preliminary draft of treaty of Biacnabato.

NOTE.—The corrections and changes found in the original in pencil are given in the translation in red ink. The changes are, except where otherwise noted, in the handwriting of P. A. Paterno. It is evident that he, as representing the Spanish captain-general, refused to agree to the clauses stricken out, which is done in pencil, evidently the same pencil of Paterno's changes.

J. R. M. T.

In the copy I now present the lines marked in red pencil in the original are inclosed in brackets.

(4)

Aguinaldo's response to Paterno.

The excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandrino Paterno, having unexpectedly appeared in the Mountain of Biacnabato on the 9th of August, 1897, in the [headquarters of the president of the Philippine Republic,] before me stating that he presented himself impelled solely by his vehement love for the country in which he was born, to state that many reasons there were why we should lay down our arms, contenting ourselves with a portion of the amount which he asked for, since in order to gain at present all of our desires it would be necessary first to ruin the Filipino people, and those who consider themselves lovers of that country must remember that the Spanish Government is holding in suspense its carrying out of the reforms solely because we are in arms.

That the said Señor Paterno has on several occasions heard the governor-general of the Philippines regret this suspension, as he is anxious to plant and bring to completion during his command a new series of reforms intended to satisfy the country, and if they are not all that which we ask for it is solely for the reason that in a day it is not possible to extirpate what has been taking root for more than three centuries. That also many times he heard the excellent Señor Marques de Estrella say that, knowing his duty better than anybody else, he had placed himself in front of the brigades which took the last trenches in Cavite in order that he might have the right of pardon without any limitation whatever, on account of which he dictated the proclamation of the 17th of May last and extended its provisions fully to all persons, taking off all restrictions and even holding his arms wide open to welcome even deserters themselves.

As reforms, then, the actual forgiveness are promised, Señor Paterno advises us to restrain our warlike ardor and give an opportunity to the general's desires for reform, which animate the Spanish Government, represented by the very noble and paternal and most excellent Señor Don Fernando Primo de Rivera.

On account of these various other considerations not connected with the field of battle, and influenced by the undeniable authority exercised by Señor Paterno in questions concerning the Philippines * * * he has presented himself before my presence as willing to guarantee this negotiation by his own life, so valued by all Filipinos.

The undersigned, Don Emilio Aguinaldo [president of the Philippine Republic], chief of the revolutionary army, names the excellent Señor Don Pedro A. Paterno as arbitrator to [sign a peace] enter into harmonious relations with the Spanish Government, giving him full powers to determine, fix, and receive the total sum of the funds or values which the Spanish Government grants us, and to distribute them according to his knowledge and sense of equity, everywhere recognized, not only to those who have taken up arms, but also to those who, without having taken part in the campaign, are [compromised with us] suffering from the consequences of the war, and who are now endangered [by this present convention of peace on account of their obligations and interests].

Don Pedro A. Paterno has solemnly sworn [to the council of the president] before me to reveal no secret of the revolution at any time or place under pain of loss of life and honor, promising to overcome, if the Spanish Government aids him, all obstacles opposed [to the due execution of contract, payment of money, and other obligations contracted] to the execution of his pacific intentions and negotiations.

These difficulties once overcome and the resources of values trusted to the said Señor Paterno having been secured, they having been deposited [in his own hands] according to his instructions, and after we have sent our certificates that the total amount of the funds are in the custody of Señor Paterno of our free will, we shall turn over all the arms which we possess to the person designated by the captain-general and general in chief of the Filipino army, Don Fernando Primo de Rivera, asking him for amnesty. The President and his cabinent [consider that this action on their part is worth 3,000,000 pesos].

We commit our existence and that of our families, and also of all of those who have taken part in the present revolution, to the very noble and generous instincts of the Marquis de Estrella, grandee of Spain, hoping from his paternal forethought the sums necessary for us to live free in our towns under the protection of the Spanish authorities, in our towns where our property has been destroyed, or in foreign parts where we shall have to set up our hearths.

[In exchange for such protection from his excellency the governor-general of the Philippines, we promise to reestablish order and defend the peace in the Philippines during the three coming years until September, 1900, during which period we hope the desired political, ecclesiastical, civil, administrative, and economical forms, of which the principal are the following, will be carried out:]

I. [Expulsion of the religious orders, or at least regulations forbidding them to live together in cloisters.]

II. [Representation of the Philippines in the Spanish Cortes.]

III. Application of true justice in the Philippines—equal for the Indian and the Spaniard. The same laws in Spain and the Philippines. The Indians to have a share in the higher offices of the civil administration.

IV. Change of the laws governing property, upon taxes, and the holding of the church benefices in favor of the Indian.

V. Proclamation of the individual rights of the Indian—as, for example, his liberty to combine with others in associations—and the liberty of the press.

[The president takes into consideration the spirit and the letter of this writing to present it to the general assembly, which he hopes will approve it, but it is his duty to state that without the approbation of this assembly, which will be called together as soon as possible, the president of the Philippine republic can not put it in effect.

As a preliminary base for the harmony and the definite peace between the president and the Spanish Government, the president, who has the honor to sign this paper, will issue a general order suspending all forward movements of the revolutionary army of the island of Luzon as soon as he receives the necessary supply of rations to permit them to remain stationed in the mountains, having no relations with the cities and towns during the period of convocation and action of the general assembly.]

And to prove this to be the truth I sign rubricate, and seal with our accustomed seal, in Biacnabato.

EMILIO AGUINALDO.

[Seal of president of Philippine republic.]
Entered in the proper book No. 4.

MARIANO LLANERA.

[Seal of the commanding general, center of Luzon.]

M. NATIVIDAD.

(In the third handwriting in red pencil.) Accepted and agreed to. Difficulties.

(5)

Programme.

December 14.—Departure of Don Ysabelo Artacho with the approval of the excellent señor governor-general of the convention of peace.

December 16.—Issue of the orders proclaiming peace to all his troops in the various provinces by Don Emilio Aguinaldo.

December 23.—Departure for San Miguel de Mayumo of the Excellent Señor Don Pedro A. Paterno with the excellent señors generals chief of the general staff, Don Selestine Fernandez Tejeio and Don Ricardo Moret, and adjutant, two staff officers, and Lieutenant-Colonel of Infantry Don Miguel Primo de Rivera. .

December 24.—Arrival at Biacnabato of the Most Excellent Señors Generals Tejiro and Moret, adjutant, and two aids, who will be met in the road by Don Ysabelo Artacho and Don Jose Salvador Natividad.

December 25.—Departure of Don Emilio Aguinaldo and his companions with Don Pedro A. Paterno and Don Miguel Primo de Rivera for Lingayan, where the Spanish Government will have a merchant steamer to take them to Hongkong; the gentlemen going aboard may take their revolvers and the two rifles asked for by Don Emilio Aguinaldo. On the departure of these gentlemen from Biacnabato the Spanish Government will give, by Don Pedro A. Paterno, to Baldomero Aguinaldo a letter payable to the order of the Spanish-Filipino bank upon some bank in Hongkong for the sum of $400,000, the cost of exchange being charged to the Spanish Government.

December 27.—The above-mentioned gentlemen having left the port of Lingayen for Hongkong and having arrived at Hongkong, Don Emilio Aguinaldo will telegraph to Don Artemio Ricarte in order that he may carry out the following: First, the turning in of the arms and munitions inventoried; second, the carrying out of the order of Aguinaldo, given before his departure from these islands, for the turning in of all arms remaining in the hands of the various groups of insurgents scattered in various provinces; third, that he may notify General Tejeiro and other gentlemen who remain in Biacnabato that they may abandon their residences in said town. As soon as the 225 firearms, 2,382 cartridges, and 20 pieces of ordnance and 2 sabers are turned in to the Spanish Government at Biacnabato—these are the officially inventoried articles—Don Artemio Ricarte will notify Don Emilio Aguinaldo in cipher in order that he may draw upon or cash the letter of exchange for $400,000 guaranteed by the government of the Philippines, and the captain-general will notify Don Miguel Primo de Rivera and Don Pedro A. Paterno that he has received the arms mentioned.

General Tejeiro and Don Artemio Ricarte will distribute passes and guaranties to the insurgents permitting them to go where they see fit.

As soon as men and arms have come in surrendered to amount to over 700, half at least of the arms being modern ones, Don Pedro A. Paterno will be given two checks for the same sums, one for $200,000 and the other for a like amount, which will be good when the Te Deum is sung and the general amnesty proclaimed, which will be just as soon as peace reigns in the Philippines; the existence of bands of Tulisanes (armed robbers) will not be considered as a bar to this.

The surrender of the arms, when the 225 and other articles mentioned have been verified, will be to any body of troops, and will be accorded in triplicate receipts, one for the governor-general, one for Don Pedro A. Paterno, and the third for Don Artemio Ricarte, as to whom the governor-general will give the necessary instructions.

This programme is the same as the original project by the excellent Señor Don Pedro A. Paterno, and the insignificant variations from it, whose explanations accompany them, are made in agreement with the said gentleman, who signs it at Manila, 14th December, 1897, with the general in chief. The captain-general, Fernando Primo de Rivera; the arbitrator, Pedro A. Paterno. There is a seal which is inscribed: "Office of the captain-general of the Philippines, headquarters of the general staff." There are two signatures, Fernando Primo de Rivera and Pedro A. Paterno.

(6)

Programme.

[May God guide to glory.]

November 18.—Departure of Don Salvador for Biacnabato with the reply of the conference with the governor-general and with the passes for the insurgents in general.

November 20.—Sending out of the orders of pacification from Don Emilio Aguinaldo to all his barracks, scattered thoughout various provinces.

December 7.—Arrival of Don Pedro A. Paterno at Biacnabato with Don Miguel Primo de Rivera and General Tejeiro or General Moret, being guests in the government house, in company with the family of Don Emilio Aguinaldo, Don Artemio Ricarte, Don Jose Salvador Natividad, Don Ysabelo Artacho, and other chiefs of rank in the insurrection.

December 8.—Surrender of arms of the immediate command of Don Emilio Aguinaldo to the Spanish Government in some place between Biacnabato and San Miguel de Mayumo.

Simultaneously the Spanish Government will give to Don Pedro A. Paterno, to give it in return to Don Emilio Aguinaldo, the sum of 600,000 pesos, to distribute them among the insurgents.

December 8 (afternoon).—Arrival of Don Emilio Aguinaldo and other insurgent chiefs with Don P. A. Paterno at San Miguel de Mayumo.

December 10.—Departure at Manila of Don E. Aguinaldo and companions.

December 15.—Arrival of the mentioned gentlemen to foreign parts.

December 19.—Don Emilio Aguinaldo will telegraph to the insurgent chief which shall have remained in Biacnabato to prove to the Generals Primo de Rivera and Tejeiro that they can abandon, if they should so prefer, the government house at Biacnabato.

From December 20 to 31.—Surrender of arms of the other remaining commands of the insurrection.

January 1.—The "Te Deum" will be sung in the cathedral, and the decree of general amnesty will be promulgated.

January 2.—To Don Pedro A. Paterno two checks or notes will be given, one at four months date for value of 100,000 pesos, and another of six months for value of 100,000 pesos, which constitute the second and third payments.

Interlineations—Don Isabelo Artacho—it is good.
Blotted—que constituye—it is not good.
Biacnabato, November 15, 1897.

EMILIO AGUINALDO.
MARIANO LLANERA.
BALDEMERO AGUINALDO.
PEDRO A. PATERNO.

(7)

Act of agreement adopted for the pacification of the island of Luzon.

In the royal palace of Malacanan, residence of the excellent señor captain-general of the national armies, Don Fernando Primo de Rivera y Sobremento, Marques de Estrella, governor and captain-general of the Philippine Islands and general in chief of its army, said excellent señor being in private audience on the 15th of November, 1897, with the excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno, knight, Grand Cross of the Royal American Order of Isabel de Catholic Advocate, and resident of the city of Manila, who states as follows:

That inspired by his ardent love of the Spanish fatherland and of the soil of the Philippines, on which he was born, and convinced of the magnanimous sentiments of the nation and of the Government, sentiments so magnanimously shown in the conduct followed by the present governor-general of the archipelago, he has proposed, then, himself to cooperate in the reestablishment of peace, utilizing the influence which he exerts among his countrymen, since this influence of his is something thoroughly well established; that in order to attain this end he had a conference with the principal leaders of the rebellion in their own camp, where he exhorted them to lay down their arms and to subject themselves to the laws for the good of the country and in improvement of the conditions of their followers and of their own material interests; that his exhortations and labors have not been sterile, since at the end of a long discussion the leaders above mentioned, inspired by the same idea of peace and with reawakened love of their country, informed him that they realized that the state of war retards the inauguration of beneficent reforms in place of hastening them and placing full confidence in the liberal and generous spirit of the Government of His Majesty of his illustrious representatives in these islands; that his efforts have been constantly directed against the inveterate abuses and ills which oppress the Filipino people, and they are now ready to cease their hostile attitude and to cooperate with all their power and ability in the reestablishment of peace, and that in obedience to the pacific and conciliatory desires the said leaders have conferred upon Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno, here present, the ample powers which he exhibits, signed on the 5th of last November in the mountain of Biacnabato by Don Emilio Aguinaldo, supreme chief of the insurgents in arms, and by the other leaders, Don Mariano Llanera and Don Baldomero Aguinaldo, his subordinates, powers which designate him as the arbiter and which give him full authority to negotiate an agreement providing for the submission of those who still maintain a hostile attitude against the power of the state.

The excellent Señor Captain-General Don Fernando Primo de Rivera, having thoroughly understood the nature of the mission undertaken by the excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandro, in accordance with the powers signed by Don Emilio Aguinaldo, Don Mariano Llanero, and Don Baldomero Aguinaldo, in which it is stated that the said Don Emilio Aguinaldo assumes the position of full and absolute representative of those who fight against the laws established in the Philippines, such being the position conferred upon him by an assembly composed of individuals taking part in the rebellion and by the organization created by the same for the conduct of the government, the said excellent captain-general having stated that he congratulated himself upon the attitude adopted by Señor Paterno, and on account of the tendencies and proposals of those represented by Señor Paterno stated that he considered worthy of gratitude and praise the services rendered by that gentleman for the establishment of peace, and that he was animated by the sames desires himself, as he had shown in his proclamations of amnesty and in a large number of orders and decisions, he was accordingly ready to facilitate any steps taken toward the pacification, being ready to renounce the laurels of victory in the coming campaign, to avoid the shedding of blood, and any reasons for enduring hatreds and rancors between those who, having the same God and the same fatherland, ought to live in fraternal concord and a community of interests and of affections.

The excellent señor general in chief having received with benevolence the propositions formulated by Señor Paterno, the latter stated the chief desire of those whom he represented was to submit; that the future of those who lay down their arms on the altars of the country should be free from any penalty for the past, and that they should be supplied with the sums indispensable to their continued existence in the territory of the nation or in foreign parts; and considering these desires attainable and others unacceptable, both members of the conference having considered the matter with a thoroughness and from the lofty point of view which so difficult and important matter requires, the excellent Captain-General Don Fernando Primo de Rivera y Sobremonte, exercising the authority with which he is invested and the full and unlimited power which the Government of His Majesty has conferred upon him, and the excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno, in the name and as representative of the leader of the insurgents in arms and of the other two leaders who signed the powers delivered to him, which he has shown, agree to end the conflict which at present afflicts with desolation and with blood certain regions of the island of Luzon; the engagement being comprised in the following clauses:

I. Don Emilio Aguinaldo, in his quality as supreme leader of those in the island of Luzon now waging open hostilities against their legitimate Government, and Don Baldomera Aguinaldo and Don Mariano Llanera, who also exercise important commands in the forces mentioned, are to cease their hostile attitude, surrender their arms that they are using against their fatherland, and are to surrender to the legitimate authorities claiming their rights as Spanish Filipino citizens which they desire to preserve. As a consequence of this surrender they obligate themselves to cause the surrender of such individuals as actually follow them and those who recognize them as leaders and obey their orders.

II. The surrender of arms will take place in accordance with an inventory on the —— day of ——, at the hour and place which will be decided upon. The military commander designated for this purpose by the excellent señor general in chief is to take charge of the same.

III. The surrender of the individuals referred to will take place, as far as concerns the leaders of bands or allied troops, with the formalities and at the time and place to be determined upon hereafter, each person surrendering himself to receive at the time of surrender a passport or pass which he needs to travel freely to the place where he wants to go. Spaniards, foreigners, and deserters from the army will not enjoy this privilege, but will remain in the hands of the military authorities, their cases to be disposed of as provided in the fifth and sixth paragraphs.

IV. All those who avail themselves of the provisions of this act will stand free from any penalty they have incurred from the offense of rebellion and kindred crimes, the excellent señor general in chief binding himself to concede general amnesty covering such offenses and to authorize the persons surrendering themselves to freely choose a residence in whatever portion of the Spanish territory or of foreign parts which they desire. This clause is not to be construed as conflicting with the provisions of the fifth and sixth clauses of the present act.

V. The deserters of the army who avail themselves of this act will be pardoned from any penalty, but will have to serve as soldiers in a disciplinary corps for the period which remained of their enlistment at the date of their desertion.

VI. The Spaniards or Americans and foreigners who present themselves claiming the benefit of this act will be comprised in the general pardon, but will be expelled from the Philippine Islands.

VII. The parties or bands which do not recognize the leadership of Don Emilio Aguinaldo nor obey his orders who claim the benefits of this act will obtain them in full-if they surrender themselves before the date set down.

VIII. The parties and bands which do not surrender before the date mentioned in the preceding paragraph will be pursued and treated as subject to the present laws covering such cases, or as parties of robbers and assassins, if, on account of their organization, the character of their leaders, or their own acts they appear to deserve such a description. Nor will the benefits stated accrue to those who surrender themselves immediately before they are to be attacked, or during the pursuit following an action.

IX. The excellent señor general in chief will provide the necessary means for supporting the lives of those who surrender themselves before the date given in the second paragraph, in view of the painful situation to which the war has reduced them, but he will negotiate only with Don Emilio Aguinaldo, through the Excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno.

X. And in case that any of the preceding paragraphs are violated the provisions of the whole act will remain null.

In testimony of which the Excellent Señor the Capt. Gen. Don Fernando Primo de Rivera, in the name of and as representative of the Government of His Majesty, and the excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno, in the name of Don Emilio Aguinaldo, bind themselves to execute the provisions of this act and sign it. Three copies of which are to be drawn up, one to be forwarded to the minister of war, one will remain in the office of the captain-general of the Philippines for reference and for execution, the other will be given to the arbiter, the excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno, the said gentleman stating in the name of those whom he represents that they confidently expect that on account of the foresignt of the Government of His Majesty that it will take into consideration and satisfy the desire of the Filipino people in order to assure them the peace and well-being which they deserve.

Mr. STEWART. If there is no one wishing to take the floor now——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is ready to proceed.

Mr. STEWART. There are some very pressing treaties that the Department is very anxious should be passed.

Mr. LODGE. I hope not now.

Mr. STEWART. I am not going to speak on them.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wisconsin is ready to proceed.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have just heard a short conversation between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], and it is understood that the Senator from Georgia is to go on immediately.

Mr. SPOONER. If he desires.

Mr. STEWART. Of course, if anybody is ready to speak I shall not press my request.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not think the Senator from Georgia is very anxious to go on now if the Senator from Wisconsin prefers to proceed at this time.

Mr. SPOONER. I told him that that course would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. HOAR. I hope there will not be any executive session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I sincerely hope there will be, for I have 15 or 18 important names to report.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have the floor, and the Senator from Connecticut will agree with me when he hears what I was about to say. I hope there will not be any executive session just now. While, of course, the Senate must go on with this business, it is hardly fair to empty the galleries of their occupants, who have come to hear the debate, as we would have to do if we had an executive session of only a few minutes. So I hope it will be postponed until a later hour, after the debate for the day is over.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dubois,	McCumber,	Simon,
Bailey,	Elkins,	McLaurin, Miss.	Spooner,
Berry,	Foraker,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Burnham,	Gamble,	Millard,	Teller,
Burrows,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Carmack,	Hale,	Patterson,	Vest,
Clapp,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Warren,
Clay,	Hoar,	Pettus,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, N. Y.	Wetmore.
Dietrich,	Kean,	Proctor,
Dillingham,	Lodge,	Quay,
Dolliver,	McComas,	Scott,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I occupy the floor to-day through the courtesy of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and I shall not occupy exceeding forty or forty-five minutes of the time of the Senate.

I remember, Mr. President, that in 1898 I read an article in the North American Review entitled "What shall we do with the conquered islands?" by Senator JOHN T. MORGAN, and I remember that it made a very favorable impression upon my mind at the time I read it. I entertain now the same views which he expressed then in regard to the Philippine Islands, and before I begin my remarks I will read a part of that article in the North American Review. Senator MORGAN said:

The Government of the United States took no active part in promoting the regeneration of Hawaii, and it will not inaugurate or support a propaganda in the Philippines, either political or religious; but it should not deny to itself the right to give its encouragement to good government in those islands or to give to those people proper support against the unjust invasion of their rights by foreign powers. The fortunes of war have devolved this duty upon us.

Again I want to call attention to the views which Senator MORGAN expressed on that occasion, and I believe the views to be perfectly sound.

Annexation will not be a necessary or proper result of such moral or actual protection, because the United States is an American power, with high national duties that are in every sense American, and the Philippines are not within the sphere of American political influence, but are Asiatic, and should remain Asiatic.

All the American States are Christian, and in nearly all of them the political relations are dissolved between the church and the state, so that religion is free and untrammeled. In the Eastern Hemisphere the reverse condition has always been a source of discord that is apparently ineradicable.

Senator MORGAN said:

Freedom of religious opinion and conduct, under proper regulation, is an essential element in a true republic. Until this impediment is removed, which can not be done by mere political agencies, a republic like ours would find a barrier to the annexation of European or Asiatic countries which we could not attempt to surmount without danger to our own Government.

Senator MORGAN further said in this well-written and mature article:

All the American States being Christian and nearly all of them republican, it would be an uncongenial and dangerous situation if any of them should annex foreign territory having a people in authority who are antagonistic to both of these vital conditions.

Mr. President, I agreed with that article at the time I read it. I agree with it now. It expresses the views that I entertain in regard to the Philippine Islands.

I promised to-day, Mr. President, to take up only so much of the time of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, and I will now proceed with my remarks as I intended to make them.

Mr. President, this discussion has been continuous for many weeks. The arguments against this bill have been able, and I can not hope to add anything new to this discussion; but I have felt it to be my duty to give the views I entertain in regard to the policy we ought to pursue in dealing with the Philippine Islands.

I cast my vote in favor of the ratification of the peace treaty. I am to some extent responsible for the ratification of that treaty which gave to us these islands, and I feel that I must assume my share of the responsibility resting upon us for the ratification of that treaty. When we went to war with Spain the American people were well acquainted with the situation in the island of Cuba; they were familiar with the history of the Cuban people and of their relations with the Government of Spain. We had read of the revolts against Spanish supremacy and we knew the aspirations of the people of that island. We knew that these people had suffered for years on account of the cruelty of the Spanish Government, and to rescue these people from the hands of a cruel and tyrannical government we declared war against the Government of Spain.

When we declared war against the Government of Spain the American people were not acquainted with the situation then existing in the Philippine Islands. From a geographical standpoint we knew very little about these islands or their population. We knew nothing of the history of the Philippine people; we were unacquainted with the location of their country, and knew nothing of the habits, education, customs, or traditions of the various tribes occupying the Philippine Islands. It will not be denied that at the time Admiral Dewey fought the celebrated battle at Manila Bay, which resulted in the triumph of the American Navy, that the American people were comparatively ignorant as to the location of the Philippine Islands, and certainly we knew nothing of the population of those islands. When we went to war with Spain to relieve the Cuban people and to give to them an independent government we did not have in view the acquisition of the Philippine Islands or any other territory. Doubtless if we had contemplated that this war would have resulted in the acquisition of these islands we never would have gone to the rescue of Cuba. The Philippine Islands came to the American people as a result of the war with Spain; we did not desire them; we did not need them. But regardless of our desires and wishes, these islands and their population fell to us as a result of the war with Spain. These acquisitions have brought to us grave and serious responsibilities. These responsibilities have not yet been solved, and in my opinion the policy which we have been pursuing since we acquired them, and which we are now pursuing, will never correctly solve this problem.

During the last four years we have acquired the island of Porto Rico, and the inhabitants of that island have accepted American sovereignty, and are reasonably satisfied with the government given to them by the American Congress. We have been much more liberal with the people of that island than we have been with the Filipinos. We have given to the people of Porto Rico self-government; we have given to them a general assembly, and they are permitted to elect the popular branch of that general assembly from their own people, and the people of Porto Rico to a large extent control and regulate their own internal affairs. It is true that in one instance, where we discriminated against the people of this island in tariff laws, they became dissatisfied and hostile to American authority; but wherever we have shown a desire to be just to the people of Porto Rico, recognizing that they have the right to control their own internal affairs, such action on our part has resulted in bringing about a warm and cordial friendship between the people of that island and the American people. Cuba has at last become an independent republic. We have carried out in good faith the pledges we made to the people of Cuba; we have permitted the Cuban people to form a constitution, to organize a republic, to put in operation a government of their own. All three branches of the Government—executive, judicial, and legislative—are in the hands of the Cuban people.

What has been the result? They have never resisted American authority and American arms; we have never had to fire a gun to maintain law and order in the island of Cuba. We have dealt justly with the people of Cuba; we have recognized the obligations we owed to these people, and this course upon our part has been appreciated by the intelligent population of Cuba. Such generosity has resulted in bringing about the most cordial relations between these two peoples. Instead of war and strife, we now have and will continue to have friendly commercial relations with the people of the island of Cuba. Take the Hawaiian Islands. When we acquired these islands we immediately gave to the people of these islands a Territorial form of government, which left the internal affairs of the islands almost entirely in the hands of their own people. What has been the result? Such action upon our part has been appreciated by the inhabitants of those islands. They recognize the fact that Congress has been just and true to the principles which have governed us in the past and which have made us a Republic without a parallel in the history of the world. In the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands we did not depart from the great fundamental principles which have governed us in the acquisition of territory since the formation of our Republic.

We have had no trouble with either Cuba, Porto Rico, or the Hawaiian Islands. It has never been necessary for us to fire a single gun to maintain law and order in either Cuba, Porto Rico, or the Hawaiian Islands. The American flag is respected, honored, and loved in Porto Rico and in the Hawaiian Islands. In dealing with the people of these islands we have regarded their wishes and desires; we realized that these people loved liberty; that they had aspirations to control their own affairs, to make their own laws, and to administer these laws by their own people. We yielded to their wishes and desires and good results have followed. The same principles applied to the population of the Philippine Islands would have produced similar results. Human nature is the same the world over, and when you tell me that the people of the Philippine Islands can not appreciate liberty and self-government, then I tell you that you do not understand human nature. If we had pursued the same course toward the population of the Philippine Islands that we have pursued toward our other newly acquired possessions, we would have had a different result. I merely refer to these acquisitions to illustrate what might have been accomplished had we pursued a wise, just, and conservative course toward the people of the Philippine Islands.

When the peace treaty was before Congress for ratification I was one of the Democrats who gave my vote in favor of its ratification. By that ratification I did not mean to sanction an unjust, tyrannical, cruel, and impolitic course toward the people of the Philippine Islands. I disagreed with the majority of my party associates in casting that vote, but while I did so I have always agreed with my party in regard to the policy we ought to pursue toward the people of these islands since the ratification of the peace treaty. I wish to give the reasons which governed me in casting my vote in favor of the ratification of the treaty. I was exceedingly anxious to agree with the majority of my party associates. I doubtless received severe criticism at their hands for casting my vote in favor of the ratification of the treaty. I wanted to agree with them, but viewing the question as I did, I consulted my own conscience and judgment and did what I believed to be right and best for my country in casting that vote, and will now give my reasons for so doing.

After the battle of Manila Bay, and after the surrender of the city of Manila, I learned something of the geography and the population of the Philippine Islands. I learned something of the history of the Philippine people and of their struggles for liberty against the Spanish Government; I learned something of the services which the Philippine people and the Philippine army gave to the American army in subduing the army of Spain in the Philippine Islands; I learned that these people had been struggling for three hundred years against the Spanish Government, fighting for recognition and independence; I learned that practically the same conditions existed in the Philippine Islands that had existed in the island of Cuba for more than a century. While the people of the Philippine Islands, a few years previous to the time we declared war against Spain, had agreed to lay down their arms and submit to Spanish authority, they did so with the promise of many reforms on the part of the Spanish Government. Truth told me that when our navy went to Manila and destroyed the Spanish fleet that we found the same conditions existing in these islands that had so long existed in the island of Cuba. The population of these islands had complained of tyrannical rule; they had sought by all possible means reforms at the hands of the Spanish Government; they had risen in insurrection year after year to throw off the Spanish authority and to put in operation a government of their own, but they had failed for want of sufficient strength. So soon as we fought the battle of Manila Bay, and the American Navy was victorious, the people of the Philippine Islands immediately took hope, and recognized that with the assistance of the American Army and Navy they could win their independence.

After the surrender of the city of Manila the Spanish army was practically crushed in these islands, and I realized that, to some extent, the people of the Philippines had doubtless been instrumental in aiding us to crush Spain and her authority in these islands. When Spain sued for peace these conditions existed in the Philippine Islands. By the joint operation of the American and Philippine forces Spanish authority had been crushed in the Philippine Islands. During the negotiations for peace these conditions existed. I do not believe that we would have been just to the people of the Philippine Islands if we had left them to the mercy of Spain. We went there; we accepted their aid; we found the same conditions existing there that had so long existed in Cuba, and I hardly thought that the peace commissioners—appointed to negotiate a peace treaty between Spain and our Government—could afford to leave the Philippine Islands in the hands and at the mercy of Spain. That peace treaty provided that Spain should relinquish her sovereignty over the island of Cuba, which relinquishment was to leave Cuba a free and independent country. The peace treaty provided that Spain should cede the island of Porto Rico to the United States, which gave to us title to Porto Rico, and American sovereignty was asserted over the population of that island.

The peace treaty ceded the Philippine Islands to the United States. I believe that when the treaty was negotiated we ought to have provided that Spain should simply relinquish her sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. Then the people of the Philippine Islands would have been left in the same condition in which Cuba was left. But the peace commissioners, instead of using the word "relinquish," used the word "cede," and consequently, by virtue of the treaty, we acquired to the Philippine Islands whatever title Spain had to those islands at that time. When Senator VEST moved to amend the treaty so as to strike out the word "cede" and substitute the word "relinquish" I voted in favor of the amendment, but this amendment was defeated. Then the next question that came to my mind was, Should I vote for or against the ratification of the treaty? If I voted against the ratification of the treaty, and the treaty was rejected, what would be the result? We would have to negotiate a new treaty; months might transpire before a new treaty could be negotiated; many complications, it struck me, might arise whereby the war between Spain and the United States would be continued, and the commercial relations of my country might be seriously affected. Besides, I felt sure that an extra session of Congress would be called. My party had lost heavily in the election, and undoubtedly the treaty would be ratified at the extra session of Congress. Now, during this interval, it struck me, serious results might follow.

If we rejected the treaty made by our commissioners sent to represent our Government, for months our relations with Spain would be involved in doubt and uncertainty, and doubtless the business interests of the country would suffer largely. I did not believe that the Government of the United States would be benefited by the acquisition and retention of the Philippine Islands; I did not believe that we ought to acquire and permanently retain the Philippine Islands, and I did not believe that we ought to leave the population of the Philippine Islands to the mercy of Spain. Really, I thought that we ought to require Spain to relinquish all sovereignty she had ever held over these islands and to leave the population of the islands to govern themselves. This was the course that I preferred, but I could not get what I wanted. Then the next question that presented itself to my mind was, Is it not best to ratify the treaty, to do away with Spanish sovereignty in the Philippine Islands, to settle our relations with Spain, to end the war, and bring about permanent peace? When this was done we could immediately legislate and provide for a free and independent government for the people of these islands. We could then deal with them as we did deal with Cuba. My own convictions led me to the conclusion that I ought to vote in favor of the ratification and to declare in favor of a policy toward the people of the Philippine Islands which would eventually lead to self-government for these people.

While I voted against the majority of my party in favor of the ratification of the peace treaty, I have never wavered for a single minute on the question as to our duty in the Philippine Islands. I have agreed with my party on every question which has arisen since the ratification of that treaty in regard to our conduct toward these people. I said at the time the treaty was ratified that I favored a policy which would eventually give to the people of these islands the control of their own affairs. Now, I do not desire to be misunderstood. I believe that when the peace treaty was ratified the Government of the United States acquired a good title to the Philippine Islands. I believe that the Philippine Islands belonged to the Government of Spain. I do not contend that the people of the Philippine Islands had achieved their independence before we fought the battle of Manila Bay. I am not certain that the people of the Philippine Islands would have acquired their independence without the aid of the Government of the United States. In all probability after the battle of Manila Bay and after the surrender of the city of Manila, without our aid, these people would have achieved their independence. I do not contend that they had a government of their own and that they had won their independence before the battle of Manila Bay. In fact, history teaches me that they had not won their independence. They were contending for their independence. As soon as these people learned that our Government was fighting Spain they became more hopeful and determined, and through our aid they doubtless would have achieved their independence.

After we ratified the peace treaty, and after we had been the recipients of their aid in the war with Spain, knowing at the same time that these people were aspiring for self-government, I could not see how the American people could deny to them their right of self-government. I am unalterably opposed to the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands with a view of making them an integral part of the United States. I can not imagine a greater calamity to my country than to give these people representation in both branches of Congress. If we divide them into States and give them representation in proportion to their population, these people will be entitled to more than 50 members of the lower House of Congress and to about 12 Senators. I do not believe that the American people will ever tolerate any such policy. Such a course would, in my opinion, result in the ruin and destruction of our Republic. I do not believe that Congress will ever pursue any such policy. I did not vote for the ratification of the peace treaty expecting any such results; I gave my vote in favor of the ratification of the peace treaty hoping and believing that Congress would have the wisdom and patriotism to meet the duties we owed to these people, and that we would at an early date declare a policy which would result in putting into operation a government in the Philippine Islands capable of maintaining law and order and carrying out international obligations. I believed that we would pursue such a policy as we have pursued in Cuba, and that we would aid the Philippine people in forming a constitution and putting in operation such a government, and that so soon as we carried out the duties and obligations we owed to these people we would withdraw from the Philippine Islands.

At the time we ratified the peace treaty I expressed these same views, and every Senator, on both sides of the Chamber, who spoke in favor of the ratification of the treaty expressed substantially the same views. I did not believe after the ratification of the treaty that Congress would pursue the policy which we have been pursuing. I did not believe that we would force American authority on the people of the Philippine Islands against their will. I did not believe that we would sacrifice thousands of lives and millions of dollars to crush the aspirations of the people of these islands. Neither have I indorsed, nor do I now indorse, the policy which we have pursued and which we are continuing to pursue in these islands. I do not believe such a policy to be just, wise, or patriotic. I have never believed, nor do I now believe, that it was our duty to abandon the Philippine Islands immediately after the ratification of the peace treaty. By the ratification of that treaty we assumed certain duties and obligations to the people of those islands. I believe that it was the duty of the United States to continue to occupy and govern the said archipelago until the people there have established a government and until such guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain and for the safety of those inhabitants that have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under the authority thereof.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLAY. With a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How long does the Senator think it would take to accomplish what he says he wants?

Mr. CLAY. I do not know, and I do not presume even my friend the Senator from Indiana knows.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know.

Mr. CLAY. But I do say this: I believe if at the time we ratified the treaty we had declared the policy we intended to pursue toward the Philippine Islands, assuring those people that as soon as they put in operation a civil government capable of carrying out our treaty obligations and maintaining law and order, before this time the Philippine people would have had a civil government, and we would have been at perfect peace with those people from that time to the present period.

I believed that it was the duty of the Government of the United States to declare by act of Congress our final policy in regard to the Philippine Islands. I have believed, and still believe, that it was the duty of the Government of the United States to proclaim to the people of the Philippine Islands that so soon as all armed resistence to the United States has ceased in said islands, and so soon as the people of those islands, with our aid, shall put in operation a government to be administered by the Filipino people capable of maintaining law and order and carrying out international obligations, then we will withdraw from those islands.

I do not believe any Senator on this side of the Chamber has ever declared that we ought to have left the Philippine Islands when the treaty was ratified. The substitute of the minority which we have been considering provides that our Army, our sovereignty, shall stay in the Philippine Islands until a stable government is established, and when that is done that we will leave the islands. The Democratic party has never contended that we should leave the Philippine Islands without carrying out all of our obligations. The real issue between the two parties is whether or not we shall declare what shall be our final policy between the people of the Philippine Islands and the United States. Those of us on this side of the Chamber believe that when those people understand us and see that we intend eventually to give to them the right of self-government, such action on our part will be appreciated and will bring about peace between those people and ourselves.

Said government must, however, be a stable one, capable not only of maintaining law and order, but of carrying out all of our treaty obligations. I have never favored leaving the people of the Philippine Islands in a state of anarchy. I have believed, and still believe, it was the duty of our Government to aid these people in establishing civil government in the Philippine Islands. These people were ready and anxious to receive our help. At the time of the surrender of the city of Manila they cherished toward us the warmest friendship, and the most cordial relations had existed between these two peoples since we entered the Philippine Islands. They never became hostile to us until they conceived the idea that we intended to take their country and to assert American sovereignty there. We knew they were a suspicious people. If we had been cautious and careful to retain their friendship, such a course would have been a blessing to us and to them. These people have desired from the time we entered the Philippine Islands to the present time to know what course we intended to pursue toward them. They have sought in vain to find out what action Congress intended to take in dealing with their country.

Every step we have taken since the ratification of the peace treaty, in my opinion, has been unwise and unjust. We could have avoided the firing of a single gun; we could have retained the friendship of these people without the sacrifice of life and treasure, and we could have maintained the honor and dignity of our Government. Since we ratified the treaty we have sacrificed the lives of nearly 5,000 American soldiers to maintain our present policy, and we have spent more than $350,000,000, and these great sacrifices are not yet at an end, all of which could have been prevented by our Government setting forth the policy we intended to pursue toward these people. In order to deal with the people of the Philippine Islands, it becomes absolutely essential that we study the history of these pepple; that we know something of their surroundings, of their aspirations, of their traditions. History teaches us that for more than three hundred years these people have been almost continually at war with Spain.

During all this period why have they been at war? Why have they cost Spain millions of dollars and thousands of lives? We must interpret their aspirations and desires if we reach a correct solution of our present troubles. These people have always aspired to self-government; they have always resisted the authority Spain endeavored to exercise over them, because they sought to be an independent and self-governing people. The same motives that governed these people in their dealings with Spain will govern them in their dealings with us in the future. You may send American commissions across the ocean to make and execute their laws, and to levy and collect their taxes. These people will submit to the laws of such commissions so long as they are forced to do so by an American army, but no longer. When the American soldier leaves the Philippine Islands, the Filipinos will resist American authority and kill and murder American officials.

It is human nature, Mr. President. When you send five American citizens, I care not how intelligent they may be—and I have no criticism to make against the character of the Philippine Commission—to the Philippine Islands to make their laws, it is galling to the people of the Philippine Islands, and it will create eternal enmity between those people and us.

The Democratic party has recognized the duty which we owe to the Filipinos. The Democratic party has been in favor of remaining in the Philippine Islands until civil government shall be established capable of maintaining law and order and carrying out treaty and international obligations. The Democratic party has not been in favor of leaving the Philippine Islands to anarchy and chaos. We have been in favor of remaining in these islands until we carried out every obligation which we owe to these people and to other countries, but we have said from the day the treaty was ratified that these obligations which we owe to these people could be easily carried out if we would only declare to them that so soon as they carried out our obligations and put in operation such a government as I have described above, then we would leave the islands to the government of their own people.

We have maintained that such a declaration upon our part would necessarily give satisfaction to the people of the Philippine Islands; that they would readily accept the aid we would render them in establishing civil government, and that such a policy, put in operation at the time the treaty was ratified, would have prevented the cruel and heartless war that has been going on in these islands for more than three years. Who doubts that such a policy would have given immediate satisfaction to the people of these islands? These people would have seen that it was our purpose to aid them in establishing civil government—to aid them as we have aided Cuba. The entire population of those islands would have cherished the deepest sense of gratitude to the American Government. They would have accepted any suggestion coming from us in regard to civil government. They would have been our friends for all time to come, and the trade and commercial benefits which Germany and Great Britain are enjoying at their hands to-day would now be flowing into the Treasury of our people. I assert, and I do not believe it can be successfully contradicted, that such a policy on our part, immediately after the ratification of the treaty, would have resulted in the pacification of the islands, and civil government would have been established there long ago.

The American soldiers whose lives have been sacrificed in the Philippines would have been spared, and the friendly and cordial relations which first existed with these people would have been maintained. We have made an egregious blunder in the policy which we have pursued and which we are still continuing to pursue. During the three years of horrible war which has existed in these islands, what benefits have we reaped? We have seen the lives of thousands of our soldiers sacrificed, and millions wrung from the taxpayers of our country needlessly spent. We have seen the towns and cities of these people burned to the ground; we have seen their fields devastated, and probably more than half a million of their population perish as a result of the war. I do not care to discuss the horrors which have been detailed before the Philippine Committee; they bring shame to my country; I prefer to pass them by. They constitute a period in the history of my country which I wish could never be written. This war could have been prevented.

The policy advocated by the party to which I belong would have prevented the war; the 70,000 soldiers we have kept there so long, or the most of them, could have been kept at home. Such a policy as we have advocated would have prevented hostilities and would have enabled us to establish civil government there without war. These people knew that they were weak; they knew that when Spain was driven away from the islands that they needed our assistance. They never thought of going to war with the Government of the United States. They only went to war when they reached the conclusion that we intended to sustain toward them the same relations that Spain had sustained. Doubtless they misjudged our course. I do not believe that we intended to deal harshly with them, but when they reached the conclusion that American sovereignty would be asserted over the islands, then these people came to the conclusion that while Spain's cruel rule was at an end that American rule would be equally cruel. In dealing with these people it was absolutely essential to know their aspirations, to understand their wishes, to be familiar with their history, and with their struggles for self-government. They had suffered severely at the hands of Spain, and were a suspicious people.

Hence statesmanship required the utmost care upon our part to avoid any conflict with them. We should have made every effort within our power to retain their confidence and friendship and to assure them that our final purpose was to grant to them their life-long wishes and desires. When the history of our relations with the Philippine Islands since the ratification of the peace treaty shall have been written, and truthfully written, the historian can not fail to record the fact that this cruel and destructive war which has gone on in these islands during that time was the result of the failure on the part of Congress to set forth a liberal policy toward the people of these islands. In less than a dozen lines Congress could have provided for the final independence of the people of the Philippine Islands. It was not necessary to leave the islands at once. All that these people have asked was simply a declaration on the part of Congress setting forth the final policy of our Government toward these people after civil government was put in operation there.

Now, what is the real issue between the two parties? Both political parties agree that this Government should stay in the Philippine Islands until civil government is established. The Democratic party says that we should relinquish our sovereignty there as soon as civil government is established. The Republican party fails to declare a policy. Step by step they continue to exercise authority over the Philippine Islands without giving to these people any assurance as to what our final policy shall be. This is the real issue between us. The policy which the party in power has pursued has resulted in a continuous war; has created antagonisms that will probably last for a century. The policy the Democratic party has favored would have prevented the war, and would have enabled us to establish in those islands civil government by peaceable means. We are told by those who favor the policy of the party in power that the Filipinos are friendly to American rule. I do not believe that 5 per cent of the population of the islands are in reality friendly to American rule. They are friendly because of American arms, and if they were left free to act without force these people would be almost unanimous against American authority. In all probability we have destroyed during the last three years half a million of these people. I do not mean that we have killed that many, but as a result of the war half a million have died. Old men, women, and children have been killed, cities have been burned, towns have been destroyed, and fields have been devastated.

I make no complaint against the American soldier. Such destruction as I have detailed above is not unusual in war. But do you tell me that when these people have suffered so greatly at the hands of the American Army that in reality they are friendly to American rule? The advocate of such a policy is unacquainted with human nature. Do you suppose that they so easily forget that their children have been killed, that their homes have been burned, and that their country has been almost ruined? They may be a weak and inferior race, but the horrors resulting from the war which have been detailed before the Committee on the Philippine Islands will not be forgotten. It will take a century to eradicate from their minds the sufferings which they have endured at our hands. I can not calculate the injury which will result to the American people by reason of the hatred these people will cherish for us for centuries by reason of this cruel war. I feel that the policy which the minority have advocated is a just one.

The venerable Senator from Massachusetts has represented his State with honor and distinction in this body for nearly a quarter of a century. His valuable public services are appreciated by the American people, but when his history shall have been written the services which he has rendered his country in his continuous opposition to the policy of his party will give to him an imperishable fame. The last services of his public life will be his most glorious, and history will do him justice.

But, Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of discussing the bill now under consideration and not for the purpose of discussing our general Philippine policy. Nearly every act of ours since the ratification of the peace treaty has intensified the hatred between these people and ours.

Mr. President, I have pointed out the fact that the policy which we have pursued in dealing with the people of the Philippine Islands heretofore has resulted in creating antagonisms, and the continuation of such policy will never result in the pacification of the islands. I have further pointed out the fact that originally these people were our friends and cherished toward us the deepest sense of gratitude for the services which we rendered to them in their struggle with the Government of Spain. There can be no dispute about the fact that these people, previous to the ratification of the peace treaty, entertained toward the American Army and toward our Government the deepest sense of gratitude and we had every prospect of retaining their permanent friendship. Such friendship would have resulted in developing commercial relations with these people of great advantage to our country. Step by step they have drifted away from us until we have at last realized that these people have become our inveterate foes. It is well enough to inquire why this change of sentiment among the Filipino people toward Americans.

It becomes a duty of all thoughtful men to seek to remedy this condition of affairs and to pursue a policy which will restore the cordial relations heretofore existing and which are so necessary for the happiness and welfare of the people of these islands. When we build up and advance the interests of these people, when we give to them stable government to be administered by their own people, and give them a higher and better civilization, they will then understand the benevolent purposes of our Government, and such a course will result in bringing about the peace so much desired. I repeat, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing our general Philippine policy. I did not rise for the purpose of narrating the many cruel and heartless deeds charged as a result of the war now going on in the Philippine Islands, which deeds are deplored by all good men. It gives me no pleasure to refer to these atrocious acts. They bring shame to every true American.

But, Mr. President, the fault does not lie in our Army. The system of government which we have inaugurated in the Philippines is responsible for such results. The policy inaugurated by the party in power has led to this course. Congress has been silent as to the policy we intended to pursue. These people have asked in vain. They have sought by memorial after memorial for a declaration on the part of Congress as to what course we intend to pursue with the people of these islands, and I regret to say that they have sought in vain. If their petitions had been heard and Congress had spoken in no uncertain terms, peace would have been restored and the friendship of this people would have been retained, our commerce with them would have increased more than fivefold, thousands of lives that have been sacrificed would have been saved, and millions of dollars recklessly spent would have been saved to the American people. It will take more than a century after we reverse our action to eradicate the hatred and ill will implanted in the hearts of these people against our Government. Do you suppose they will forget at an early day that we have burned their cities and destroyed their homes? I answer no.

But, Mr. President, I am anxious to discuss some of the provisions of this bill. I maintain that the provisions of this bill, instead of having a tendency to bring about peace and reconciliation between these people and ourselves, will have the opposite effect. When we endeavor to legislate for these people and dispose of their country without giving them any voice whatever in such legislation, you may necessarily expect the intelligent and educated people of those islands to resent such a course. If you suppose these people are without ambition and pride you have misjudged them. History teaches us that many of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands are graduates of colleges and skilled in the science of government. When this class of people realize that we are endeavoring to legislate for their country and that they are deprived of the right to participate in making and executing their laws, these people will become restless and dissatisfied. They will resent your intrusion, they will resent American control, and they will lead the great masses of the people of the Philippine Islands to continuous war against the unjust policy which we are now proceeding to inaugurate in those islands.

When the Spooner resolution was passed all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands were vested in the President of the United States. He had absolute power to control the affairs of the islands, and to enable him to execute these powers he was backed by the American Army. No one thought that this power was to be permanent. No one thought that the President of the United States, for any considerable length of time, would be authorized to govern the Philippine Islands, composed of nearly ten millions of people.

President McKinley, in his message to Congress on the 5th of December, 1899, said:

> As long as the insurrection continues the military arm must necessarily be supreme. But there is no reason why steps should not be taken from time to time to inaugurate governments essentially popular in their form as fast as territory is held and controlled by our troops. To this end I am considering the advisability of the return of the Commission, or such members thereof as can be secured, to aid the existing authorities and facilitate this work throughout the islands.
>
> To give effect to the intention thus expressed, I have appointed Hon. William H. Taft, of Ohio; Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of Michigan; Hon. Luke I. Wright, of Tennessee; Hon. Henry C. Ide, of Vermont, and Prof. Bernard Moses, of California, commissioners to the Philippine Islands, to continue and perfect the work of organizing and establishing civil government already commenced by the military authorities, subject in all respects to any laws which Congress may hereafter enact.

In defining the power to be exercised by the Philippine Commission appointed by the President, the executive branch of the Government, in his message, said:

> Beginning with the 1st day of September, 1900, the authority to exercise, subject to my approval, through the Secretary of War, that part of the power of government in the Philippine Islands which is of a legislative nature is to be transferred from the military governor of the islands to this Commission, to be thereafter exercised by them in the place and stead of the military governor, under such rules and regulations as you shall prescribe, until the establishment of the civil central government for the islands contemplated in the last foregoing paragraph, or until Congress shall otherwise provide.

In further defining the powers of the Philippine Commission, the President said:

> Exercise of this legislative authority will include the making of rules and orders, having the effect of law, for the raising of revenue by taxes, customs, duties, and imposts; the appropriation and expenditure of public funds of the islands; the establishment of an educational system throughout the islands; the establishment of a system to secure an efficient civil service; the organization and establishment of courts; the organization and establishment of municipal and departmental governments, and all other matters of a civil nature for which the military governor is now competent to provide by rules or orders of a legislative character.

The President also said:

> The Commission will also have power during the same period to appoint to office such officers under the judicial, educational, and civil-service systems and in the municipal and departmental governments as shall be provided for.

In other words, by Executive order the Philippine Commission was empowered to exercise full and complete authority in legislating for and in controlling the Philippine Islands. The five American citizens appointed to go to the Philippines and establish civil government were clothed with all the power and authority necessary to legislate for the people of those islands. Their power to legislate and control the islands was without limitation. No Czar ever exercised more power than these men were authorized to exercise.

The Philippine Commission was originally composed of five American citizens, a majority of whom had never seen the Philippine Islands until after they were appointed. They knew nothing about the inhabitants—the conditions, aspirations, and surroundings of these people. Notwithstanding this fact, five American citizens were appointed to legislate and establish civil government in the Philippine Islands. They crossed the ocean, took up their residence in the city of Manila, and, since they were appointed, they have really been the civil government in the Philippine Islands. They had the right to levy and collect taxes and to make laws and rules and regulations necessary for the government of these islands. The entire population of the Philippine Islands must look alone to these five American citizens to make laws, to define and punish crimes, to levy and collect taxes. In fact, all the legislative and executive power necessary to govern the islands was vested in the Philippine Commission, composed of five American citizens, and the people of these islands have had no voice in establishing civil government. The friends of the Spooner resolution contended, at the time of its passage, that it was to be of a temporary character and was only to last until civil government could be established, and then the control of the internal affairs of the islands would be placed in the hands of the people of those islands. I had hoped, Mr. President, that when the party in power attempted to provide a permanent government for the Philippine Islands, a time would be fixed when the power granted in the Spooner resolution would come to an end, and when the Philippine Commission, composed originally of five American citizens, would cease to be styled the Philippine government; that their power to legislate would cease to exist, and gradually the people of the Philippine Islands would be permitted to control their own affairs.

They have sought for such ends and are still seeking for such ends, but this bill which we now have before us does not give to them a single ray of hope. If the people of the Philippine Islands accept this legislation and do not resent this intrusion on the part of our Government, then they are unfit for slaves, much less to be freemen. Thus far, Mr. President, we have not discussed in detail the provisions of this bill.

Section 3 of the bill provides—

That the action of the President of the United States heretofore taken by virtue of the authority vested in him as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, as set forth in his order of July 12, 1898, whereby a tariff of duties and taxes as set forth by said order were to be levied and collected at all ports and places in the Philippine Islands upon the passing into the occupation and possession of the forces of the United States, together with the subsequent amendments of said order, are hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed; and the actions of the authorities of the government of the Philippines, taken in accordance with the provisions of said order and subsequent amendments, are hereby approved.

We know that the Philippine Commission, composed originally of five American citizens, without consulting the people of the Philippine Islands, fixed the schedule of tariff duties and taxes in the Philippine Islands. The entire population of these islands were deeply and vitally interested in the question of taxation—both the collection and the expenditure of these taxes. Notwithstanding this fact, thus far they have had no voice either in the levying or the collecting and distribution of these taxes. The intelligent and educated Filipino has complained bitterly because the Filipinos have been ignored when this legislation was put into effect. The bill that we now have before us provides for the continuation of such taxes, and the powers heretofore exercised by the Philippine Commission, on the line suggested, are continued. In fact, this bill contemplates that, for all time to come, the Philippine Commission shall be the real legislative power for the Philippine Islands.

You call it a temporary bill, but this bill is permanent so far as this Congress can make it so; and this bill will stand on the statute book until you repeal it, and it will govern the people of the Philippine Islands for a hundred years to come unless you repeal it. It is permanent legislation, so far as Congress can make it permanent, and the Philippine Commission, by virtue of the authority you give them, will last to-morrow, it will last next week, it will last next year, it will last one hundred years, unless Congress see fit and proper to repeal the law giving the Commission this power.

The truth of it is, Mr. President, that this is a bill providing for a permanent government. It is true that the bill says that it is to provide a temporary government, but there is nothing in this legislation which would show that it is temporary. It is permanent so far as the bill is concerned, and when the people of the Philippine Islands shall read this bill and study it they will reach the conclusion that the Philippine Commission next year, and for a hundred years to come, is to be the real legislative power in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, we are told that there are intelligent lawyers in the Philippine Islands and highly educated men. When these people reach the conclusion that they are to have no voice in their affairs, but that the Philippine Commission is to govern them, you may expect dissatisfaction and trouble with those people in the future.

Why, Mr. President, if you will study the constitution which they framed there just before the ratification of the treaty, you will see that the men who drew that constitution were familiar with the principles of our Government. It was framed and fashioned after the principles of our Government, and I say when we presume that the entire population of the Philippine Islands are ignorant we make a very serious mistake. It is true that only a small per cent of them are highly educated and acquainted with the science of government; but, if we are correctly informed, the great masses of the people in those islands rely implicitly upon the leadership of those who are intelligent and who are versed in the science of government.

When the people of the Philippine Islands desire improvements, when taxation becomes necessary, when they want courts, when the power of the courts are to be defined, these people have no voice and must look alone to the Philippine Commission, composed of American citizens, to legislate for them. This bill contemplates that the Philippine Commission shall be a permanent institution. The laws which this Commission have enacted heretofore are ratified and approved, and this Philippine Commission will have more power over the people of the Philippine Islands than the American Congress exercises over the people of the United States. It will not be disputed that when this bill refers to the Philippine government it evidently means the Philippine Commission. There is no government in the Philippine Islands except the Philippine Commission. There is no one authorized to exercise the functions of government except the Philippine Commission. The five American citizens appointed by the President of the United States to cross the ocean and to settle in the city of Manila exercise all the functions of government in the Philippine Islands.

They not only define crime, but the life, liberty, and property of the inhabitants of those islands are absolutely and unconditionally in the hands of this Commission. I am utterly shocked that this bill contemplates that the powers given to this Commission shall never cease. So far as this bill contemplates there is no end to their powers.

Section 11 provides that the government of the Philippines, which really means the Philippine Commission, shall make rules and regulations for the lease, sale, and other disposition of the public lands. History teaches us that there are more than 65,000,000 acres of these public lands in the Philippine Islands. Notwithstanding this fact the Philippine Commission is empowered to provide rules and regulations for the lease and sale of the public lands. These lands constitute more than 75 per cent of the entire lands in the Philippine Islands. Notwithstanding this fact this Philippine Commission, which in reality ought to be called an American commission, is empowered to dispose of these lands without consulting a single inhabitant of these islands. If we ever intend to give these people any voice in the administration of their own affairs, we certainly should not dispose of these lands until these people have been given a controlling voice in their affairs.

I understand, Mr. President—and I am sure I have seen it so stated—that General MacArthur has recommended that the public lands in the Philippine Islands be kept together; that they be preserved until we know the status of the Philippine Islands, until we determine what we shall do there; and notwithstanding that fact the Philippine Commission is empowered to dispose of more than 75 per cent of the lands in the Philippine Islands.

Section 13 provides—that, pending the preparation and until the adoption of rules and regulations as provided in section 8, the government of the Philippines—

Which is really the Philippine Commission—

is hereby authorized and empowered, on such terms as it may prescribe, to lease, let, and demise to actual occupants, settlers, and others, for a term of not more than five years, such parts and portions of the public domain other than timber and mineral lands of the United States in the Philippine Islands as it may deem wise, not exceeding 160 acres, or its equivalent in hectares, to any one person, nor more than 5,000 acres to any corporation or association of persons.

I believe that has been amended so as to read 40 acres. When they come to the Filipino they have amended the bill so as to give him but 40 acres, but they leave in the bill the provision in regard to corporations so that they can still have 5,000 acres.

Now, I go further. Take section 15. Those who have taken the trouble to investigate the conditions existing in the islands know the value of the forests of these islands. We know how deeply these people and their children are interested in the preservation of these forests. This section provides that timber, trees, forests, and forest products on lands leased or demised by the Philippine government shall not be cut, destroyed, or removed, except by special provision of said government and under such regulations as it may prescribe. Mark you, Mr. President, the timber and the trees and the forests can only be cut and destroyed by permission of the Philippine Commission. If there is anything the Philippine Commission is not authorized to do in this bill I have been unable to find it. The Philippine Commission, which in reality ought to be called the American Commission, have the right to authorize all the timber, the trees, and the forests in these valuable lands to be cut and destroyed; they can do so, notwithstanding the fact that every Filipino in those islands may protest against such a course. In fact, this bill contemplates that the Philippine Commission, composed of American citizens, shall have the right and privilege to dispose practically of all of the lands before any civil government is ever established in the Philippine Islands by and for the Filipinos.

Section 18 also provides "that all valuable mineral deposits in public lands in the Philippine Islands, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and purchase, and the land in which they are found to occupation and purchase by citizens of the United States, natives of the Philippine Islands, and persons who have, under and by virtue of the treaty of Paris, acquired the political rights of natives of the Philippine Islands." Thus far we have seen, by virtue of the provisions of this bill, that this same Philippine Commission, which is to last always, so far as this legislation contemplates, is empowered to dispose of the lands and the timber and the minerals located in those islands. The bill is long and embraces many sections, and time will not permit me to analyze every section.

I should like to go through a dozen more sections and give the views which I entertain regarding them. I am afraid that we have devoted too much time in this discussion to the general Philippine policy and have not said enough about this bill. The truth is that 90 per cent of the time we have discussed the general Philippine policy and have not said a word about the bill upon which we are to vote.

This same Philippine Commission, by section 64, is authorized to acquire, receive, hold, maintain, and convey title to real and personal property, and may acquire real estate for public uses by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and by section 66 this same Philippine Commission is given additional powers, for this section provides that all lands acquired by virtue of section 65 of this act shall constitute a part and a portion of the public property of the Philippine Islands, and may be leased, let, sold, and conveyed by the government of the Philippines on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe. This Philippine Commission is not only authorized by the provisions of this bill to exercise the right of eminent domain and sell bonds for the purpose of buying the lands belonging to the friars, but they are also empowered and authorized, after they have purchased these lands, to sell them on such terms and conditions as they may prescribe. They can sell these lands for $10 an acre or for 5 or 10 cents per acre. Where in the history of the world will you find such powers as this bill gives to the Philippine Commission, commonly called the Philippine government?

That is not all, Mr. President. This is a wonderful bill. No czar, no king, no man has ever been known to exercise the power over a race of people that this bill gives to the Philippine Commission over the people of the Philippines. I say, Mr. President, they can make laws; they can define crimes, and the life, liberty, and property of the Philippine people are absolutely in the hands of the Philippine Commission.

A careful perusal of the bill shows that the same Philippine Commission, originally composed of five American citizens, may grant franchises, privileges, and concessions, including authority to exercise the right of eminent domain for the construction and operation of works of public utility and service. This is an important right—one that will materially affect the future development of those islands, and one about which the intelligent people of those islands ought to be consulted. The Philippine Commission by provisions of this bill is not only authorized to levy and collect taxes, to make laws for the government of these people, to dispose of the public lands in those islands, to cut and destroy the timber thereon, to dispose of the mineral and coal interests located thereon, and to grant franchises, privileges, and concessions, but this same Philippine Commission is authorized to go still further.

I do not know what amendment the junior Senator from Massachusetts has moved to that provision of the bill to-day, but I do not think it has been materially affected.

Section 72 of this bill is a remarkable one. My attention was called to this section of the bill by a Senator on the other side. We know that the city of Manila is a city of a population of nearly 300,000 people, and Governor Taft tells us, in his testimony before the Philippine Committee, that in point of morals and intelligence the city of Manila will compare with any city in the United States of a similar size. In this city can be found eminent lawyers skilled in the science of government, teachers, students, bankers, and physicians. Governor Taft tells us that the bar of the city of Manila is composed of many eminent lawyers, graduates of the universities of England, France, and Germany. It would seem that the party in power would be willing for the city of Manila to exercise the functions of municipal government; but not so.

Section 72 of this bill provides that for the purpose of providing funds to construct sewers in the city of Manila and to furnish it with adequate sewer and drainage system and supply of water this same Philippine Commission is authorized to permit the municipality of Manila to incur indebtedness, to borrow money, to issue and sell, upon such terms and conditions as it may deem best, registered or coupon bonds to an amount not exceeding $4,000,000, lawful money of the United States, payable at such time or times as may be determined by the government of the Philippines, which is really the Philippine Commission, with interest thereon not to exceed 5 per cent per annum. This Philippine Commission is authorized to expend this money. When the people of the city of Manila are told that they can not issue bonds, that they can not carry on a municipal government except under the direction of this same Commission, composed of American citizens, what effect will such legislation have upon the inhabitants of that city?

This city of 300,000 people, composed of a population, Governor Taft tells us, both moral and intelligent, are practically deprived of the right of a municipal government. The property of the city is to be mortgaged for $4,000,000. These people are to have no voice as to the issuance and the selling of these bonds. Such legislation will certainly be galling to these people and is not calculated to bring about friendship and cordial relations between those people and ourselves, but will every day widen the breach and chasm now existing. This same bill also provides that, when these bonds are issued under the direction of this Philippine Commission, they shall be nontaxable by the Government of the United States, and that no State in this Union or city in any State in this Union shall have the right to tax the holder of these bonds.

Now, Mr. President, I grant you that the Government of the United States has the right to issue bonds and to provide that these bonds shall not be taxable by any State or municipality. But where in the history of this Republic will you find that the Government of the United States has authorized a city in any of its territory to issue bonds and further to provide that bonds issued by such city can not be taxed by any State of municipality in this Union? Under the provisions of this bill, if some syndicate in New York, Baltimore, Savannah, or Atlanta should purchase these bonds drawing 5 per cent interest, payable semiannally, then the holder of the bonds could not be taxed by the State or city wherein they are held. I presume this feature was inserted for the manifest interest of the syndicate or syndicates now getting ready to purchase the bonds. When will this special legislation cease? When will you cease to neglect the interest of the entire people for the benefit of a few?

This is not all. I have before me section 68 of the bill, which provides municipal bonds for public improvements. This bill does not stop with the city of Manila. It does not stop with giving the Philippine Commission power to issue bonds against the city of Manila. Section 68 provides that for the purpose of providing funds to construct sewers to furnish adequate sewer and drainage facilities, to secure sufficient supply of water, and to provide all kinds of municipal betterments and improvements in municipalities, the Philippine Commission, under such limitations, terms, and conditions as it may prescribe, may permit any municipality of said islands to incur indebtedness, borrow money, and issue and sell registered or coupon bonds in such amount and payable at such time as may be determined by the Philippine Commission, with interest thereon not to exceed 5 per cent per annum.

I am amazed when I critically examine the various sections of the bill and when I realize the power we contemplate giving to the Philippine Commission, which is to be a permanent institution. They are authorized to sell the lands in those islands, to cut timber, to dispose of the mineral and coal interests, to grant franchises and concessions, to issue bonds against the city of Manila, and to issue municipal bonds against all the cities and towns in those islands. If they exercise all the powers given them by virtue of the provisions of this bill, in a half dozen years they can dispose of practically every interest in these islands.

So far as I know, the Commission is composed of upright and intelligent men, but the powers which we have given to them to be exercised in the Philippine Islands are arbitrary and against the spirit and genius of our free institutions. When the educated and thoughtful people of the Philippine Islands shall be conversant with the provisions of this bill they will at once reach the conclusion that for all time to come the Philippine Commission is to exercise the functions of government in those islands. This bill, instead of carrying a message of good will and good fellowship to the people of these islands, will convey to them that to-day, to-morrow, and for all time to come we are to be their masters—their rulers—and they are to be our slaves.

This legislation gives to them no hope, gives to them no promise that eventually they shall become a free, happy, and independent people. This legislation gives to them no voice in their own internal affairs. When criminal laws are to be made, their lawyers are not to be consulted. When sanitary laws are to be enforced, their physicians are ignored. When a system of education is to be put in operation, their teachers are thought to be unworthy of consultation. When the entire affairs of those islands are to be conducted for years to come, no Filipino is to be consulted. This bill means perpetual war. I can not describe the effect that I believe it will have on the people of those islands. When they read it, when they study it, when they see its provisions discussed through the public press, they will reach the conclusion that America will never extend to them the hand of friendship and love.

I can readily understand why it was that Governor Taft, when he was before the Philippine Committee during the present session of Congress recommended that these people be given a general assembly. He knew at the time he gave his testimony of the far-reaching effect of this legislation. He realized the powers given to the Philippine Commission in dealing with the people of those islands, and he desired their cooperation and asked that they be given a general assembly.

On page 333 of his testimony I find valuable suggestions from Governor Taft. He said to the committee:

> I think that a popular assembly is what the people desire, and I think it is the best possible means of educating their educated men in popular government. It will give them an opportunity to meet, to express their views, to take part in legislation, to propose and enact laws which they deem useful in the country; it will give them a part in the government, and will by practice teach them what self-government is.

He went still further. The distinguished governor said:

We recommend that in our report, and I am sure that with that the people will have confidence that our statement to them that we desire to educate them in self-government and give them a measure of self-government, increasing it gradually as they become more fitted for it, is true.

Senator ALLISON asked the question:

It is a legislative body of all the provinces; that is, it is a general body?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir. I would not include therein the Moro provinces, for, as I have already stated, the Moros do not desire popular government.

He furthermore said that—

We look to the gradual growth of popular government by giving a qualified suffrage now, such as is given in the municipal code, which will enlarge of itself by the progress of education, because that is the educational test largely; and with the teaching of English, which is to be done and is now being done throughout the island, those who learn English will become at once entitled to vote. Next, by providing within a measurably short time a popular assembly, which shall, within an appointed body, make up the legislative body of the islands.

These recommendations by your civil governor have been entirely ignored, and the pending bill makes no provision whatever for any general assembly of this people at any time in the future. The same distinguished governor further on tells us in his testimony, on page 338:

What these people desire definitely, as I understand it, is a declaration that Congress expects to establish a civil government and to say what kind of a civil government it is. They also point out that they would like to know where the Filipinos stand with reference to the rights under the Constitution and with reference to the United States in relation of the islands to the United States.

An investigation of our entire relations with these people will show that all the trouble that has occurred between them and our Government has resulted from a want of a policy as above described. Congress, in less than one day in a dozen lines could have declared a wise and patriotic policy that would have prevented the firing of a single gun and the shedding of a drop of blood. But, Mr. President, we will not heed the recommendations of those we send there when those recommendations are in favor of a liberal policy toward the people of the Philippine Islands.

I have before me the testimony of Professor Barrows, who was assistant superintendent of education in those islands for more than two years and who was thoroughly familiar with the desires, wishes, and aspirations of those people. I do not believe that I have read the testimony of any witness more conversant with the conditions existing there than the testimony of Professor Barrows. He sustains the position which many of us on this side of the Chamber have been taking all the while.

On page 690 Professor Barrows testified before the Philippine Committee as follows:

I think the Filipinos are extremely anxious that Congress should take action defining their status, and I think they are very anxious for the organization there of a legislative assembly, through which, as they have themselves expressed it to me, they can secure parliamentary training and political experience and through which they can express their views.

The declaration on the part of Congress that a liberal policy toward them was not to be followed would certainly disappoint them very much, and would alienate them, I think, to a considerable extent.

Professor Barrows, in response to a question asked by Senator CARMACK, said that if Congress should fail to make any declaration at all and just let things drift along as they have been drifting, these people would be greatly disappointed.

I think it would be a great disappointment—

Said he—

to the educated people of the Philippine Islands who are politically interested and who are politically aggressive. They have been looking forward—with great hopefulness to this action of Congress, but they have realized that the persistence of hostility in Batangas and in Samar on the part of the troops under General Malvar and General Lukban may possibly have a great influence with Congress to deter action.

Said Professor Barrows—

Senator CARMACK then asked Professor Barrows the question pertinent to the issue we are now discussing, that—they might ascribe any failure to act now to the existence of hostilities. But with the suspension of hostilities, and Congress still failing or refusing to meet their desires, it would cause great distrust, would it not, and tend to alienate the leaders from sympathy with us?

Professor Barrows said:

I think it would. In other words, I doubt, I very decidedly doubt, whether we can continue to rule that people, with their strong ambitions, with the tendency there to develop a constantly more enlightened class, without a liberal policy being entered upon.

Both Governor Taft and Professor Barrows are conversant with conditions existing in the Philippine Islands, and both of them have recommended to Congress that a general assembly be given to the Filipinos. They recommended that as a solution of the great problem now arising in the Philippine Islands the people of those islands should have some voice through their representatives. But notwithstanding these recommendations this bill ignores these most valuable suggestions. Professor Barrows told the Committee on the Philippine Islands that—the result of intrusting them with a limited amount of political activity, intrusting them with public office, is educative in its effect; and that as they become more educated and as they come to understand us and our purposes better our position becomes securer and the whole situation becomes safer.

I can easily understand why Professor Barrows has recommended that we pursue a liberal policy toward the people of these islands. For more than two years he has come in contact with the population of the different provinces, endeavoring to establish schools among them, and, judging from what he has learned, he realized that these people aspire to self-government, that they are ambitious to participate in the organization of government in those islands, and he recommends that Congress should gratify in part their desires and wishes. When schools are established, when schools are located and teachers selected, these people desire to be consulted as to how their children shall be educated. When municipal government is put into operation, when bonds are issued and sold, when offices are created and officials are selected, it is but natural that these people seek to have a voice in administering their own affairs. They are not without ambition, neither are they without pride. If so, then, Mr. President, we have a task before us that is hopeless.

The intelligent and thoughtful population of the Philippine Islands will study most carefully this legislation. They will reach the conclusion that Congress has undertaken to give to the Philippine Commission, composed of American citizens, the power and authority to rule for all time to come the Philippine Islands. When their lands are to be disposed of, when their forests are cut and destroyed, when their minerals are exploited, when franchises and concessions are granted, when a system of education is to be put into operation, when municipalities are to be organized, when the jurisdiction of courts are to be defined, when taxes are to be levied and collected, when officials are to be appointed, this vast population of 10,000,000 of people are absolutely at the mercy and control of the Philippine Commission. No intelligent man can study this bill and reach any other conclusion. When this bill shall become a law and when the people of the Philippine Islands shall understand its provisions, greater dissatisfaction will exist in those islands than in any other period since the ratification of the peace treaty.

The educated and intelligent people of the Philippine Islands will study this bill, and history teaches us that the great masses of the people of the Philippine Islands rely entirely upon the leadership of the educated Filipinos, and public sentiment in those islands will crystallize against this unjust, harsh, and tyrannical legislation. I have said before that I was unalterably opposed to incorporating the people of the Philippine Islands as an integral part of the United States. I have often said on the floor of this Chamber that I abhorred the idea of the Government of the United States engaging in the colonial business. Then there is but one other course for us to pursue, and the plan mapped out by the members of the committee representing the party to which I belong, which provides for the gradual independence of the people of the Philippine Islands, meets my most hearty approval.

I do not believe that the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands, from a commercial standpoint, is desirable. I believe that it can be demonstrated that the trade which we are now obtaining and which we are likely to obtain in the future will never be worth to us what it will cost. The annual report of the Secretary of War, submitted to Congress, on pages 76 and 77, says the total value of merchandise, exclusive of army supplies, imported during the fiscal year of 1901 into these islands was $30,279,406. The total value of the merchandise exported from the islands for the same year was $23,214,948, consequently the total of exports and imports was only $53,494,354. An examination of these figures will show that only a small per cent of this business was done with the United States. The figures are really humiliating to us.

We can not expect the people of the Philippine Islands to trade with us when we are shooting them down and destroying their homes. The imports to the United States from the islands were only $2,855,685, and the exports from the United States to the islands only $2,572,021. The total exports and imports to and from the United States were only $5,427,706. We only received about 10 per cent of the trade of the islands during the year of 1901. Doubtless the profits arising from our trade with the Philippine Islands during the same period was less than a million dollars, and to secure this trade we spent fully $85,000,000. If our trade in the future with the Philippine Islands shall be no larger than it has been in the past, it would take more than four hundred years to realize in profits from commercial relations with these people the amount that we have spent to subdue them since the ratification of the peace treaty.

If we had even enjoyed the privilege of furnishing all the exports, and had received all of the imports of the islands for the whole year, the amount would have been a little more than $50,000,000. The total profit on this trade could not possibly exceed eight millions per year if we had enjoyed the privilege of the entire trade with the islands. The people of the Philippine Islands at this time are more anxious to trade with Great Britain, France, and Germany than they are with the United States. If we had maintained friendly and cordial relations with these people, how different might have been the situation. But I was going on to say, Mr. President, that if we had enjoyed the entire trade with the islands the profits arising from the trade would not have exceeded $8,000,000 per year. We have spent fully $400,000,000 to subdue these people.

Discussing the question from pure dollars and cents, taking the position that we can enjoy the entire trade of the islands and that the profits arising from the trade would be equal to $8,000,000 per year, how long would it take us to get back the four hundred millions already spent in those islands? If we enjoyed the entire trade of the islands and the profits were equal to eight millions per year it would take fifty years to get back the principal we have spent in those islands, not taking into consideration the loss of life. We can not hope, however, to enjoy the entire trade of these islands. We certainly can not hope to enjoy their trade unless we reverse our position and regain their friendship. It is generally admitted that it costs our Government $1,500 per man to maintain our Army. When we had 70,000 soldiers in the Philippine Islands it cost us from eighty-five to ninety million dollars per year to maintain the Army there.

Speaking from a pure commercial standpoint, I am unable to see how the present Philippine policy can justify the expenditure of eighty-five millions to secure $5,000,000 in trade. The interest on $400,000,000, which we have spent in the Philippine Islands, will more than treble the profits of our trade in the Philippine Islands. Other nations, without the use of an army and without incurring the expense of a dollar, are now enjoying over $48,000,000 worth of the trade of the Philippine Islands. How long shall we continue this reckless, extravagant, and unnecessary expenditure of the public money? How long shall we continue to expend eighty-five millions per year in order to secure five millions of trade?

From a commercial standpoint our policy is unwise and foolish. The time has come when we should recognize the true situation, when we should exercise the part of wisdom and statesmanship, when we should reverse our action and declare for a policy which is just and liberal, which will satisfy the wishes and desires of the people of those islands, which will bring about peace and friendly and commercial relations between those people and ourselves, and which will maintain the honor and dignity of our Government, and which will perpetuate and preserve forever our free institutions.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to address the Senate again upon the Philippine question, and I am keenly anxious to be through with what I have to say, peculiarly so in view of the suggestion, which I resent, that I have sought time for speech with a view to precluding others from replying.

If the people of the United States take much note of what occurs in this Chamber they must have been strangely impressed by the proceedings here at this session in relation to the Philippines. We spent some weeks in debate in the early part of the session upon a Philippine bill; to speak more accurately, not upon a Philippine bill, but upon the general Philippine subject.

That was a very simple bill, Mr. President. It was an emergency bill. It did not deal at all with the policy of the United States as it is, or as Senators think it ought to be. It was a tariff bill intended to raise money for the support of the Philippine government, to administer the courts with their writ of habeas corpus, to furnish additional educational facilities, and generally to carry out the policy thus far pursued of giving as rapidly as possible the advantages of a better system of government to the people of the Philippine Archipelago.

When we protested mildly that that was not the proper bill to be delayed indefinitely by general debate upon the Philippine policy, and that such debate would be more appropriate to the discussion of the Philippine government bill, we were told that that bill involved the whole subject, and that there would be little, if any, debate on the government bill, except that which pertained to its provisions.

We have been disappointed in this respect, Mr. President. We have been spending weeks here in debate, not especially upon the government bill and its provisions, but, pending the consideration of the government bill, upon the general Philippine policy of the country.

It is a little odd that this bill, intended to exalt civil government in those islands, to more efficiently and more quickly subordinate the military authority there, should be delayed almost indefinitely by speeches, the object of which has been to show that the military operations in the archipelago have been infamous in their torture, cruel beyond expression, and therefore a dishonor to the people of the United States. If that were true one would think Senators would have been anxious to facilitate the passage of this bill in order that that unhappy element might be speedily eliminated.

It has been a strange debate, Mr. President. I am forced to say that on both sides it has been a debate characterized by very much more than ordinary ability and eloquence. But when one looks through the speeches which have been made here by the minority (for it is well known that with proper amendments this bill will pass) one finds in them nothing but pessimism, nothing but the gospel of despair, nothing but suspicion and distrust and imputation of the motives and character of all who differ with them upon this subject.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] made a speech which rhetorically and oratorically was a credit to him. He said many bitter things in that speech. Some of them in a manly way he withdrew, and as to them there is nothing more to be said.

But, Mr. President, I think he left observations in that speech which, in the days to come, he will regret. I will not think he meant deliberately to tell the Philippine people that we are there to enslave them. I will not think he intended to impute to President McKinley, a fragrant and blessed memory forever in this land and in the world, a commercial-dollar motive in the negotiation of the Paris treaty and its transmission to the Senate. I will not think he intended to grossly misconstrue the cablegram which was sent by direction of the President to Admiral Dewey at Manila to examine and report upon the islands as to naval and commercial advantages, including coal. I know he did not mean to say that the President had in mind individual or syndicate "exploitation." I know he did not mean to impute any purpose other than one in the general public interest to find that island, if we were to take but one and if we took any, which would afford adequate harbor and coal for our war ships and a resting place for our merchant ships.

The Senator indulged in some observations in relation to the President of the United States. I think some day he will regret that he did so, because, Mr. President, it is a tradition of both parties which should always be observed, and it is in the public interest, too, that each coordinate branch of the Government shall treat with respect the other. The Senator likened the President in his characteristics to a horse whose natural gait is "running away," intending to give the impression that he regarded him as a man of impulse, who speaks and acts without due thought and deliberation. If the President of the United States should publicly make an observation of that kind about a Senator he would not be forgiven. The President of the United States is a man who does not run away from any duty or from any danger.

When the time came, Mr. President, to send the American flag, not to stay, but to come down when its mission had been accomplished—carried by our soldiers to Cuba, Theodore Roosevelt did not "run away." He left his place at the capital here and went there as a soldier and fought there as a soldier, with the bullets of the enemy "weaving lines of death and danger around him and above him," offering his life—and who could offer more—for what? For the liberty of a people; for the independence of Cuba. He has won the right to be regarded, if any man has, as the daring, steadfast, strenuous friend of liberty everywhere. He is not slow to perceive his duty, nor is he slow to do his duty.

The Senator also referred, and I thought it was not fair, to a statement in the newspapers of a supposed "conference," and assumed that "instructions" had been given by the President to introduce in this debate, in order to hide the atrocities of the Army in the Philippines from the public gaze, a discussion of what is called sectionalism. I think the Senator really will not believe that. The President is one of the last men to do anything or advise anything to mar the harmony which exists and ought to exist between the sections. His utterances have been the other way. The associations of his life are the other way. I could not but think, as the Senator spoke, of what occurred a little time ago when the brilliant and eloquent Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in speaking tender words of eulogy over our late colleague here, Gen. Wade Hampton, took occasion to pay tribute to President Roosevelt for the generous manner in which he had commented upon the career of General Lee.

Few have escaped in this debate conducted by the other side who have had in any way to do with the Philippines. Governor Taft had cast upon him not only by suggestion, but by argument, the imputation that he had willfully suppressed before the committee two reports. There was but one answer that needed to be made to that, and that is that Governor Taft is and always has been a gentleman.

Really, this debate has been so full of generalities of a malignant sort as to affect my kindly friend from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], who read from a book here one day to establish the proposition that old General Gomez is a brute and tried to slaughter a little boy with his sword, and then that Gomez and his staff were "afraid of the cars."

He was led to do that by the mistaken impression that Funston, then unknown to fame, at the time was a member of Gomez's staff. Poor General Funston has occupied a large space in the debate upon this very grave and important bill. I have nothing to say about him—he has been ably defended—except this: I can not account for this bitterness toward him unless it grows out of a consciousness that his criticism and feeling were somewhat justified. It is the same that Lawton had and that others have had. Lawton is dead and can not speak and will not be traduced. It has not injured Funston.

The general attitude of Senators who have spoken on the other side is this: "We who voted against the treaty at least are men who observed the obligations of the Constitution. You who voted for it violated it. We who are opposed to you stand by the Declaration of Independence. You disregard it. We are the friends of the Army. You are its assailants. We love the flag and you 'vulgarize' it. We hate atrocity and you defend it. We wish to give liberty to the Filipinos and you are giving them bondage—are trying to enslave them." It is a modest attitude, of course, but not altogether persuasive.

Mr. President, some extracts have been read here from a speech of mine on the treaty, of course intended to show that I am inconsistent. It is a matter of no consequence whether I am or am not inconsistent. I have never cared overmuch for consistency. I have always reserved to myself the right to change my mind if, on further reflection, I thought I should do so. But I have not changed my attitude.

I declared myself opposed to permanent dominion in the Philippines. I speak for myself when I say that that is still my feeling. I said I would not take islands or people for trade. That is still my feeling. I would not buy trade with the blood of my own people or any other, nor at the cost of any man's liberty.

I ridiculed the notion that the flag once put up never shall come down. I said it was put up in Cuba, and when another representing and standing for a new-born republic there should go into the air, our flag would come down—come down in honor as it went up in the interest of liberty. And so it has. But that has nothing to do with this bill or with the general Philippine subject. Only I have not changed my view.

I voted against Hawaii. I did not want to take that first long step out into the Pacific. I did not look upon it—I differed with my party upon that question—as for the interest of the United States or the interest of the people of Hawaii that those islands should be annexed. It was done, and I quit. I have never criticised the men who differed with me. On the other hand, Mr. President, I think I may justly say that industriously and to the best of my ability I have cooperated with my colleagues here in an endeavor to give to Hawaii the wisest, best, and most liberal government which could be devised.

I found no fault with those who voted against the ratification of the treaty, Mr. President. It was not only the right, but the duty of every Senator, to vote as his conscience and judgment led him to conclude.

But I have been surprised at the course pursued by some who voted for it and some who voted against it. I have been surprised by the statement, so often reiterated here, that if we had adopted the Vest amendment, assuming as to the Philippines the same relation we assumed by the treaty as to Cuba, or that if after we had ratified the treaty without the Vest amendment we had passed the Bacon resolution, there would have been no trouble in the Philippines; that they were all our friends then, including Aguinaldo, and would have been our friends, our devoted friends, now and forever after.

Mr. President, it seems to be forgotten that before the treaty was ratified and before the Senate could vote upon the Vest amendment or on the Bacon resolution our troops in Manila had been attacked and hostilities had broken out. Aguinaldo and his associates, having an agent in this city, knowing that the amendment and the Bacon resolution—for they were public—were pending, could not and would not wait to ascertain in peace what the action of the Senate would be upon them. But there was an attack and there was war.

He had long intended to attack us. He was so "friendly." Here is the translation of a captured cablegram or letter sent on the 3d of February, 1899, the day before the attack, by the agent of the "Filipine republic" in London.

Mr. ALLISON. A friendly republic?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; a "friendly republic;" just as friendly as it was a republic; perhaps more friendly than it was a republic.

LONDON, February 3, 1899.

SEÑOR REGIDOR TO KANT.

MY DEAR FRIEND AND FELLOW-COUNTRYMAN: Thanks for your Christmas card; I return my best wishes. In the last two mails I sent first a letter to the general and then one to Señor Mabini. I hope that you read them. Next Monday we shall know what to expect on the question of the treaty.

They knew what was going on. It was on Monday we were to vote. It was the day fixed for a vote.

According to two telegrams which I have seen to-day its passage is not certain. Still I believe without any doubt that it will pass, because otherwise it would be a crushing blow to McKinley, and he will wish to avoid exposing himself to it. Whether it passes or not, you must prepare yourself for a further increase in the American forces in the Philippines. Some are going by way of the Pacific and others by the Suez Canal. If the treaty is approved, these forces will serve to immediately attack the Filipino troops. Do you not think it would be well for them to be attacked the moment the treaty is approved here?

And then follows more, but I will not read it all:

One of our friends unquestionably devoted to our cause proposes a plan to me which seems certain to me to bring us some thousands of dollars which could be applied to the purchase of arms and munitions and especially some effective torpedoes, which would serve to repeat in the bay of Manila the scene in that of Habana, which would serve to give a fortunate termination to our struggle.

Mr. HOAR. Did the Senator say that was a cablegram?

Mr. SPOONER. I say it is a copy.

Mr. HOAR. Of a telegram?

Mr. SPOONER. Of a letter.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said, as I understand, a telegram. I thought it was the funniest telegram I ever heard.

Mr. SPOONER. A letter. There are a good many funny telegrams in this business.

Mr. HOAR. That seems to be one of them.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have here a record of the vote upon the treaty. We who voted for the treaty are all said to have been pretty bad men, so far as judgment is concerned. I take the liberty of reading the names of the Senators who voted for the treaty.

ALDRICH, Allen, ALLISON, Baker, BURROWS, Butler, Carter, Chandler, CLARK, CLAY, CULLOM, Davis—

One of the most brilliant men we ever had here, now dead and gone—

DEBOE, ELKINS, FAIRBANKS, Faulkner, FORAKER, FRYE, GALLINGER, Gear, Gray, HANNA, HANSBROUGH, HARRIS, HAWLEY, JONES of Nevada, Kenney, Kyle, Lindsay, LODGE, McBride, McENERY, McLAURIN, McMILLAN, Mantle, MASON, MORGAN, NELSON, PENROSE, PERKINS, PETTUS, PLATT of Connecticut, PLATT of New York, PRITCHARD, QUAY, Ross, Sewell, Shoup, SIMON, SPOONER, STEWART, Sullivan, TELLER, Thurston, WARREN, WELLINGTON, and Wolcott.

Barring myself, that is a very respectable group of Senators. Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. BACON, BATE, BERRY, CAFFERY, CHILTON, COCKRELL, DANIEL, GORMAN, HALE, HEITFELD, HOAR, JONES of Arkansas, MALLORY, MARTIN, MILLS, MITCHELL, MONEY, MURPHY, PASCO, PETTIGREW, RAWLINS, ROACH, SMITH, TILLMAN, TURLEY, TURNER, and VEST.

The pairs were as follows:

Mr. CANNON and Mr. PROCTOR with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. WETMORE and Mr. WILSON with Mr. TURPIE.

A very respectable group of men. I would not impugn the motive of any one of them. Every man who voted for that treaty—some of them voted for it reluctantly after grave consideration, and I was one of them—voted conscientiously and in the belief that President McKinley had been right in negotiating it, and that the Senate was right in ratifying it. This was not a party vote, and when Senators on the other side, with vituperative words inveigh against the ratification of that treaty and denounce it as mistaken "Republican" policy they are inveighing against some of their best associates, some of the oldest and truest Democrats and some of the ablest, most conservative, and liberty-loving men their party has ever known.

The President negotiated the treaty and sent it to us. We were independent of him in the action which we took upon it. He had done his part. It was for us to do ours, and we did. For one, I never have seen the hour, Mr. President, when I regretted the vote I cast for the treaty.

Is that what led to war? Is that the origin of all these "atrocities," of all this waste of treasure? Is that what broke down a "Philippine republic?" Is that what violated the Constitution of the United States? Many brilliant Democrats outside of this Chamber were potential by their advice in securing the ratification of the treaty.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], whose great career is one of the treasures not only of his State but of this Republic, whose sincerity no one can challenge, and who has done great things, Mr. President, for the whole people and for liberty, took occasion the other day to refer to me by name and to an observation I made when the McEnery resolution was under consideration. I supposed I had on my desk exactly what I said, and intended to quote it, but in substance I said that I would not make promises to a man with a revolver at my breast. I say it now. I said that I would not make promises to men who were training guns, part of them furnished by us, on soldiers of the United States where they rightfully were. I say it now. I have never had, nor have I now, any apology to make for that utterance. The Senator said——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he likens the case of an affray breaking out between two armies stationed near together and the general of one of them drawing his troops back and sending word to us that he was sorry it had happened and did not expect to have it break out—on one side the Filipino people and on the other this great Republic—to the case of a man holding a revolver to his breast? Does he think that is a fair illustration?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, I did not limit my remarks to that illustration; the man with a revolver at my breast; and moreover the Filipino troops were not drawn back. They were driven back. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER rapped with his gavel.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think, if the Senator will pardon me, that he quite states the historic fact on that occasion. I understand that Aguinaldo instantly expressed his regret for the occurrence and a desire to maintain peace. Whether he drew back his troops or whether they were driven back, he offered to draw them back and remove the soldiers to a place where it would not occur again. I think, however, I should apologize to the Senator. I do not think it is fair to interrupt him.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say that I believe it is the desire of the entire Senate that the very able and interesting speech of the Senator from Wisconsin should be concluded without interruption or an attempt to challenge anything he says, and I regret that I rose for the purpose, contrary to my intention. I shall not do it again.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator owes me no apology at all.

The ratification of the treaty did not provoke the attack. Aguinaldo on the 9th day of January had issued an elaborate order for an attack by his troops on our troops. Not only that, but he had written to Benito Legardo on the 7th day of January: "My dear Don Benito: I beg you to leave Manila and come here with your family—not because I wish to frighten you—I merely wish to warn you for your satisfaction, although it is not yet the day or the week."

The suggestion, Mr. President—and I am involved in this branch of the subject at an earlier time than I intended to be—that Aguinaldo did not desire the outbreak at precisely that time may be true. The cablegram advised that it be done immediately after the ratification of the treaty. But for days before it was done citizens of Manila, to the extent of 40,000 nearly, had been taking their valuables out of that city in anticipation of a fight. Aguinaldo January 13—after this order of January 9, with over 2,000 words in it, for an attack on our troops at Manila and an uprising in the city—the same day that he appointed peace commissioners to meet those appointed by General Otis to see if terms might not be arranged and a conflict avoided—received this telegram, and here [exhibiting] is a photograph of his autographic reply:

To the president of the republican government, Malolos:

We desire to know the result of ultimatum which you mentioned in your telegram, and we also desire to know what reward our government is preparing for the forces who will first be able to enter Manila.

This was on the 13th day of January, 1899, to which Aguinaldo replied in his own handwriting as follows:

As to the contents of your telegram, those who prove themselves heroes will have as rewards large sums of money, lands, extraordinary promotions, crosses of Biacnabato, Marquis of Malate, Ermita, and Count of Manila, etc., besides the congratulations of our idolizing country on account of their patriotism, and more if they capture the regiments with their generals, and if possible the chief of them all who represents our future enemies in Manila, which (lot) falls to you, or, better said, to General Noriel and Colonel Cailles.

The ultimatum has not yet been sent, but will be within a few days,

He had the "constitution of a republic," copied from that of Mexico, of Argentina, and of the United States, and it prohibited absolutely the granting of patents of nobility. He had evidently learned early that great American constitutional question—"what is the Constitution between friends?" [Laughter.] Here we find him on the 14th day of January, 1899, promising to those who first should enter Manila—inspiring them to attack and urging them to the onset—patents of nobility, crosses of Biacnabato, and extraordinary grants of land and money, though he was a "friend" of ours of course and his "republic" was, and if, after he had attacked us and been whipped and driven back—as I hope every band of soldiers who ever attack the Army of the United States, wherever it is sent, will be defeated—we had made a declaration like the Bacon amendment they would have been our "friends" forever and forevermore!

Mr. President, it has been said here that Aguinaldo, after this attack on our troops at Manila, sent a flag of truce with a request for an armistice. I presume that is what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] referred to a few moments ago. That has been absolutely denied by General Otis, not only officially, but in his testimony, as I understand it, before the Committee on the Philippines. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. SPOONER. What he stated to be the fact was this: Judge Torres, who had been connected with that government, though then not a soldier, and, as I recollect, residing in Manila at the time, came to General Otis, asking if something could not be done to secure an armistice and the delineation of zones which each army might occupy, to the end that further trouble might be avoided, to which General Otis replied that as Aguinaldo had "commenced fighting he must apply for cessation;" that he "had nothing to request from insurgent government." He passed Torres and his associates through the lines, and they went to Malolos. They came back, reporting what they had stated to Aguinaldo at Malolos, and that he had said—I do not remember the exact language—that if General Otis wanted an armistice he did not object; but he sent back a formal answer by this messenger, Judge Torres, to General Otis; and what was it? It was a declaration of war against the United States.

Mr. President, it was said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that until the ratification of the treaty, as I understood him, without amendment putting the Philippines in the same relation to us as Cuba, or without the declaration of the Bacon resolution, they were perfectly friendly to us and never had thought of war with us. This surprises me, in view of the fact that it is in the RECORD, in a document signed by Aguinaldo and his associates of the junta at Hongkong, before he went back to the Philippines at all, that it was decided as one reason why he should go against his will, that in that way he could obtain arms from the United States, and if dissatisfied later with the course of the United States toward the archipelago they could turn those arms against the United States. From the beginning they considered and arranged for the possibility of war with the United States.

It has been said here that they were only children and they ought to be treated like children. I notice one strange thing in all this transaction, when it comes to the Aguinaldo side of this business, to what he wants and what his alleged "republic" wants and are entitled to have, it is said that they had colleges; they had universities; they had music and art; they had great international lawyers; they had doctors; they had all the signs of civilization; they produced constitutions which challenge the admiration of the world, and their discussions of international law were as fine as any that could be found. All this has been said to show that they were fit and civilized and proper representatives of a republic. And yet when we hold them to responsibility for outrage, to responsibility for violence, they are no longer statesmen, they are no longer educated, they are no longer responsible—they are "children!" Well, children have to be spanked sometimes when they do not behave themselves. [Laughter.]

It is said they had been struggling for independence. There is nothing in the history of the Philippine Islands to warrant that statement—nothing that I have ever been able to find. They have had insurrections in those islands, but they have been sporadic. There has never been a general insurrection in the islands. There has been one in this island, that island, and the other against the Spanish Government. For what? To secure reforms and in protest against outrages and tyrannies, but never in all the history of those islands have I been able to learn that there has been an insurrection the object of which was independence.

Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] read this afternoon—and it is very interesting—from some of the captured documents; and among them was found the preliminary treaty of Biacnabato. It was signed by Aguinaldo and was his proposition of terms for discontinuing the insurrection with Spain. He had led an insurrection—this was in 1896; he had been whipped everywhere by the Spanish troops; he had been driven to the mountain fortress of Biacnabato, where he "proclaimed" a republic—a republic of which he was the president, and he was also the republic; and when Paterno went there to propose some adjustment on behalf of the Spanish captain-general, Aguinaldo consented and presented his terms. I only mention this, Mr. President, to show how much idea Aguinaldo had of a republic and of independence.

You will remember that some time before the war broke out with Spain, or about the time, Agoncillo proposed an alliance between the Filipino republic and the Republic of the United States, when the Filipino republic was without an army, without a ship, without a local habitation—a junta in Hongkong. This draft, which Aguinaldo wanted signed by the Spanish captain-general for putting an end to the insurrection in the Philippine Islands, he drew in this way:

The Excellent Señor Don Pedro Alejandrino Paterno, having unexpectedly appeared in the mountain of Biacnabato on the 9th of August, 1897, in the headquarters of the president of the Philippine republic,—

Proposing terms by which he and his companions, in consideration of a certain sum of money should surrender their arms and leave the Philippines, he still asked the Spanish Government to recognize the Philippine republic; and him, as its president, and Paterno struck out this childish recital.

The undersigned, Don Emilio Aguinaldo, president of the Philippine republic—

They struck out "president of the Philippine republic" and put in "chief of the revolutionary army." They agreed upon the money consideration; and here were the reforms which he asked: He was going to quit, to surrender his arms, and go over to Hongkong or Singapore.

I. Expulsion of the religious orders or at least regulations forbidding them to live together in cloisters.

That was stricken out. The Spaniards would not accept it.

II. Representation of the Philippines in the Spanish Cortes.

That was stricken out.

III. Application of true justice in the Philippines, equal for the Indian and the Spaniard. The same laws in Spain and the Philippines. The Indians to have a share in the higher offices of the civil administration.

That was left.

IV. Change of the laws governing property, upon taxes, and the holding of church benefices in favor of the Indian.

That was left.

V. Proclamation of the individual rights of the Indian, as, for example, his liberty to combine with others in associations, and the liberty of the press.

That was left, and all the rest of it was stricken out, ultimately, with the reforms omitted, and this was a part of it:

I. Don Emilio Aguinaldo, in his quality as supreme leader of those in the island of Luzon now waging open hostilities against their legitimate Government, and Don Baldomero Aguinaldo and Don Mariano Llanera, who also exercise important commands in the forces mentioned, are to cease their hostile attitude, surrender their arms that they are using against their fatherland, and are to surrender to the legitimate authorities claiming their rights as Spanish Filipino citizens, which they desire to preserve.

It was ultimately signed and executed with the reforms omitted, part of the money was paid, and they expatriated themselves.

Mr. CULLOM. What was the money consideration?

Mr. SPOONER. Eight hundred thousand dollars, and they left the country and carried the Philippine republic with them. [Laughter.]

Talk about the similarity between the situation in Cuba and the situation in the Philippine Islands! Cuba had been struggling for independence there had been a ten years' war for independence. We had for years heard the two words—now, thank God and the American people, true—"Cuba Libre!" "Cuba Libre!" They were not fighting for reforms.

They had asked them, they had been promised them; they had been cheated again and again, until the Cuban people resolved that nothing—and that was long ago—but independence of Spain would content them; but there never has been, as I said before, and there was not when Dewey entered Manila Bay, an insurrection or a struggle in the Philippine Archipelago for liberty or independence from Spain. On the contrary, Aguinaldo proclaimed shortly after he reached Manila that he came there to prevent his associates, the former insurrectos, from joining the Spaniards in an attack upon the Americans. Senators who seek to draw a parallel in the situation so far as a struggle for liberty was concerned—and when I say "liberty" I mean independence—between the Cubans and the inhabitants of the Philippine Archipelago speak without support in history.

We ratified the treaty and we drove Aguinaldo away from Manila. Does any Senator deny our right to be in Manila? The Spaniards had surrendered Manila to us. By the protocol we had entered into a solemn compact with Spain to hold Manila, and we were with our troops in and around Manila, where we had as much right to be as we have to sit in this Chamber under our flag. I say to-day again what I said a day or two after the treaty was ratified, that the attack made by Aguinaldo upon our Army was as wanton, deliberate, unrighteous, and unjustifiable an invasion of our rights as ever could have occurred in the world, and he knew it.

It has been said that President McKinley "declared war," usurping a function committed to Congress by the Constitution, by sending the instructions to General Otis, of December 21, to extend our sovereignty over the archipelago. Who was that war declared against? What was that war declared against, if it were war? Of course the President could not declare war. Only Congress can declare war. If it be true that there was a government there which had succeeded to the sovereignty and the property of Spain, then we would derive no title by the treaty, and the proclamation by the President directing our officers to extend American sovereignty over the archipelago would be, in effect, a declaration of war.

But it is necessary, in order to sustain that proposition, to first establish another—which has not been established and can never be established—that there was a government there against which war could be declared.

Aguinaldo did not treat that proclamation of General Otis as a declaration of war. That proclamation, or those instructions issued by the President, of course, antedated the ratification of the treaty. Technically that was an offense upon the part of the United States, or the President, at least, against Spain, for her sovereignty could only be devolved upon us by the ratification of the treaty and the exchange of ratifications.

General Otis has testified before the committee that General Miller was sent to Iloilo, I think without instructions from Washington, upon the prayer of the people—the merchants, the foreigners and natives in Iloilo—that they needed his protection. When he sailed for Iloilo it was supposed by General Otis and by General Miller that the Spaniards were still in possession. It would have been a matter entirely between Spain and the United States if in that situation we had taken possession of Iloilo. General Rios had notified General Otis that he needed troops, and had asked him to loan him—it was a strange request—2,000 of the Spanish prisoners, that he might the better hold Iloilo. The insurgents had attacked Iloilo and had been repulsed with a loss of 500 and a large number of wounded, and had withdrawn.

Just before General Miller reached Iloilo General Rios withdrew from that city under instructions from the Spanish Government and betook himself to another Spanish place. General Miller was not instructed to fight. On the contrary he was instructed not to use force without further orders. General Miller, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will now admit, was not anxious to fight.

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I saw put in the RECORD by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], I think in this morning's RECORD, a letter from General Miller saying that he was not.

Mr. HOAR. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator. After reading General Miller's letter I disclaimed any idea that he published that proclamation for the sake of bringing on a fight; but by the record, which I said I had not time to read, General Miller had repeatedly urged General Otis that he might be permitted to attack at once, fearing that the enemy were constantly increasing their strength, and that it would be much easier to do it the sooner it was done. Undoubtedly General Miller did not want the conflict——

Mr. SPOONER. Well, General Miller——

Mr. HOAR. Let me state what I said exactly, because it is important to myself that it should be stated correctly. I do not believe that General Miller, especially after reading his letter—and no man can believe it—was in favor of this conflict or wanted to bring it on; but what he did want, if I correctly recollect his letter, which you will find in the old report, is, that if he had to make the attack it should be made at once instead of waiting until the enemy had strengthened. That is the exact fact about it.

Mr. SPOONER. Any man would want to do that.

Mr. HOAR. I wanted simply to put myself right, because I did, of course, an injustice to General Miller the other day, which I tried to repair as thoroughly as I knew how.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all I said, and that is just what I said that the Senator from Massachusetts stated, that General Miller, "who notoriously did want an attack, produced it, and Aguinaldo met it with an instant and severe defiance."

Mr. HOAR. That I took back.

Mr. SPOONER. That General Miller denied, and that denial the Senator from Massachusetts accepts. So that element drops out of the case.

On January 5, as I recollect it, General Otis's proclamation was published in Manila. In that he referred to some instructions issued by the President of the United States. Then came a protest from Aguinaldo to the world against "this invasion by the United States of the sovereignty of my government." But in the declaration of war, which he sent to General Otis and which is published in the document which I can not this moment find, he states his grievances for himself, and he does not allude to that.

He places it entirely on the alleged attack of our Army upon his army without justification, and also the outrages and injustice perpetrated in and around Manila, to which he had called attention in a former paper.

No one, so far as I know, Mr. President, of the Filipinos has justified that attack upon our troops by President McKinley's proclamation. It has all been done here, not there. I suppose even Aguinaldo might be trusted to put in his own proclamation his own grounds for declaring war.

I have found his order to the Philippine army declaring war, in which he omits any mention whatever of this proclamation by General Otis or these instructions of President McKinley. I will not take the time to read it, but I will ask that it may be inserted as a part of my remarks. It is on page 104 of Document No. 208.

The order referred to is as follows:

GENERAL ORDER TO THE PHILIPPINE ARMY.

Nine o'clock p. m., this date, I received from Caloocan station a message communicated to me that the American forces, without prior notification or any just motive, attacked our camp at San Juan del Monte and our forces garrisoning the blockhouses around the outskirts of Manila, causing losses among our soldiers, who, in view of this unexpected aggression and of the decided attack of the aggressors, were obliged to defend themselves until the firing became general all along the line.

No one can deplore more than I this rupture of hostilities. I have a clear conscience that I have endeavored to avoid it at all costs, using all my efforts to preserve friendship with the army of occupation, even at the cost of not a few humiliations and many sacrificed rights.

But it is my unavoidable duty to maintain the integrity of the national honor and that of the army, so unjustly attacked by those who, posing as our friends and liberators, attempted to dominate us in place of the Spaniards, as is shown by the grievances enumerated in my manifest of January 8 last, such as the continued outrages and violent exactions committed against the people of Manila, the useless conferences, and all my frustrated efforts in favor of peace and concord.

Summoned by this unexpected provocation, urged by the duties imposed upon me by honor and patriotism and for the defense of the nation intrusted to me, calling on God as a witness of my good faith and the uprightness of my intentions—

I order and command:

1. Peace and friendly relations between the Philippine forces and the American forces of occupation are broken, and the latter will be treated as enemies, within the limits prescribed by the laws of war.

2. American soldiers who may be captured by the Philippine forces will be treated as prisoners of war.

3. This proclamation shall be communicated to the accredited consuls of Manila, and to congress, in order that it may accord the suspension of the constitutional guaranties and the resulting declaration of war.

Given at Malolos, February 4, 1899.

EMILIO AGUINALDO,
General in Chief.

General Otis had notified Aguinaldo days before the attack of his instructions from Washington not under any circumstances to attack him. He had told him that he was instructed to avoid by every possible means a conflict between his army and the army of Aguinaldo. And that is not all. Aguinaldo had been otherwise informed. He had received a notice through the junta from here that the President had instructed General Otis not to attack his troops.

HONGKONG, January 26, 1899.

This is from Santos, Hongkong.

Honorable President of the Filipino Republic, Gen. Don Emilio Aguinaldo.

* MY DISTINGUISHED GENERAL AND DEAR FRIEND: After sealing my former letter of this morning, Reuter's telegram arrived containing the good news that General Otis has been ordered not to attack the Filipinos. Our efforts here have not been in vain. They, together with your firm attitude, have forced the Yankees at least to reflect.

I will not read the rest of it. So I say again it was a perfectly wanton attack upon our troops who were rightfully in and around Manila.

Senators talk about the President declaring war. Who sent the army to Manila. First, the President, on the request of Admiral Dewey, in order that they might take possession of Manila and hold it, Congress being in session. There was a critical act, I think. If those troops had not been sent to Manila to take possession of that city the situation might have been a little different. No man in the United States, so far as I know but one, found any fault with the President for sending those troops to Manila. No man in the Senate, however he may upbraid us for what has followed, found any fault with the President for sending those troops to Manila, although one Senator found fault with him here for not sending them with sufficient promptitude. The one Senator who objected to it, or afterwards stated here that he had objected to the President's action, is now dead and gone, a Senator who had spent some time in the Philippines in his early years, and that was General Sewell, of New Jersey.

The fighting went on there. We passed the Army bill. What for? I ask this question because of the attitude of some Senators here to-day. We passed it February 27, 1899, after the ratification of the treaty, when we were at peace with Spain and all the world, with no war cloud upon our horizon except in the Philippines. The Army bill was passed to furnish to the President troops with which to maintain the sovereignty of the United States in the Philippines. There was a halting point. Who called a halt? I have here the vote upon it. I will name the Senators who voted for it. The bill was a great mistake in one respect. My friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] remembers how it was. The term of enlistment was limited to July 1, 1901. It expired absolutely on that day, and the necessity for raising new troops, hurrying them away, and withdrawing the others prolonged the insurrection in the islands. That was our mistake, not the President's. But we could do no better in the then situation.

Mr. Allen voted for it; Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BACON voted for it; Mr. BURROWS, Mr. Carter, Mr. Chandler, Mr. CLARK, Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. CULLOM, Mr. DEBOE, Mr. ELKINS, Mr. FAIRBANKS, Mr. Faulkner, Mr. FORAKER, Mr. FRYE, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. Gear, Mr. Gorman, Mr. HANNA, Mr. HANSBROUGH, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. HEITFELD, Mr. JONES of Nevada, Mr. Lindsay, Mr. LODGE, Mr. McBride, Mr. MCENERY, Mr. MCLAURIN, Mr. MALLORY, Mr. Mantle, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MONEY, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. Murphy, Mr. NELSON, Mr. Pascoe, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. PETTUS, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. PLATT of New York, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. RAWLINS, Mr. Roach, Mr. Ross, Mr. Sewell, Mr. Shoup, Mr. SIMON, Mr. Smith, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. STEWART, Mr. TELLER, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WELLINGTON.

Who voted against it?

Messrs. BATE, BERRY, Butler, Caffery, Chilton, CLAY, DANIEL, HOAR, MARTIN, Pettigrew, Turley, VEST, and White.

What was that army raised for? What did Senators of the minority vote with us to raise it and send it to the Philippines for? And in the face of that record they tell us that we ought to have known that a war between a civilized nation and an inferior people could not do otherwise than bring about cruelty and atrocity. Was there any politics in this? Are Senators on the other side who voted to raise this army and send it to the Philippines in a position to turn on us with the vituperation and challenge which has characterized this debate? I do not know how my friend from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] voted on this in the House.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not mean to challenge the Senator, although I will gladly hear him.

Mr. CARMACK. I was just going to say that I probably voted in accordance with the principle laid down by Abraham Lincoln in voting for troops and supplies for the Mexican war, and that I would so vote again.

Mr. SPOONER. That comes pretty near pleading the same act that is pleaded for the Filipinos when they do wrong things. We are not children. Every man who voted for that—and it was only a few days after the treaty was ratified—voted for it upon the basis that we had acquired title and sovereignty from Spain and had paid for it, and that we were to enforce our sovereignty, and constitutionally and properly do it, in the Philippines, and that our sovereignty was being forcibly resisted by men who had no right to resist it.

Now, Mr. President, what policy did President McKinley have as to the Philippines after we had ratified the treaty and acquired the title and the sovereignty of Spain? The President's duty was to enforce the sovereignty of the United States in those islands. He could not make disposition of the islands; he could make no promises to the inhabitants of the islands. He gave us this notice in his message:

Until Congress shall have made known the formal expression of its will I shall use the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes to uphold the sovereignty of the United States in those distant islands as in all other places where our flag rightfully floats. I shall put at the disposal of the Army and Navy all the means which the liberality of Congress and the people have provided to cause this unprovoked and wasteful insurrection to cease. If any orders of mine were required to insure the merciful conduct of military and naval operations, they would not be lacking—

One would know that if he had not said it—but every step of the progress of our troops has been marked by a humanity which has surprised even the misguided insurgents.

And there is overwhelming evidence that the President was not misinformed as to that fact.

The truest kindness to them—

This is what you find in General Order 100, approved by Abraham Lincoln. This is what you find in every enlightened work upon the subject. This is what General Bell thought; this is what General Chaffee thought; this is what General McArthur thought, and it is the truth:

The truest kindness to them will be a swift and effective defeat of their present leader. The hour of victory will be the hour of clemency and reconstruction.

No effort will be spared to build up the waste places desolated by war and by long years of misgovernment. We shall not wait for the end of strife to begin the beneficent work.

Nor did we. Never in the annals of time—say what you will about the "brutal" policy, as you call it, of the "Administration" in the Philippines—has there been carried by an army so much of amelioration, so much of kindness and tenderness and upbuilding in the line of civil government as was carried by this Army of ours under the orders of William McKinley. It was destructive, of course, as all war is destructive, as all armies must be destructive, but along with the destructive power of the Army went the constructive forces of peace and humanity.

We shall continue, as we have begun, to open the schools and the churches, to set the courts in operation, to foster industry and trade and agriculture, and in every way in our power to make these people whom Providence has brought within our jurisdiction feel that it is their liberty and not our power; their welfare, and not our gain— their welfare, and not our gain we are seeking to enhance.

Not exploitation; not an opportunity for "Republican thieves"—

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], whom I admire, will not doubt the sincerity of that utterance, I know.

And by the act of February 2, 1901, "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," the President was authorized to maintain the enlisted forces of the Army at their maximum strength, as fixed by the act, "during the present exigencies of the service, or until such time as Congress may hereafter otherwise direct." This had especial reference to the situation in the Philippines, and the act was passed without a division in the Senate although there was much debate and there were many divisions upon some of its provisions. From the beginning it has been recognized by both parties that resistance to our sovereignty in the Philippines must be overcome by the military forces of the Government. The minority substitute for this bill contemplates that, if it is necessary.

Senators who will have so much to say about the Army in the next campaign and about the Republican policy in sending it there, and about the result, which some of them say they predicted, that a conflict between an army of civilization and an inferior race would be productive of atrocity, should read the record to the people and show their own responsibility for sending that army there.

I could not understand for a while the extreme bitterness of the Senator from Tennessee, but toward the end of his speech when he told us that he had foretold that in a conflict between the forces of civilization and an inferior race there could be nothing but cruelty; that that people would never be our friends; that they would hate us through all the centuries, I understood it, because if those things do not all happen the Senator from Tennessee will not have been a prophet.

Of course it has been shown many times that Aguinaldo almost from the beginning of the arrival of our troops was hostile to us. He did not want to permit them to land. He prohibited the landing of others without notification to him of what they were brought there for. He would not allow them to purchase supplies; he forbade supplies being furnisheduntil he was notified that we must have them, and that if he did not authorize their sale to us we would pass his lines and take them; and he "plumed" himself upon his "magnanimity" that he did not cut off the water supply of the great city of Manila. He gave every indication that he had become what Admiral Dewey said he was—a swelled head and determined to have trouble.

As early as September, 1898, this distinguished president of a "friendly" republic—to which we are "denying independence"—which they are incapable, left alone, of creating upon any standard ever recognized in the world, gave these instructions. Remember this is September, long before we demanded the cession of the Philippine Archipelago.

AGUINALDO'S ORDERS TO GENERALS COMMANDING THE ZONES ABOUT MANILA, DIRECTING THE WITHDRAWAL FROM MANILA, SEPTEMBER, 1898.

General PIO DEL PILAR:

Give instructions to have a detachment posted in the interval from the branch of the river of Paco in a northerly direction to the bridge, and so on up to the Pasig River in the direction of Pandacan, the river serving as a line until suburb of Tanque is reached, which will be under our jurisdiction. Proceed to execute this order on its receipt, posting detachments where they are necessary, and trenches will be made without loss of time, working at this both day and night. Do not rest, for by doing so we may lose the opportunity. Beg of the troops to assist in the formation of intrenchments. Matters have a bad aspect. We especialy expect something on the days of Wednesday and Thursday, 10th and 15th of this month. The danger is pending on the mentioned days, also in the time that follows.

Keep strict vigilance at all hours. In case you receive orders to leave that place, do not do so on any account without my orders, happen what may.

Send the forces in Perez's house (situated on the other side of the bridge) to the town of Paco and post them in their places in Tanke, adding three more companies; and post separate detachments up to Pandacan, but close enough together to see each other.

Have the furniture that is in Perez's house taken out and sent to Santa Ana before Captain Salvador and his forces leave said house. Order the band to accompany the troops on their march to Paco, the same as will be done in Ermita and Malate. Have all the musicians dressed in uniform; those who have no uniform must borrow from the men in the ranks. Keep the places where detachments are to be posted a secret in the meantime.

Concentrate all your forces in Santa Ana before the day arrives.

Warn your soldiers against firing at random, as the Spaniards did; if possible, have them calculate the number of their antagonists and how much ammunition there is in comparison with the number of the attacking force; in fact, there are occasions when each shot fired kills as many as four men.

I hope you will see to the execution of these instructions, and that you will maintain the honor of Filipinos by your courage, and in no way permit that your rights be trampled under foot.

Gen. P. GARCIA:

On Wednesday, the 14th of this month, you will post detachments in the points indicated by crossed lines on the inclosed plan. On receipt of this, and as soon as you learn its contents, proceed secretly to determine the most suitable places to post detachments, and immediately post our troops and have intrenchments made, employing day and night in this work. Beg this of our soldiers.

NORIEL or CAILLES:

At 8 o'clock in the morning of Wednesday, the 14th, retire your command out of the town of Malate as indicated on the inclosed plan; from the bridge in Singalong and in a straight line from there to the branch of the river in Paco will be the line of our jurisdiction, even though we may not be of one mind in the matter. On receipt of this proceed to determine the most suitable places to post our troops, even if they are not supplied with batteries. On posting the detachments, give instructions to have intrenchments made immediately without resting, especially on the days of the 15th and 16th.

Matters present a serious aspect; do not lose vigilance, and be on the alert at all times. Beg our soldiers to assist in the work in order not to lose time.

Concentrate all the forces and have a call to arms in Cavite, so that all the troops may be in Pasay on Wednesday night.

In case the Americans attempt to order you out, do not leave your posts, happen what may, but exercise prudence and be prepared, leaving them to give the provocation. Answer them that you have no instructions given you with regard to what they ask.

NOTE.—In handwriting of E. Aguinaldo.

All this was directed against the Americans by the "friendly president" of a "friendly republic."

The Filipinos, with studied insult month after month, as all the testimony of our officers shows—truthful and accomplished officers—by every means in their power attempted to evoke a hostile demonstration from the United States troops, and General Otis says that Aguinaldo was "happy" when Miller went to Iloilo because the "first gun would be fired by the United States." They waited until two days before the vote upon the treaty, and they found both by cable from here and by notification from General Otis that the United States would not fire a gun, and then they took the initiative.

Another thing I have never been able to understand, and I have never heard it explained or attempted to be explained on the other side, either. It has been referred to, but I have never heard any explanation of it. It is that Agoncillo and his secretary, who had been for weeks stopping at the Arlington in this city, representing the Philippine republic (so called), at midnight on the 4th of February, without notifying the hotel people, without paying their bills, secretly left for Canada. And when the next morning, on February 5, we learned for the first time of the outbreak in Manila, their attack upon our troops there, they were approaching the Canadian line.

They need not have run away. They knew the treaty was to be voted upon the next day. They knew the Vest amendment, putting them on the same basis with Cuba, was to be voted upon that day or the day afterwards. They knew that the Bacon resolution was pending. Why in this way did they withdraw from Washington? They knew—there is no other explanation of it—that word would come from Manila of an attack upon our troops, and they thought foolishly that it would be healthier in Canada than in Washington. And all this revived effort to put the Army of the United States over there in the wrong, to satisfy the people that we brought about that outbreak, is in the face of evidence which is overwhelming and incontrovertible.

Among the charges, Mr. President, that have been made in this debate is one made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] more sinister and ugly than any I have heard before. If it were true every man in this Chamber would hang his head:

The message to the people of the United States announcing the beginning of hostilities, the Senate of the United States then having under consideration the question of the ratification of the Paris treaty, is said to have been put upon the wires two hours and a half before even the American sentries killed the Filipino patrol coming from blockhouse No. 7.

In other words, it is said to have been put upon the wires for transmission at Manila two hours or more before the outbreak occurred. And then the Senator from Utah says:

In order to get time for the message to arrive here it was necessary to have the hostilities begin at half past 3, whereas according to the testimony of General MacArthur they did not actually begin until half past 10 on Saturday night, the 4th of February.

General Otis reported and he has testified before the committee that they began about 8.45. General MacArthur reported officially that they began at 8.30. General Hughes has testified before the committee that they began at 8.30. General MacArthur, when his attention was called to it again, said he stood by his report, and that he had testified hastily and inadvertently that they began about 10.30. I recollect his testimony. Here is the argument of the Senator from Utah:

There was the overwhelming political necessity. There was the war that Congress did not declare. There was the war for which the American people are not responsible. There was the war begun not by any recognized authority emanating from the people of the United States. There was the war either begun by General Otis or begun by the President of the United States without the sanction of the sole repository of that power under the Constitution.

I took occasion to look into that matter a little, because the imputation there is that there was a "political necessity" for its influence upon the vote onthe treaty that news of the outbreak should get here at a certain time, and that in contemplation of the outbreak, which we intended should occur, the message had been put upon the wire two hours or more before the outbreak did occur. The fact is that the first official information received in Washington about the outbreak was a cablegram from Admiral Dewey, received here February 5, 1899, at 8.05 a. m., as follows:

MANILA, Received February 5, 1899—8.05 a. m.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington:

Insurgents have inaugurated general engagement yesterday night which is continued to-day. The American Army and Navy is generally successful. Insurgents have been driven back and our line advanced. No casualties to Navy. In view of this and possible future expenditure, request ammunition requisition doubled.

DEWEY.

General Chaffee was asked to ascertain when that cablegram was filed in Manila for transmission, and replied as follows:

MANILA, May 20, 1902.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, Washington:

With reference to your telegram of 19th, records cable company show Dewey's message, 41 words, filed 6.02 evening February 5; message, 20 words, filed 11 morning, February 6. Original messages sent London. Otis message dated February 5, filed 8.32 morning, February 6.

CHAFFEE.

Thus the fact is that this message of Admiral Dewey was filed for transmission at two minutes after 6 on the evening of the 5th of February, twenty-one hours after the outbreak had occurred, and refers to an outbreak having occurred yesterday night. At the time—there being thirteen hours difference between Manila and here—that telegram was filed for transmission—6.02 in the evening of February 5—it was 5 o'clock or thereabouts in the morning, February 5, here, and this message was received from Dewey at five minutes after 8, which gave it three hours and five minutes for transmission and delivery.

I have here a letter from General Otis and a letter from Secretary Root upon the subject, which I do not care to read, but ask leave to insert.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 18, 1902.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington.

SIR: In answer to your communication of the 16th instant I have the honor to report that I am quite certain of the correctness of my statement that the insurgents commenced the attack on our outer lines around Manila about 8.45 p. m. on the evening of February 4, 1898; that the time was fixed by referring to my watch that evening and consulting with the officers of my staff the following day.

No report or dispatch of any kind was sent from the Philippines to the United States announcing that fighting had begun or was in progress until after 4 o'clock on the afternoon of February 5, to my knowledge. Certainly none was sent by me, nor by any officer of the Army. Some twenty hours after hostilities had commenced I cabled facts and results, and not until then. Shortly after I sent that cablegram I received a dispatch from Washington, purporting to be signed by the Adjutant-General of the Army, which read, according to my present recollection, as follows: "They say you are fighting. Why do not you report?" Evidently Washington obtained information from some source; where, I do not know. It might be well to ascertain what inspired the Adjutant-General's dispatch.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. S. OTIS,
Major-General, retired.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 20, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I find that the first information of the beginning of hostilities between the insurgents and the American troops at Manila on the 4th of February, 1899, received by the Government at Washington was contained in a dispatch from Admiral Dewey to the Secretary of the Navy, received at the Navy Department February 5, 1899, at five minutes after 8 o'clock in the morning, Washington time. It was in cipher, and you already have the translation. It was filed for transmission at the office of the cable company in Manila two minutes after 6 o'clock on the evening of February 5, Manila time, twenty-one hours after the hostilities began, as appears from a dispatch received from General Chaffee to-day, a copy of which I inclose. The first information received from General Otis, who commanded the American army at that time, was contained in a dispatch (a copy of which you have) received at the War Department February 5, at 10.52 p. m., Washington time, and this appears, by General Chaffee's message, to have been filed for transmission at the cable office in Manila at 8.32 in the morning of February 6, Manila time, nearly thirty-six hours after the fighting began.

I wish to make two observations regarding Senator RAWLINS's charge in his speech of April 23:

(1) Admiral Dewey's dispatch said: "Insurgents have inaugurated general engagement yesterday night, which is continued to-day."

General Otis's dispatch said: "Insurgents in large force opened attack on our outer lines at 8.45 last evening. Renewed attack several times during night. At 4 o'clock this morning entire line engaged."

If Senator RAWLINS's charge were true, then Admiral Dewey and General Otis, or at all events the former, would be guilty of a gross fraud and falsehood in stating that an event occurred the day before, when in fact it had not yet occurred.

(2) Senator RAWLINS evidently figured the difference in time between Manila and Washington the wrong way, or more probably accepted the statements of some one else who had figured it the wrong way. The sun rises in Manila thirteen hours earlier than it does in Washington, and Manila time is therefore thirteen hours later than Washington time, so that at five minutes after 8 in the morning of February 5 in Washington, when Admiral Dewey's dispatch was received, it was five minutes after 9 in the evening of February 5 at Manila.

I send you also a copy of a letter from General Otis, which states his knowledge of the facts. General MacArthur's testimony fixing the beginning of the fighting at half past 10 on the night of the 4th of February, whereas Otis's dispatch fixes it at 8.45, is of course immaterial in view of the long time which elapsed before the dispatches reporting the engagement were sent. The difference is probably due to the fact that MacArthur had in mind the time when he got into the fight with the troops under his command, while Otis was reporting the first fighting done by any troops.

Faithfully, yours,

ELIHU ROOT.

Hon. JOHN C. SPOONER,
United States Senate.

Inclosures.

I could not allow this matter to pass without some notice. It is only due to the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] that I should say he did not assert it. He said "it is said," and I took the trouble to ascertain the facts, not having any doubt whatever about it, but in order that they might be put of record, once for all.

Mr. ALLISON. With the consent of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will be glad to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin prefers to complete his remarks on Saturday.

Mr. ALDRICH. Unless some one else desires to proceed.

Mr. DUBOIS. The entire Senate was taken into the confidence of the majority and the minority of the Philippine Committee, and it was stated that three Senators on this side desired to speak and one on the other side, and the agreement was made with the understanding that these Senators should be accommodated. I would not, of course, ask the Senator from Wisconsin to continue his remarks, but I think we ought to have a night session or provide in some way to carry out the agreement entered into by the entire Senate, that those Senators should be allowed to make their speeches.

Mr. ALLISON. One Senator on the other side spoke to-day by the courtesy of the Senator from Wisconsin, and occupied nearly an hour and a half.

Mr. DUBOIS. I understand; but I——

Mr. ALLISON. And, as the Senator is aware, after the agreement was entered into another Senator on the other side spoke.

Mr. BACON. Not on this side.

Mr. DUBOIS. Not on this side. This side stated with authority as to those who were to speak and invited anyone who disagreed with that statement to tell us.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not hear that.

Mr. DUBOIS. It is in the RECORD. I think in fairness the Senators who were named before the agreement was made should be allowed to address the Senate on the general bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no objection.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] has spoken.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no objection to anybody going on who desires to.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that we might provide ample time even under the arrangement as it stands by devoting Monday to general debate instead of to fifteen-minute debate. I take it the debate upon the amendments will not serve any very useful purpose. On that point, however, I defer entirely to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DUBOIS. The members on this side not only wanted two days' debate on the amendments, but three; and then on the bill fifteen-minute debate.

Mr. BAILEY. I merely ventured to make the suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to make a single suggestion.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator from Iowa excuse me for a moment? All I want to do is to carry out the agreement as it was understood by the entire Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly no one wishes to violate it. The Senator from Wisconsin intimates, and I think very properly, that he would be glad if he could be relieved for the evening on account of his being tired.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not take a recess?

Mr. ALLISON. I have never known a Senator to be forced to continue the debate under such circumstances.

Mr. SPOONER. If the arrangement proposed is not agreeable to Senators I will go on now.

Mr. DUBOIS. Please do not do that. The Senator from Wisconsin must not misunderstand me.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not, but I want to say that I would not be willing to permit any arrangement for my accommodation which would at all disarrange the order which has been agreed upon, and if the proposed arrangement will shorten any Senator's speech or deter anyone from speaking, then I prefer to go on now. I have been speaking under embarrassment, but I will go on if that will make it more agreeable.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be insisted upon.

Mr. DUBOIS. Not at all.

Mr. ALLISON. It was arranged that the session this morning should begin at 11 o'clock, and it was understood in the discussion yesterday that the Senator from Wisconsin would have this day. He took the floor about 3 o'clock this afternoon, although we began the session at 11 o'clock this morning. Now, after a weary day, at 5 o'clock he suggests that he does not feel like going on with his speech this evening. If there is any other Senator who desires to go on now, I am perfectly willing to sit here and listen to him.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now or this evening?

Mr. ALLISON. Either one.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is not that a good solution of the difficulty?

Mr. ALLISON. But I do not think the Senator from Wisconsin ought to be forced to finish his speech to-night.

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh, no. The Senator from Iowa totally misunderstands me. A motion was made to go into executive session——

Mr. ALLISON. I withdrew that.

Mr. DUBOIS. Or a Senator rose to make that motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I did that because I did not know that any other Senator desired to go on to-night.

Mr. CARMACK. I merely wish to say that I do not want the Senator from Wisconsin, feeling as he does, to be forced to go on this afternoon under any circumstances; and whatever arrangement is made must be made to accord with his feelings and with the view that the Senator will be allowed to finish his speech at his convenience. I am very much opposed to desiring the Senator to go on this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. Are any of the Senators on the other side ready to go on?

Mr. CARMACK. So far as I know, they are not. I think it is due to the Senator from Wisconsin in making his speech that his convenience should be consulted.

Mr. SPOONER. If it is a mere matter of my convenience, I would not permit the suggestion to be made at all.

Mr. CARMACK. That is a matter that is always considered, and it has been considered with reference to Senators on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senators upon the other side of the Chamber have been very courteous about acceding to the convenience of Senators on this side. I certainly do not wish to require the Senator from Wisconsin to go on now under any circumstances, having spoken as long as he has.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is there any Senator on the other side ready to go on?

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to suggest that an adjournment be taken until Saturday morning, so as to give an opportunity to the Senator from Wisconsin to then conclude his speech; and, if it be necessary on Saturday night to conclude general debate, let us then have a night session.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, May 31, 1902, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 29, 1902.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

William F. Stone, of Maryland, to be collector of customs for the district of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland. (Reappointment.)

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Robert A. Ravenscroft, of Maryland, to be surveyor of customs in the district of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, to succeed John B. Hanna, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

NAVAL OFFICER.

William T. Malster, of Maryland, to be naval officer of customs in the district of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, to succeed John W. Cable, resigned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

John C. Rose, of Maryland, to be United States attorney for the district of Maryland. A reappointment, his term having expired May 11, 1902.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

John F. Langhammer, of Maryland, to be United States marshal for the district of Maryland, vice William F. Airey, whose term will expire July 16, 1902.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Alfred C. Coxe, of New York, to be United States circuit judge for the second judicial circuit. An original appointment as provided in the act approved April 17, 1902, entitled "An act providing for an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit." Alfred C. Coxe is now United States district judge for the northern district of New York.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 29, 1902.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

George A. McKenzie, of California, to be receiver of public moneys at Stockton, Cal., June 17, 1902.

POSTMASTER.

Charles A. Dunlap, to be postmaster at Manheim, in the county of Lancaster and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 29, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I ask for a reprint of the bill S. 4858 and the accompanying report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, asks unanimous consent for a reprint of a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4858) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States, or are totally disabled in the same.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this request will be granted.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, of the bill H. R. 7659.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7659) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That whenever three-fourths in number of the national banks located in any city of the United States having a population of 25,000 people shall make application to the Comptroller of the Currency, in writing, asking that the name of the city in which such banks are located shall be added to the cities named in sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes, the Comptroller, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have authority to grant such request, and every bank located in such city so designated shall at all times thereafter have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of its deposits, as provided in sections 5191 and 5195 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That no bank with a capital of less than $100,000 shall be thus designated."

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

On page 1, line 11, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not think a bill of that magnitude ought to be considered by unanimous consent, and therefore I object.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that this bill is unanimously reported, and unanimously passed the House at the last session, but too late to pass the Senate. The present law requires that the reserves of national banks shall be held in cities of 50,000 population and over. The bill which provided for small national banks resulted in the creation of national banks where State banks had existed and the removal of the reserve fund from the smaller cities to the larger cities, so that the bill creating the small banks operated to transfer the reserve funds from cities of 15,000 to cities of 50,000 and over, and thus concentrates the reserve money in the great cities of the country to the detriment of the smaller cities. This bill proposes to restore substantially the condition that existed before the small national banks were authorized. It had the unanimous approval of the committee in the last Congress, it passed the House unanimously, and has now the unanimous approval of all the members of this committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do I understand these small banks were permitted to hold the reserve fund at their pleasure? Does not the gentleman know that contracts the currency to that amount?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; you misunderstand. The old law provides that the reserves of the national banks should only be in cities of over 50,000 population.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That concentrated all the reserve of all the national banks there.

Now, when you passed the law providing for the creation of small national banks in small towns and State banks reincorporated as national banks, they were compelled to transfer their reserves of from fifteen to fifty thousand dollars to the banks in the great cities, and thus it operated to drag the money from the country into the great cities. This bill provides for restoring the old conditions and for a wider distribution of the national banking reserve fund.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This merely allows the money that belongs out in the country to remain there, and at the same time strengthens the bank's reserve fund.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes. In view of this explanation, I trust the gentleman from Tennessee will not deem it necessary to object.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think, Mr. Speaker, this bill is all right.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will object to the consideration at this time. I do not think a bill of that kind ought to be passed by unanimous consent without an opportunity to discuss it or have it discussed fully before the House. I object.

Subsequently,

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I interposed an objection a moment ago to the bill offered by the gentleman from Iowa. I have read the bill since then and I see no objection to it, and I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman from Iowa withhold for a moment and yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will.

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely want to state, Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill, that it was considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency and the minority members of the committee were present and after a full consideration we reported it, deeming it proper legislation.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JOHN SHAMBURGER, LOUIS SMITH, AND HENRY METZGER.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3216) to remove the record of dishonorable discharges from the military records of John Shamburger, Louis Smith, and Henry Metzger.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the record of dishonorable discharges now standing on said rolls and records against John Shamburger, Louis Smith, and Henry Metzger, late privates of Company M, Twelfth New York Cavalry, and grant each of them a certificate of honorable discharge, to date November 7, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee:

In line 3, after the word "authorize," strike out the words "and directed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RYAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONFEDERATE MOUND, OAK WOODS CEMETERY, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9360) for the improvement and care of Confederate Mound, in Oak Woods Cemetery, Chicago, Ill., and making an appropriation therefor.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into a contract with the Oak Woods Cemetery Association for the improvement and ornamentation of the plot of ground owned by the United States and known as "Confederate Mound," located in Oak Woods Cemetery, Chicago, Ill., in which are buried 12 Union and 4,039 Confederate soldiers, who died at Camp Douglas during the war of the rebellion, so as to bring the condition of the said plot of ground up to the standard of the improvements in the cemetery surrounding it: Provided, That the expense of such improvement shall not exceed the sum of $3,850.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized from time to time to enter into contract with the Oak Woods Cemetery Association for the proper care, protection, and maintenance of the said plot of ground known as "Confederate Mound" and described in section 1 of this act: Provided, however, That the annual expense thereof shall not exceed the sum of $250.

SEC. 3. That to defray the expenses of the improvement provided for in section 1 of this act the sum of $3,850, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation. Has it been to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The Government of the United States in 1866 purchased the land in question, which is situated in the center or near the middle of Oak Woods Cemetery, Chicago, and have buried there ex-Confederates and ex-Union soldiers in this plat of ground. The ground is uncared for by anybody. A few years ago the Ex-Confederate Association erected a monument upon the ground at their own expense, but the ground needs to be properly taken care of. The title is in the Government.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman why the appropriation of $3,000 is made?

Mr. HULL. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this plat of ground, unless the Government cares for it, is a blot on the cemetery. The Government ought to take care of it.

Mr. LOUD. Why does the bill appropriate three thousand and odd dollars?

Mr. MANN. It authorizes the Secretary of War to enter into contract for the improvement of the ground, not to exceed an expense of $3,850, and makes an appropriation of that sum, or so much as may be necessary therefor.

Mr. LOUD. What is the $250 item for?

Mr. MANN. The $250 item provides that the Secretary of War may enter into a contract for the maintenance of the plat of ground at a cost not exceeding $250; but there is no appropriation carried in the bill for that.

Mr. LOUD. How are you going to get it?

Mr. MANN. If it is done, it will have to be by an annual appropriation hereafter.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I do not feel disposed, because I have the power, to object to this bill, but I want to say to the House that it simply opens the door to care for the graves of the Confederate dead throughout the United States. The bill recites that there are four thousand and odd Confederates buried there, and they have thrown in 12 Union soldiers in order to attempt to cover up the 4,000 Confederate dead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS WACCAMAW RIVER, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14380) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Waccamaw River at Conway, in the State of South Carolina, by Conway and Seashore Railroad Company.

The bill was read.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were read, as follows:

After the word "That," in line 3, page 1, insert the word "the."

In lines 12 and 13, page 1, strike out all after the word "expense" and insert the following: "and said draw shall be promptly opened upon reasonable signal for the passage of all water craft."

Strike out all of sections 3 and 4 and insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That the company building the said bridge shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location thereof, and until the said plan and location are approved by the Secretary of War the said bridge shall not be commenced or built, and no changes shall be made in said bridge during the progress of construction, or after completion, unless approved by the Secretary of War. And the said company shall, at its own expense, make from time to time such changes in said bridge as the Secretary of War may order in the interests of navigation: Provided, That the said company shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board may prescribe.

"SEC. 4. That said bridge shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transmission over the railroads leading to the said bridge, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post roads in the United States, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for telegraph and telephone purposes.

"SEC. 5. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of railroad trains over the same and the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of the said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in the use of said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SCARBOROUGH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. HILL. I call for the regular order, and move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12704) to increase the subsidiary silver coinage.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. TAWNEY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of House bill 12704.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter from a former colleague of mine, a distinguished gentleman who served as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, with regard to the currency bill known as the "Fowler bill."

A MEMBER. Whom is the letter from?

Mr. McCALL. It is from Hon. Joseph H. Walker, who is known to most of the members of the House. I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD. It will not occupy more, perhaps, than two pages.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] asks unanimous consent that he may have printed in the RECORD a letter received by him from a former colleague and member of the House upon the currency bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Who is the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Hon. Joseph H. Walker, of Massachusetts. [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and leave is accordingly granted.

The letter is as follows:

WORCESTER, MASS., May 21, 1902.

MY DEAR MR. McCALL: I see by the papers that the Republicans were called in caucus to consider the Fowler banking bill. I feel it my duty to give you the conclusions that I have come to on the bill, resulting from my thirty years' study of the banking and currency question. It seems to me that, while Mr. FOWLER is absolutely sound in his views on the kind of currency that banks ought to issue and, in fact, generally on the banking question, when it comes to proposing a remedy he utterly fails to carry into practice his theories as to currency and banking. His report on his bill is a remarkably able one and generally correct in the principles enunciated, but the bill in no sense justifies the claims in the report and is very objectionable in many of its provisions.

First. The claim in the report that the responsibility of the Government for protecting the necessary gold reserve is transferred to the banks is not justified by the text of the bill.

Second. The bill still leaves the parity to be maintained by the Treasury by taxing the people for doing so in the sale of bonds, contrary to the statement of the report.

Third. Contrary to the statement of the report, it does not "provide a currency always responsive to and adequate to the demands of trade;" nor does it "equalize and lower the rate of interest," for the bill still leaves the bond currency in existence, which will be used by all banks in preference to currency encumbered by so many disabilities as are provided in the bill.

Fourth. It in no way removes doubt with regard to the maintenance of our standard of value.

Fifth. Further, the provisions of the bill for international banking are contrary to the whole theory and practice of our people in banking and make the bill impracticable as a legislative measure, as well as inconsistent with our "free banking" system.

Sixth. The raising the cost of the supervision of banks from the present salary of an efficient, single comptroller of the currency to a board of control consisting of three members at an expense of $22,500 is not justified by any change of method made or new obligations imposed in that department of the Treasury.

Seventh. The bill, instead of being accepted, will be resisted by all the banks whom the bill claims to benefit in compelling country banks to submit to a sufficient amount of taxation to raise a fund of $130,000,000 to redeem and cancel that amount of United States notes, while practically excusing the city banks from such taxation.

Eighth. Finally, the bill in no way improves, but makes more onerous, the indirect taxation in excessive discount rates and cost upon the country people, who are least able to bear it and who are now most heavily and unjustly taxed in the present system.

THREE COMPTROLLERS.

More in detail I have to observe that to appoint three Comptrollers of the Currency to discharge the duties now discharged by one would introduce confusion and uncertainty and additional expense into the management of that department, besides the great increase of expense in salaries. It is contrary to the whole trend of the present system of executive control in that department of the Government, dividing and making impossible the fixing of responsibility.

$65,000,000 OF GOLD PAID OUT.

To provide that $65,000,000 of the gold now in the Treasury should be paid out in comparatively small sums covering a period of many years in redemption of United States notes, and before a change in the present system is consummated, is contrary to good business management. If the people are to be taxed directly or indirectly in sufficient sums to redeem and cancel United States notes, the same should be collected before any of the notes are canceled and the notes canceled at one time, instead of in the manner proposed in the bill.

COUNTRY BANKS TAXED $130,000,000 TO REDEEM GREENBACKS.

In view of the fact that banks in large cities can not use currency notes to any appreciable extent, this bill may be fairly denominated a bill to compel country banks to be at the risk and expense of maintaining the parity of all legal-tender and bank money and to submit to a sufficient taxation to redeem and cancel $130,000,000 of United States legal-tender notes for which there is no demand from the people.

COUNTRY BANKS TAXED—CITY BANKS NOT TAXED.

Furthermore, the provision for restricting banks to the issue of currency to an amount not exceeding 10 per cent of its capital in one year at a tax of one-eighth of 1 per cent, an additional 10 per cent in two years at five-eighths per cent, 10 per cent each succeeding year for three years at five-eighths per cent, 20 per cent after the sixth year at 1¼ per cent, and 20 per cent after seven years, taxed at 2½ per cent, is a freak proposition, as bank circulating notes are identical to the receiver of them with a credit in his favor written on the books of the bank and as currency is practically a certificate of deposit used by patrons of banks in the country, instead of the credit written on the books of the bank in favor of the bank customers in cities. This tax has no more justification than the same tax on deposits would have. It becomes an onerous and oppressive tax on farmers in country districts in discrimination against them as compared with the borrowers of funds living in cities.

THE PEOPLE'S MONEY LOANED TO BANKS AT 1 PER CENT.

Neither can the provision of this bill for the National Treasury to make loans to banks of the taxes collected from the people at the rate of 1 per cent interest per annum, while the people are expected to pay from 4 to 12 per cent on this same money when borrowed from the banks, justify itself to the people.

5 PER CENT SAFETY FUND FROM COUNTRY BANKS—NONE FROM CITY BANKS.

Neither has the provision requiring banks to deposit a safety fund equal to 5 per cent of the currency they take out any more justification than to require the same deposit of 5 per cent from a bank on all deposits of its customers written on its books. In fact, the bill from beginning to end makes sharp and oppressive discriminations against borrowers from banks whose business requires them to use bank circulating notes, in favor of those who use deposits and their own checks. This bill imposes on currency in country districts enormous tax rates that would increase the rates of discount on loans made to persons using currency of from 1 to 3 per cent above that of those who do their business with checks instead of bank circulating notes.

TERRITORIAL CLEARING HOUSE AND REDEMPTION DISTRICTS BAD.

Again, to divide the country into territorial clearing-house districts is one of the most clumsy, unreasonable, and uneconomic provisions that could be introduced into our banking system.

The dividing of the country territorially into post-office districts, and forbidding letters to be sent across the line of one district into another until they had first been sent to some city in the given territory, would be just as reasonable, and no more so, than this provision with reference to the current redemption of bank circulating notes. The fixing of the points at which notes shall be collected to be redeemed should be as free to be agreed upon and easy of change as the various places designated for collecting and distributing mail matter in the present postage system of the country. Nothing in experience or reason justifies such a provision.

BANKS CAN NOT PAY OUT CERTAIN MONEY.

The provision forbidding banks to pay out over their own counter notes issued by banks situated in other districts is liable to intensify, or even create, a panic in times of great stringency.

CAN NOT ISSUE PAPER MONEY UNDER $10.

Neither is there any justification for forbidding banks to issue circulating notes of a denomination less than $10. The people who use bank-note currency can not do so freely unless a very large proportion of it is in bills of a less denomination than $10. The reason given for this provision, that it is to make it impossible for silver certificates to be collected and presented to the Treasury, directly or indirectly, for gold redemption, is not justified by existing facts.

SILVER CERTIFICATES USED TO GET GOLD.

The universal custom of all traders is to deposit in banks all moneys they collect each day. All the silver certificates outstanding will average to be deposited every few days in the banks, by whom they can be readily collected and presented to the Treasury to demand gold. Under this bill the statement that the banks can not do so because they must have these silver certificates of denominations of less than $10 to use is not conclusive. Until human nature is very much changed from what it is to-day, if there is a desire upon the part of banks to secure gold, they will take any money that comes within their reach upon which they can demand gold, with little regard to the interest or convenience of anyone else, and of $900,000,000 of silver in circulation, it seems an exceedingly unreasonable belief that one or two hundred millions of it can not be almost immediately collected from the banks in which traders make their deposits every morning to get gold from the United States Treasury.

A BILL OF WHIMS, THEORIES, AND SPECULATIONS.

In fact, the bill bears evidence, from first to last, of being the embodiment of whims, theories, speculations, and unjustifiable propositions invented by its framers, rather than the result of a careful study of Treasury and banking principles and universal practice.

THE BILL WOULD FURTHER EMBARRASS THE TREASURY.

If enacted into law, it would be a very positive and serious injury and no possible help to the present Treasury and banking system of the country. It continues and still further violates the whole theory of the relation of the United States Treasury to the banks held for two-thirds of a century, which is that it should be entirely independent in every respect from the banks. For thirty years legislation has more and more involved the Treasury with banks, making it practically responsible for them and subject to the loss of millions upon millions of dollars collected in taxes from the hard earnings of the people.

INVOLVES THE TREASURY WITH BANKS.

The Treasury has been repeatedly compelled to sell bonds when it did not need the proceeds of the sale in order to discharge the duties that normally belong to banks and which are performed by banks in every other country, and this bill will still further aggravate that situation.

MAKES MAINTAINING OF PARITY MORE DIFFICULT.

Instead of in any way relieving the United States Treasury from the responsibility, as the bill is declared to do in the statement of the majority, it still further involves the Treasury with the banks and makes it more difficult for the Treasury to perform the abnormal duties now forced upon it of maintaining the parity of all lawful money without in any way being legally entitled to the assistance of the banks.

IN THE INTEREST OF A FEW BANKS.

In fact, I can see no way in which the enactment of this bill is to benefit the United States Treasury or the people or anybody, but is in the interest of a few banks who each have millions of assets.

Finally, it would render the present conditions and inequalities more onerous than they now are—in fact, would make the bad conditions of the present worse instead of mending them.

Please get the Hearings and Arguments before the Committee on Banking and Currency, had in March, this year, where you will find the whole question discussed in a pamphlet of 111 pages, covering the whole ground of the Fowler bill.

Very truly, yours,

J. H. WALKER.

Hon. SAMUEL W. McCALL, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the pending section and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to know whether at this time it would be in order to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] and the amendment to that amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The CHAIRMAN. After the pending motion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is disposed of it will be in order, as the Chair understands, to offer a substitute.

Mr. COCHRAN. I did not understand the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that all debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HILL. This will not preclude the offering of other amendments. They may come in, but can not be debated.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not understand that a motion for the previous question is in order. That is what this motion amounts to, though it is not stated in that way. I submit that the only motion now in order is with reference to the pending amendments. It is probably in order to move to close debate on the pending amendments—at least I make no point of order against so much of the motion; but I do make the point of order that the motion as made is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be unfortunate that there is only one section of the bill [laughter]; but the motion to close debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto is, in the judgment of the Chair, in order.

Mr. COCHRAN. But can the gentleman by such a motion preclude debate on other amendments to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] the Chair will have the Clerk read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

Mr. COCHRAN. I can not see how any construction of that rule would preclude debate on subsequent amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. It is so stated in express terms.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say a few words upon this motion.

Mr. HILL. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut has been recognized.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is not this a debatable motion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. 8752) authorizing the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz County, Ariz., to issue bonds for the erection of a court-house and jail for said county.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 45.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 173) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo, the same matter having been included in the omnibus claims bill (H. R. 8587), approved by the President May 27, 1902.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COINAGE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. After the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut prevails, and that the pending amendments have been adopted or rejected, if then other amendments to this section are presented, will it be out of the power of the House to debate those amendments? Will the gentleman answer that question?

The CHAIRMAN. It certainly will.

Mr. HILL. The Chair has answered the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from Nevada was addressing the parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. At the expiration of ten minutes after the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut it would be out of order to indulge in further debate on any amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask, then, whether it is the purpose of the gentleman's motion to accomplish that result?

Mr. HILL. I will state frankly that it is. The purpose is to have ten minutes more of debate on this bill and all amendments, and then to come to a vote.

Mr. COCHRAN. I should like to have the gentleman's motion stated again.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Connecticut is that all debate upon the pending section and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by substituting two hours.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut that all debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes by substituting therefor a motion that it be closed in two hours. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 77, noes 96.

Mr. COCHRAN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut to close debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto in ten minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHAFROTH) there were—ayes 90, noes 87.

Mr. COCHRAN. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 76.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for five minutes and the gentleman from Missouri is recognized for the remaining five minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Under the order, as it has been adopted here, I would inquire whether we are compelled to present any new amendments before the ten minutes expire or are we compelled to wait until each amendment is voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. They will have to be presented as they would be ordinarily.

Mr. SHAFROTH. After an amendment has been voted down or agreed to then present another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. After the debate is closed or during the debate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I claim the privilege of the last five minutes instead of the first. Is that not in order? I have a right to close debate, have I not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] having the affirmative of the proposition is entitled to close debate. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether he will allow me one minute of his time?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I will when my time comes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, what was the ruling of the Chair as to closing the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman from Connecticut, having the affirmative of the proposition, is entitled to the last five minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri, having the negative of the proposition, is recognized.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the proposition pending is on the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], of which we hold the affirmative.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The amendment was offered by the gentleman from Nevada, and we unquestionably have the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Missouri is right. The Chair was of the opinion that the question was on the final vote in committee on the bill. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Nevada.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada is recognized for one minute.

[Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, we are about to vote on a plain, straightforward business proposition, in which no politics is involved, and no political question should be raised concerning it.

It is simply to supply a deficiency in the volume of our subsidiary coin; simply that and nothing more. There are two amendments pending, one by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] providing for and making a new kind of subsidiary coin. That amendment, if carried to its logical effect, would cost the United States Government $1,000,000 for recoining the existing subsidiary coin, and would reduce the volume, instead of increasing it, $7,000,000, which would make an expense to the United States Government of $8,000,000. I do not believe it is worth any such expenditure, although uniformity rather than lack of uniformity would be desirable.

So far as the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada is concerned, he proposes to take such subsidiary coin as is recoined in the future, as public interests require, from the legal-tender dollar and give it a full legal-tender quality, which even the dollar itself does not now possess. And not only that, but it would make two kinds of subsidiary coin, for your halves and your quarters which you found in your pockets, one of them might possibly be full legal tender and the other would be subsidiary, and it would not be in the power of any human being to distinguish between the two unless different symbols or emblems were stamped upon them; and the moment you do that you double your liability to counterfeiting. So it seems to me the thing we ought to do is to vote straight for the bill, just as the Treasury Department officials, over the signature of the Director of the Mint, Mr. Roberts, and the signature of the Secretary of the Treasury, ask that the bill be passed, and vote down all amendments.

I yield back the balance of my time, and ask for a vote as soon as the other side shall have exhausted their time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that the assistant treasurer at New York, Mr. Muhleman, has sent a communication to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in which he condemns this feature of your bill?

Mr. HILL. I have no knowledge of any such fact.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I will ask the gentleman to turn to the hearings before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, at page 58, where he will find such a communication.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield any further. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I do not decline to yield because of anything that is there. I have submitted to the House the written opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint, written within two months.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, and here is a statement from the assistant treasurer at New York, Mr. Muhleman, condemning this legislation, and he is the best writer on your side of the subject to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HILL. Let them show it in their own time.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. I reserve the balance of my time until they get through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute remaining.

Mr. HILL. I reserve it.

Mr. KLUTTZ. The gentleman declines to yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I do not blame him.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not at all surprised that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has arrived at the conclusion that the time has been reached when this debate should close. The gentleman from Connecticut has occupied an hour and three minutes and a half in presenting his views upon this measure, and when the financial oracle of the Republican side of the House has talked in that paternal way to his fellows on a financial measure, who shall dare say that it lies within the bounds of human genius to add a syllable to the flood of wisdom poured out upon the House by the great doctor of finance from Connecticut?

By the suppression of debate upon this measure the House of Representatives again exposes itself to the country as a branch of the Government which is gradually sinking beneath the level of the contempt of the people. We are going to send this bill over to the Senate to be pruned of features never dreamed of outside of the fertile brain of the gentleman who just addressed the House [Mr. HILL]. The gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber know that this will be done; otherwise many of them would not vote for it.

Every important piece of legislation that has been enacted in this country since I became a member of this body has been treated in the same manner by the majority in this Chamber. The most important measures enacted by the Congress during the past few years, ostensibly originating in the House, have been thrown together by mediocrity and incompetency on that side of the Chamber, rushed through here without debate or the right of amendment, and sent to the Senate, there to be formulated into laws. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Under the Constitution the House of Representatives originates money bills. In the exercise of this great power how do you formulate money bills? You do it with the distinct understanding that in the end the Senate will review your work and correct your blunders. Everything you do is revised in the Senate. Every measure of importance brought into this Chamber by the leaders of the majority is disposed of under whip and spur, regardless of its crudities, because the Senate may be relied upon to edit, revise, and perfect it. We proceed under rules which shut off amendment, shut off debate, and thus deprive the minority of any voice in legislation. Every day the majority in this Chamber thus makes confession of its incompetency to formulate legislation. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] The House formulates certain bills by virtue of the mandate of the Constitution. Read in the history of this class of legislation the story of your shame.

Go look at any one of them as it left your hands within the past five years, and then look at it as it appears on the statute books, and read there the fact of the contemptible figure cut by the majority of this House in the affairs of this Government.

Shame upon a legislative body that is content to go on as we do. The Committee on Rules meets out here somewhere, and over good Habana cigars discusses what you ought to do, and what you ought not to do. Who compose the Committee on Rules? Do the gentlemen on that committee bear credentials differing from yours and mine.

Who authorizes three men to say what shall be debated and what shall not be debated and how long measures of importance shall be debated in this House? The Republicans on this floor, who by their conduct abdicate their functions as individuals and collectively consent to the elimination of the House of Representatives as an effective branch of the Congress. Go home to your constituents and, if you can, make a sufficient apology for having thus emasculated the people's branch of the Legislature. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Furthermore——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I decline to yield to the gentleman. For once, to prevent the exhaustion of the short time at my disposal, I avail myself of the refuge of the gentleman from Connecticut, who, after having perverted the hearings on this bill before his own committee, after having recklessly made this assertion and that assertion, when called to book half a dozen times, to escape the pillory, declined to be further interrupted.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is that what you are trying to do?

Mr. COCHRAN (continuing). I do not wonder that the gentleman insists upon interruptions, and seeks to prevent me from having even the poor little five minutes at my disposal. After you have adopted this wretched measure here you know it will not become a law. A Senate will amend it, perhaps there will be a conference committee, and in the end you will gulp it down without thought or consideration, just as you are gulping it down to-day without thought or consideration. The House has constitutional prerogatives, has it? Money bills originate in the House—revenue bills originate in this House! Oh, yes, they originate here!

The committee meets. The majority of the committee meets, formulates the bill, barring the minority out of any substantial participation in the proceeding. The measure is shown to the minority and then reported to the House. The measure is refuted. Then the Committee on Rules has an inning. This triumvirate of parliamentary dictators brings in a rule saying how long the measure shall be debated and prohibiting the right of amendment. What if the measure be crude and ill-drawn? This gives the statesmen on the other side no concern. Wholly indifferent to the dignity of the House, utterly insensible of personal responsibility, they rush it through and say: "Oh, well; it may not be right now, but it will be made all right in the Senate." What apology have you for existence, anyhow? [Laughter and loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I yield the remaining half minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was at one time a member of a Democratic House of Representatives. It was a very able body. It had in its members such men as Wilson, of West Virginia; Blount and Turner, of Georgia; Carlisle, and so on and so forth. They commenced operations in December, and some time during the next summer, after laboring and struggling for months, made a money bill called a tariff bill. They sent it over to the Senate as nearly perfect as possible——

Mr. COCHRAN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). For Democrats to make it——

Mr. COCHRAN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And it came back here with 600 amendments.

Mr. COCHRAN. A point of order. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the point of order?

Mr. COCHRAN. I call the gentleman from Ohio to order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the point of order? I want to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Your time has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The point of order has not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Reporter seems still to be reporting the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have a right to know what the point of order is. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. That the time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has a member on the floor the right to make that point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had already announced the fact when the point of order was made.

The gentleman from Texas offers the following substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "and thereafter as public necessity may demand to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin," in lines 7, 8, and 9; strike out the words "and so much of any acts as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars," in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Texas that the matter he has set out is not a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is a distinct amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. It is designed as a substitute for both the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment contains a provision directly antagonistic to the remaining portion of the bill, which the gentleman leaves in.

Mr. LANHAM. It is entirely consistent with the bill and with the object as defined in its title and in keeping with the recommendations of the officers of the Treasury Department. It wholly disconnects the matter of the present legal-tender quality of the standard silver dollar from any place in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the gentleman's proposition, it involves striking out two lines or three lines of the bill above the point where the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes in, and therefore embodies more than the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania includes, and it is not a substitute, but is a different amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. The design of it is to include both of the amendments. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the parliamentary status of the bill, it is this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania offered the following amendment:

After the word "coin," in line 9, add "provided the subsidiary coin shall be one-half dollar, quarter dollar, 10-cent, and 5-cent pieces. Each of the aforesaid pieces shall be the aliquot part of a dollar of 412½ grains.

To which amendment an amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Nevada, as follows:

Add to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the following words: "which shall be full legal tender for all debts, public and private."

Now, I propose as a substitute for this amendment and the amendment to the original amendment what I have sent to the Clerk's desk, which simply eliminates from the bill the words indicated; and the bill will read, if this substitute should be adopted, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet the public requirement, and so much of any act as fixes the limit and aggregate of subsidiary silver coin is hereby repealed.

That would be a plain and simple bill, responsive to the demand of the situation, and, I believe, if offered in that shape would not receive a dissenting vote on either side of the House. It omits entirely the question of the legal-tender quality of the outstanding silver dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment may be in order when the other two are disposed of. The gentleman from Texas offers it as a substitute for the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and includes therein the striking out of a considerable portion of the bill which is not in the least affected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LANHAM. May I ask a question of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas proposes, as a substitute for a motion to insert, a provision with a motion to strike out of the bill. The Chair thinks, while the amendment might be in order after the pending amendments are disposed of, it is clear that it is not a substitute to the amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. I shall be content if the Chair will recognize me afterwards to offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the pending amendments are disposed of.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, a vote will have to be first taken on the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Nevada and myself before there there can be another amendment offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the following: "which shall be full legal tender for all debts, public and private."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NEWLANDS) there were 70 ayes and 92 noes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. HILL and Mr. COCHRAN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported 67 ayes and 90 noes.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. I offer now the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "and thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin," in lines 7, 8, and 9; and also strike out the words "and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars," in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13.

So that as amended the bill will read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding is hereby repealed.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LANHAM, it was rejected; there being ayes 54, noes 88.

Mr. COCHRAN. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out everything after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"After having coined or set aside for future coinage into standard silver dollars an amount of the silver bullion now in the Treasury to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, in accordance with the provisions of said act, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion remaining in the Treasury into subsidiary silver coin of such denominations as he may deem necessary to meet the public requirements."

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. COCHRAN was rejected.

Mr. COCHRAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "requirements," in line 7.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, that is not—— [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let the amendment be again read. How will the bill read if the amendment be adopted?

Mr. COCHRAN. The amendment simply eliminates the provision for recoinage—— [Cries of "Order!"]

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 52, noes 71.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:
"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin into subsidiary silver coin all the silver seniorage now in the Treasury, or which may hereafter accrue, or so much thereof as he in his discretion may deem necessary to meet public requirements."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman—— [Cries of "Order!"]

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee was rejected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 7, 8, and 9, after the word "requirements," the following:
"And thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin."

Mr. COCHRAN. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. My point of order is that this amendment is a repetition of two amendments already offered and voted down.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that all debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] makes the point of order that this amendment is a repetition of amendments already offered and voted down. Does the gentleman claim that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is identical in language with an amendment already offered and voted upon?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is identical with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], and it is identical in effect with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri who is now addressing the House.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, the Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] does not affect the last four or five lines of the bill, which the gentleman from Texas proposed to strike out.

Mr. COCHRAN. I withdraw the point of order. I made it for the purpose of holding up in the presence of the country—— [Cries of "Order!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SUTHERLAND, it was rejected; there being—ayes 60, noes 81.

Mr. CANDLER. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between the word "into," in the fifth line, and the word "such," in the sixth line, the words "standard silver dollars and;" and by striking out all the words in the bill after the word "requirements," in the seventh line, except the words "and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver outstanding is hereby repealed."

So that, if thus amended, the bill will read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars and such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding is hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the end of the section: "All subsidiary silver coin heretofore or hereafter coined shall be of full legal tender for all debts, public and private."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12704, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its passage.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 78, answered "present" 22, not voting 143; as follows:

YEAS—108.

Adams,	Dahle,	Hull,	Olmsted,
Alexander,	Dalzell,	Jack,	Otjen,
Allen, Me.	Douglas,	Jenkins,	Overstreet,
Ball, Del.	Draper,	Jones, Wash.	Parker,
Barney,	Elliott,	Kahn,	Patterson, Pa.
Bartholdt,	Esch,	Knapp,	Payne,
Bishop,	Evans,	Lacey,	Pearre,
Blackburn,	Fitzgerald,	Lawrence,	Perkins,
Boutell,	Fletcher,	Lessler,	Prince,
Bowersock,	Foster, Vt.	Littlefield,	Ray, N. Y.
Brick,	Fowler,	Loud,	Roberts,
Bromwell,	Gaines, W. Va.	McCall,	Rumple,
Brown,	Gardner, Mich.	McCleary,	Schirm,
Burleigh,	Gillet, N. Y.	McClellan,	Smith, Ill.
Burton,	Graff,	McLachlan,	Southwick,
Butler, Pa.	Greene, Mass.	Mann,	Sperry,
Cannon,	Grosvenor,	Martin,	Stevens, Minn.
Capron,	Grow,	Mercer,	Sulloway,
Cassel,	Hamilton,	Minor,	Sutherland,
Connell,	Hanbury,	Mondell,	Tawney,
Conner,	Haugen,	Moody, N. C.	Thomas, Iowa
Corliss,	Heatwole,	Moody, Oreg.	Tirrell,
Cousins,	Hemenway,	Morgan,	Tongue,
Cromer,	Henry, Conn.	Morrell,	Wachter,
Crumpacker,	Hepburn,	Morris,	Warner,
Currier,	Hill,	Mudd,	Weeks,
Cushman,	Howell,	Needham,	Wilson.

NAYS—78.

Bankhead,	Feely,	Little,	Ryan,
Bartlett,	Finley,	Livingston,	Scarborough,
Bell,	Glenn,	Lloyd,	Shackleford,
Bowie,	Green, Pa.	McAndrews,	Shafroth,
Brantley,	Griffith,	McCulloch,	Smith, Ky.
Breazeale,	Griggs,	McLain,	Sparkman,
Broussard,	Henry, Miss.	McRae,	Spight,
Brundidge,	Howard,	Maddox,	Stark,
Burgess,	Jackson, Kans.	Mahoney,	Swanson,
Burleson,	Jett,	Mickey,	Tate,
Burnett,	Jones, Va.	Neville,	Thompson,
Caldwell,	Kehoe,	Newlands,	Underwood,
Candler,	Kitchin, Claude	Patterson, Tenn.	Vandiver,
Clayton,	Kleberg,	Pou,	Williams, Ill.
Cochran,	Kluttz,	Randell, Tex.	Williams, Miss.
Cooney,	Lamb,	Ransdell, La.	Woods,
Cowherd,	Lanham,	Reid,	Wooten,
Davis, Fla.	Latimer,	Rhea, Va.	Zenor.
De Armond,	Lever,	Richardson, Tenn.
Dinsmore,	Lewis, Ga.	Robinson, Nebr.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—22.

Cassingham,	Gilbert,	Meyer, La.	Smith, Iowa
Clark,	Hall,	Miers, Ind.	Steele,
Conry,	Hay,	Pierce,	Stephens, Tex.
Gaines, Tenn.	Irwin,	Rixey,	Wheeler.
Gardner, N. J.	Johnson,	Robinson, Ind.
Gibson,	Maynard,	Ruppert,

NOT VOTING—143.

Acheson,	Dovener,	Lester,	Sherman,
Adamson,	Driscoll,	Lewis, Pa.	Showalter,
Allen, Ky.	Eddy,	Lindsay,	Sibley,
Aplin,	Edwards,	Littauer,	Sims,
Babcock,	Emerson,	Long,	Skiles,
Ball, Tex.	Fleming,	Loudenslager,	Slayden,
Bates,	Flood,	Lovering,	Small,
Beidler,	Foerderer,	McDermott,	Smith, H. C.
Bellamy,	Fordney,	Mahon,	Smith, S. W.
Belmont,	Foss,	Marshall,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Benton,	Foster, Ill.	Metcalf,	Snodgrass,
Bingham,	Fox,	Miller,	Snook,
Blakeney,	Gill,	Moon,	Southard,
Boreing,	Gillett, Mass.	Moss,	Stewart, N. J.
Bristow,	Goldfogle,	Mutchler,	Stewart, N. Y.
Brownlow,	Gooch,	Naphen,	Storm,
Bull,	Gordon,	Nevin,	Sulzer,
Burk, Pa.	Graham,	Norton,	Talbert,
Burke, S. Dak.	Haskins,	Padgett,	Tayler, Ohio
Burkett,	Hedge,	Palmer,	Taylor, Ala.
Butler, Mo.	Henry, Tex.	Powers, Me.	Thayer,
Calderhead,	Hildebrant,	Powers, Mass.	Thomas, N. C.
Coombs,	Hitt,	Pugsley,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Cooper, Tex.	Holliday,	Reeder,	Tompkins, Ohio
Cooper, Wis.	Hooker,	Reeves,	Trimble,
Creamer,	Hopkins,	Richardson, Ala.	Van Voorhis,
Crowley,	Hughes,	Robb,	Vreeland,
Curtis,	Jackson, Md.	Robertson, La.	Wadsworth,
Darragh,	Joy,	Rucker,	Wanger,
Davey, La.	Kern,	Russell,	Warnock,
Davidson,	Ketcham,	Scott,	Watson,
Dayton,	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Selby,	White,
De Graffenreid,	Knox,	Shallenberger,	Wiley,
Deemer,	Kyle,	Shattuc,	Wright,
Dick,	Landis,	Shelden,	Young.
Dougherty,	Lassiter,	Sheppard,

The following pairs were announced:
For the session:
Mr. DEEMER with Mr. MUTCHLER.
Mr. COOMBS with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.
Mr. METCALF with Mr. WHEELER.
Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.
Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RUPPERT.
Mr. HILDEBRANT with Mr. MAYNARD.
Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.
Mr. BOREING with Mr. TRIMBLE.

Mr. BULL with Mr. CROWLEY.
Until further notice:
Mr. FOSS with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.
Mr. IRWIN with Mr. GOOCH.
Mr. LONG with Mr. HENRY of Texas.
Mr. EMERSON with Mr. GILBERT.
Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.
Mr. DAYTON with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.
Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. SLAYDEN.
Mr. GILL with Mr. ROBB.
Mr. BURKETT with Mr. SHALLENBERGER.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. CASSINGHAM.
Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. NAPHEN.
Mr. LOVERING with Mr. CONRY.
Mr. HASKINS with Mr. JOHNSON.
Mr. CURTIS with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.
Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. CREAMER.
Mr. POWERS of Maine with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.
Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. SNODGRASS.
Mr. REEDER with Mr. WHITE.
Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. FOX.
Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey with Mr. MOON.
Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. PIERCE.
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.
Mr. GORDON with Mr. SCOTT.
Mr. HOLLIDAY with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.
Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. PADGETT.
Mr. SKILES with Mr. TALBERT.
Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON.
Mr. STEELE with Mr. COOPER of Texas.
Mr. LANDIS with Mr. CLARK.
Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.
For ten days:
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.
Mr. MILLER with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.
For one week:
Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.
Mr. BEIDLER with Mr. HOOKER.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. DOUGHERTY.
Mr. GIBSON with Mr. SIMS.
Mr. BATES with Mr. BELLAMY.
For the 28th and 29th:
Mr. VREELAND with Mr. SULZER.
For the 29th:
Mr. EVANS with Mr. JONES of Virginia.
For this day:
Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania with Mr. SELBY.
Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts with Mr. PUGSLEY.
Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. RIXEY.
Mr. JACKSON of Maryland with Mr. SHEPPARD.
Mr. DOVENER with Mr. LESTER.
Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.
Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania with Mr. BELMONT.
Mr. WARNOCK with Mr. KERN.
Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. LASSITER.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.
Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. FLOOD.
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. FLEMING.
Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. EDWARDS.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. BUTLER of Missouri.
Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. MCDERMOTT.
Mr. FORDERER with Mr. LINDSAY.
Mr. HEDGE with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.
Mr. JOY with Mr. RUCKER.
Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. SMALL.
Mr. MAHON with Mr. WILEY.
Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. SNOOK.
For the vote:
Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. THAYER.
Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. HAY.
Mr. DICK with Mr. BALL of Texas.
For this bill:
Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. FOSTER of Illinois.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my negative vote and to be recorded "present," as I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY]. I voted "no," and I wish to withdraw my vote and to be recorded "present."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I find I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH]. I voted "no," and I desire to withdraw my vote and to be recorded "present."

Mr. PIERCE. My colleague [Mr. BROWNLOW] has just telegraphed me that he is too ill to be in the House, although he is in the city. Therefore, I withdraw my vote, having voted "no," and answer "present."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] voted.

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. CLARK. Then I want to change my vote from "no" to "present."

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I find I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. I voted "aye," and I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, with instructions to report immediately the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves to recommit the bill with the following instructions; which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit with instructions to report the following bill:

"A bill to increase the subsidiary silver coinage.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding, and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, is hereby repealed."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the explanation of this bill two minutes be allowed.

Mr. HILL. I ask the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HILL demanded a division.

Pending the division,

Mr. CANNON said: Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered and that two minutes be allowed to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. HILL. I yield to that, of course.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered and that the gentleman from Colorado have two minutes to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection. [Applause.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, the motion to recommit provides that the committee shall report the bill with the following words stricken out: "and thereafter, as necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin."

That will permit all the bullion in the Treasury, amounting to $50,000,000, to be coined into subsidiary coin, which is sufficient for at least a generation, and at the same time it will prevent the melting down of full legal-tender dollars into limited legal-tender money.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] claims that because Director Roberts approves his bill that therefore it meets with the approval of the Administration. Such a recommendation is not contained in the Treasury report, and that is where we find the views of the Administration as to money matters.

I want to call the attention of the House to the views of Mr. Muhleman, the assistant treasurer at the subtreasury at New York City, relative to this bill. Mr. Muhleman is a gold-standard man, and is one of the ablest writers on finance in this country. On page 58 of the hearings before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures he says:

Recurring now to the table, it will be observed that it is not likely, with dollars in circulation, that the per capita use of subsidiary coin could be increased beyond $1.15. The ultimate supply of such coin contemplated by this bill would be ample for a population of 150,000,000, a number which we hardly expect to reach within forty years. If the law is mandatory, so that the subsidiary coinage must be continuous, the Treasury would before long find itself, as in the period between 1881 and 1891, loaded with this coin returned to it. Aside from its very limited availability for payments, which for a number of years caused the Treasury considerable embarrassment, this would entail great labor and expense in handling.

Upon the whole, while the policy of further limiting the coinage of standard dollars is entirely justifiable and it is advisable to increase the supply of subsidiary coin, I much prefer the provisions of the existing law. The determination of a fixed sum of dollars may be desirable, but the general and important object (contained in the second paragraph) can be accomplished without cutting off the coinage.

Here is not only doubt, but condemnation of the policy of melting down silver dollars for subsidiary coins. I will now read another paragraph from the same page:

The question arises, Will the policy of suspending the coinage of dollars prove satisfactory? That they serve a distinct purpose in the crop movements, especially in the South, is manifested by the annual expansion of the volume in use between July 1 and December 31, which, in the very busy half year just closed, amounted to nearly $10,000,000.

It is true that, to a certain extent, half dollars could and would be used in lieu of the dollars, but not to anything like the full extent of the amount of the larger pieces now out. There would remain a demand for silver dollars which $50,000,000 would hardly cover, and this demand should be reasonably provided for.

It will be noticed that he condemns the policy of even stopping the coinage of silver dollars until the Treasury notes outstanding are retired by their issue.

Although you may not take our views on money, will you not at least heed the admonitions of one of the most experienced officers of the Treasury Department?

The truth of the matter is the increase in the subsidiary coins to $100,000,000, authorized last Congress, is sufficient to meet the demands of commerce until we attain a population of 100,000,000.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] contends that we ought to absorb as much subsidiary coin as England and other European countries, but anyone familiar with conditions there and here ought to see why we will not.

The transactions in retail commerce in Europe are very small compared to those in the United States. Hence the one and two dollar bills constitute the large part of our change money, and they amount now in the United States to $111,000,000. These small bills have been increased in the last four years over $30,000,000, and I have no doubt that increase has decreased the demand for subsidiary coins; so that to-day there is in the Treasury $12,762,028 of subsidiary coin for which there is no demand, although the Government pays the transportation charges when such money is wanted.

The nations of Europe generally have no small bills, and hence subsidiary coins are forced on the people. Thus there is no paper money of England less than a £5 note, or $25; the balance of their money is gold, which is coined in denominations of, I think, not less than £1, or $5, and silver subsidiary coins. One can readily see from these facts why a large amount of subsidiary coin is required in such a country. But we do not want such a condition here. The people demand the convenient one and two dollar bills and will have them.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] contends that the silver dollars will not circulate, but he must admit that the representatives of the silver dollar—the silver certificates—do circulate better than any other currency in this country.

The Treasury statement of this morning shows that there are $456,391,000 silver certificates outstanding, while only $7,488,244 are in the Treasury. There are $345,917,089 gold certificates outstanding, while $37,375,370 find their way and remain in the Treasury. The same statement shows that there are $57,656,853 in gold coin, above the gold reserve, in the Treasury. This statement shows that neither gold nor silver coins circulate freely, but the gold and silver certificates do, and it would be an outrage to destroy the one and two dollar silver certificates in order to melt the silver into subsidiary coin. Yet that is exactly what the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] proposes to do. In his speech of yesterday, he used the following language:

> What I would do, if I had the power, would be to abolish the silver certificates, except the five-dollar denomination, withdrawing all legal-tender silver dollars and lock them up in the Treasury against the five-dollar certificates, recoining the dollar piece as a token dollar, with limited tender qualities for such dollar pieces as we needed for circulation, and holding the balance as a silver-bullion fund to be used for subsidiary.
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> We would then have $173,497,222 of subsidiary coin and 102,946,773 of silver dollars in actual circulation, and $408,897,008 locked up in the Treasury.

Is it possible that the American people will tolerate such hazardous tinkering with the currency?

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] on yesterday claimed that the only compromise on the gold-standard bill of last Congress was the insertion of the declaration for international bimetallism. I tried at that time to show by the House bill and Senate substitute on that measure the incorrectness of his position, but he would not yield for the interruption.

The record shows that section 5 of the House bill gave the Secretary of the Treasury the power to coin any silver bullion in the Treasury into subsidiary coin. That, according to my contention, gave the Secretary power to stop the coinage of silver dollars if he deemed the bullion necessary for subsidiary coinage.

The silver Senators in the Senate who voted for the bill and who held the balance of power at that time in the Senate and on the Finance Committee, evidently so believed, because they amended the bill by limiting the coinage of subsidiary coin to $20,000,000 and inserted section 3 which reaffirmed the provisions requiring the coinage of $1,500,000 in silver dollars per month and directing the retirement of a like amount of Treasury notes. These provisions evidently constituted the main inducement for these silver Senators to vote for the bill and they were embodied in the bill as passed.

Now, I ask, having made a compromise in legislation, Is it fair, before the moving consideration could be realized on one side, that a repeal of that part of the act should be made?

Is it right that, having gotten through legislation by concession as to the coinage of silver dollars, that before the time elapsed in which the coinage could take place, the concession should be repealed?

Having obtained by that legislation the increase of the gold reserve to $150,000,000, the payment of the greenbacks in gold instead of coin, the right to issue bonds payable in gold, which you could never have obtained without the concession to coin silver dollars to the extent of the Treasury notes outstanding, I ask in all candor, Is it now right, in violation of that compromise, to repeal the moving consideration on one side which has not been complied with?

Mr. Speaker, it is unjust and unfair, and this bill ought to be defeated.

The motion to recommit eliminates one of the worst features of the bill, and I hope it will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Colorado, to recommit the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, with the instructions which have been read.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHAFROTH demanded a division.

Pending the division,

Mr. SHAFROTH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 99, answered "present" 23, not voting 143; as follows:

YEAS—86.

Ball, Tex.	Fitzgerald,	McClellan,	Scarborough,
Bankhead,	Glenn,	McCulloch,	Shackleford,
Bartlett,	Griffith,	McLain,	Shafroth,
Bowie,	Griggs,	McRae,	Small,
Brantley,	Henry, Miss.	Maddox,	Smith, Ky.
Breazeale,	Howard,	Mahoney,	Snook,
Brundidge,	Jackson, Kans.	Mann,	Sparkman,
Burgess,	Jett,	Martin,	Spight,
Burleson,	Jones, Va.	Mickey,	Stark,
Burnett,	Kehoe,	Mondell,	Sutherland,
Caldwell,	Kitchin, Claude	Neville,	Swanson,
Candler,	Kleberg,	Newlands,	Tate,
Clark,	Kluttz,	Patterson, Tenn.	Thompson,
Clayton,	Lamb,	Pou,	Underwood,
Cochran,	Lanham,	Randell, Tex.	Vandiver,
Cooney,	Latimer,	Ransdell, La.	Williams, Ill.
Cowherd,	Lever,	Reid,	Williams, Miss.
Davis, Fla.	Lewis, Ga.	Rhea, Va.	Wilson,
De Armond,	Little,	Richardson, Tenn.	Wooten,
Dinsmore,	Livingston,	Robinson, Nebr.	Zenor.
Feely,	Lloyd.	Rucker,
Finley,	McAndrews,	Ryan,

NAYS—99.

Adams,	Dahle,	Irwin,	Overstreet,
Alexander,	Dalzell,	Jack,	Parker,
Allen, Me.	Douglas,	Jenkins,	Patterson, Pa.
Ball, Del.	Draper,	Jones, Wash.	Payne,
Barney,	Eddy,	Joy,	Perkins,
Bartholdt,	Esch,	Kahn,	Prince,
Bishop,	Evans,	Knapp,	Ray, N. Y.
Blackburn,	Fletcher,	Lacey,	Reeves,
Boutell,	Foster, Vt.	Landis,	Roberts,
Bowersock,	Fowler,	Lawrence,	Rumple,
Brick,	Gardner, Mich.	Lessler,	Schirm,
Bromwell,	Gillet, N. Y.	Littlefield,	Smith, Ill.
Burleigh,	Graff,	Loud,	Southwick,
Butler, Pa.	Greene, Mass.	McCall,	Sperry,
Cannon,	Grosvenor,	McLachlan,	Stevens, Minn.
Capron,	Grow,	Mercer,	Sulloway,
Cassel,	Hamilton,	Metcalf,	Tawney,
Connell,	Hanbury,	Minor,	Thomas, Iowa
Conner,	Haugen,	Moody, N. C.	Tirrell,
Corliss,	Hemenway,	Moody, Oreg.	Vreeland,
Cousins,	Henry, Conn.	Morgan,	Wachter,
Cromer,	Hepburn,	Morris,	Warner,
Crumpacker,	Hill,	Mudd,	Weeks,
Currier,	Hitt,	Needham,	Woods.
Cushman,	Hull,	Olmsted,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—23.

Cassingham,	Green, Pa.	Miers, Ind.	Smith, Iowa
Conry,	Hall,	Otjen,	Steele,
Gaines, Tenn.	Hay,	Pierce,	Stephens, Tex.
Gardner, N. J.	Johnson,	Rixey,	Wanger,
Gibson,	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler.
Gilbert,	Maynard,	Ruppert,

NOT VOTING—143.

Acheson,	Broussard,	Curtis,	Flood,
Adamson,	Brown,	Darragh,	Foerderer,
Allen, Ky.	Brownlow,	Davey, La.	Fordney,
Aplin,	Bull,	Davidson,	Foss,
Babcock,	Burk, Pa.	Dayton,	Foster, Ill.
Bates,	Burke, S. Dak.	De Graffenreid,	Fox,
Beidler,	Burkett,	Deemer,	Gaines, W. Va.
Bell,	Burton,	Dick,	Gill,
Bellamy,	Butler, Mo.	Dougherty,	Gillett, Mass.
Belmont,	Calderhead,	Dovener,	Goldfogle,
Benton,	Coombs,	Driscoll,	Gooch,
Bingham,	Cooper, Tex.	Edwards,	Gordon,
Blakeney,	Cooper, Wis.	Elliott,	Graham,
Boreing,	Creamer,	Emerson,	Haskins,
Bristow,	Crowley,	Fleming,	Heatwole,

Hedge,	McCleary,	Robb,	Stewart, N. Y.
Henry, Tex.	McDermott,	Robertson, La.	Storm,
Hildebrant,	Mahon,	Russell,	Sulzer,
Holliday,	Marshall,	Scott,	Talbert,
Hooker,	Meyer, La.	Selby,	Tayler, Ohio
Hopkins,	Miller,	Shallenberger,	Taylor, Ala.
Howell,	Moon,	Shattuc,	Thayer,
Hughes,	Morrell,	Shelden,	Thomas, N. C.
Jackson, Md.	Moss,	Sheppard,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Kern,	Mutchler,	Sherman,	Tompkins, Ohio
Ketcham,	Naphen,	Showalter,	Tongue,
Knox,	Nevin,	Sibley,	Trimble,
Kyle,	Norton,	Sims,	Van Voorhis,
Lassiter,	Padgett,	Skiles,	Wadsworth,
Lester,	Palmer,	Slayden,	Warnock,
Lewis, Pa.	Pearre,	Smith, H. C.	Watson,
Lindsay,	Powers, Me.	Smith, S. W.	White,
Littauer,	Powers, Mass.	Smith, Wm. Alden	Wiley,
Long,	Pugsley,	Snodgrass,	Wright,
Loudenslager,	Reeder,	Southard,	Young.
Lovering,	Richardson, Ala.	Stewart, N. J.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I desire to change my vote and be marked "present," as I am paired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the affirmative. I wish to withdraw my vote, being paired, and be marked "present."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "yea" to "present." I am paired.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "yea" to "present." I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY].

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. MORRELL with Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania, for the session.

On this vote:

Mr. HOWELL with Mr. BELL.

Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. THAYER.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. GOOCH.

Mr. NEVIN with Mr. SULZER.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon the bill just passed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4616. An act to grant title to the town of Juneau, Alaska, of lands occupied for school purposes, and for other purposes;

S. 5505. An act adjusting certain conflicts respecting State school-indemnity selections in lieu of school sections in abandoned military reservations; and

S. R. 107. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of the proceedings at the unveiling of the statue of the Count de Rochambeau.

CONFERENCE BETWEEN SENATE AND HOUSE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was read:

Senate concurrent resolution 44.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee consisting of three Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate to meet with a committee of like number to be appointed by the House of Representatives, to confer upon the matter of the message of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12804) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908."

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Presiding Officer had appointed, as said committee on the part of the Senate, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. PETTUS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word about this matter. It will be recollected that the Army appropriation bill went to the Senate from the House and came back with sundry Senate amendments. The House disagreed to some of the Senate amendments and asked for a conference. The conferees were appointed. At the same time the House instructed its conferees not to agree to certain Senate amendments. The fact that the House had so instructed its conferees was contained in the message which went to the Senate announcing the agreement to the conference. The Senate for some reason or other seems to think that that practice is without precedent, and that it in some way or other affects the dignity of the Senate and puts the House in a false position in its relation to the Senate.

Under these circumstances, after discussing various methods of adjusting the matter, the Senate resolved, as the Clerk has just read, to appoint a committee to confer, not upon the disagreement between the two Houses as to the Army appropriation bill, but to confer as to the action of the House in sending over the message that it did, announcing that it had instructed the conferees as in the message contained.

Without expressing any opinion at all as to whether or not there was any necessity for such action on the part of the Senate, or as to the method adopted by them, under the circumstances it seems to me it would only be an act of courtesy upon our part to agree to the Senate resolution and appoint the committee to confer with their committee. I suppose the form of action on our part should be to assent to the Senate's request for the appointment of the committee and to appoint the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Senate has put it in the form of a concurrent resolution, so that if the resolution is adopted the committee will be appointed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the resolution again reported.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. It seems to me we ought to agree to the Senate resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand the resolution does not express any opinion. Some gentlemen on this side had an idea that the passing of the resolution prejudged the matter, but it does not; it asks for a conference. It does not relate in any way to the merits of the controversy arising out of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the military bill. It has nothing to do with that bill, but it is simply a matter of right and courtesy of the appointment of conferees and instructing them in advance.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. If this commission, or whatever you call them, are appointed to go over there and confer with these Senate gentlemen, are they authorized to make an arrangement by which we are to back down from that resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]? When they get back here, if they do report in favor of backing down, I want to know whether we can discuss that proposition in the House, and if we can I want something to say about it myself.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, if action is taken it is on agreeing to the resolution proposed by the Senate, and the conference would consider the matter contained in the resolution. I do not understand it would give the conferees any power to confer touching the disagreeing votes between the House and the Senate upon the Army bill.

Mr. CLARK. No; but I want to ask the gentleman a question, as he understands the whole business. What I want to know is, if the gentlemen who are appointed by the Speaker under this resolution go over there to confer with the Senate whether we acted in a polite way or did not act in a polite way, when they come back here to report to the House, are we going to have a right to debate the report that they make to us?

Mr. CANNON. I should say that the House had plenary power in this as in other cases.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The House or the Speaker? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Are we going to be allowed to have any debate upon it?

Mr. CANNON. As far as I am concerned, I would not cut off the House if I could, and I could not if I would. I do not know what may be recommended, I do not know who may recommend it, but as I understand it the Army bill in the meantime remains on the table in the Senate, and I take it that it would be quite competent for the Senate to take up the bill to-morrow notwithstanding this conference.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask this question: Suppose the commission comes in with a report and states that we ought not to have sent any such resolution as that over to the Senate, what effect does that have on the action of this House in having sent that bill over there with that proposition?

Mr. CANNON. None at all, in my judgment. The House will deal with this report, if any is made, as it sees proper to do, and whatever report will be made the House will have plenary power in the premises. While I am not a prophet, as one member of the House I have very decided views in the premises. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a kind of educational commission, to educate the House as to the propriety of its conduct. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Possibly. I think if there is education in the premises, as my colleague suggests, the House does not need much. Possibly another body may. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is this commission or this committee of such a character as that, in the judgment of the Chair, it should be appointed as conferees themselves are appointed? For instance, if this was a conference committee, we know just who would be appointed. Now, it seems to me this takes a much wider range and that there would be a greater difference in the selection in a case of this kind than there would in the case of a conference committee. I would like to know if it is the opinion of the Chair that this is upon all fours so far as selection is concerned with a conference committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say, in answer to the gentleman, that, in the opinion of the Chair, the committee should be made up to represent the views of the House on this question. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of this resolution, and touching this resolution, and in no way acting as conferees on the Army bill, the Chair appoints the following members, which the Clerk will announce.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DALZELL, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

RECALL OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a resolution of the Senate; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 173) for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo, the same matter having been included in the omnibus claims bill (H. R. 8587), approved by the President May 27, 1902.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be complied with.

There was no objection.

ABRAM WILLIAMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2901) to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams; which were read, and, on motion of Mr. PARKER, concurred in.

LEVI MAXTED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 357) for the relief of Levi Maxted; which were read, and, on motion of Mr. PARKER, concurred in.

FRANCES H. ANTHONY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7319) granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Anthony; which were read, and, on motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, concurred in.

DAVID M. M'KNIGHT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3992) granting an increase of pension to David M. McKnight, with the information that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House and asked a conference.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. DARRAGH, Mr. HOLLIDAY, and Mr. MIERS of Indiana as conferees on the part of the House.

HATTIE M. WHITNEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney, with the information that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House and asked a conference.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. BROMWELL, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama as conferees on the part of the House.

KATHARINE RAINS PAUL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11249) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul.

The amendment was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendment of the Senate and ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. BROMWELL, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama as conferees on the part of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MARTIN obtained leave of absence for ten days, on account of important business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4190. An act granting a pension to Fredereka Seymore—to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14189. An act to permit the occupancy of the public printing building by the Grand Army of the Republic.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MERCER. I call up for present consideration the conference report on the public-buildings bill—House bill 14018. I suggest that the statement of the House conferees be read, and that the reading of the conference report be omitted.

There was no objection, and the report of the House conferees (published in yesterday's House proceedings) was read.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. MERCER] to the fact that as to amendment 131 of the Senate there is evidently a clerical error. The report states the amount for public building at Macon, Ga., to be $156,000 and the statement makes it $154,000.

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is correct in his surmise that there is an error. The amount stated in the report, $156,000, is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] be kind enough to inform me whether the provision for the New York City post-office remains unchanged as it passed the House?

Mr. MERCER. It remains just as it passed the House.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And the Senate has increased the amount for the New York custom-house, as I understand?

Mr. MERCER. It increased the authorization for the custom-house on a statement made by the Treasury Department that $500,000 increase upon the amount as passed by the House was necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken, and the report was agreed to.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in connection with this bill, to have printed as a House document some information and statistics furnished the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with reference to public buildings throughout the United States. It is a very valuable compilation of figures which should be presented to Congress, and that is a good way to preserve them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, asks unanimous consent that there may be printed as a House document certain statistics bearing upon the question of public buildings and grounds in the United States. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Territories I call up the following conference report and statement and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up a report and statement, to be printed in the RECORD under the recent rule.

The report and statement are as follows:

REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 11535, "A bill for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, which is as follows:

"Provided further, That nothing contained in the foregoing sections of this act shall be construed or held to prohibit or limit the right of the Smithsonian Institution to collect in or ship from the district of Alaska animals or birds for the use of the Zoological Park in Washington, D. C."

And agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add the following:

"Provided further, That such heads and hides as may have been taken before the passage of this act may be shipped out of Alaska at any time prior to the 1st day of July, A. D. 1902."

And the Senate agree to the same.

FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN,
A. L. BRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. R. BURTON,
A. B. KITTREDGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

H. R. No. 11535, the bill in conference, is a bill simply and solely providing for the protection of wild game and wild birds in Alaska. Among other provisions the bill provided * * * "that the killing of any wild bird, other than a game bird or wild game animal, for the purposes of shipment from Alaska is hereby prohibited."

The only amendments to the bill that were before the conference committee or considered by them relate to the shipment of game birds and game animals from Alaska.

The Senate amendment to the House bill, which was disagreed to by the House, and upon which a conference was asked and had, was as follows:

Page 6, line 2, after "act," insert: "Provided further, That nothing contained in the foregoing sections of this act shall be construed or held to prohibit or limit the right of the Smithsonian Institution to collect in or ship from the district of Alaska animals or birds for the use of the Zoological Park in Washington, D. C."

The committee of conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend that the House do recede and concur in the foregoing Senate amendment with the following amendment added at the close of the Senate amendment:

"Provided further, That such heads and hides as may have been taken before the passage of this act may be shipped out of Alaska at any time prior to the 15th day of July, A. D. 1902."

The object and effect of the foregoing will be to enable those who may have prior to the passage of this act lawfully obtained heads and hides to have sufficient time to dispose of the stock they have on hand before the provisions of this bill shall prohibit their lawful shipment.

The other amendment, which simply permits the collection of specimens in Alaska for the use of the Zoological Park in Washington City, is so manifestly appropriate that no special statement need be made in support of its acceptance.

FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN,
A. L. BRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read and that the reading of the report may be omitted. If there is no objection, this course will be pursued.

There was no objection.

[The report and statement will be found on page 6015.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4419) to incorporate the general education board, which I will send to the desk and will ask to have read. It incorporates a company in the District of Columbia, but no appropriation of money is made by the bill.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this bill simply proposes to incorporate these gentlemen in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GROW. It incorporates nine gentlemen in a corporation confined to the District of Columbia, but they can aid in education anywhere in the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. This bill has not been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GROW. It has been considered by the Committee on Education. It is a Senate bill. The Committee on Education has no objection to the bill, and it is reported from that committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this bill, which makes a corporation within the District of Columbia, provides for the ownership of real property within the District of Columbia, and has not been considered by the District Committee. I understand, under the rules, that this bill should have gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia and not to the Committee on Education.

Mr. GROW. It relates to education and to nothing else.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It provides for the ownership of real property within the District, and the rules require that all bills which affect property in the District of Columbia and that make corporations within the District should go to that committee. I shall object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

DISTRICT COURT FOR EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill. I ask for the consideration of this bill on behalf of my friend General BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania, who introduced the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the terms of the district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania shall hereafter begin on the second Monday of March, the second Monday of June, the third Monday of September, and the second Monday of December, each term to continue until the succeeding term begins.

SEC. 2. That no action, suit, proceeding, or process in the said district court shall abate or be in any respect invalidated by reason of the change of terms made by the foregoing section, but the said actions, suits, proceedings, and processes returnable to, pending, and triable in the term hereby established next after the return day thereof.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, was read:

In line 11, after the word "processes," insert the words "shall be."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS, SOUTHERN DISTRICT, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2276) to fix the time of holding the circuit and district courts for the southern district of West Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of Congress approved January 22, 1901, entitled "An act to divide the State of West Virginia into two judicial districts," as relates to the time of holding the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of West Virginia, be amended so as to read as follows: "At Huntington, the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday after the third Monday in September; at Bluefield, the first Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in October; at Charleston, the first Tuesday in June and the third Tuesday in November."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GAINES of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to the order heretofore adopted, adjourned until Monday, June 2, 1902, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Mary M. Jamison, administratrix of estate of Wiley J. Jamison, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of an opinion of the Comptroller of the Treasury and announcing the appointment of a committee to revise the Government salary tables—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14410) to provide for the control and management of United States penitentiaries, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2286); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HEATWOLE, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred House resolution 244, reported in lieu thereof a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 197) making certain appropriations of April 17, 1900, for printing United States maps available for the fiscal year 1902, accompanied by a report (No. 2300); which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14206) granting a pension to Mary J. Moore, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2287); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3320) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide G. Hatch, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2288); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1225) granting an increase of pension to Clara W. McNair, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2289); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SELBY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13612) granting a pension to Margaret Bell, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2290); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1456) granting a pension to William G. Miller, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2291); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11286) granting a pension to Ellen M. Pooke, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2292); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13449) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. E. Scott, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2293); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SELBY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14312) granting an increase of pension to John W. Huckelberry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2294); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13297) granting a pension to Martin Greeley, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2295); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10394) granting a pension to William H. Ruggles, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2296); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6005) granting a pension to James A. Chalfant, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2297); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DRAPER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10329) granting a pension to Mary E. Aitken, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2298); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12902) granting a pension to Julia Lee, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2299); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2221) referring the claim of William H. Diamond, of Chester, Pa., for damages for personal injuries sustained, to the Court of Claims, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2301); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. JENKINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5587) for the relief of Anna Eliza Isabella Von Hemert, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2302); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 14779) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Neuse River, at or near Streets Ferry, North Carolina—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BRUNDIDGE: A bill (H. R. 14780) authorizing the Newport Bridge, Belt and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the White River in Arkansas—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 14781) providing for the payment of accrued and unused leave of absence of certain employees in the Census Bureau—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 14782) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HEATWOLE, from the Committee on Printing: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 197) making certain appropriations of April 17, 1900, for printing United States maps available for the fiscal year 1902—to the Union Calendar.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A resolution (H. Res. 281) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to report to the House what amount of money has been derived and paid out from the sale of town lots in the towns of Lawton, Hobart, and Anodarko, in Oklahoma Territory—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PAYNE: A resolution (H. Res. 282) rescinding leaves of absence except in case of sickness—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURRIER: A bill (H. R. 14783) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius A. Clough—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 14784) granting a pension to Johniken L. Mynatt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 14785) for the relief of Isabella R. Napier—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PUGSLEY: A bill (H. R. 14786) granting a pension to William Moutoux—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14787) granting a pension to Hester E. Mooney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEVES: A bill (H. R. 14788) granting a pension to Frank E. Hills—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14789) granting a pension to David Brobst—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14790) granting a pension to John Wantland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14791) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Samuel Lenharr—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14792) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jacob Barnhart—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14793) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of B. Warren Taylor—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14794) for the relief of Isaac D. Page—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 14795) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Buckaloo—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 14796) granting an increase of pension to E. A. Whitcomb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: A bill (H. R. 14797) granting an increase of pension to William R. Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEVES: A resolution (H. Res. 280) providing for extra pay for conductors of the elevator on House side of the old Library portion of the Capitol—to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROMWELL: Petition of Cincinnati (Ohio) distillers in favor of House bills 178 and 179, for the repeal of the tax on distilled spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring reduction in the tax on spirits—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CONRY: Resolutions of Provincetown Maritime Exchange, urging the passage of House bill 163, to pension employees and dependents of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. EVANS: Papers to accompany House bill 10722, granting an increase of pension to William H. Hawkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, affidavits to accompany House bill 10461, granting a pension to Joseph McFarland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolutions of United Mine Workers' Unions Nos. 1773 and 1602, of Sixmile Run, Pa., favoring the passage of the Hoar-Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of Mrs. A. J. Settle, widow of William Settle, deceased, for reference of war claim to Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Resolutions of Provincetown Maritime Exchange, urging the passage of House bill 163, to pension employees and dependents of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: Petition of Hon. George A. Robertson and 125 other citizens of Jackson County, Ind., urging the passage of a service pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Letter of P. T. Kirby, secretary of Trade and Labor Council, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., urging the passage of the Senate amendment to the sundry civil bill increasing the appropriation to the United States Geological Survey and favoring the amended irrigation bill and House bill 6279—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MUTCHLER: Petitions of 80 citizens of Easton, Pa., for repeal of the duties on beef, veal, mutton, and pork—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PUGSLEY: Petition of William Montoux, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUPPERT: Petition of the New York Turn Verein, protesting against the passage of House bill 12199 in its present form—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SPERRY. Resolutions of Horeb Lodge, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, of New Haven, Conn., relative to passports to Russia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 31, 1902.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the public civil revenues and expenditures therefrom in the Philippine Archipelago from the date of American occupation to June 30, 1901, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, certain information relative to quarters rented by that Commission, giving location, area of floor space occupied, and annual rental thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 357) for the relief of Levi Maxted;

A bill (H. R. 2901) to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams; and

A bill (H. R. 7319) granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Anthony.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11249) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. BROMWELL, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. BROMWELL, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3992) granting an increase of pension to David M. McKnight, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DARRAGH, Mr. HOLLIDAY, and Mr. MIERS of Indiana managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2066) to change the terms of the district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 3216) to remove the record of dishonorable discharges from the military records of John Shamburger, Louis Smith, and Henry Metzger;

A bill (H. R. 7659) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;"

A bill (H. R. 9360) for the improvement and care of Confederate Mound, in Oak Woods Cemetery, Chicago, Ill., and making an appropriation therefor;

A bill (H. R. 13704) to increase the subsidiary silver coinage; and

A bill (H. R. 14380) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Waccamaw River at Conway, in the State of South Carolina, by Conway and Seashore Railroad Company.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of sundry members of the Audubon Society of the State of New York, of Rochester, Charlotte, and Barnard Crossing, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of game in Alaska, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. SCOTT presented petitions of United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 478, of Nuttalburg; of United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 887, of Flemington; of United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 1329, of Simpson; of United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 1966, of Atkinsville; of the United Mine Workers' Local Union of Craine Creek; of United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 591, of Thayer; of United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 237, of Tunnelton; of the United Mine Workers' Local Union of West End, and of United Mine Workers' Local Union No. 829, of Standard, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. NELSON presented the affidavit of W. A. Dow, of Little Falls, Minn., guardian of William L. Dow, in support of the bill (S. 580) granting an increase of pension to William L. Dow; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the affidavit of Ira Boyington, of Ballard, Wash., in support of the bill (S. 1667) granting an increase of pension to Ira Boyington; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY presented the petition of James King and 480 other citizens of Johnstown, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an annuity for Clara Barton; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Tub Molders Helpers' Local Union No. 7452, of New Brighton, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing uniform inland rates of transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Fred W. Kelly and 400 citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of John C. Pect Post, No. 160, Department of Minnesota, Grand Army of the Republic, of Norwood, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and men in the Army and Navy when 50 years of age and over, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Local Division No. 235, Order of Railway Conductors, of Freeport, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

LANDS OF CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present the memorial of Thomas P. Smith, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Muscogee, Ind. T., concerning the leasing of the nonmineral lands of the Creek Indians. I move that the memorial be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5879) to remove the charge of desertion from the Army record of Eli Hibbard, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 97) to authorize certain officers of the Treasury Department to audit, certify, and pay claims of certain counties of Arizona, reported it with an amendment to the title, and submitted a report thereon.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals on House bill No. 3110, to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. I move that the report be printed as a separate document.

The motion was agreed to.

DISEASES OF THE HORSE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 92) providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, to report it back favorably and to move concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That there be printed and bound in cloth 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, the same to be first revised and brought up to date, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, 128,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 64,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 8,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 91) providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, to report favorably thereon and move concurrence in the amendments.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 6, to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty;" and in line 8, to strike out "eight" and insert "five."

The amendments were concurred in.

HEIRS OF NORMAN M'DUFFIE.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4245) for the relief of the heirs of Norman McDuffie, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for the finding of facts in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States." And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

TRANSMISSION OF PAPERS IN APPEALS.

Mr. HOAR. There is on the Calendar the bill (H. R. 3153) to amend section 698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary. It is in regard to clerks sending up the original papers instead of copies from courts below. I move that the bill be recommitted to the committee. Some suggestions have been made to me from some of the judges, which I think should be considered by the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MALLORY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6023) for the relief of John Scott; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. QUAY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6024) granting a pension to Ann Christy Glass; and

A bill (S. 6025) granting a pension to William H. Dunlap.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 6026) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Little; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 6027) for the relief of the heirs of William Markham, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (S. 6028) to provide for the appointment of additional United States commissioners in the western judicial district, Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 6029) granting an increase of pension to Alvin B. Hubbard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 6030) authorizing the Newport Bridge, Belt and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the White River in Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 6031) for the relief of Isabella R. Napier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6032) to establish a laboratory for the study of the criminal, pauper, and defective classes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 6033) to amend sundry acts relating to the government of Alaska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4531) to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WETMORE submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to contract with the Newport Manufacturing Company of Newport, R. I., for the construction of a submarine boat, to be built under the patents of Thomas J. Moriarty, and proposing to appropriate $15,000 for that purpose, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LAW OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following concurrent resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the Reports on the Law of Civil Government under Military Occupation, submitted to the Secretary of War by Charles E. Magoon, law officer Division of Insular Affairs, War Department, of which 1,400 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,800 for the House of Representatives, and 800 for the War Department.

RECALL OF BILLS.

Mr. WARREN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bills (S. 1920) for the relief of Albert C. Brown, (S. 19) for the relief of George A. Orr, and (S. 567) for the relief of H. B. Matteosian.

Mr. WARREN. The bills named in the resolution are included in the omnibus claims bill, and therefore I wish to have them recalled from the House.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose, as the matter will be journalized and the resolution sent to the House, there will be a separate request in regard to each bill.

Mr. WARREN. Of course. I am taking the same course that I notice has been adopted heretofore in recalling bills.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 3216) to remove the record of dishonorable discharges from the military records of John Shamburger, Louis Smith, and Henry Metzer; and

A bill (H. R. 9360) for the improvement and care of Confederate Mound, in Oak Woods Cemetery, Chicago, Ill., and making an appropriation therefor.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. 7659) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 12704) to increase the subsidiary silver coinage.

The bill (H. R. 2066) to change the terms of the district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 14380) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Waccamaw River at Conway, in the State of South Carolina, by Conway and Seashore Railroad Company was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two resolutions coming over from a former day, one introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the other a motion made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], to which an amendment was suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. As those Senators are not here, if there is no objection the resolutions will continue on the table subject to call until they are present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would not all such matters as that take their course under the unanimous-consent agreement made two or three days ago about the Philippine government bill? The understanding was that nothing else but the bill was to be considered during the intervening time.

Mr. BERRY. I understand that the resolutions will retain their place on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will continue on the table without prejudice.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the absence of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Philippine government bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD such portions of the testimony of Generals MacArthur, Hughes, Otis, Governor Taft, and others, and also portions of the testimony of all the private soldiers who appeared before the Philippines Committee, as refer to the general course and conduct of American soldiers and officers toward Filipino people and prisoners.

I also desire to present and have printed such portions of the testimony of Governor Taft, General MacArthur, General Hughes, Professor Barrows, and others, as testified before the Committee on the Philippines, as relate to reconcentration camps, including the testimony of Colonel Walker, just delivered.

I also desire to introduce portions of the report of the first Schurman Commission and statements of Mr. Hazlett, representing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the testimony of Bishop Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and such portions of the testimony of General Otis, General MacArthur, General Hughes, Professor Barrows, and others as relate to the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government and the effect of the withdrawal of American authority from the Philippine Islands.

I also desire to introduce extracts, practically complete, but eliminating extraneous and unnecessary detail, of all the governors of the various provinces in the Philippine Islands except that of Major Gardener, which I do not present for reasons that are apparent to the Senate, and one report of Governor Grant, showing just what we are doing in the Philippines toward the regeneration of the people of the islands.

I desire also to present an extract from an article of Bishop Hurst, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, concerning the effect of the English occupation of India.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Am I to understand that he desires to publish selections from the testimony taken before his committee such as he has chosen? Is that the purpose?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, that partially states it, but it does not entirely state it. I stated such portions, for example, of the testimony of soldiers as appeared before our committee as pertain to the general conduct of American soldiers and officers toward Filipino prisoners and people and such portions of the testimony as pertain to their capacity for self-government and the effect of the withdrawal of American authority.

I think I see what is in the Senator's mind, and I will state to him that this testimony covers now three large volumes, approximating 3,000 pages or possibly more, and the testimony of these witnesses is massed in a great bulk of other matter. It has been extracted by me with some care and much labor and arranged in order under these logical heads.

I will say, further, for the information of the Senator, that with respect to the testimony of soldiers, general officers, and others whom I have mentioned respecting the treatment of Filipino prisoners and people that pertains only to the general course and conduct of American officers and men toward them, and does not include the instances of cruelty for the reason that all that testimony has been time and again and voluminously referred to, whereas this portion concerning the general conduct of our officers and soldiers has not been presented.

Mr. PETTUS. Then I will ask another question. These are selections which you have made from the mass of the testimony?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, in the way I have stated to the Senator.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish to state that there is not a member of the minority of the committee present, and we on this side know nothing about this matter. I do not doubt what the Senator says, but in a matter of this kind, about which we have had so much discussion, I think the request should be presented at a time when those who have conducted the examination and are familiar with the testimony are present. I think the request ought to be deferred until members of the minority of the committee are here to give their consent. I do not intend myself to object, but I only suggest the propriety of this course to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I trust the Senator from Tennessee will not object. The testimony has been very carefully described by me as being selections and along what lines the selections are. I think they are fair. It does not attempt to show certain sides, I will frankly state.

I wish to state further that there has been a latitude in the introduction of matter in the RECORD that I believe heretofore has hardly ever prevailed, from what I am informed, and no objection has been made by the majority. For example, the other day a Senator introduced a statement by Irving Winslow, I believe it is, of Boston, as to alleged occurrences, with his notes and comments on the same, to be printed as a part of the RECORD, and it was not objected to.

I think it is quite proper, indeed, I think it is more than proper, that the testimony of every general who has appeared before our committee and every soldier, with the exception of O'Brien, I believe, and he is excluded for reasons which I think it is not necessary to state, as to the general conduct of the American officers and men toward the Filipinos should go into the RECORD, and that the whole thing should have a logical sequence as bearing upon this point. For example, on reconcentration camps the extracts from the testimony that I have prepared here are taken out of a great mass of other testimony, and they all bear upon the question of reconcentration camps, and I think are practically complete. Of course, there may be some lapses.

Mr. HOAR. Is the investigation completed on that subject?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand that the investigation of that subject is completed?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know that the Senator understands so. I have no authority to state that it is completed, but this debate is about completed, and I was not offering the matter to be printed after the debate was over.

Mr. HOAR. The debate, except on amendments, will be completed to-day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that it is a rather unusual request to make when testimony has been largely, though not wholly, on one side. The officers and persons having high authority naturally have been called. No one of our Filipino subjects has been heard yet, I believe, on this question. It seems rather unusual to select and pick out a special part of the testimony. At any rate it appears to me that this request should be referred to the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts sees fit to object, and if I had thought it would have taken two minutes I should not have asked the courtesy of the Senator from Wisconsin to permit me to introduce this compilation this morning, because I did not want to take five minutes of his time; but I told him that it was likely that I might have to leave the Chamber before the close of the afternoon. As a matter of course I will withdraw my request if the Senator objects, and that is all he has to do.

I wish to call attention in this connection, however, to the fact that statements by newspaper correspondents, that newspaper extracts, that things unauthorized, that statements of a man from Boston with his notes and comments—not an abstract of alleged facts only, but with his notes and comments impugning the acts of our Government and our officers and everything else—have all been permitted to go into the RECORD. Yet now, when there is a careful compilation presented, a massing of the testimony on these particular points which have been and are and will be most debated and which are of most interest to the Senate and the country, which has been collected out of a confusing mass of thousands of pages of dreary and prolix matter, and that, too, testimony before our committee, there is objection. If the Senator wants to object I have——

Mr. HOAR. I have not so far objected. I have asked a question. What I shall do will be to move the reference of the request to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I withdraw my request. I have offered this, my own work, on my own responsibility. I shall control it myself.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not ask for that reference. A few days ago there was put in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, a long compilation of this whole affair, running back to the beginning of our war with Spain. The Senator from Indiana, as I understand it, has taken the testimony upon certain points of the inquiry and segregated that testimony from three or four thousand pages of testimony taken by the committee.

It seems to me that there having been no objection made when very important documents and papers prepared by private persons entirely outside of the committee and not submitted to the committee at all were brought in here and printed in the RECORD and printed also as a distinct document, it is hardly wise to object to the printing of extracts from this testimony, carefully compiled by a member of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody doubts the absolute integrity and good faith, so far as purpose is concerned, of the Senator from Indiana, and of course I do not base anything I have said or done on any such doubt; but everybody knows—it is utterly idle to disguise it——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have withdrawn my request.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa complained of my course as to the Senator's request, and it is proper for me to reply.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. Of course I will go on, if the Senator from Indiana has no objection. Intelligent and able men who are zealous and earnest in regard to matters do not always see exactly what people who take a different view of the question might deem important. I should not think it was fair to ask that any member of the minority should make such a compilation and have it printed in the absence of all the members of the majority of the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; in a moment. I only say that I think this compilation, when it is printed, should have the sanction of the committee. I understand that the investigation is just in its infancy in regard to this matter. No Filipino, friendly or hostile, has so far been heard. Very few of the persons complaining of what everybody admits has happened have been heard, except persons in a comparatively humble position. The officers and Governor Taft have been heard at great length. To take that compilation, not the testimony, and have such a compilation made without the authority of the committee, it seems to me very unusual. Now, I will hear the Senator's question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator whether he was here the other day when there was presented by a member of the Senate a compilation made by a private person and never presented to the committee, and not that only, but all the notes and comments of that person as to supposed occurrences and alleged historical records—an abstract of occurrences alleged to have taken place in the Philippines since our occupation, and with all the notes of this private compiler? Such a document as that was offered here and accepted and ordered to be printed in the RECORD and also as a document without objection from us.

Mr. HOAR. I was not here. I did not know that such action had been taken.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was stated that this compilation was by a perfectly unprejudiced person, a Mr. Irving Winslow, of Boston, and it, together with his notes, was allowed to be printed, and no objection was made. We all know how disinterested that gentleman is.

Mr. HOAR. He is a gentleman who had traveled in the Philippine Islands and furnished the information. A great many such things as that are printed as documents. This is a question of selection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I offer it on my own responsibility.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody could be more responsible than the honorable Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thank the Senator. I have a right and I, at some time before Congress adjourns, shall offer it again and read it myself if necessary; but I must confess surprise that when the widest latitude, as I am informed by older Senators in this Chamber, that has ever been known in the Senate has been taken with reference to the printing of statements in the RECORD, and unauthorized newspaper interviews and compilations and documents and everything by everybody—I confess surprise that now, when a compilation of actual testimony, practically complete, so far as the points are concerned, is presented, there should be objection. It is remarkable that objection should be made to this and to nothing else.

Mr. HOAR. Has anybody objected except to ask that this compilation shall have the sanction of the committee, and that both sides can see what it is?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator consider that it would be anything different if offered from either side? No objection was made by the Senator to anything offered by the opposition.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is talking about sides and——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rise to ask what is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to ask what is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Philippine government bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand that the Senator from Indiana has withdrawn his request.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Senator from Indiana has withdrawn the request; but the Senator from Iowa was allowed by the Senate to criticise my action about it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was only asking for information.

Mr. HOAR. And very properly I was trying to defend myself against that criticism. That is all.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I acknowledge with grateful sensibility the courtesy of my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber in permitting me on Friday to suspend. I was not able to proceed, and this morning, if I were not in the middle of a speech, I would not ask the attention of the Senate.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] a moment ago seemed to be surprised that there were "sides" in this committee investigation. I agree with him. There ought not to be sides in it. After the ratification of the treaty and with an army in the field there ought not to have been "sides" here at home. One of the troubles, Mr. President, one of the wicked elements in it all to me is that, without necessity, there have been from the beginning and are now "sides" in this matter.

It is a problem of great delicacy, novelty, and not a little danger. It is the problem of no man and no party and the interest of the country demands now, as it has hitherto demanded, in my judgment, that men in public life and private life should bring to the solution of it a sole desire to get at the right without pride of opinion or spirit of advocacy or party interest.

Recurring for a moment to a remark which I made on Thursday, that I have not been in favor of permanent dominion in the Philippine Islands, in order to make it complete, I wish to add a word. I did not mean by that that I have ever been in favor of running like a coward from responsibilities which this Government had assumed. I did not mean by that that I had been in favor of abandoning a people who have come under our protection and government to tyranny, to anarchy, to chaos, or to seizure by those who would treat them harshly. I have never been able for one moment to contemplate with equanimity the proposition that the Philippines should ever be admitted into this Union as a State or States. I have never been willing to contemplate the admission of Hawaii into the Union as a State.

Speaking only for myself—and I have no right to speak for others nor for my party—I have never contemplated with equanimity the notion that Porto Rico should be admitted into the Union as a State. Nothing has been dearer to my heart, nor can be, outside of the ties that bind me to my own home, than that this great political entity, the Government of the United States, constituted of States, shall be confined to this continent.

I have expected that we would proceed to discharge as speedily as might be, with as lofty a purpose as the human mind is capable of conceiving, our duty in the Philippines, to bring peace to that people, to teach them the principles of good government, the difference between liberty and license, that independence, Mr. President, may be nothing but tyranny as under many governments it has been nothing but tyranny; that that independent government which is to be desired is a government made by a people understanding the rights and duties of liberty, tutored in the ways of government, and made and perpetuated by their consent. So I have hoped that that time would come, as I believe it will. When it will come no man can say. It has been delayed. It will be delayed by the division of our people into "sides" upon the subject. Were that people fit for self-government and the question arose whether we would admit them as States, keep them forever in a condition of colonial dependence, or—being fit—give them self-government or independence, I have never permitted myself to doubt for one moment that the American people, consulting the consent of the governed then fit to be consulted, would say "take self-government; or take independence."

If there is party division upon it, Mr. President, when that time comes then will there be an issue of imperialism. Up to this hour no such question has ever arisen, in my judgment, except for party purposes, or as the outgrowth of the pride of individual opinion. When that time comes the people may be trusted to settle it righteously.

There has not been in the history of this country, so far as I know, an instance before where some of our people in high places have sought so incessantly, and I think so unfairly, to put the nation in the wrong and to stain the honor of the Government, resolving every doubt against the officers of the Government and in favor of the loose, disjointed statements of men who have been in arms against us.

It was stated here the other day and repeated (that song has been sung from the beginning) that we were at fault in the Philippines anterior to the outbreak of hostilities because the patrol which attempted to force our lines was challenged but twice. There is no rule of the Army that requires a challenge three times; there is none which requires a challenge twice; there is none under certain circumstances which requires a challenge once. General MacArthur testified before the committee that, if a sentry has reason to think that those moving against him, place him in menace, he has not only a right, but it is his duty to fire. That is to give warning to those for whom he stands guard; that is to protect the safety of an army, Mr. President; and no one knows any better—although in some respects there has been an attempt to criticise him here—what the laws of war are, than does Gen. Arthur MacArthur, nor is there a braver soldier, a kindlier man, or a more chivalrous gentleman under this flag of ours than Gen. Arthur MacArthur.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] said that when our sentry called "Halt!" "probably" the Filipino patrol did not understand the language. I had occasion once before to say that there never was a band of soldiers in the world approaching the lines of another who were called to halt by one with arms in his hands who did not understand what it meant. But General MacArthur has testified before this committee that the word "halt" in Spanish is "halto," having the same sound as in our language, and there is evidence that that word was repeated—the word "halto"—in Spanish among the patrol the moment the sentry had said "Halt," showing that it was understood, and yet for the purpose of putting us in the wrong by suggestion that unnecessarily, perhaps with malice, a shot was fired in order to bring on the attack or for its effect upon the treaty then pending in the Senate, a breach of the peace—all this is ignored.

Mr. President, we have had again and again here in this debate the old talk that Aguinaldo was our ally; that the Filipino people were our allies. This notion that Aguinaldo with, say, 30,000 men gathered around him, intending in a way to cooperate with us, represented the Filipino tribes of 10,000,000 and put them in the attitude of an ally, to whom for that we were under national obligations, is a fever dream. Aguinaldo—call him an ally, if you please, though he could not be—cooperated with us; but if he had been an ally, as he was a mere auxiliary, he could have waited, and he would have had from the people of the United States the treatment and recognition which he and his forces deserved. But the idea from the standpoint of to-day that our people are to be told all the time that we have repudiated an honorable obligation to a people who helped us is to me in the highest degree an absurdity.

When Aguinaldo, Mr. President, with deliberation in the execution of a plan long made in every detail, advised both from abroad and at home, attacked our Army in Manila, where it had a right to be, he absolved the American people from any obligation personally to consider him for what he had, for his own purposes, as he afterwards said, done in front of Manila. I pass that. I hope never to have occasion again to speak upon this general subject in the Senate. Should I, however, do so, I shall not again refer to the oft-repeated historical details to which I have alluded on Thursday and to-day because the character of the debate has seemed to render it necessary.

Mr. President, it has been repeated with some bitterness in this debate that by the ratification of the treaty we bought mere sovereignty over people, and that under our Constitution we could not do this thing. This contention came early into the Philippine discussion. I thought once there might be something in it. It was admitted when first made, as I remember, that we could acquire territory, even if it were inhabited, but that where there was no territory, nothing but a few public buildings, docks, etc., an attempt to acquire involved the purchase of mere sovereignty.

I dwell only for a moment upon this phase of the discussion. I am not able to say that we could not acquire mere sovereignty. I can not say that we have not the power to do it. I can conceive of circumstances under which the safety of the Government would require that we should do it, and I do not think the Government would hesitate in such a case to do it. But we know now what we did not definitely know when this proposition was first broached, that of the 72,000,000 acres of land in the Philippines 67,000,000 acres were public lands, the title to which passed from Spain to us by the treaty. If the acquisition of 67,000,000 out of 72,000,000 acres of land is not the acquisition of territory it would be difficult to imagine what would constitute an acquisition of territory.

I have discussed this matter before and I will never admit that the Government of the United States may not lawfully as indemnity at the end of a war successful upon its part, take a cession of inhabited territory without consulting and obtaining the consent of its inhabitants. I deny that any such limitation upon the power of nations has ever been recognized in international law or by any government in the world, including our own. I do not see that the Declaration of Independence has any relation to it. Its framers said:

> That these United Colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent States * * * and that, as free and independent States, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do.

We lost no power by the adoption of the Constitution, which created a Union and the Federal Government. That Constitution gives us the power to make treaties, to make war, and to make peace; and again I repudiate as dangerous to the Republic any attempt to emasculate the powers of this Government under the Constitution and to leave it weaker in this particular than any other independent nation in the world.

We may take cession of inhabited territory as indemnity at the termination of war for selfish or for unselfish purposes. The motive has nothing to do with the power. We may take it solely with reference to our own interests. We may take it for the purpose of completely separating inhabitants from a tyrannical power. We may take it for the purpose of giving them what otherwise they could not attain—good government and civil liberty. And certainly the power to take inhabited territory involves the power to govern the inhabitants. The idea that we can take a cession of an inhabited territory, but can not govern it without consulting the people; that those who inhabit it have the right to govern it, independent of us, is a proposition that refutes itself.

We have acquired much territory, sometimes by treaty of purchase, sometimes as indemnity at the end of a war. I hope we will never have occasion to acquire any again in the latter way; but if occasion shall arise, Mr. President, I doubt not we shall do it, as we acquired the Philippines, not for the purposes of tyranny, not to enable us to exercise mere sovereignty and power, but for a purpose as lofty as that which inspired the men who drafted and adopted the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. President, I do not think it singular, perhaps, that with my intellectual limitations I am not able to see through some of the propositions which are made in this debate and which have been made in other debates upon this subject. It is said that we are engaged in "crushing out" the "only republic in Asia." Is that true, Mr. President? Of course, if we are crushing out a republic in Asia, there must have been a republic in Asia to crush out. Confessedly, if there was a republic in Asia, it was what was called the "Philippine republic." Was there a Philippine republic? If there ever was, it was when we ratified the treaty. If there was a Philippine republic, we ought not to have ratified the treaty and taken that cession.

If inhabitants in the Philippine Islands, a cohesive, organized people, a political entity, had taken, in a struggle for independence, possession of the Philippine Archipelago and had expelled the power of Spain and erected there a government—republic or otherwise—fit to be recognized by nations as an independent government, we should never have accepted a cession of the Philippine Archipelago, because Spain, on that hypothesis, would have lost all title to it, and upon general principles of law and liberty the Philippine republic, which we are engaged in "crushing," would have succeeded to the powers of government and to the ownership of the lands. All we could have done then in the interest of liberty as to the Philippines would have been to ask of Spain that she relinquish, not as in case of Cuba generally, but to the Philippine republic, her title and sovereignty over the Philippine Archipelago—a quitclaim to perfect the title—and we should have then, I presume, not have taken the city of Manila. Such a demand would have been regarded by Spain as absurd.

But, Mr. President, no Senator in this body thought there was then a "Philippine republic;" no Senator in this body could have brought himself—unless it be the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]—to recognize a "Philippine republic" as a government, erected out of a struggle for independence, based upon the consent of the people, capable of discharging the domestic duties of a government, of protecting life and liberty and property, and capable of discharging the international obligations which it might assume as a government. Was there any such?

Who moved to strike the cession of the Philippines from the treaty? No one.

The Vest amendment and the Bacon resolution were based not only upon the hypothesis, as I will show, that there was no such republic or government, but upon the further assumption that the inhabitants were not fit to form one without external aid. The Vest amendment proposed to strike out the cession of the Philippines to the United States and insert in lieu thereof a relinquishment of all claim of sovereignty over and title to the Philippine Archipelago, and to insert in the treaty these words:

> The United States, desiring that the people of the archipelago shall be enabled to establish a form of free government suitable to their condition and securing the rights of life, liberty, and property and the preservation of order and equal rights therein, assumes for the time being and to the end aforesaid the control of the archipelago so far as such control shall be needful for the purposes above stated, and will provide that the privileges accorded to Spain by Articles IV and V of this treaty shall be enjoyed.

Senators have for years reiterated the statement that if this amendment had been adopted we would have had no trouble in the Philippines. How does this amendment harmonize with the notion so constantly spread among the people by orators that there had been, as the culmination of a struggle for independence, a republic created before the ratification of the treaty, entitled as much, I think I have heard it said, to be recognized as were the colonies when they declared their independence? How does it harmonize with the proposition, so often made then and now, that the inhabitants of the archipelago had and have a right, fit or unfit, to establish a government which they wish and which they think adapted to their condition?

Note the Vest amendment:

The United States, desiring that the people of the archipelago shall be enabled to establish a form of free government—

How does this language consist with the notion that they already had established one?—

suitable to their condition—

Who was to decide? The United States, of course.

and securing the rights of life, liberty, and property and the preservation of order and equal rights therein—

And to bring this about we were to contract with Spain to—assume for the time being and to the end aforesaid the control of the archipelago so far as such control shall be needful for the purposes above stated, etc.

It must be borne in mind that we were not in possession of the Philippine Archipelago at the time of the vote upon the treaty except at Manila. How would we have obtained control? What would Aguinaldo and his Philippine republic have said when we attempted with our troops to "assume control" of the Philippine Archipelago? Is it sane to suppose that Aguinaldo, who had already attacked us, who had proclaimed to the world a republic with a constitution and a congress, who had gathered an army, who had representatives abroad, including one at Washington, whose jealousy and suspicion and hostility had been so many times evidenced, would, on the basis of the Vest amendment, have quietly abdicated and permitted us to distribute our troops throughout the archipelago for the purpose of control and enabling the people to establish a government in accordance with the standard of the Vest amendment, and which would safeguard our contract with Spain as to commerce with the Philippines?

Is it possible to believe that Aguinaldo (and his associates), puffed with a sense of power and with oriental vanity, who turned a deaf ear to all the sincere and generous promises of President McKinley, who wrought by every means, fair and foul, in the power of a dictator to deter vast numbers of his people from accepting the terms offered by the first Commission, would have tolerated for a moment an attempt to take control of the archipelago under the terms of the Vest amendment? They would have said to us: "What are you here for?" We should have replied: "We are here to enable your people to establish a form of free government 'which we think suitable to your condition and securing the rights of life, liberty, and property, and the preservation of order,'" etc. They would have answered: "We have a government, which we proclaimed long ago to the world, with a constitution, a congress, an army, provincial and municipal organizations enforcing peace, protecting property, and securing life, and this government suits us." They would have asked us: "Do you claim title and sovereignty over the archipelago?" Our answer must have been: "No; we refused that." Then would have come the quick question: "By what right, then, are you here?" And our answer must have been: "Under a contract with Spain substantially similar in language as that which we made as to Cuba."

To say that he would not have met us with insult, defiance, and armed resistance in such a situation defies belief. And instead of being there as we are now, with a title which the Supreme Court of the United States says is complete, which the Senate accepted as complete, which the Congress paid for as complete, which the world recognizes as complete, which gives us the power to do there what is just and right, generous and uplifting, we should have been there upon the weak foundation of contract with a former tyrant.

In the event of their defiance, could we have turned our guns against them and by force of arms have taken control of the archipelago wherever resisted? I thank God that we were saved from such unutterable folly. We would have been in a position infinitely worse than the proposition—to which I never could give my consent—would have placed us in Cuba, if before we sent our soldiers there we had recognized a government, subordinating our military operations to it, subject to its orders, and liable any day to a situation which would have been distressing in its weakness and results.

Senators who can see no difference between Cuba in her relation to this subject and the Philippines seem to me, if I may say so without offense, to be afflicted by some sort of mental strabismus. Cuba is a little island, almost in sight of us, inhabited by about 1,600,000 people, deducting those slain by the infamous reconcentrado policy of Weyler. A large number of people in Cuba had been educated in the United States. There were American citizens in Cuba who for years had carried on business there. The Cubans took note of what we did and of our methods. The island lay in the shadow of this greatest of republics, which for all the years since it was created had been an object lesson in liberty and good government to the Cuban people.

We had gone to war to free Cuba, and, above all things else marking the difference between the situation of Cuba and the Philippines when the war with Spain was suspended by the protocol, with relinquishment by Spain of sovereignty and title over Cuba, she surrendered possession of Cuba to the United States, and when we ratified the treaty we were in possession of every foot of Cuban territory and might well agree to discharge the duties imposed by international law upon a military occupant, to continue to occupy it, and as a military occupant to observe the obligations imposed by international law, the duty of protecting life, liberty, and property. There was a homogeneous people in Cuba, not in our lofty sense, but measured by a fair standard, having reference to their antecedents and their condition.

But as to the Philippines, with 10,000,000 inhabitants of different races and tribes and grades of civilization, strangers to us, 7,000 miles away, we were in possession only of the city of Manila. Added to this want of possession and the other conditions to which I have adverted, and the difference of the situation between Cuba and the Philippines would seem to be very obvious.

But we have been and are upbraided for not having, after the ratification of the treaty, adopted the Bacon resolution, which was as follows:

That the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands, and assert their determination, when a stable and independent government shall have been erected therein, entitled, in the judgment of the Government of the United States, to recognition as such, to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights secured under the cession by Spain, and to thereupon leave the government and control of the islands to their people.

This resolution, Mr. President, for which many Senators voted, is also utterly inconsistent with the notion that there was a Philippine republic capable of discharging the duties of a government. Not only that, but it is utterly inconsistent with the idea that Senators who voted for it thought the people there could establish without our assistance a stable and independent government. Not only that, but it is utterly inconsistent with the idea that under the Declaration of Independence they had a Godgiven right, whether fit or unfit, to frame such government as they saw fit.

I did not vote for it. It was voted for by some Senators, who ever since and before that day had declared there was a government in the Philippines, a government that suited the people there, a government that the people had created, a government as far advanced as the Colonies were when we secured our independence. The propositions put side by side, like Kilkenny cats, eat each other up. If any declaration was to be made or ought to have been made at that time, it was that declaration, but it could only be made, based upon an acceptance of the cession, sovereignty, and title by the United States to the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. HOAR. That was after the treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. It was pending before the treaty was adopted.

Mr. HOAR. That is another thing. It was voted for after the treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. My proposition is this: I was comparing that with the proposition that we should have made the same arrangement in the treaty as to the Philippines that we made as to Cuba. I say if anything was to be done different from what was done it was not to put this Government in the foolish and impossible attitude in its relation to the Philippines that was proper and reasonable and sane it should occupy as to Cuba. But it was to accept this cession, and then, clothed with power and sovereignty, declare what you would do, if we were to declare anything upon the subject,

But I thought, and a great many entirely patriotic and reasonably liberty-loving members of the Senate thought so, too, that in that exigency we ought not to make any declaration or project into the future any wide promise, but that we ought, having title and sovereignty, to go forward, feeling our way, never forgetting for one instant the Declaration of Independence or the ideals of the American people, to carry to that people over there liberty, law, order, education, peace, prosperity.

Mr. President, was there a nation in the Philippines? Could there have been a nation in the Philippines? What did the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], for whom I can not attempt to express my reverence and admiration—I know of no man who could have made a speech of such eloquence as that which he uttered in the presence of the Senate and of the American people the other day upon this subject—mean in speaking of a people, not tribes scattered here and there through a great territory, but a people living in the Philippines? I know he must have intended to be understood as asserting that there was a living, homogeneous people there capable of initiative, capable of organization——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will permit me, I mean exactly what I suppose General MacArthur meant when he said when he first went to the Philippine Islands that he thought Aguinaldo did not represent the people, but that now he had become satisfied that Aguinaldo represented his people. That is the meaning in which I used the term.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well, if the Senator's authority for using the term "a living people" as distinguished from tribes is General MacArthur——

Mr. HOAR. I did not say my authority was General MacArthur. I put an illustration to let the Senator understand what I meant, using the phrase of an eminent and intelligent authority who had been there.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator, then, means to be understood as saying that there was a nation in the Philippines created by a people of the Philippines?

Mr. HOAR. I like the phrase "the people" because that is the phrase of the Declaration of Independence. There was not a nation in the United States when independence took effect. There were thirteen States.

Mr. SPOONER. Colonies.

Mr. HOAR. Thirteen States when independence took effect——

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. Without any common government, but they were one people.

Mr. SPOONER. That is true, and, in my judgment, there can be no better illustration furnished by any man in this day or in the long reach of time of the distinction between a people as the word is used in the Declaration of Independence and the conglomeration called a people in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator appeals to me, and I yield to the temptation; and as soon as I get on my feet I am ashamed of having done it, because I do not think the Senate or the audience, whoever they are, want the Senator's brilliant and powerful speech interrupted by getting into discussions with other Senators, and I am ashamed of myself for having done it. But as I am on my feet, I will say that they had their 1,200 islands, and what there were on them I do not say. There were people there who have never heard of the United States up to this day. They had men by the millions, all acting together, who had raised an army, who welcomed a general, who had turned Spain out of that territory, except the city of Manila, who had invested the Spanish troops there from water to water, who had agreed upon a constitution, republican in form, and who had order, peace, quiet; who had local municipal governments all through a large territory, occupied by at least six or seven million people, with men in every town or neighborhood able to conduct its affairs in order and in peace; and that is a people.

Mr. SPOONER. That would be a people if it were true.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say again that I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator need never beg my pardon for anything. It is granted in advance—always. That would be a people if that were true.

Mr. HOAR. It is true.

Mr. SPOONER. I deny that, except superficially, there is any truth in it.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SPOONER. I am very anxious to proceed, but I will yield.

Mr. DIETRICH. General MacArthur and other prominent witnesses stated that Aguinaldo represented only what he termed by "his people" the Tagalos, and they were divided.

Mr. HOAR. I am stating MacArthur's report.

Mr. DIETRICH. And also that at Malolos, where the constitution was adopted, there were no representatives from any other island or any other people except the Tagalos, and the men who were there were named by Aguinaldo and none were chosen by any of the people of the other islands.

Mr. SPOONER. In the Philippines it is said there was a people. Of course there must be "a people" to establish a government. There is not much distinction, so far as I can find, in the sense in which that phrase is used in this connection between a people and a nation. It takes more than land and inhabitants to constitute "a people" in the sense in which internationally or from the standpoint from which we use it that word has significance. To say that there was "a people" in the Philippines in the sense that we were a people when our independence of Great Britain was declared finds support, in my judgment, neither in reason nor in any authority on government or law. Aside from other things, admitted facts render it philosophically impossible that there should have been in the Philippine Archipelago a people in the sense in which the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts uses that phrase and in the sense in which the Declaration of Independence uses it.

I take from the masterful speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] this quotation from the report of the Schurman Commission, to save time, as to what were and are the elements constituting the population of this archipelago. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] admits that scattered tribes do not constitute "a people." The Declaration of Independence did not apply to the Indians. They were great nations, sub modo, it is true. They occupied the land in which they were born. Mr. Jefferson, in his message to Congress in 1805, spoke of them as lovers of liberty and lovers of independence. They had governments suited to their wishes. They had a liberty which was satisfactory to them. They were not peoples, however.

What is this aggregation in the Philippines? There are 84 different tribes, three different races, all set out long ago by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in one of the two brilliant and searching speeches which he has made upon the subject; and I want to pay here in public to the junior Senator from Massachusetts the tribute of my respect and admiration for the eloquence, labor, and constructive genius which he has brought to the work for the Philippines in which this nation is involved. The Senator from Ohio said:

> I find there are 21 tribes of Negritos, 16 tribes of Indonesians, and 47 tribes of Malays. There are no two tribes in the whole archipelago who speak the same language and have the same civilization, or have the same kind of domestic order or domestic institutions, or who have really any positive affiliation with each other except subject to some kind of material modifications.

A comparatively small portion educated in the Spanish language, and with no common language.

There are 2,601,600 Visayans, the traditional enemies of the Tagalos; men who have refused to be governed by the Tagalos; and I notice that Aguinaldo in the order which he gave to his officer in the Visayas—for whatever government he had in the Visayan Islands he secured at the muzzle of the guns, and not by the consent of the people—for the attack upon Iloilo cautioned him to be careful, very careful, lest civil war break out in the Visayas. He meant lest they resist the armed domination of the Tagalos.

> The important tribes are the Visayans, numbering 2,601,600; the Tagalos, numbering 1,663,900; the Bicols, numbering 518,100; the Ilocanos, numbering 441,700; the Pangasinans, numbering 363,500; the Pampangas, numbering 337,000; the Moros, numbering 268,000, and the Cagayans, numbering 166,300.

No two tribes understanding each other, a population varying from civilization to barbarism, with different degrees of it in the different tribes, a population who had had comparatively no schools except the school of Spanish tyranny, who never had been instructed in organization, whose activities, so far as they had any, were entirely provincial or municipal, who never had made a struggle organized and united as a people in the islands, even for reform, for their insurrections were sporadic and they were never organic—that is to say, participated in by the inhabitants of the islands.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I should like at this point to read to him what I find in the Washington Post of February 5, 1899, to which I was kindly referred by the Senator from Colorado when he was last on the floor. It fits in here, I think, very properly.

> AGUINALDO'S CLAIM—NOW ASSERTS JURISDICTION OVER THE ENTIRE PHILIPPINE GROUP.
>
> Aguinaldo has broadened his claims, or at least his agent here, Agoncillo, has done so for him. In another one of the series of communications which he has addressed to the State Department, Aguinaldo asserts his jurisdiction to all of the Philippine group.
>
> This is a notable extension, as heretofore there was nothing to show that he spoke for anything more than the Tagals, and even though there may have been an intimation that the Visayas, or central group, was part of the Philippine confederation, this is certainly the first time that any suggestion has been made touching the Sulu Archipelago.

I hope I have not interrupted the Senator in putting that fact into his speech.

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all.

I have always supposed, apparently I am mistaken about it, that distinguished and intelligent Americans charged with the duty over there, not over here, of investigating conditions in the Philippines, of studying the Philippine inhabitants, of endeavoring to ascertain and report for the guidance of the Government which sent them there, and having taken the time to discharge that duty as far as it was possible, would be entitled to some credit for accurate information upon the subject. But with the minority they are not.

The testimony of men who know the Philippine Archipelago, who have spent years there, who studied the inhabitants in time of peace, all goes for nothing, but this bubble of a living, cohesive, initiating people fit to give consent to a government, and able to organize one, is built up, so far as I know, upon this quotation from General MacArthur and upon the statement of the two naval officers who wandered on an auspicious occasion through a portion of the islands.

To-day President Schurman coincides with some distinguished gentlemen as to what ought to be done in the Philippine Archipelago. I have admiration for him. I lose none of it because he changes his mind. Every man has a right to do that, and every man ought to do that if he thinks it is right to do it. But I think he knew as much about the Filipino population when he came back to report the investigations of his Commission over there as he does now. I think that he and his associates knew as much as the two young naval officers did who traveled through a portion of the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. LODGE. For three weeks.

Mr. SPOONER. For three weeks. There is a side light on that trip, too. They were not permitted to see anything except what the Fillipino general wanted them to see, or to gain any impression based upon fact except what he wanted them to gain.

Now, this is what is said further by the Commission:

The most striking and perhaps the most significant fact in the entire situation is the multiplicity of tribes inhabiting the archipelago, the diversity of their languages (which are mutually unintelligible)—

Governor Taft testifies to the same thing, and everybody else who knows anything about it from actual observation—and the multifarious phases of civilization—ranging all the way from the highest to the lowest—exhibited by the natives of the several provinces and islands. In spite of the general use of the Spanish language by the educated classes and the considerable similarity of economic and social conditions prevalent in Luzon and the Visayan Islands, the masses of the people are without a common speech and they lack the sentiment of nationality.

The Filipinos are not a nation, and there can be no "political being that we call a people," one people, in the language of the Declaration of Independence, which lacks the sentiment of nationality and which is not capable, by acquirement and characteristics, of cohesion, power for organization, and conception of right and law and order equal to the formation of a nation, which can be called a people in the sense in which that language is used.

The Filipinos are not a nation, but a variegated assemblage of different tribes and peoples, and their loyalty is still of the tribal type.

I do not suppose they have changed greatly since the Schurman report was written.

Colquhoun, who knows the Orient, and has studied well the Malay and the Filipino, in his work The Mastery of the Pacific, says:

Other deficiences in their mental and moral equipment are a lack of organizing power. No Malay nation has ever emerged from the hordes of that race which have spread over the islands of the Pacific. Wherever they are found they have certain marked characteristics, and of these the most remarkable is their lack of that spirit which goes to form a homogeneous people, to weld them together. The Malay is always a provincial; more, he rarely rises outside the interests of his own town or village.

And with this limitation he recognizes many good qualities.

Of course Aguinaldo had an army of 30,000 people, armed partly by the United States. Was that an army of a Philippine people? Was that an army that represented the Visayans? Was that an army that represented the Macabebes? Was that an army that represented the different tribes there at the outset? It was an army of Tagals and bandits, or ladrones who have infested the mountains in the archipelago.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator, did not our general commit 4,000 Spanish prisoners to their care?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. He did that because he could not take care of them himself. He did not turn them over——

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Do I understand the Senator to say that because he could not take care of the prisoners himself he turned them over to robbers and outlaws?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not say they were all robbers or outlaws.

Mr. CARMACK. You said it was an army of ladrones.

Mr. SPOONER. I said there were ladrones and bandits in the army, and that it was not an army representative of a Philippine people, such a people as we are told here were a living, organized people, capable of creating and maintaining a government.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I simply want to understand the Senator. He says there are ladrones and outlaws in the army. Of course there may be bad men—outlaws—in every army.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. Do I understand the Senator to mean that the Philippine army organized there and cooperating with the American forces were largely or to any considerable extent composed of mere outlaws and robbers and bandits?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know to what extent; neither does the Senator.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. But being a Philippine army, from the Senator's standpoint it must have been composed of liberty-loving, patriotic, law-abiding citizens.

Mr. CARMACK. Being an army organized with the cooperation of Admiral Dewey and in cooperation with the American forces, I assume that it was not an army of outlaws and cutthroats and ruffians.

Mr. SPOONER. One of its leading generals had been for a great many years the leader of bands of cutthroats and ruffians.

Mr. CARMACK. Whom?

Mr. SPOONER. Pinar del Pilar. Nobody denied that. I know it will be denied now; at least, I suppose so.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Wisconsin, of course, is the only prophet in the Chamber.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no; I am not.

Mr. CARMACK. He always knows what a Senator is going to say before he says it.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CARMACK. And he very seldom knows himself what he has said after he has said it.

The point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Senator was this: Admiral Dewey and other American representatives sought the aid and cooperation of Aguinaldo and his associates; and if it be true that by their help they organized an army of cutthroats and bandits and ruffians, then Admiral Dewey is guilty of violating the rules of civilized warfare, and instead of being acclaimed as a hero he ought to be branded and court-martialed and turned out of the Navy, if the charge made by the Senator from Wisconsin is a true one.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that adds only one more to the horrible suggestions about Admiral Dewey's conduct which I have heard made in this Chamber before the Senator took a seat here. It was an army which sought the right to enter Manila to loot it. It was an army which, represented by a Commission, insisted upon the right to enter Manila for loot and violence and rapine.

The commander of that army, when informed in writing by General Otis that the rules of warfare recognized by the American people precluded loot, was not satisfied with it. It was an army which afterwards violated habitually the rules of civilized warfare. It was an army, Mr. President, which perpetrated—and some of them were referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]—unparalleled atrocities not only upon American prisoners who fell into their hands, but upon countless thousands of their own people. It was an army which respected neither sex. It was an army whose rule came to be confiscation and ambush.

When Senators in the light of to-day talk about the crowd which swiftly came around Aguinaldo as "an army of a Filipino people," friendly to the Americans from the beginning, I deny it.

Recurring to Pinar del Pilar, one of the strongest characters in point of ability, and one of the most desperate in point of savagery in the islands, who was made a general—Governor Taft refers to him as a cattle thief before the insurrection. Perhaps vitalized by the spirit of liberty, suddenly seized with a desire for independence, he wended his way to the side of Aguinaldo, and left his associate cattle thieves all behind him. I have not supposed so. If I am mistaken, Senators who know all the facts on the oriental side of this matter, and who ignore most of the facts upon this side, will undoubtedly inform the country of it later. Nor was he by any means the only military official known to have been "irregular in his habits," in this respect.

Now, the idea—and that is all I care for and what I was intending to speak about—that this collection of miscellaneous tribes described by the Commission, who had been for three hundred years, under the tyranny of Spain, a cowed, distressed, and oppressed people, could have between the arrival of Aguinaldo and the short eight months which followed been welded into a homogeneous people, a people in the sense of the Declaration of Independence, that could organize a government and maintain it, is a philosophical impossibility. That is all there is about that, in my judgment.

What sort of a "government" did Aguinaldo organize? Was it a government based, as seems to be here asserted, upon the consent of the tribes over whom he extended it? Not at all.

It has been said, and it was said by that Commission, and it is abundantly, aye, overwhelmingly established, that there was no trouble in those islands, that there was no resistance to American authority, except where Aguinaldo had sent his armed Tagalos.

Throughout the archipelago at large there was trouble only at those points to which armed Tagalos had been sent in considerable numbers. In general, such machinery of "government" as existed served only for plundering the people under the pretext of levying "war contributions," while many of the insurgent officials were rapidly accumulating wealth. The administration of justice was paralyzed, and crime of all sorts was rampant. Might was the only law. Never in the worst days of Spanish misrule—of this "government," representing the Filipino people, established by their consent and with their cooperation, having a constitution, having an army, having pictures, and colleges, and music, and science, and art, and literature.

This is Mr. Schurman and his associate commissioners speaking

Never in the worst days of Spanish misrule had the people been so overtaxed or so badly governed. In many provinces there was absolute anarchy, and from all sides came petitions for protection and help, which we were unable to give.

The committee has printed the captured diary of an officer who was a comrade of Aguinaldo in his flight, to the time he was captured, which shows how little appreciation Aguinaldo had of government and the responsibility of a high official to a people.

Mr. LODGE. Simeon A. Villa.

Mr. SPOONER. Simeon A. Villa, a member of his staff. He had been with him in all his peregrinations up to the date on which he was captured. He was his friend, his associate, his comrade. He says:

On a moonlight night the honorable president——

The honorable president is Aguinaldo.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. President of what? He had a government, Mr. President, of proclamations, of confiscations, and assassinations, and all the evidence shows it.

On a moonlight night the honorable president——

Aguinaldo—

Sytiar, Jeciel, B. and V., the two Laybs sisters, and the honorable president's sister were discussing the matter. And once the independence of the country is declared we will take a trip to Europe, with an allowance of a million dollars to pay our expenses.

Here is an interesting document fairly illustrative of the kind of a republic, a "government founded upon the consent of the governed" and appreciative of the rights of the governed this was. This was to the secretary of war, Aguinaldo's brother. It is a proposition for a concentration camp:

PHILIPPINE REPUBLIC, OFFICE OF THE MILITARY GOVERNOR,
Malolos, February 17, 1899.

[Private.]

Señor SECRETARY OF WAR:

Referring to your note in regard to an unhealthy town or place in the province of Nueva Ecija fit for the concentration of the friars, except the town of Bongabong, there is no good place in the province of Tarlac except the town of La Paz; but, according to my observation, even the persons born there are attacked by malarial fever and ague, and if they are strangers very few will escape death.

Your always faithful subordinate, ISIDORO TORRES.

I read in a Manila paper a description of a procession of friars marched under guard by these lovers of liberty out of Manila to this place of disease and death.

Here is something else from this diary:

After supper, which was at 6 o'clock, the honorable president, in a conversation with B., V., and Lieutenant Carasco—

This is from the other side; it is from a friend and companion—told them that as soon as the independence of our country was declared he would give each one of them an amount of land equal to what he himself will take for the future of his own family, that is, he will give each one of the three señores 13,500 acres of land as a recompense for their work; and also that these plantations will be located adjoining one another in such a manner that they will lie in the same province.

He did not say anything there about patents of nobility, but of course they would have come in season.

As I have said, Mr. President, he sent 1,500 armed Tagalos into Visaya to bring that unarmed people to acknowledge his government. Here is a captured official paper of one of his presidentes from over there:

Receipt from records of insurgent president, town of Navotas.

This was a municipality where law was enforced and taxes were levied and people were protected.

Received of Robert Francisco the sum of 5 pesos to save his uncle from being hanged.

MAGINGAT.

JANUARY 24, 1900.

Mr. ALLISON. Five dollars in Spanish.

Mr. SPOONER. Five dollars in Spanish.

Colquhoun, who is a disinterested witness, says of this government:

Between the collapse of Spanish sovereignty in the islands and the establishment of the United States in its stead (in December) there was a deplorable hiatus, due, no doubt, to the fact that the United States had not contemplated such a move, but were, as one of their generals put it, literally "pitchforked into the Philippines." During this interregnum chaos was supreme. Small republics were formed which exceeded the Spanish Government in ineptitude and corruption. Robber bands were let loose, and the whole country was in confusion. When it became apparent, however, that the United States had no intention of leaving the islands to work out their own salvation, a new phase began. The insurrecto leaders, having pledged themselves to independence, organized resistance to the United States, inflaming the people by declaring that the Americans were going to bring back the friars. Color was given to this by the fact that they could not see their way to a wholesale confiscation of church lands, and, while incurring the displeasure of the Filipinos by protecting the friars to a certain extent, they had all the weight of the latter against them, for the priests felt that the return of Spain was the one hope of retaining their position.

I have here among these papers the most frantic appeals of Aguinaldo begging the Filipinos to withhold any welcome to the officers of the Commission, begging them, as he says in one of the appeals—I will not take the time to read it—on "bended knee" not to accept any proffer of autonomy from the American Government.

He was not content with that, Mr. President. He issued an order, signed with his own hand, in order to prevent the inhabitants from repudiating his government of force and violence, in order to deter them all through the archipelago from accepting the protection, the peace, the care of the Government of the United States by which he put every man in the islands in the Katipunan. Up to that time those only had joined it who desired to join it or were forced as individuals to join it. There never has been in my reading such an oath as that of this society—never. I put it in the RECORD the last time I had occasion to address the Senate on this subject. It required a man to give himself soul and body to the Katipunan to do its bidding, to give his life when it was demanded, to give his property when demanded, and to kill his father, mother, brother, sister, wife, or children upon its demand.

More than that, Mr. President, it was part of the oath that if he did not obey the command of the Katipunan, he should forfeit his life, not to be taken upon a trial, not to be taken under the judgment of any court, but to be taken by the swift execution of the decree of this oath-bound association of tyrants. Not only that, but the lives of his family should pay the forfeit if he failed to stand practically by this alleged government of Aguinaldo; this government self-proclaimed; this government of force and violence; this government which had no regard for the consent or the rights of the people; this government whose sole existence was one of blood, and whose career was one of tyranny, which the testimony shows made the tyranny of Spain in comparison a paradise. To prevent these people whom it is said General MacArthur thought were behind Aguinaldo from espousing our cause and to bind them to him, not by kindness, not by justice, not because of their consent, not by the tie of good government and protection, but to hold them to him by the iron hand of the Katipunan he issued this order, which I can not at this moment find, by which he made every man in the archipelago, whether he would or not, a member of the Katipunan, bound by its oath, and subject to its punishments.

Mr. President, Senators may talk about the depopulation of districts, may figure up the number of Filipinos who have been destroyed, but do not charge that to atrocity and cruelty upon the part of the American Army, except so far as war goes, and exceptional cases where bad men, forgetting the flag and the honor of the Army, have done cruel and wicked things—do not leave out the silent, ghastly, diabolical judgments and executions of the Katipunan.

When the first commission went there this alleged congress voted to accept autonomy, and but for Mabini and the war leaders who were playing for a high stake—to govern the people through an oligarchy, to govern them regardless of their consent, to govern them for their own purposes and uses, so that they could have "a million dollars to pay the expenses of a trip to Europe," it would have been accepted.

Talk about a people and a republic in Asia upon which we are making war and which we are destroying! There is no republic in Asia. There never has been a republic in Asia, but I hope, in God's providence, there will be some day a republic in Asia, and to that end we are moving along on the lines of liberty, pacification, and construction, first, however, peace.

Here is the Katipunan order to which I referred, and I will put the pertinent part of it in the RECORD. This is signed by Aguinaldo on the 15th of July, 1898, when, as we are told, he was the representative of the whole people and the object of their love and confidence.

EMILIO AGUINALDO.

JULY 15, 1898.

To the Katipunan.

MY DEAR BROTHERS AND OLD COMPANIONS:

* * * * * * * *

All Filipinos must understand that they are now included in the Katipunan whether they want to be or not, and hence it is the duty of all to contribute life and property to the arduous enterprise of freeing the people, and he who disobeys must stand ready to receive the corresponding punishment. We can not free ourselves unless we move forward united in a single desire, and you must understand that I shall severely punish the man who causes discord and dispute.

* * * * * * * *

Cavite, July 15, 1898.

EMILIO AGUINALDO.

I said a little while ago that, in my judgment, it has been the greatest misfortune that there has been any division among us. I think it was the unhappiest thing that on January 9, the same day that Aguinaldo issued his elaborate order for an attack upon Manila, the same day that he treacherously sent, with that order being circulated among his people, a commission to Otis to negotiate peace, Mr. Bryan, one of the brilliant men of the country, against whom I have no wish to utter a word, a man of high character and remarkable powers in many ways, published in the New York Journal an interview addressed to the Senate, urging the ratification of the treaty and the making of an issue at once after its ratification between imperialism and independence.

There was no such issue. There had been no proposition in the Congress to hold that people in colonialism; there had been no proposition to treat that people in any other way than we would treat Cuba; there was no reason for that impeachment of the people; there was no reason to suppose that the people who went to war for liberty in Cuba would be any other than generous and true to their ideals in the Orient; and yet it became a party issue, and those people in revolt were given, day by day for months, to understand that the success of Democracy meant their independence, and they appealed to their troops—albeit their army had been disbanded and were shooting our men from ambush—not to attack them in the open, not to meet them in fair fight, but to shoot them down in "uninhabited and desolate places," using the language of the order, and to keep it up until the election should come off. Ah, Senators can not charge to the ratification of the treaty, nor to the sending of the Army over there, all the bloodshed and cruelty which came to the Philippine Archipelago.

Here is a copy of the instructions issued by Aguinaldo to Sandico under date August 10, 1898, two days before the protocol, as I recollect it:

REVOLUTIONARY GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES,
Office of the President.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR SEÑOR SANDICO.

First. To arrange so that all the Filipino subjects residing in Hongkong act in unity. To look for the best means to persuade those who have contrary opinions and induce them to cooperate in the policy of the government, or at least not to oppose it by imprudent behavior, which would be to our discredit with the powers.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will excuse me, did I understand him to say that they were subjects or citizens of the republic?

Mr. SPOONER. Subjects; they were the subjects of a tyranny, an oligarchy founded upon force, and exercising nothing but force and violence.

The second paragraph I shall not read.

Third. The policy of the Government is as follows:

1. To struggle for the independence of "Filipinas" as far as our strength and our means will permit. Protection or annexation will be acceptable only when it can be clearly seen that the recognition of our independence, either by force of arms or diplomacy, is impossible.

2. The Filipino government and its representatives will attempt as far as possible to be on good terms with the Government at Washington, entreating the recognition of the Filipino government under pretext that such recognition constitutes a sine qua non before any terms of agreement between the United States and "Filipinas."

This is signed "E. Aguinaldo" and dated Bacoor, August 10, 1898.

Mr. HOAR. Who translated that?

Mr. SPOONER. This was translated by Captain Taylor, I suppose. I did not translate it. I could not. I suppose it is correctly translated. I am in the habit of believing that officers of the Army are honorable gentlemen, and that they would not be willing, either by accident or otherwise, that a paper should come translated by them incorrectly.

Mr. HOAR. The suggestion I meant to make by my inquiry was this: When you are depending on niceties of expression, as in the case of a distinction between "subjects" and "citizens," or a distinction between two things which are generally alike, as "pretext," or "pretense," or "claim," it is pretty important that you know whether the original phrase which is translated had precisely that shade of meaning. I do not in the least question the integrity of the translator.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no question about this part of it anyhow, and no reason to think there is about the other.

Protection or annexation will be acceptable only when it can be clearly seen that the recognition of our independence, either by force of arms or diplomacy, is impossible.

Mr. HOAR. I think that is very much what the Senator from Wisconsin would have said, speaking for his people under like circumstances.

Mr. SPOONER. I have heard it said that there is no Senator here who would not have done just what Aguinaldo did when he attacked our Army. Now, speaking for myself, I would not have done that, and no other man who was not bent upon a fight; no man of intelligence, fit to be at the head of a government would have done it, in my judgment.

He would have at least waited, with an agent here and the word President McKinley had sent over there, until the Senate could have voted, in two or three days, upon the Vest amendment and the Bacon amendment.

By the way, the Senator from Massachusetts did not accurately, two or three times in his speech, quote the McEnery resolution. He quoted it as if it referred only to the "interest of the United States." That is not all it says. It added, "and the interest of the inhabitants of said islands." That omission may not be material, but with those words in it reads more kindly—it reads more like an American document. I merely call the Senator's attention to that.

So, Mr. President, I say again that it was a miserable thing that in that day and later there went to the Filipinos from the United States, with our Army over there, words of encouragement to the Filipinos, denouncing us as having unconstitutionally bought sovereignty, as violating the Declaration of Independence; that we were there to enslave them, not to give them liberty, all a false political issue. They might as well have been told, "You fight our men and hold out until after the election, and if we win you will get independence under a protectorate." It prolonged the war. It vastly embarrassed the operations of the Government. It made it difficult, and it will do so hereafter, to carry forward, as speedily as we wished to do, to the earliest possible fruition the blessings which we wished to confer and will confer upon that people.

I say "will confer," because, Senators, the American people will not run away from that duty. They never run away from any duty. They indorsed at the polls, long after our action upon the treaty, after we had sent our Army into the Philippines, when they knew it meant war and trouble and division at home the attitude of the Republican party, and of the brave and chivalrous Democrats who joined in our action, and they reelected McKinley President of the United States. They have no idea, Mr. President, in my judgment, of turning back.

The Senator from Massachusetts has had a great deal to say about the Declaration of Independence. He reveres it, as I wish I could make him believe I do, for I wish his good opinion. But he wants the Declaration of Independence as he reads it, and I want it as I read it. Neither of us means to be false to it. It will bring no "blush of shame" to my cheeks to read it publicly again as I used to sometimes on Independence Day, and that is not because I have lost conscience or love of liberty.

The Declaration of Independence, like other documents—and I refer here to it only for a moment, Mr. President, because I must hurry along—must be read as a whole to be rightly interpreted. There is nothing more dangerous than a maxim misapplied.

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people—

And the colonists were one people; they were a part of the English people; they were children of England; they had the education and the conditions of England; they had here the best of England's institutions; they were no less one people with the English in ties of blood, association, education, and love of liberty than the Southern people and we were one people in the old days, as we are to-day, and as we always, always hereafter will be; and Jefferson wrote of that situation:

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people—

Who would compare our people with the tribes in the Philippines?

to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another and to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them—

That presupposes a people so far educated in love of liberty, and in the science and capacity for government, as to be able to form a nation entitled upon principles of international law and usage to "the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them" among the powers of the earth. Will anyone tell me that there was such a people in the Philippines? Will anyone deny that there was such a people in the colonies? For them it was written and of them it was true:

A decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

What follows is a justification of revolution:

When we passed our declaration about Cuba we declined to recognize the independence of Cuba, but we issued a high political declaration justifying the right of revolution as stated by Mr. Jefferson, a declaration that the tyranny of Spain entitled the people of Cuba—one people they were, too—to revolt from Spain and become free and independent of the parent State, and we proceeded to help them to do it.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal—

I said once in the Senate that that is true only as an abstraction. We all wish it were true everywhere. When the millennium comes, when angels carry into operation these lofty principles of abstract justice it will be true; but while the weak, passionate agencies of the human race must work them out, it never has been true and it never will be true. It was more conspicuously untrue for seventy years after the adoption of that declaration in the United States than anywhere else on earth—that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

He created all men; He created the white man and the brown man and the red man and the black man. Was this abstract principle, announced by way of argument to sustain the right of revolution, understood to have universal application among men? When it was written and for nearly seventy years after, millions of people created by God had no rights in this land——

Mr. HOAR. I remind the Senator from Wisconsin that Mr. Jefferson, who wrote it, speaking of the blacks, said: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just."

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. He recognized it as a contradiction.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. He himself owned slaves.
Mr. HOAR. He recognized it as a contradiction.
Mr. SPOONER. That statement in the Declaration of Independence nevertheless was a living lie in this land for seventy years.

Jefferson manumitted his own slaves. He made it true as far as he could administer it. Our people proceeded, long after this, to adopt a Constitution, and in that Constitution itself—a Constitution which we all venerate, a Constitution to which we all appeal—they incorporated as a part of the organic law of this land a recognition and protection of slavery, and the right of the white man to buy and own and sell the black man and the black man's wife and the black man's child. Mr. President, it was worked out in the end.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in his beautiful speech said, speaking for one epoch: "I put down the rebellion; I freed the slave." Ah, but how did we free the slave? We washed out that awful stain with precious blood, shed not only by our people, but by yours of the South.

When Abraham Lincoln put his hand to the Proclamation of Emancipation war was flagrant in the land, the flag was being stained with the sulphurous smoke of battle and shot into rags on a hundred fields of fight, and the shrieks of the wounded and the dying, the weird and awful music of war, were borne upon every breeze from the South to the North, and our homes and your homes were filled with sadness and broken hearts and everywhere were new-made graves. In the providence of God it has happened since the dawn of civilization that sometimes only through agony and the shedding of blood could the principle of the Declaration of Independence—the eternal principle of individual rights and liberty—be wrought out.

"I put down the rebellion." That war has seemed to me a practical exposition by our people of the doctrine of the "consent of the governed" and almost a national repudiation of it as a doctrine of general application. The Southern people, they thought rightly and we thought wrongly, decided that we had invaded, or intended to invade, their constitutional rights; that there had come an irrepressible conflict between the North and the system of slave labor in vogue in the South and recognized by the Constitution.

This system the South considered not only their constitutional right, but indispensable to their prosperity. Preceded by years of bitter agitation, the time came when, asserting the right of revolution, which in the last analysis is based upon the doctrine of the consent of the governed, they revolted and created a Confederacy, "laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form" as to them seemed "most likely to effect their safety and happiness." We denied their right to withdraw their consent to be governed by the United States.

They struggled long and gallantly and at inexpressible sacrifice for the independence of the government which they had instituted. If they had had the money and the men and the resources, they would have established their right. We suppressed their rebellion and preserved the Union because we had resources of men and money to whip this "consent-of-the-governed" theory out of the good people of the South. We forced a government upon them against their will.

The great transactions of the world have not been and can not be governed by mere maxims of abstract right. Some day it may be so. Thus far it never has been so in any age or among any people.

I have always believed that in no other way could slavery have been eliminated from our system, and that in no other way save through the bloodshed and heartbreak and cruelty of war could we have been molded perpetually into one people.

A general from the Philippines, and one of the most intelligent, who has read the Declaration of Independence and knows fairly well what it means who has been all through the Philippines, has met those people of every class and description, when asked before the committee if the people wanted independence, replied, "Yes, I guess they do, but they do not know what it means."

He thought that most of the Taos or peasants regarded it as "something good to eat." Even Aguinaldo never talked about independence except with a protectorate, and he was negotiating with himself as to what government on earth he would have protect him and his republic.

No, Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts, in that "rhetorical" column of his, remarkably eloquent and beautiful, to which each epoch in our history contributes its message, placed properly at the foundation to that of the Puritan and the Huguenot. That message, as the Senator from Massachusetts read it, was short, yet true, of course. "I brought the torch of Freedom across the sea. I cleared the forest. I subdued the savage and the wild beast. I laid in Christian liberty and law the foundations of empire." That is all true. But through what a terrible, strenuous and bloody pathway they walked at times from the beginning to the end of the journey which the Senator so beautifully and so briefly epitomizes.

They found the Indian tribes here, and they did subdue them. I say it with no disrespect, for my father was born in Massachusetts, and for his sake and the sake of my forbears there, as well as for the splendid history of that grand old Commonwealth, I could have nothing but respect and veneration and love for her. It is one of those harsh things that come about when you get away from mere theories and into "the corrupted currents of this world."

I refer to one item in the history of Massachusetts which I do not mention to condemn, because in the progress of civilization the elements of barbarism have always resisted every forward step, and men with love of liberty, men who wished to work out in the sight of God great results for liberty, have many, many times, as Abraham Lincoln had to do, passed through cruelty and hardships and suffering, sometimes inflicted by themselves, in order to reach the goal.

"I subdued the savage." Here is the act of the province of Massachusetts, passed in 1722, a hundred years after the settlement. I could not help thinking of this statute when I heard the general denunciation of the Army in the Philippines for its cruelty, based upon the assumption that a military officer over there, stung by unspeakable cruelty to American soldiers, had forgotten the honor of the flag and verbally given an order which no officer ought to obey, and which no officer ever ought to think, much less to utter.

This is one of the many cruel chapters in the history of civilization. I shall not read all of this act passed on the 8th of August, 1722, entitled "An act to encourage the persecution of the Indian enemy and rebels."

SECTION 1. That the following rewards be allowed and paid out of the public treasury to any company, troop, party, or person singly who shall kill or take any of the Indian rebels or enemies; that is to say—

First. To volunteers without pay or subsistence, for the scalp of any male Indian of the age of 12 years or upward—

[Laughter.]

Boys at play—

for the scalp of any male Indian of the age of 12 years or upwards, the sum of £100—

Not Mexican, either—and for the scalps of all others that shall be killed in fight—

I suppose the others are to be shot from behind, in ambush, waylaid, and for those they will pay a higher sum—and for the scalps of all others that shall be killed in fight and the prisoners that shall be rendered to the commanding officer of any regiment, company, troop, or garrison £50 each and the sole benefit of the prisoners, being women or children under the age of 12 years, and the plunder, the prisoners to be transported out of the country.

Secondly, to the volunteers without pay, being subsisted and supplied with ammunition, the sum of £60 for each scalp of any male Indian above the age of 12 years, and for the scalps of all other and for prisoners taken and rendered, as aforesaid, the sum of £30 each, and the sole benefit of the prisoners, as aforesaid.

* * * * * * *

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid:

SEC. 3. That the above-mentioned payments respectively to be made for every Indian, as aforesaid, slain or taken, be ordered upon bringing in the prisoner or producing the scalp of the dead person, oath being made before the governor or one or more of His Majesty's council that it is bona fide the scalp of an enemy or rebel Indian killed or slain by him or them.

Provided:

SEC. 5. This act shall continue and be in force during the present Indian war and rebellion and no longer.

Passed and published August 16.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?
Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. HOAR. Our ancestors in Massachusetts bought and paid for fairly, by honest bargain, every foot of land they acquired from the Indians. That order of 1722——
Mr. SPOONER. It is a statute.
Mr. HOAR. No matter what it is, it is a cruel and barbarous order, a relic of what was a cruel and barbarous time. Do you approve it that at the beginning of the twentieth century you are making a precedent of it? Tell us that.
Mr. SPOONER. I think our fathers bought the lands of the Indians and then proceeded to buy the scalps of the Indians.
Mr. HOAR. I will agree that this policy which the Senator from Wisconsin is defending is well supported by all the wicked precedents that can be culled from the lives of good men. [Laughter.]
Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but when the Senator finds it in his heart upon ex parte testimony to denounce in general language transactions in this age of officers as brave as ever lived, he ought not to forget at least that our forebears—brave men—in war also found it necessary to resort to what in time of peace no man on earth would approve of.
Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator approve of that order—war or peace? He has not answered that question.
Mr. SPOONER. I think if it was necessary to pass that statute in order to protect the wife, the children, the home from destruction—the wife from debauchery, the children from torture and death—I would have done what they did. What does the Senator say?

Mr. HOAR. It never was necessary to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh!

Mr. HOAR. It was a base and wicked order, and when the Senator speaks about our forebears I am happy to have the right to say that the men in that generation who bore my name incurred obloquy and indignation by resisting those things just as I do now. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut) rapped with his gavel.

Mr. SPOONER. Civilization has never gone forward without contest and conflict and resistance and bloodshed and the cruelties of war.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, does the Senator from Wisconsin approve that order—without any "if?" He says he does not approve the order in the Philippines. Now, does he approve this one?

Mr. SPOONER. If it was necessary——

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator approve it?

Mr. SPOONER. I for one am not willing to accept the opinion even of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, as great an historian as he is, that this statute was a mere wanton, useless exhibition of brutality and cruelty. It may be true, but I have never believed it, that the men who left their homes in England, who crossed in a little bark with their families the treacherous sea——

Mr. HOAR. This was a hundred and two years later.

Mr. SPOONER. I know; but they brought liberty with them to this continent, and I have never believed that the men who sprang from them lost in love of liberty.

If the Indians had not been driven back, if this maxim in the Declaration of Independence about which so much is said had been literally construed and strictly observed, we would have had no United States. This country would still have been inhabited by nations of savages, considering liberty as the right to roam where they chose and kill whomever came in their way. The States which have been upbuilded have been builded in the same way in degree. Wherever the frontier has been pushed back by the advancing forces of civilization it has involved struggle, hardship, strife, and bloodshed. We have pressed the Indians, whom Mr. Jefferson said loved independence and liberty, farther and farther until to-day we have nearly all who are left in "concentration camps," called reservations.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. And, if the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, it is one thing, taken in an isolated way, dealt with by itself, independent of conditions, and another thing regarded in its connection with the work of civilization, with the irresistible impulse of the Anglo-Saxon to move forward; to conquer the forest; to remove obstructions; to build cities; to erect houses of worship; to turn a continent into the home of 80,000,000 free people; when necessity came for it I somehow believe it was a part of the scheme of the Almighty that some of these things should be done.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Just as I believe——

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator disapproves of the order in the Philippines. He says so.

Mr. SPOONER. I say it is——

Mr. HOAR. One minute. Let me finish the sentence.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say so as the Senator says it.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to say that it was an order which no soldier ought ever to have given and that he disapproves of these cruelties. I understand he approves the statute of 1722. What is the distinction in his mind that makes him approve that and disapprove what has happened lately?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that I approved the statute of 1722.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. I can not put myself in their situation. The Senator said it was a wanton, causeless, unnecessary thing. I have not so understood it.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend agrees with me in disapproving what has been done in the Philippines in that particular, but does not say whether or not he approves the precedent he cites.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not cite it for my benefit. I cited it for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts, to show that even the liberty-loving people of the province of Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. Did a mean thing once.

Mr. SPOONER. Had to do a cruel thing once in order that their families might live, that civilization might move forward, and that in the end liberty might dwell in that colony. We can not carry out our own——

Mr. HOAR. In 1722 there was no such necessity. The Indian wars were all over, so far as they were carried on by any Indian tribes in Massachusetts. Philip's war ended in 1666 or 1667. That was an act aimed at the allies of the French who came down from Canada and brought some Indians with them. There was no war in Massachusetts in 1722.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. That statute was directed against the Maine Indians, and was owing to the slaughters committed by those Indians on the frontier settlements of Maine, which was then a part of Massachusetts. It was for the protection of those villages on the Maine frontier that the statute was passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit, perhaps it is not important, but a similar statute was passed in the province of Massachusetts in the year 1694, only they did not give quite so much for a scalp. That is the only difference. [Laughter.]

They paid £50 per scalp in 1694, but as they progressed in civilization they paid £100 in 1722, twenty-eight years later.

Mr. HOAR. I want every Senator who likes the taste of either of those statutes in his mouth to tell me two things which the Senator from Wisconsin has partly told. One is whether he approves of them, and the other is whether he approves of what has been done in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not there; so I can not tell much about it.

Mr. HOAR. I have not yet found anybody, thank God, who will say that he approves of either.

Mr. SPOONER. And the Senator will not find anybody, thank God, who approves of any cruel order in the Philippines.

Mr. HOAR. I know that.

Mr. SPOONER. And so far as I am concerned, the Senator will never find me ready to impeach the whole army in the Philippines upon ex parte statements. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER rapped with his gavel.

Mr. HOAR. Who has impeached the whole army?

Mr. SPOONER. It has been done in this whole debate. It has been done by witnesses before the committee. I am not talking about the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I thought you were talking of me or trying to. I said distinctly that our Army was composed of brave and humane men; that in a few instances these things had been done, but that they always did occur in contests between savage or inferior and superior races, and therefore the fault was not with the Army, and that the Army ought not to be denounced for it. The fault was with the persons who took the responsibility of bringing on the conflict. That is what I said about it. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin will suspend for a moment. Manifestation of approbation or disapprobation by the occupants of the galleries must not be repeated. If it is, the galleries will be cleared, according to the rules of the Senate.

The Chair also reminds Senators that if they desire to interrupt they must obtain the permission of the Chair.

Mr. SPOONER. What did the Senator from Massachusetts mean when he said in the message from that fundamental epoch "I subdued the savage?" He did not refer to this isolated chapter. He did not intend by that to put a taint upon the men who enacted that law. I do not judge them because I can not put myself in their places. I do not know what I would not do in order to protect my wife and my children or my neighbor's wife and children against destruction. I merely mean that, regardless of maxims, in the advance of civilization on our own continent the fundamental message which that epoch sends, as expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts, involved subduing the savages in all necessary ways.

So did the next one. The States to which he referred were not builded without subduing the savages. Some way I find in the progress of civilization here and there, all along the line that men have done, and I presume they had to unless I know differently, things which from the standpoint of peace and the enlightened civilization of this day would be condemned. I am not condemning them.

The Declaration of Independence and its words "the consent of the governed" has played from the beginning a conspicuous part in the debate upon this subject. I confess I have not been able to see its applicability. Perhaps that is partly due to our differences as to the facts. To me, it is clear that a condition precedent to the applicability of the doctrine is the existence of a people of sufficient intelligence, cohesion, and power of organization to alter or to abolish a form of government which to them had become destructive of the ends of government and to institute a new government and to maintain it.

If the 10,000,000 inhabitants of the Philippines had, independent of our presence and operations there as an enemy of Spain, organized an insurrection, declared their independence and won it, and established a government to suit themselves it would have been their right to maintain it as they saw fit, without dictation from any other government or people. But that is not this case. From my point of view they had done none of these things in any substantial sense, and we acquired from Spain by the treaty the title to the archipelago, the sovereignty over it and the right to govern it. That in such case adherence to the Declaration of Independence, if it be applicable at all, requires, regardless of the fitness of the people to govern, that they shall be turned loose to form a government of their own I deny.

The doctrine of the consent of the governed, as used here as an argument against the Government for what it has done and proposes to do in the Philippines, has been violated by this nation from the beginning.

We purchased Louisiana, a vast territory. Did we ask the consent of the people? Did we not put upon that people, many of them intelligent people, too, a government against which they protested? And was not the man who did it and the man who defended it the same Thomas Jefferson who wrote those words in the Declaration of Independence?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in attempting to parry that said the other day (and if he had not felt that there was force in it he would, I know, never have been driven to parry it in that way), that Jefferson did not want to buy Louisiana; that all he wanted to buy was the city of New Orleans, and that Napoleon forced the whole Louisiana purchase upon him. That may be true. I have no notion to challenge that.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Jefferson's reason was what he gave at the time, that there were not any people there, and it would be a thousand years, he thought, before the territory would be settled.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but what was in the mind of Mr. Jefferson has nothing whatever to do with it, nor will it have anything to do with it in the mind of anybody else, I think, who stops carefully to consider the question. It is not a question whether Jefferson intended to buy the territory or only the city. The question is what he did with the people of the territory after he acquired it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Jefferson thought there were not any people in the definition the Senator has just given. New Orleans had French traders who were to make their money and go home to France. The others wanted to come to us. But in the territory, with the exception of a little trading post at St. Louis, there were no settlements.

Mr. SPOONER. There were 60,000 people, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. Guyarre fixes the number at about 30,000. It was a vast territory.

Mr. SPOONER. When did it ever come about that 60,000 people are entitled to the "blessings of liberty" and 30,000 are not?

Mr. HOAR. But, when you are talking about a continent, the question whether there is one man to 10 miles square spread all over it, or whether there are 30,000 men so compact that they can make treaties and form a government is the question. It is not a question of numbers. Rhode Island was as much a people as New York or Virginia at the time of the Declaration. So was Delaware. But if the people of Rhode Island had been scattered over this whole continent or over the whole Louisiana territory without any cohesion or vital life, they would not have been a people then. I beg the Senator's pardon, because he stated it in the beginning of his speech exactly that way.

Mr. SPOONER. In Louisiana and in the United States no people can be a people entitled to the privileges and blessings of the Declaration of Independence unless they are such a people as can maintain a government and make a treaty? Mr. Jefferson in this transaction utterly repudiated the notion that the Declaration of Independence, so far as the consent of the governed goes, took no account of the question whether people were fit for self-government or not. I will read what he said.

The question is not whether a people are scattered, no matter if they be educated, no matter if they are able to write such a splendid protest to the Congress as came up from them against the alleged tyranny of Jefferson's Government, and nothing on the public files is finer than their protest. They were not children. Many of them were men of education. They were men of refinement.

When Mr. Jefferson was arraigned for violating the Declaration of Independence, for putting upon that people down there a government which was not in accord with it, not consulting them, denounced in one House or the other of Congress as being a king—I read it once here in debate—he wrote to DeWitt Clinton, December 2, 1803, as follows:

> Although it is acknowledged that our new fellow-citizens are as yet incapable of self-government as children, yet some can not bring themselves to suspend its principles for a single moment. (Works, vol. 8, p. 283.)

That is what Mr. Jefferson thought about it. He did not look upon this declaration as at all times applicable to all classes of people, without regard to fitness; and the faculty of sustaining and administering government.

That is one trouble here. We say we will put a government in the Philippines. We will give them participation. We will give them a bill of rights. We will fill their land with schools. We will give them object lessons in government; but we do not think, as Jefferson did not think, that this principle is applicable without regard to circumstances. We do not belong to the class of whom he writes of men who are willing to apply the Declaration at once without regard to fitness, who think it can not be suspended for a minute.

Mr. President, my distinguished friend as a prophet may be correct. We may not be able to work out this problem as McKinley wanted to work it out, as Taft is laboring to work it out, with a measure of self-sacrifice, in my judgment, endangering his own life, and an adhesion to an ideal that is as patriotic, as liberty-loving, as any which ever entered a human heart.

But we think if, when the time comes that we have educated the people to appreciate government, to sustain it, to take part in it, we will consult them—it is we who are carrying about with us in this work as a vital, living force the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and not those who insist, without regard to circumstances and situation, as was insisted as to Louisiana, upon putting into practical operation at once these maxims.

Mr. Jefferson had this to say about it. In 1826, writing to John Adams, and I read this in its relation to the argument made by the distinguished Senator as to the Monroe doctrine, although I know he does not refer to that, perhaps—

> I enter into all your doubts as to the event of the revolution of South America. They will succeed against Spain. But the dangerous enemy—

And that is true, Mr. President, over yonder—

> But the dangerous enemy is within their own breasts. Ignorance and superstition will chain their minds and bodies under religious and military despotism. I do believe it would be better for them to obtain freedom by degrees only—

He was willing to wait on fitness and education. To do otherwise in the Philippines is to make of the great Declaration of Independence not a shield of liberty, but the instrument of tyranny, not the tyranny of Spain, but the tyranny of anarchy, of violence and domestic oppression—> because that would by degrees bring light and information, and qualify them to take charge of themselves understandingly; with more certainty if in the meantime under so much control as may keep them at peace with one another.

In this very diary furnished before the committee Aguinaldo says that after independence, if they obtain it, he fears will come civil war.

> Surely, it is our duty to wish them independence and self-government, because they wish it themselves, and they have the right, and we none, to choose for themselves, and I wish, moreover, that our ideas may be erroneous and theirs prove well founded.

Jefferson is speaking of the South American Republics. If we had no relation with the Philippines, if we had no sovereignty there which we have, the situation would be the same as it was as to the South American Republics, concerning which Mr. Jefferson wrote.

Again, in 1822:

> But let us turn from our own uneasiness to the miseries of our southern friends. Bolivar and Morillo, it seems, have come to the parley with dispositions at length to stop the useless effusion of blood in that quarter. I feared from the beginning that these people were not yet sufficiently enlightened for self-government.

And they were a homogeneous people. They were a part of the Spanish people; and here are three races and eighty-four tribes, with nothing whatever to bind them together, either in association, business, or organization.

> I feared from the beginning that these people were not yet sufficiently enlightened for self-government, and that after wading through blood and slaughter they would end in military tyrannies more or less numerous.

That is what we want to prevent over there. That is what we would promote by going too rapidly.

> Yet, as they wished to try the experiment I wished them success in it; they have now tried it, and will possibly find that their safest road will be an accommodation with the mother country, which shall hold them together by the single link of the same chief magistrate, leaving to him power enough to keep them in peace with one another and to themselves the essential power of self-government and self-improvement until they shall be sufficiently trained by education and habits of freedom to walk safely by themselves.

That takes time, I say to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Jefferson meant to leave it to them to decide, not for us to decide.

Mr. SPOONER. They were not ours.

Mr. HOAR. I understand. These men are not ours.

Mr. SPOONER. These men are not ours, but this territory is ours. These 67,000,000 acres of land are ours, with the power incident to ownership to govern, and the people of the United States will govern, Mr. President, until the people there can govern and until they can protect themselves without help from the world and from themselves and each other.

Mr. HOAR. From us.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, does the Senator mean to tell those people that our object is to enslave them? When William McKinley sent his message over there that our purpose was to carry to them the blessings of liberty, to regard their prejudices, to consult their habits, to teach them the difference between liberty and license, to ameliorate and destroy the ancient system of Spanish tyranny, does the Senator think that he did not speak for the whole American people?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have not the slightest doubt on that subject.

Mr. SPOONER. Was it ever——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator asked me a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Well.

Mr. HOAR. I have not the slightest doubt of the absolute sincerity and desire of President McKinley to do what was right and just, and of the majority who voted for this treaty; not the slightest. I never have said anywhere otherwise. But it is the old fable of the dog and the wolf, when the dog invited the wolf to his feast and showed him how well fed he was and gave him his dinner and wanted him to come and live with him. Just as the wolf was going away he said, "What is that little mark around your neck?" "It is the mark of the collar." "I think I will stay at home in my freedom."

Mr. SPOONER. Who is the wolf?

Mr. HOAR. Whoever he is, my proposition is that it is a question of independence, of the right of that people to determine all these things for themselves, not of the right of the best man living, being an alien 10,000 miles off, to determine it for them. That is the proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, theoretically that is lofty and beautiful.

Mr. HOAR. I am glad I have got the Senator so far, because things that are lofty and beautiful theoretically always work out under the government of the God of this universe to be the best things practically.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but the negro did not find it so with the Government of the United States. You can not deal with peoples or with transactions like this upon maxims without regard to environment.

Mr. HOAR. I want to look at what the Senator quoted from Mr. Jefferson, because he was led into an error.

Mr. SPOONER. In what respect?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Jefferson was not, as the Senator stated, arraigned for violating the Declaration of Independence. He was not replying to any such charge. Mr. Jefferson was arraigned for having done something that was not within his constitutional power, which he admitted.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. LODGE. He was attacked——

Mr. HOAR. This is——

Mr. LODGE. I do not know anything about what he expected, but I know, historically, that he was attacked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators must address the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Jefferson never admitted for a moment that he violated the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. GALLINGER. He was charged with it.

Mr. SPOONER. I know he did not; but he was charged with violating it. He was charged with violating it in precisely the same particular that the Senator from Massachusetts charges us with violating it; and he denied it, as we deny it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Jefferson was wrongfully charged and you are rightfully charged.

Mr. SPOONER. I never yet have been able to say that I was right and that everybody who disagreed with me was absolutely wrong.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator stands up for his way, does he not?

Mr. SPOONER. I stand up in this matter not for my way alone, but for McKinley's way——

Mr. HOAR. Oh!

Mr. SPOONER. And the way of the Senator's colleagues in this Chamber who voted for the treaty, and the way of the American people who reelected President McKinley after all these things had been done.

Mr. HOAR. A great many people voted for McKinley who did not approve of that. There were a vast number, as the Senator knows very well. This is the first time I ever heard it argued in the Senate that the question of righteousness was settled by a show of hands at a popular election.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not say that, but I say this: I am not an overly good man; but if I thought my party was engaged in unrighteousness, if I thought it was engaged in a policy of dishonor, if I thought it was marching forward to trample upon human rights, to destroy an aspiration for independence, to crush out a liberty-loving and well-established republic, so help me God, I would vote against my party, not with it.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senator probably would have to find some other party to vote for that did not indorse the same thing.

Mr. SPOONER. If one party was standing by my construction of the Declaration of Independence and the other was trampling upon it and destroying it I think when it became a matter of conscience I would not have much hesitation about it.

But, Mr. President, we are all trying to do the best we can. I know my friend thinks his way is right. We think ours is right. He loves liberty; so do we. He does not admit that we do, but he admits that he does.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend utterly misstates it. I received in my mail this morning from a clergyman the wrathiest of letters, denouncing me. He wanted to know how I can possibly say as I do; that these men are good and honest men, and love liberty as well as I do, and with a great deal more intelligence than I have, when I think this particular measure is wrong. Now, Mr. President, we are not born into this world to live here on those terms.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly not.

Mr. HOAR. We have to judge all questions of right and wrong and constitutional liberty as well as we can through the feeble and imperfect light of a feeble and imperfect intellect, and not to judge other men's motives. We are bound to take that as true. But still, when we come to decide what we must do, there is nothing but the light of our conscience given us to act upon.

I admit that the Senator from Wisconsin has a far clearer and abler intellectual light in his brain than I have in mine. I admit that the Senator from Wisconsin is as pure a lover of liberty and of justice and that he is as patriotic as any man who lives now or ever did live; but are we to act as Senators simply by going about and saying who we think on the whole is the best and ablest man we can find and surrender our judgments and consciences to him, or are we to act on our light? I think that Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson, Daniel Webster, and Charles Sumner, whom I loved as a father and as a leader, took another view of these questions; I think they were right; yet, whilst I hold myself to be the humblest of the members here, and set up and arrogate to myself no superiority over any other man, I am still bound to say what I believe and to vote what I believe.

The Senator says that if he thought his party was wrong he would vote against it. I think my party is coming out right in this matter.

Mr. SPOONER. So do I.

Mr. HOAR. I think in that party is the only hope, and I think there is a great deal that is admirable in this bill, especially with the amendments proposed by my colleague [Mr. LODGE], but I can find no hope of a righteous solution of this question either in following the leadership of Mr. Bryan or of his associates. I believe that the Senator from Wisconsin, as I believe would William McKinley, if he had lived, I believe that Theodore Roosevelt, who is living now—as brave and honest and liberty-loving a man as ever was charged with executive power in this country or any other—are going to work out this problem; but they will work it out sooner and better if they are made to see that the principle upon which they have gone so far is vicious.

There is nothing in my vision which makes me believe that I am to trust the solution of this question to a party every other doctrine of which I oppose and a large number of whom are as responsible as is our party for what has happened in the past. I see nothing of hope in the position of that party which makes me look to it for a solution of this question. I can not forget that while our friends on the other side are uttering these doctrines, some of them so excellent and so satisfactory to me, in regard to 8,000,000 Filipinos, they will not for one moment utter the same doctrines when you come to talk of the rights of 10,000,000 American citizens at home. I am not afraid to encounter any man in regard to the justice or the righteousness of my own position in that particular.

I should not have interrupted the Senator had it not been that, as he knows, the last few sentences he uttered were sentences which were vital to whatever title I have to the affection of my friends here or to the respect of my fellow-citizens.

Mr. SPOONER. Nobody on earth, Mr. President, can say anything that could affect the Senator's title to the affection and respect of the Senate and of the whole people. I had no thought of any such thing in what I said; but I do not take kindly to the charge applied to me personally by the Senator, and by name, in his written speech, that my vote upon the treaty and my utterances on the Bacon resolution place upon me and those who acted with me in this Senate, and some of whom have fought for liberty, the responsibility for the bloodshed, the atrocities, the cruelties, and the heartbreaks that have come in the Philippines.

I say, Mr. President, I am willing to bear my share of the responsibility. I voted to take that cession. The Senator voted against it. I have never anywhere in the world criticised him for that, or permitted any member of any political party to criticise him for that without denouncing such criticism. I voted against the Bacon resolution for the reasons which I gave. The Senator voted for it; but that he did so in absolute good conscience, no one can deny. I voted for the Army bill to send troops to the Philippines. The Senator voted against it. He has, as I have said on the floor of this Senate more than once in discussing this subject, been consistent in his votes. But, Mr. President, I will not permit it, without protest—for to do so would not be just—to be said here or anywhere else that those of us who have cast these votes are responsible for the waste of treasure and the waste of precious blood of our own people, the terrible loss of life, the cruelties of war, and the cruelties that ought not to pertain to war in the Philippines. It is not true.

I believe, as solemnly as I ever believed anything in my life that if, after the ratification of the treaty, if after the majority in this country had established a policy, we had gone on, our troops at the front, without the words of encouragement to the enemy, which have been uttered here and elsewhere, there would have been infinitely less loss of life, less waste of money, less of the cruelty of war; and I believe to-day if it were not for the curse of politics—I do not say that as to one side more than the other—I believe if, on this subject, which is so difficult and which belongs to all the people, we could work together without division on political lines, trying to perfect legislation, trying to help each other do the best to bring the Government forward in this work upon which we are started and from which we can not now retreat in honor or in decency, we would save loss of life and we would bring much more quickly to the Filipinos that which the Senator from Massachusetts and all of us desire.

The Senator is right, in my belief, in his faith in the ultimate result of the policy of the Republican party; he is right in his belief that we mean well by that people; he is right in his faith in the American people, that when the time comes that those people are fit for self-government over there our people will decide to give it to them; but I think the Senator is wrong in his idea—it is an honest difference of opinion, of course—that if to-day, regardless of conditions, we should proceed upon the maxim of Jefferson and have regard to that mainly, there would come safety, or peace, or any good thing to the Filipinos.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts said in his speech—and I was surprised at it—that almost the only thing we have done there "has been to get some few thousand children actually at school in the whole Philippine dominion," but that we had killed a great many more parents than we had enrolled scholars. I do not know how many Filipinos we have killed, and God only knows how many Filipinos Aguinaldo and the Katipunan have killed. The evidence is overwhelming that their policy, in order to avert friendship for us, has been one of assassination and bloodshed. We have heard of some pitiful and pathetic cases. But is the Senator right as to what we have done for them?

I have a letter from a teacher over there—I do not often refer in debate to letters—but the letter was written by a noble man, who believes in the possibilities of development in the Filipinos, just as Governor Taft does, and just as I do on the evidence, in which letter he states that 72 of the police force in the city come every night to his school to receive instruction in English. Have we done nothing in the Philippines of which we ought to be proud? Have we done nothing in the Philippines which gives nothing of hope for vast blessings to that people?

Why, Mr. President, we have carried to them incorruptible courts of justice. They are represented in the supreme court; they are represented in the courts of first instance; they are governors of the provinces; they are presidentes of the municipalities. Does that all mean nothing? They have never before had any participation in government. They are represented in the Commission, the law making power for the time being.

We have not been fighting for sovereignty over there. We obtained that by the treaty. We have been fighting against an attempt to oust us, not for lucre, not for "nuggets of gold," but to enable us to carry forward the work of pacification and upbuilding. We have put in force there the Bill of Rights and the habeas corpus. There is testimony before the committee that one woman, an educated woman of large property in Manila, was taken out of prison by a writ of habeas corpus, who had been confined there for twelve years without trial, or even being informed of the charge against her, the Spanish Government in the meantime occupying her property and taking the rents and profits. They have been under the curse of ladronism for three hundred years, a terrible weapon of tyranny to that people in almost every province. We have almost driven that away. Those people have been subject to the feudalism that kills ambition and hope in the hearts of the peasantry.

They say these men are lazy; but they have had little motive for being anything but lazy. They have been slaves, Mr. President. When they wanted men to work they did not seek the men who were to work. They asked the presidente for 200, for 300, or for 400 men—that was always the way in the past—and he would send them, he would fix the pay, he would collect the pay, and he would give to the men who earned it just what he thought they should have—a system of slavery. In spite of resistance and war and its distractions we have given them more of liberty and security and good government than they have had in their existence.

General Hughes has testified that he wanted 250 men, I think it was, and that he called upon the presidente for them. The men came the next morning. They moved along during the day. At night he called every one of them up and paid him his day's wages in change. The first time in their lives these men found an object lesson from us that they were free, that they owned their own labor and the wages of their toil, and the next day a great number came for work. They had learned something. So we are rescuing that people from feudalism; we are teaching them that they are free, as I said a moment ago, and General Hughes has testified, and others also, that that once established there will be no trouble in the Philippine Archipelago, because the peasant class will keep everything right.

Are we bringing nothing to the Philippines but cruelty, atrocity, bloodshed, and crime? Do they hate us? Are these governors all falsifiers when they send report after report to us giving in detail the conditions in their provinces, and bearing testimony to the friendliness of the people and their desire for peace? When Senators here were denouncing the Army and attempting to show that cruelties and atrocities have been general in the archipelago, there were presented at the desk, and more have come since, petitions from seventy-odd places, of presidentes and governing bodies there, asking that these soldiers be retained there to protect the people against ladrones and against the unlawful acts of the insurrectos. Does that all go for nothing?

General Chaffee, who has been so bitterly denounced here by a portion of the minority, in his personal letter to General Hughes, of September 30, 1901, in speaking of the sentiment of the people in the islands, says:

> Women and children are probably friendly toward us, but as a rule I would not trust 50 per cent of the male population.

This may be fairly taken as a fact as to the women and children—and he thinks it also true, evidently, of approximately half of the male adults. And it is a fact full of hopeful significance and one that will bear rich fruit for peace and for the good of the Filipinos and for us. The Filipinos are shown to us to be a domestic people. Nowhere in the world is the wife a truer wife than in the Philippines; nowhere is there greater hospitality in the home; nowhere is the child better loved than in the Philippine home. If the women and children are friendly to us, who can doubt that their influence in the homes will bear great results?

Mr. President, I do not intend to go into this testimony about the Army, but I have read it and I have gone through all these printed orders and I do not find one among them, including Smith's written orders, not justified in the circumstances by the rules of civilized warfare. I do not find one of them that is out of harmony with General Order No. 100, issued in Lincoln's day and still in force. The concentration order of General Bell was a wise order. It subserved an entirely lawful purpose in war. It was for the protection of our soldiers, but it was also for the protection of the friendly Filipino or any Filipino who came within our lines. It was lawful to protect our soldiers. It was lawful—and it was not only lawful, but a duty as solemn as ever rested upon a people or an army—to protect in every possible way, compatible with the rules of civilized warfare, those Filipinos who were friendly to us; and it was lawful also to devastate, in order to destroy the sustenance of an enemy preying upon the people, forcing contributions and subsistence from them, and shooting down from ambush our men.

The attempt to treat the concentration in the Philippines as a parallel in infamy with the reconcentrado policy of Weyler in Cuba is not only found to be without support in the evidence, but to be disproved. Here is a description of the concentration camps in Cuba:

> The helpless people were allotted ground near the towns, almost invariably in low-lying, swampy, and malarious places. The Spanish residents would not be burdened with them and generally cared not how soon they died. They were concentrated in greatest numbers where the accommodations were least adequate, as if extermination were the main object. There was nothing for them to do and there was less and less for them to eat, and finally they stretched out upon the damp ground, gazing vacantly before them as the weary days dragged by. Mothers lay listless with dead babies in their arms. The quick and the dead lay side by side till the latter were taken out and thrown into the dead carts and carried off into the country, where lay the half-buried bodies of hundreds of victims of this system of warfare. The huts of these people were jammed together in rows, with but a few inches of space between, and the ground was covered with filth. Diseases of malignant types claimed their victims everywhere and every day. There was no medical attendance; it was fortunate if there were half rations. In the different stations of concentration there were estimated to be over 400,000 of these helpless people, and by the summer of 1897 the death rate had become terrible. The beautiful island was a plague spot upon earth.

Is anyone willing to believe that this describes concentration by our army in the Philippines? Is it pretended that Filipinos within the lines of concentration were starved or neglected?

I will not take the time to read, but I insert the following from the report of the chief commissary of the Philippines, March 17, 1902, as to the people in the concentration camps there:

We are getting along very nicely in supplying rice to the natives who are concentrated in Batangas and Laguna provinces. Last week, in company with General Wheaton, I visited Binan, Colamba, Santo Tomas, Tananan, and Lipa, and the way the concentration of the natives is carried out up there is a credit to the United States Army. Generals Wheaton and Bell both deserve a great deal of credit.

Instead of being called "camps of concentration" the proper name would be "camps of instruction and sanitation." The different barrios, or little villages, are gathered—each barrio—on a street or avenue by itself. Then these different avenues are separated by about 200 feet from their back yards, where they do their cooking, burn up the offal, etc. They have their fire brigades, armed with buckets of bamboo about 6 or 8 feet long. These are grouped on racks every 200 or 300 feet, and every house is required to keep two of these filled at night. The houses are about as comfortable as those they were required to vacate. They all have an abundance of food, either collected by themselves or furnished by the military authorities.

The inhabitants are most respectful and very cheerful looking. They all have the appearance of being well fed. No indications of sullenness or discontent. Their herds are taken out to graze, and I really think, outside of a military standpoint, the natives will be decidedly improved by virtue of having lived in these well-regulated camps of instruction and sanitation. The very poor are made better off in every way than they ever were before, and they are subject by the military to less tyranny than formerly by the headmen. From a military standpoint, of course, the concentration has been most valuable and has resulted in bringing in nearly every gun and every insurgent behind it who has not fled to the province of Cavite and Tayabas, which are under the control of the civil government.

General Hughes testified upon the subject as follows:

I know it as it is practiced there. It is a misnomer to call it a policy of concentration, because the world has learned to put a significant meaning to that word. The policy as practiced in the Philippines has no element of cruelty in it. It is simply an order to the inhabitants of a particular locality to move from one portion to another, and there they reside and carry on their operations and business. If the locality into which they have moved does not afford them ample support, the United States Government provides them with food and shelter. The people are pleased with it, because they are permitted to lead an easy life; much easier than at home. There is no element of punishment or deprivation. They are simply requested to come into a certain district.

They are moved out of danger, then, for their own benefit?

Exactly; because those who are inclined to favor the Americans are assailed by the ladrones or the rebels, and unless they came within the lines of the American Army they would be compelled to pay tribute to the insurgents. These people largely accept this concentration, as it is practiced, as a relief instead of a punishment. It is a relief from a punishment inflicted upon them by the insurgents, with whom they have no sympathy.

Professor Barrows testified as follows:

Senator BEVERIDGE. You were pretty well over the island of Luzon, as I judge from your answers to questions, particularly in those provinces going northward from Manila to the north portion of the island. Did you observe in the prosecution of your work the operation at any point of the reconcentration policy, of which so much has been said? If you did, tell the committee what it was with reference to this cruelty or the reverse. Describe it.

Mr. BARROWS. I was in one province which was reconcentrado, and I think I visited all but one town in the province. I think the matter has been very greatly misunderstood. In this case the population was in no sense confined within barriers inimical to its well-being. There was no barbed-wire fence business at all. They were simply required to dwell and to work along a within a certain distance of a military road that traversed it. They had to great cultivated stretch which made up the arable land of the province, stay there. They could not go out to the mountains. They could not take to the woods. Of course within those limits they could pass, and pass for miles; harvest their rice, fish, do anything they wanted to do; but they must stay in the territory capable of patrol by the military forces.

Senator BEVERIDGE. But within those limits their personal action was free?

Mr. BARROWS. Yes, sir.

Senator DIETRICH. There was no starvation?

Mr. BARROWS. No, sir; that was impossible.

Senator BEVERIDGE. Did you observe any cruelties in those lines?

Mr. BARROWS. None whatever.

Senator BEVERIDGE. It is just as you have described it?

Mr. BARROWS. Yes, sir. For example, after the rice was cut they had to bring it in the vicinity of this military road and stack it there and thrash it there and harvest it there. They could not do as they had been doing—stack it way out in the country where the insurgents could come in and carry it off. It was simply a measure adopted to prevent the contribution to the insurgent cause of supplies and the rendering to it of assistance in many ways by a population that was supposedly and professedly peaceful.

And on May 5 General Chaffee telegraphed that a month prior natives of Laguna Province, collected under orders of General Bell, had been allowed to return home, and that in Batangas Province, Luzon, the last of the natives were relieved of all army surveillance April 16.

It is said that General Smith issued an order to "kill and burn"—to kill all males over 10 years of age, whether in arms or not. I do not know whether he gave such an order or not. It is said that if he did it was oral and after the slaughter at Balingiga. If he did, nothing on earth, so far as I know, could justify it, and I have yet to hear anyone defend it; but I have a sort of tenderness in my heart for an absent man who is accused. I have been bred to think it unfair to try a man and condemn him at the bar of public opinion, or otherwise, upon ex parte testimony when he is absent, and I reserve, as I think it my duty to do, my judgment upon General Smith until I know the facts.

One thing is certain, there is no evidence here that it ever was carried out; there is no evidence here that Major Waller and his men shot a boy over 10 years of age or under 10 years of age; there is no evidence here that they killed a woman or a child or shot anyone except those in arms against us, save the men whom he executed; and that question is yet to be tried at the bar of public opinion when the evidence is all in and when Waller can be heard.

It is an utterly unjust thing, Mr. President, even if General Smith gave that horrible order just as it is said he did, for Senators to use that as evidencing the standard of the army in the Philippines. If I had the time to read them I would show from speeches made on the other side that a systematic attempt has been made to put upon that standard the general conduct of the army in the archipelago.

There were many harsh orders issued during the civil war. There was a great deal that was bitter on both sides. General Grant instructed General Sheridan, if the rebellion continued, to make of the Shenandoah Valley a barren waste. General Grant instructed Sheridan if he caught Mosby's men, to hang them without trial. General Grant instructed Sheridan to seize every male under 50 years of age able to bear arms and hold them as citizen prisoners within a range of territory. Men were executed during that war many times under the dreadful law of retaliation. It is civilized warfare, but it is pathetic.

Gen. Sterling Price turned Major Wilson and five Union soldiers over to Tim Reeves and his guerrillas to be executed, and they were executed.

General Rosecrans, that brave old soldier, whom we laid away the other day at Arlington, where his earthly home will forever be, and where it ought to be, among his comrades, ordered the execution, in retaliation, of six Confederate soldiers, and they were drawn by lot and executed.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] condemned that in bitter, biting, vicious language in Bell's order, which was mainly a threat. There is nothing more terrible in the world, it seems to me, than to execute brave men, who may be blameless, and not responsible for that which causes the retaliation, but that is one of the laws of war.

General Lee approved of the shooting of 26 Federal soldiers by Mosby for burning houses in Virginia, and you find an abundance of correspondence and some threats carried out, on the other side as well as ours, to execute men in retaliation. That is the bitterness and the horror of war.

Mr. CARMACK rose.

Mr. SPOONER. And it was on our side as well as on the other side.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but I will yield to the Senator altogether in a moment.

Mr. CARMACK. The law of retaliation is a recognized law of warfare, and nobody complains where that law is executed; but does the Senator think that everything that has been done in the Philippines has been in compliance with that law of retaliation?

Mr. SPOONER. You mean everything?

Mr. CARMACK. I mean what you are now defending and talking about.

Mr. SPOONER. I am defending that portion of General Bell's retaliation order which was criticised the other day. If the Senator asks me if I defend the order imputed to Smith, I again, as I before stated, say no; if the Senator asks me if I defend the water cure, I say no; if the Senator asks me if I would defend the killing of prisoners, I say no; if the Senator asks me if I defend any violation of the rules of civilized warfare, I hope he does not doubt I will say no, and that I mean what I say.

Mr. CARMACK. I simply wanted to understand the Senator and to know if he defended the water cure and other acts of cruelty committed by our soldiers in the Philippines.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course there could be no question about that, nor could any man speak more strongly in condemnation of it than has the President, through the Secretary of War, in the order which he sent to Chaffee requiring the court-martial of Captain Glenn for the water cure, and asking that it be hastened in order that the statute of limitations might not run in his favor, as follows:

The President desires to know in the fullest and most circumstantial manner all the facts, nothing being concealed, and no man being for any reason favored or shielded. For the very reason that the President intends to back up the Army in the heartiest fashion in every lawful and legitimate method of doing its work, he also intends to see that the most rigorous care is exercised to detect and prevent any cruelty or brutality, and that men who are guilty thereof are punished. Great as the provocation has been in dealing with foes who habitually resort to treachery, murder, and torture against our men, nothing can justify, or will be held to justify, the use of torture or inhuman conduct of any kind on the part of the American Army.

I object not to this investigation so much; I do not object at all to the facts coming before the public that the water cure has been administered in the Philippines, although it is grossly exaggerated, in my judgment. I think it is a good thing, if it happened at all, that the country should quickly know it, because we are establishing a civil government, Mr. President.

I do not doubt that the military authorities have not taken altogether kindly to the civil government. I do not believe that as a rule they could maintain and cultivate as friendly relations with the natives as could the civil government. But officers and men must stay there, and they can not be advised one moment too soon, in my judgment, what the general orders issued from the beginning advised them (some of which I append), that we are not there as tyrants; that we are not there for looting; that we are not there to violate the rules of civilized warfare; that we are not there to insult, belittle, or anger the inhabitants. We are there to treat them kindly. We are there to win their confidence. We are there to protect them. We are there to help them. It is now known, and if it were needed I am glad it has come so soon, from the highest authority, that nothing of the kind will be tolerated on the part of the American Army.

But, Mr. President, for one I protest against the spirit in which this investigation has been conducted and in which the matter has been exploited before the Senate. Senators have been a little too ready, in my judgment, to seize upon improbable tales and put them before the country. The story, as stated by one man, that a hundred and sixty Filipinos had had administered to them the water cure and all but 26 had died turns out to be untrue.

Mr. CARMACK. Does the Senator say that that matter was brought out by the investigation conducted by any committee here?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say it.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator spoke of it in the connection in which he was deprecating the spirit in which the investigation is being conducted.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that. I spoke of the spirit in which the investigation had been conducted and the exploitation which had been made on the floor of the Senate of the alleged atrocities in the Philippines.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not remember that.

Mr. SPOONER. That statement was made. Everybody knows——

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. When I was making some remarks on the first bill before the Senate on this subject, I read that as published newspaper statement.

Mr. SPOONER. I know it.

Mr. TELLER. I said that it deserved the attention of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. TELLER. It had been published probably in a hundred newspapers before it appeared in the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will find that in the speech which I made some time ago I acquitted him of making that charge against the Army, but it went to the world and it turns out that it was not true.

Mr. TELLER. It had gone to the world.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I know.

Mr. TELLER. That is why I brought it before the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I said for the credit of the Army it was necessary we should know whether it was true or not.

Mr. SPOONER. Then there was a charge read here that our troops over there had compelled a thousand Filipino prisoners to dig their own graves, and then had shot them in files to fall into the graves they had dug. That is exploded.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not understand exactly what the Senator means by saying it is exploded.

Mr. SPOONER. What would the Senator mean by saying that it is not exploded?

Mr. CARMACK. I say that the letter from the soldier detailing those circumstances was written.

Mr. SPOONER. That may be.

Mr. CARMACK. But whether or not the statement was true has not been proved or disproved.

Mr. SPOONER. Written to whom?

Mr. CARMACK. To the father of the young man who wrote it.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Tennessee says that such a statement was written to the father, and the father says it never was.

Mr. CARMACK. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the proof is undoubted that that letter was written and a copy of it or the substance of the letter was given by the father of the man who wrote it to a newspaper. If the Philippine Committee will permit us to summon that man we will prove that he did receive such a letter.

Mr. RAWLINS and Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi addressed the Chair.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. CARMACK. We ask to have the recipient of the alleged letter summoned, and we are ready to prove that he did receive the letter. But the committee voted not to receive the testimony.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the spirit of which I complan—"We are ready to prove."

Mr. CARMACK. We are ready to prove——

Mr. SPOONER. Who are we?

Mr. CARMACK. I mean the minority of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

Mr. CARMACK. We are ready to prove it if the majority of the committee will allow the evidence to come before them.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah, who first addressed the Chair?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should not interfere in this debate except that the question on compelling men to dig their own graves seems to be involved, and I desire to invite the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to a report signed by an American officer, J. G. Livingston, bearing date January 7, 1902. Livingston is the governor of Sorsogon, the place where it was alleged that a thousand prisoners had been compelled to dig their own graves.

I do not find in this report that a thousand prisoners were required to dig their own graves and afterwards were shot and buried in them, but I do find in this report that a presidente or mayor of a town and a policeman, whom the governor reports were innocent, were first tortured, subsequently taken out and compelled to dig their own graves, and afterwards shot and buried in them. I find that on page 2827 of the hearings before the Committee on the Philippines. The governor calls attention to it and denounces the outrage.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. When the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], whom I do not see in his seat, read the article referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin he stated that it was such an enormous charge that he did not believe it.

Mr. SPOONER. I said that.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. The Senator from Washington said that when he read the article, but that it was a proper thing for the Senate committee to investigate. I do not suppose the Senator from Wisconsin will deny the propriety of the investigation of the article, when it was found in a respectable newspaper and was a dispatch, I believe, from Massachusetts. I merely wanted to set the matter right, because I do not see the Senator from Washington in the Chamber.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I have been trying to get the floor only to say that I remember seeing in the newspapers, and I think it was printed in the RECORD a day or two after that statement was made in the Senate, a denial from the father that he had ever received any such letter from his son. He denied absolutely that there was any truth in the story. That is my recollection of it, and I never have heard the story referred to since. I supposed, to employ the language used by the Senator from Wisconsin, that it had been exploded. I did not suppose it would ever be repeated. I see that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is now in the Chamber. He, no doubt, will have a positive recollection on the subject.

Mr. HOAR. I rose a little while ago to say that I had myself taken some pains to inquire into the matter, as the information purported to come from the neighborhood where I dwell, and I am bound in all fairness to say that I do not believe there is the slightest foundation for such a story.

Mr. FORAKER. The junior Senator from Massachusetts can, perhaps, inform us with certainty whether or not there has been a contradiction published by the father.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to break in on the Senator from Wisconsin, but there was a letter forwarded, printed in the record of the committee hearings, from the Rev. Mr. Walker, in which he said that the newspaper account entirely misrepresented the only letter he had received from his son. The letter I can not repeat verbally, but it is in the record and I have sent for it.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not want to be misunderstood in this matter, if the Senator from Wisconsin will yield to me.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I want to say myself that I have believed the statement itself was at least a gross exaggeration. I do not believe it is possible that the statement as narrated can be true, but that the letter was written by the soldier and received by his father is beyond the question of a doubt. That fact can be proved, if it is a matter of importance, if the committee will permit us to bring the testimony before us. Up to this time it has refused to do so.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt that the soldier wrote a letter to his father. The father said the story, as represented in the papers, was not correct. The moment it appeared in the newspaper the War Department cabled to General Chaffee to make immediate investigation and to question the soldier himself and investigate all that was charged in the letter. That is the only way of getting at the direct testimony, and that is now in process.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course the soldier, whatever he may have said, will promptly repudiate it, as every soldier in the Philippine Islands has been required and compelled to do.

Several SENATORS. Oh!

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is an attack on the Army and the Administration and everybody else. What does the Senator mean by that? What evidence has he of that?

Mr. CARMACK. I will give the evidence later.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me? I inquired into this matter pretty carefully. I think I ought to state that not only did the father deny having received a letter with any such contents, but it turned out by the record that the soldier was not at the place where it was alleged he located the transaction at the time, but was on service at a distant place.

If the charge were true, I would not of course hold it back, but I am bound in all fairness to say that I do not believe there is the slightest ground for this charge.

Mr. CARMACK. I desire to say that I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. My only point was that the Senator from Washington had brought the matter before the Senate and established the fact that such a letter had been written. That the letter was written I do not think there is the shadow of a doubt. I do not believe the charge in the letter is true, and I do not believe it is possible that it can be true. There may have been some foundation for it, but I think that the letter is so wild in its exaggeration that it is simply impossible.

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee what he had in mind when he informed the Senate a few moments ago that he did not understand the story had ever been exploded?

Mr. CARMACK. I will say it never has been disproved.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator has simply become satisfied that there is no truth in it?

Mr. CARMACK. I was satisfied from the time the story was first published that there was absolutely no truth in it; that is, I was satisfied that, while there may have been some foundation for it, the story to its full extent could not be true. I never did believe it and do not believe it now.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator imagine that anybody else in the Senate now believes any such story?

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, well, I will not answer for anybody else.

Mr. SPOONER. I will wait for the "other side" of the case presented by the Senator. In order that I may quit the floor at the earliest possible moment, which I desire to do, I ask that I may put in the RECORD copies of some of those orders which were issued in the Philippines, and also one or two other papers to which I have referred, which I do not care to take the time to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I spoke of the spirit of this investigation. I was led to do that by reading the testimony, the questions, and I am forced to the conclusion, and with pain, too, Mr. President, that there are "sides" in this investigation of the Army. I was not at all surprised when the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] said, "Give us a chance and we will prove it."

I do not like an investigation involving the honor of soldiers in the Philippines or involving the honor of soldiers who are dead and buried in the Philippines conducted in a spirit of partisanship or upon ex parte testimony. I note one thing in all this attack upon the Army, that on the Democratic side of this Chamber not more than two or three of the Senators who fought in the Confederacy, gallant, chivalrous men, men who learned what war is, at its best, who know how it inflames the passions of men, who know how difficult it is to restrain sometimes in active operations the indignation and wish among soldiers for retaliation, have risen here to join in this condemnation of the Army. They remember the war for the Union. They know what happened on their side; they know what happened on ours. They know that no order has been issued in the Philippines, unless perhaps this alleged verbal order of Smith, which does not find its counterpart on both sides over and over again during the war for the Union.

I must make one exception in the minority of the committee. I can not apply what I have said of the committee minority to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. I wish I could not say it of any Senator on the committee. I do not recall a question put by the minority calculated to elicit the whole truth or to elicit a fact which would tend to vindicate the honor of the Army in the Philippines. There is evidence there, of course, that the water cure was administered. There is evidence that it was administered to eleven or twelve men at one time, men who confessed that they had roasted Sergeant O'Hearn. While it was indefensible, there is no evidence that it injured any one of the men to whom it was administered.

Now, Mr. President, I do not, nor does any man on this side, approve of it or defend it; it violated the rules of civilized warfare, but I fancy—I can not help it—that when Senators detail it in the campaign in which they are about to enter and call the attention of the people to it, the people will regret it, but they will not forget the environment. They will not forget that Aguinaldo and his army had long before disappeared; that the army, upon an order made by him, had broken into guerrilla bands; that they had laid aside their uniforms and acted as presidentes and other civil officials; that they took the character of amigos and protested their friendship for the American Government and its sway in the Philippines, and that under cover of that friendship there was hostility, treachery, assassination, and torture.

There were 480 posts in those islands, most of them under the command of subordinate officers—some of them under the command of sergeants and corporals—and these little bands of soldiers dwelt in an atmosphere of treachery. The people will not forget that the men of that company, the Twenty-sixth, who under the leadership, it is said, of Captain Glenn, gave the water cure to those Filipinos, were mourning the loss of a brave and an admirable soldier. They will not forget that they already knew that he had been destroyed—destroyed, Mr. President, not quickly, but tortured not by the water cure which does not kill, but tortured slowly in the most diabolical and fiendish way to death.

While you picture to the people the Filipinos receiving the water cure, rising from it and walking away, I tell you, gentlemen of the minority who think an attack upon the Army is good policy, there is nobody in this land who listens to you who will not see in the background Sergeant O'Hearn tied to a tree and with agonized face being hour after hour burned slowly to death, and as the sun went down boloed and buried. You will hear the people say, "We are sorry this happened; but these natives were not soldiers; they were murderers."

And when you talk about that other case of water cure, which has been sworn to here—and its authenticity I shall not attempt to challenge, and I do not defend it—the people will see another soldier, a brave boy from some American home, walking around a tree slowly disemboweling himself, followed by devils with bolos, until he drops in death. The people will not defend it; nobody defends it; but the people will not forget, as seems to have been forgotten here, the environment of the relatively few men who imposed these punishments and these tortures, and they will be careful, while entering judgment against these men whom you condemn, to keep in mind the circumstances under which they acted.

The minority of the committee seem to have been very anxious for witnesses. They apparently put up a sign reading:

> Witnesses wanted to testify to tortures by our soldiers in the Philippines and to acts of cruelty there by our Army. None others need apply.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] wrote to Colonel Bridgman, telling him that he had been informed that he knew of orders, verbal or written, given by General Hughes approving the water cure. Colonel Bridgman wrote that he knew of no such thing, and so far as that witness is concerned "the subsequent proceedings interested" the minority no more.

Senators of the minority, it is your Army as much as it is ours. It is your duty as much as it is ours to get at the truth and to be just.

Upon what principle the minority of the committee, having learned that Colonel Bridgman would testify that he had known of no such thing as an officer authorizing the water cure in the Philippines, failed to call him to vindicate the Army to that extent I can not understand.

There has been before the committee one man who is admitted now to have testified falsely. He testified to our use of the dumdum bullet. Is that believed by the committee? He testified to acts of dishonor, indecency, shame, Mr. President, upon the part of certain officers over there—acts the very mention of which would carry pain into the home over here of those officers, wound the heart of the wife, and bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of the children and the accused far away, and defenseless for the time. Is that believed now to be true?

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin would not be unjust.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not mean to be.

Mr. DUBOIS. The minority of the committee insisted that the witness should not be allowed to give the testimony which he was giving. The majority of the committee wrung it from him under protest and over the protest of the minority of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I know of no man who would be less willing to do an unjust thing than the Senator from Idaho, but my recollection is that the testimony was given and went to the press. Am I wrong about it?

Mr. DUBOIS. It was given, but over the protest of the minority. When the witness started to give this testimony we objected that he had no right to give such testimony, but the majority of the committee insisted upon his giving it.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It was objected to because it was hearsay.

Mr. DUBOIS. Because it was hearsay.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The first statement to which the Senator from Idaho refers was a volunteer statement. The witness was asked about the water cure. He said he had witnessed a case at Igbaras, a case already testified to. Subsequently it appeared that he was not at Igbaras at the time. He broke off from that and volunteered a statement as to the conduct of certain officers who were in Igbaras at the time. The minority asked to have that statement stricken from the record. I was determined, believing that the man was testifying falsely, to have it go in the record and have it refuted. I was determined that at least some officers of the United States should have the opportunity to meet the foul attacks that were being made on them in that committee room, and I knew if it was stricken from the record that man's statement, in some form or other, would go out, for it was already a part of an interview published in a New York newspaper.

Mr. DUBOIS. That is all I wanted to say, that the majority, for purposes of their own, insisted on this testimony being in, and the minority did not want it, and that this is the only witness whose testimony has been impeached.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I simply want to say that I did not object to the action of the chairman of the committee or to the majority of the committee in insisting that this testimony should be made a part of the record if they chose to do so. Still I am satisfied that if the matter had been excluded it never would have gone to the press, because I know matters which have occurred in that committee in testimony never have gone to the press upon the request of representatives of the majority.

Mr. LODGE. It was in the press already, the Senator knows, as an interview.

Mr. CARMACK. Well, you could have kept it out of the press so far as it was not in the press. I merely wanted to say that I am entirely satisfied with the action of the committee. The statement was made upon hearsay. I did not believe then and I do not believe now that there is one word of truth in the statement of the witness. But I do want to protest against any attempt to make the testimony of this witness a standard by which the testimony of every other witness shall be judged.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. CARMACK. And if the Senator from Wisconsin is citing the testimony of this witness as characteristic of the testimony that has been brought before the committee, I want him to say if any other witness who has been brought before the committee has uttered one single word that is not the truth, and if so, what is the name of the witness and what is the testimony that is falsely sworn to? I say the testimony related by this witness upon hearsay is false, and I give no credence whatever to his testimony. I think the chairman of the committee acted properly, if he chose to do so, in insisting that the testimony should be refuted, inasmuch as it had already gone to the press of the country.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I am anxious more than anything else to be through. I do not think it would be fair to mention this case as a standard at all for the conduct of the committee on either side, and I do not do it for that purpose. I have been impressed with the notion that it is a grossly unfair thing, that it is out of harmony with the first principles of decency and justice to try Army officers, or any other men, while they are 8,000 miles away. The way to impeach the honor of a soldier in the Philippines is not before a committee of the Senate. I do not believe in trying a man in his absence. And if there is one man above another whose word I do not trust about an officer under whom he served, it is the fellow who came home mad about his rations.

Mr. CARMACK. The only man who complained about his rations that I am aware of was a man who was brought before the committee upon the request and summons of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not talking about who calls them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator excuse me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The recollection of the Senator from Tennessee is defective. The whole testimony of Mr. O'Brien, who was summoned at the request of the Senator from Tennessee, was to the effect that his rations were most defective. He talked about carabao soup, or something of that kind, and said constantly that his officers were thieves because he did not get enough to eat. The Senator remembers that testimony.

Mr. CARMACK. There was also the testimony of Mr. Boardman.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator said Boardman was the only witness not satisfied with his rations.

Mr. SPOONER. One man brought a couple of cans before the committee.

Mr. LODGE. That was Boardman.

Mr. SPOONER. He had "no use" for the United States Army anyhow, and said a man ought to be shot who furnished such rations. Those cans never had been opened, but he testified that one of them was spoiled. One was some sort of soup and the other was salmon. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH] took the cans for examination, and invited the witness, with one or two Senators, to lunch, and gave him some of that spoiled soup, and he ate it all and liked it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And wanted more.

Mr. SPOONER. He wanted more and got it.

Mr. HOAR. He ate it all, and none of the others got any?

Mr. SPOONER. He ate all that was in the dish. He wanted more in his dish and got it. He ate the soup; and then it was almost impossible, I have been told, to get him to stop eating that salmon.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I did not catch exactly the statement which was made. By whom was this witness subpœnaed?

Mr. LODGE. The witness came and volunteered, and I laid his name before the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. He was summoned to lunch by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH]. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I see that the Senator can answer more readily questions I do not ask than those which I ask. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I am through with this branch of the matter. I did not mean to take time to refer to it. All I mean to say is this: If there has been any violation of the rules of civilized warfare in the Philippines, it ought to be hunted up and punished. But I do not remember a question put by the Senators on the other side to these witnesses intended to elicit an answer which could be creditable to the Army. They sought to prove by every witness the general reputation of the army in the Philippines as to administering the water cure.

It remained for the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] mainly to draw from the witnesses, as he did from almost every witness, that they were instructed by the officers to treat the Filipinos kindly; that they treated them kindly as a rule and in a friendly way; that they treated the prisoners taken kindly; that they were fed just as our soldiers were fed; that they were taken care of in our hospitals just as our own men were who were ill or wounded, and that they had treatment by our surgeons. I do not recall that this testimony was mentioned by any Senator on the other side in his speeches attacking the army in the Philippines.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] seemed to think there is not any glory in what the soldiers have done in the Philippines. It has been a magnificent, brave Army, kindly, considerate, and helpful to that people. It has been officered by brave and humane men, with here and there a possible exception. It has been an uncomplaining Army, surrounded by novel conditions, dispersed, as I have said, throughout the archipelago, encircled by treachery and dangers of every description, subject constantly to ambush, deceived by the false use of flags of truce.

Yet I take it it will be found that in comparatively few instances have members of that Army been guilty of atrocity. I know it has been brave in battle. I find many reports here of the conduct of men and officers fine in the quality of gallantry, which would be applauded anywhere in the civilized world where courage and fidelity and uncomplaining fortitude are admired. Major Waller, who has been so bitterly attacked, led an expedition, November, 1901, for which he was highly commended by his superiors, and, with his officers, recommended for promotion, and the report of it can not be read by an American citizen, whether he believes in the war or does not, without a thrill of pride. It was as brave an assault upon an almost impregnable position as troops ever made. It is a fair illustration of the army in the Philippines—not of the bad men, not of the brutes, but of the army in the Philippines.

The ill-fated expedition in which he lost his way, a dozen of his men by starvation, and in a measure his own mind, was in January and February, 1902.

Here is one instance of bravery and sentiment after that awful massacre at Balangiga, when our men at the breakfast table were killed by those who had protested friendship, and by those whom they had trusted. The captain was killed, Lieutenant Bumpus was killed. American soldiers were lying slaughtered all around them. A little band, and a very little band, remained, and here is what a survivor says of it:

Sergeant Betrom, the only officer alive, assumed command, and those of us who were too weak to walk were carried down to the convent, where we hoped to find the officers alive.

They found them all dead—all killed, by friends, by these "children."

We found the sentry beheaded and the captain cut to pieces in front of the convent. The doctor lay in his bed murdered. Lieutenant Bumpus—

From whose father I have here a published letter, full of pathos, beseeching justice to the Army.

Lieutenant Bumpus was stretched over the threshold of his room literally hacked to pieces. We could not stop to tie up the wounds. Then we heard the goo-goos coming with the horns, and Sergeant Betrom put four men on the road to hold the passage down to the boats, where the wounded were being conveyed.

Meanwhile the goo-goos—

As they call them—

were trying to burn our quarters. A party of the boys under the lead of Private Claude Wingo started back to get the flag which was on a flagpole in front. He climbed up with the goo-goos around him and got the flag, but was mortally wounded when he slid down. The boys carried him, with the flag in his hand, to the boats. He died while we were going up the river.

There was that love of the flag and that pride of the soldier which does not permit men to be brutes and savages.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], referring to the sentence in General Chaffee's letter of September 30, 1901, to General Hughes, "It is our interest to disarm these people and to keep them disarmed, and any means to that end is advisable. It will probably cost us 100 lives to get the guns lost at Balangiga," endeavored to impress upon the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and failed, as anyone who knows the Senator from Georgia would expect him to fail, that Chaffee intended to authorize the use of the water cure for that purpose.

Although Chaffee is a man of unstained soldierly honor; although Chaffee had distinguished himself not only for bravery, but for humanity and power to restrain soldiers in China; although Chaffee stands to-day one of the noblest chieftains of the American Army, the Senator from Utah sought to find in this language ground for casting imputations upon his character as a soldier. The Senator said he read that "between the lines." Too much to the discredit of our Army in the Philippines has been "read between the lines." I do not like reading "between the lines." It means to find something there that is not written; it requires a mind filled with suspicion; it requires an eye which seeks to find something, but can not find it, yet reads it as if it were there.

"Reading between the lines" where honor is involved never is a fair thing. "Reading between the lines," Mr. President, has put the taint of suspicion upon the character of many a good woman and has put the taint of dishonor upon the fame of many a good man. I will not read between the lines, Mr. President, to find anything prejudicial to the honor of the American soldier in the Philippines or anywhere else, and I do not like the spirit which permits it.

Now, Mr. President, one thing more, and I have done. Senators demand that we tell them what our policy is in the Philippines. Here it is in this bill. We propose to make no foolish promises to the Filipinos at this juncture, or any other. They have had enough from Spain. We do not intend to furnish there an element of distraction. We do not intend to put there anything to promote agitation. We want the mind of the Filipino to be on progress, to be on the upbuilding of government, to be on the education of his children, to be on the excellence of our institutions, and upon the earnestness of our purpose to safeguard liberty in that land.

That is our policy. To go ahead; to feel our way, of course, but to go ahead with an honest purpose and with all the wisdom we can command. And we want your help, Senators of the minority. We are entitled to it. We will do better if we get it. If we can not get it, we are going along without you, and it will not be the first time.

What is your policy? This is your policy, this substitute bill:

SEC. 1. That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

I have always thought (and that is one reason why I thought we should have the title and the sovereignty) that there would come a time when they were capable of autonomous government, and yet not be able to maintain satisfactorily international relations. So I have felicitated the country upon the fact that we are in position, through the ratification of the treaty, to cede or grant to them the qualified sovereignty which might be needed for autonomous government, representative government, when they were fit for it, and yet retain in this government that part of the larger sovereignty and title which would enable us to control their foreign relations, and therefore safely protect them.

This substitute gives that possibility and that status all away, deliberately, I am bound to suppose:

SEC. 2. That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a government.

What brought this change over the spirit of your dream, Senators? Why have you omitted from this proposition that word which Mr. Bryan never omitted, as I recollect, that word which your substitute for the tariff bill did not omit? I can not understand it. I hope it will be explained. It is the word "stable" before the word "government." It is a word in this connection of overwhelming importance.

That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a government.

Does it make no difference to Senators whether it is a stable government or not? Does it make no difference to you whether it is a government able to maintain law and order or not? Which can protect life and liberty and property or not? Which can take care of the lives and interests of the people who have adhered to us over there? Why do you strike out this word "stable" and leave the safeguarding of McKinley's pledge of protection to all who came to us with friendship to a mere paper stipulation? Was it intended? Was it accidental?—

and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain and for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under the authority thereof, as hereinafter provided.

Under this substitute these guaranties are not to be found in a stable government; but you will see as I go along, and I shall take but a moment, what they are to be:

SEC. 3. That ninety days after the President of the United States shall have proclaimed that all armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago the United States Philippine Commission shall—

It would probably cease at once by the leaders who would want quickly to be able to establish a government not stable, and left to prey as the old oligarchy preyed upon all the people. If it shall not then cease, we are to suppress it, of course—shall make and promulgate rules and regulations for the holding of an election in the provinces of said archipelago for members of a convention, which convention when organized shall proceed to the adoption of a constitution for the government of said archipelago.

How do Senators get, under the Declaration of Independence, the right to force upon a people capable of establishing and maintaining a government, a constitutional government? That is an improvement on the Declaration of Independence! Nobody ever before, consulting the "consent of the governed" and legislating upon the theory that they are capable of establishing a government, has attempted to tell them precisely what form of government they should have. Suppose they need a stronger government than a constitutional republic, or suppose they think they do. You say they shall adopt a constitution for the government.

That all male inhabitants of said archipelago 21 years of age and over who speak and write either the English or Spanish languages or any of the native languages of the said archipelago, and who shall have resided therein for one year, shall be qualified to vote—shall be qualified to vote for members of the convention, and any person so qualified as an elector shall be qualified to become a member of said convention.

Inhabitants—

That takes in the Chinamen. Do you mean that?

The members of the said convention shall number 300, and shall be apportioned by the United States Philippine Commission among the several provinces of said archipelago so that the distribution shall be in proportion to their population as near as may be; and when the said apportionment has been determined upon, the said Commission shall by proclamation order an election of the members for said convention, to be held throughout the said archipelago at such time as shall be fixed by the said Commission—

It is a short time—

SEC. 4. That the members of the convention thus elected shall meet at the city of Manila on a day to be fixed—

And after organizing the convention they are to proceed to form a constitution and organize a government. This is the first constitution. The people are not to be consulted about it. It is not to be submitted to them. It is all to be done by the convention, and the convention is to organize the government. What a beautiful spectacle! Whom will you have in that convention? Is it intended on your basis of 300 to take in every tribe in the Philippine Archipelago? Does it include the Moros? Does it include the Igorrotes? Does it take in the head-hunters? Whom does it include? A photograph of this convention would be "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." [Laughter.]

and after organization the said convention shall proceed to form a constitution and organize such government as they may deem best adapted to promote the welfare and secure the peace and happiness of the inhabitants of said islands: Provided—

Now, here is the guaranty; here is the bond which is to protect the obligations which the United States has assumed to Spain; the bond which is to safeguard the obligations, sacred as the honor of your fireside, assumed by the United States to protect the men, women, and children who have been faithful and friendly to us against the Katipunan and assassination and threats and horrors which have prevailed in the Philippine Islands. How have you provided for safeguarding them here?—

Provided, That said convention shall provide by an ORDINANCE, irrevocable without the consent of the United States.

I am a little surprised that they should take care first of our right to military, naval, and coaling stations and terminal facilities for submarine cables.

Next:

To carry into effect the treaty obligations of the United States with the Kingdom of Spain, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights and property acquired under the authority of the United States.

And last, and apparently least, to safeguard and protect by paper assurance of a government, stable or not, made for a people who never ruled themselves, except for a time under our guidance—

Third. That no inhabitant of said archipelago shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her adherence to the United States.

And then we are to sail away. Ah, God help the amigos in the Philippine Islands. The men who have surrendered; the men who have gone into our service; the governors of the provinces, and the children and the women who have been kindly and friendly to our soldiers and to our schoolmasters; the great body of people who in spite of the Katipunan, who in spite of violence, in spite of assassination, in spite of tortures, and burials alive, have come to us with friendly greetings, with information, with help—you protect them how? By an irrevocable ordinance in or appended to this "constitution."

How would we know whether that was maintained or not? The poor amigo, the friend of America, slaughtered in the mango grove, tortured to death by the Katipunan in the elephant grass, or boloed in the mountain pass, lying there with his face to the sky and his lips sealed forever—we would not hear from him. The mountains, the crevasses, the jungles, the forests would not give up their secrets. The very officers of this "government," members of the Katipunan, many if not all of them, all the way through engaged in a tremendous effort to alienate that people from the United States! We sail away leaving them in the care of a quickly formed oligarchy and protected by an "ordinance!" What a noble redemption of a nation's pledges!

Mr. President, this nation, if it did that thing, would earn a new title, and the world would give that title to us and fasten it forever upon us—we would be the "COWARD NATION" of all the world. I would not for anything—and that is one of the obligations which bind us to go on—turn over for protection the thousands and hundreds of thousands of men, and women, and children there, the Macabebes and all the rest who have been friendly to us, to the tender mercies of the "government" provided for by this minority bill.

Who would enforce an observance of this? Is it contemplated that we are to go back there with war ships or an army some time if our obligations to Spain are not respected by that government? Is it intended, after having relinquished title and sovereignty and sailed away, carrying with us the flag as a symbol of liberty and protection to all that people and leaving it there as a symbol of ownership of coaling, naval, and military stations, that we are to go back and that we are to again train our guns against Manila—that we are again to take possession of this archipelago in order to protect the amigos? No; that is not intended. It is intended, Mr. President and Senators, if that were adopted, to sneak away from there like a coward and abandon them to their fate, knowing what their fate will be. The people of the United States will never do that thing.

Then, after all this, what is to be done? They are to have amnesty there. I do not care for that.

Provided, That such amnesty shall not apply to any who have violated the rules of civilized warfare or were guilty of murder or torture. That the latter, if any, shall be afforded a speedy trial for their offenses in the civil courts of said archipelago and be punished or acquitted, as the facts and law may warrant.

It is a wise foresight to give them authority to acquit if the facts warrant it, is it not?

That the President of the United States is hereby requested to negotiate an agreement between the United States, the said Philippine Archipelago—

That is, after we have quit, after we have surrendered the sovereignty, and have no longer any right there, except to take care of our coaling station and our naval station and our military station—

That the President of the United States is hereby requested to negotiate an agreement between the United States, the said Philippine Archipelago—

How would you negotiate an agreement with an archipelago, anyway? I know my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] does not know. What does the minority of the committee mean by that?

That the President of the United States is hereby requested to negotiate an agreement between the United States, the said Philippine Archipelago—

That is like negotiating an agreement with a tree or with a mountain—and Great Britain, Germany, France, and such other powers as he may deem best, providing for its perpetual neutrality and inviolability from all foreign interference, and also for equal opportunities of trade to foreign countries with said archipelago.

We have tried that on a small scale once. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in his speech the other day recalled the fact that we were not willing in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to enter into an alliance with other nations as to maintaining the neutrality of the isthmian canal, it being our canal. We intend now to take care of its neutrality ourselves; but that is not the only instance where we have tried agreements with other governments, and great governments, too, for joint neutrality. We tried it in Samoa with England and Germany, friends of ours. How did we get along? We came very near the "perilous edge," and it required a good deal of diplomacy to extricate ourselves from it.

Suppose those governments would not agree, as they would not, and we could not go into that if they would, what then? Senators forgot to provide here that before we sail away the President shall notify the nations who have subjects there with families and property of the hour of our departure that Germany, France, England, China and Japan, and Russia may have their war ships there to protect the interests of their own people.

What would happen? I will tell you what I think would happen, Mr. President. I do not think the nations would be willing that any one of them should have those islands. I think most of them sympathized with Spain. I think they will not fear the occupation and control of the Philippines by Spain. I have a notion—of course, I may be all wrong—that in the end, with the aid of these other governments, we having utterly withdrawn from it, the Philippines would again belong to Spain. What a glorious consummation! What a beautiful working out of the great ideal with which we inaugurated the war!

No, Mr. President, there is only one thing to do; and if our friends on the other side had control of this subject they would not vote for this proposition if we offered it. If the Democratic party ever succeeds in securing the control of this country—God save the mark——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the country.

Mr. SPOONER. What would they do about the Philippines, Mr. President? Would they adopt such a fatuous, fanciful, cowardly scheme as this? Not at all. They would do exactly what we are doing. They would say they did not like it; that as an original proposition they were opposed to it, but that "it is a legacy from the Republican party, and it is impossible with honor to withdraw from it."

So, Mr. President, we will pass this bill, with some amendments. We will go along with the discharge of our duty. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will, I hope, remain many years in the public service. Neither he nor I may, however, live to see this problem worked out as he wishes and as I wish, but I have abiding faith that it will be worked out and that when the time comes the message of this epoch, so far as it relates to the Philippines, will be what the Senator would wish and not in any wise that one which he would deplore.

I hope and pray that the time will come when we can truthfully say: We took, reluctantly, because by the fortunes of war we were there, the title to the Philippine Archipelago. We subdued resistance to our authority. We filled the islands with schools and with homes owned by the people. We established a school of government in which were taught the lessonof liberty restrained by law. We separated the church from the state. We lifted the dead hand of ecclesiastical ownership. We gave them our bill of rights and an independent judiciary to enforce its guaranties. "We emancipated the peasant from feudalism. We drove from the archipelago the scourge of ladronism. We encountered obstacles, but we surmounted them. We made mistakes, but we corrected them. We educated the inhabitants for self-government, and although occupying a territory of our own, we extended to them the principles of the Declaration of Independence, consulted, when they were fit, their wishes as to government, and aided them in the erection of a 'Republic in Asia.' We threw the shield of our protecting power around them. In the end we left our flag floating there among a grateful, friendly, and independent people—a sign of welcome, safety, and rest to the mariners of our Republic who sail the far Pacific and a reminder to the Filipinos and their children of the rich fulfillment of McKinley's prophecy that it would not lose 'its gift of benediction in its world-wide journey to their shores.'"

Mr. President, I regret to have occupied so much of the time of the Senate. I feel as if—and it has been inadvertent—I had taken almost an unfair advantage of the courtesy which was extended to me the other day; and if any Senator on the other side of the Chamber, or on this, shall suffer inconvenience for want of time to make such reply as he desires it will always be to me a source of deep regret.

APPENDIX.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 3. HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF THE PACIFIC AND EIGHTH ARMY CORPS, Manila Bay, P. I., August 9, 1898.

In view of the extraordinary conditions under which this army is operating, the commanding general desires to acquaint the officers and men composing it with the expectations which he entertains as to their conduct. You are assembled upon foreign soil, situated within the western confines of a vast ocean separating you from your native land. You have come not as despoilers and oppressors, but simply as the instruments of a strong, free Government, whose purposes are beneficent and which has declared itself in this war the champion of those oppressed by Spanish misrule.

It is therefore the intentions of this order to appeal directly to your pride in your position as representatives of a high civilization in the hope and with the firm conviction that you will so conduct yourselves in your relations with the inhabitants of these islands as to convince them of the lofty nature of the mission which you have come to execute.

It is not believed that any acts of pillage, rapine, or violence will be committed by soldiers or others in the employ of the United States; but should there be persons with this command who prove themselves unworthy of this confidence their acts will be considered not only as crimes against the sufferers, but as direct insult to the United States flag, and they will be punished on the spot with the maximum penalties known to military law.

By command of Major-General Merritt:

J. B. BABCOCK, Adjutant-General.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 3. HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF THE PACIFIC AND EIGHTH ARMY CORPS, Manila, P. I., February 7, 1899.

The burning of the houses or other property of the natives or other inhabitants of this island is prohibited, unless the same be used as shelter for the enemy or as places of concealment of contraband of war. The seizing of horses, carriages, carromatos, or wagons of any description by the troops or others belonging to this command is not authorised, except under great emergency, when receipts will be given therefor.

The lives and property of the inhabitants, native and foreign, will be protected, and they will be permitted to pursue their ordinary vocations without molestation.

By command of Major-General Otis.

THOMAS H. BARRY, Assistant Adjutant-General.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 31. HDQRS. FIRST DIVISION, EIGHTH ARMY CORPS, Manila, P. I., August 25, 1899.

To insure adequate protection to private property and proper reparation to injured parties, the attention of all officers of this command is directed to the following extract from General Orders, No. 35, of the War Department, of 1863, and full compliance with the practice therein formulated is enjoined upon all concerned:

"Under the fifty-fourth of the Rules and Articles of War it is made the duty of commanding officers to see reparation made to the party or parties injured from the pay of soldiers who are guilty of abuses or disorders committed against citizens.

"Upon proper representation of any citizen of wanton injury to his person or property, accompanied by satisfactory proof, the commanding officer of the troops will cause the damage to be assessed by a board of officers, the amount stopped against the pay of the offenders, and reparation made to the injured party. This proceeding will be independent of any trial or sentence by court-martial for the criminal offense."

The method of procedure is clearly set forth in Winthrop's Military Law, page 1019 and following, and will be duly observed in such cases as may arise.

In addition to this action, charges will be preferred against the guilty parties for the criminal offense.

By command of Major-General Lawton:

CLARENCE R. EDWARDS, Assistant Adjutant-General.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, February 6, 1902.

FIELD ORDERS, No. 2. HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISON, EIGHTH ARMY CORPS, Malolos, P. I., April 2, 1899.

I. Many of the citizens of Malolos and other towns in the vicinity desire to return to their abandoned houses within the lines of the Army.

The interests of the United States will be subserved by encouraging this disposition on the part of the natives in every way consistent with military interests.

All officers and soldiers are therefore urged to contribute to the end in view by considerate and kind treatment of these people, who are now part of and under the protection of the United States.

The controlling insurgent authorities have persistently represented the American soldiers as turbulent, undisciplined, and given to gross and licentious excesses upon helpless people.

In order to eradicate the effects of such mendacious misrepresentations it is especially necessary that all concerned should sedulously abstain from practices in any way calculated to annoy or engender the feelings of timidity or mistrust.

Unarmed natives will be permitted to enter our lines at all times during the day, with a view to the resumption of their usual avocations and occupancy of their houses.

By command of Major-General MacArthur:

PUTNAM BRADLEY STRONG, Assistant Adjutant-General.

A true copy.

BENJ. ALVORD, Captain, Twentieth Infantry, Aid, Acting Adjutant-General.

FIELD ORDERS, No. 26. HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, EIGHTH ARMY CORPS, Malolos, P. I., April 22, 1899.

It is believed that the enemy in considerable force intends to defend the town of Calumpit, the center of the first line of resistance being the railroad track crossing the Bagbag River and extending to the right and left along the thither banks of the Quingua, Calumpit, and Bagbag rivers. A second line is undoubtedly located along the Rio Grande.

* * * * * * *

VII. The purpose of the United States in these islands is beneficent. It is therefore one of the most important duties of American soldiers to assist in establishing friendly relations with the natives by kind and considerate treatment in all matters arising from personal contact. To exasperate individuals, or to burn or loot unprotected and abandoned houses or property is not criminal in itself, but tends to impede the policy of the United States and to defeat the very purpose which the Army is here to accomplish.

All concerned are accordingly strictly charged to practice becoming self-restraint in the premises, and it is made the special duty of all officers to prevent thoughtless and ignorant men from indulging in any of the practices enumerated, and to take necessary action to secure adequate punishment as prescribed by the Articles of War in the event of overt acts being committed by any member of the command, either during the contemplated actions against Calumpit or thereafter throughout the campaign.

VIII. When in hostile contact with the enemy an adversary with arms in his hands must be killed, if possible; but a wounded or surrendered opponent, who is incapable of doing any injury, is entitled to the most cordial courtesy and kindness. Any departures from the well-established amenities of the battlefield or the laws of war must and will be punished according to the nature of the case to the full extent of the law.

* * * * * * * *

By command of Major-General MacArthur:

PUTNAM BRADLEY STRONG, Assistant Adjutant-General.

GENERAL FIELD ORDERS, No. 50. HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, EIGHTH ARMY CORPS, In the Field, Tayug, November 27, 1899.

The circumstances and conditions which justified the seizing of materia- and supplies and the impressing of labor and transportation from the inhabitants of the country through which this command has recently been operating no longer existing, such practices will immediately cease. In future all labor, material, and supplies will be procured in the usual and legitimate way.

Should a temporary or special emergency arise, the commanding officer on the spot for the time being will give written orders setting forth the emergency and necessity, directing and limiting what labor, material, or property shall be taken, stating the parties and places from which it is taken. A copy of such order will be immediately forwarded to these headquarters.

All commanding officers of places or stations where troops are being held along the line over which this command is or has been operating will immediately take measures, by appointing boards of officers, inspectors, or otherwise, to ascertain and adjust all claims for damages or for property or supplies taken or used by the troops.

The commanding officer Third Brigade will give this his special attention and will cause each officer exercising command along his line to report action taken.

By command of Major-General Lawton:

CLARENCE R. EDWARDS, Lieutenant-Colonel Forty-seventh Infantry, U. S. Volunteers, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 3. HDQRS. BELL'S EXPEDITIONARY BRIGADE, FIRST DIVISION, EIGHTH ARMY CORPS, Transport Tartar, February 16, 1900.

1. The brigade commander directs that the orders of the department commander relative to the rights of peaceable citizens, appropriating of the property of any peaceable citizen, and entering the houses of any of the natives, except in the execution of orders, be rigidly enforced in this command. Anyone violating these orders will be severely dealt with.

All cases of violation of these orders will be reported promptly to these headquarters by the offender's immediate commanders.

2. In appropriating houses for the use of troops as may become necessary during the military operations, the commanding officers of the various columns operating in the field will see that it is done with as little inconvenience to and deprivation of the peaceable citizens as is consistent with the comfort of the troops.

3. When it becomes necessary for troops operating in the field to supply themselves from the resources of the country with rations and other supplies, receipts will invariably be given to the owners of the property when ownership is clearly established. In cases where the ownership is doubtful no receipt will be given, but a memorandum showing date, place, and quantity of stores taken will be kept by the commanding officer or a member of his staff and forwarded to brigade headquarters as early as possible.

By command of Brigadier-General Bell.

PETER MURRAY, Captain, Eighteenth Infantry, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, February 6, 1902.

CIRCULAR No. 4. HDQRS. DISTRICT OF SOUTHEASTERN LUZON, Nueva Caceres, P. I, April 28, 1900.

The troops of this district will exercise the greatest care and judgment in firing upon natives, in order that they may not fire upon women and children. The promiscuous burning of houses must also be avoided, and only such structures as are used for military purposes, such as storehouses, barracks, or insurrectionary meeting places, together with all food supplies, clothing, arms, and munitions of war intended for the use and subsistence of insurgents, will be destroyed.

By command of Brigadier-General Bell.

PETER MURRAY, Captain, Eighteenth Infantry, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, February 5, 1902.

CIRCULAR No. 6. HEADQUARTERS FIFTH DISTRICT, DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN LUZON, Angeles, P. I., July 14, 1900.

Owing to a large number of complaints reported to these headquarters of ill treatment of natives on the part of scouting parties in this district, commanding officers are hereby directed to caution their officers and men against harsh and illegitimate treatment of natives at all times.

A patient perseverance in legitimate methods is that policy best calculated to accomplish the desired results in the end. Officers and men of this command must distinctly understand that any harsh treatment of natives will be thoroughly investigated and all guilty persons punished.

By command of Brigadier-General Grant.

F. GUY KNABENSHUE,
First Lieutenant, Fifteenth Infantry, Aid-de-Camp.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, February 5, 1902.

CIRCULAR No. 3. HEADQUARTERS SIXTH SEPARATE BRIGADE, Tacloban, Leyte, P. I., February 22, 1902.

From reports received of late from every quarter of the island of Samar the brigade commander is constrained to the belief that active opposition to our occupation of the island has crumbled away.

There are undoubtedly a considerable number left in the mountains who remain in opposition to us, but their power of resistance has been shattered. We have in the past compelled them to respect our prowess in arms; we must in the future compel them to respect our generosity of heart toward a vanquished foe and our purity of purpose in waging war upon their misguided leaders and their followers.

Henceforth, then, it must be the labor of our officers and men to assist the loyal natives in repairing the ravages of war. No oportunity should be lost to instruct them that the Americans have come among them not to take from them any of the good things of life, but rather to give them more and in greater measure than they have ever enjoyed before.

But every member of the brigade is enjoined never to lose from sight the fact that he is dealing with a people which, through peculiarities of their island topography, have developed along lines quite divergent from those traveled by the great majority of their fellow-Filipinos. Our troops must always keep in mind that the standards of the natives of Samar were announced to the world at Balangiga. Watchfulness and kindliness must henceforth go hand in hand.

And now that the period when our troops must be constantly on the move has, in the judgment of the brigade commander, virtually passed, he takes pleasure in revoking his former order forbidding the residence within the brigade of the families of officers. In taking this step he utilizes the opportunity to thank those officers who have so cheerfully and loyally accepted the necessary restrictions imposed by him, and who have thus been deprived of even those simple comforts of home life which go so far toward reconciling them to duty in this isolated section of the Philippines.

By command of Brigadier-General Smith:

W. E. AYER,
Captain, Twelfth Infantry, Adjutant-General.

Official copy.

G. H. SHIELD, JR.,
First Lieutenant, Twelfth Infantry, Aid-de-Camp.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
April 15, 1902.

TELEGRAPHIC RECORD OF EVENTS OCCURRING IN THE PROVINCE OF SAMAR.

October 17.—General Hughes to Adjutant-General division: In absence General Smith on north coast, Colonel Robe sends following: "Lieutenant Wallace with 46 men of Schoeffel's company was, in the field on lower Gandara, attacked in their camp early yesterday morning by 400 bolomen, who were beaten off with loss in the detachment of 10 killed and 6 wounded. The enemy left 81 dead on the field."

CIRCULAR No. 3. HEADQUARTERS SIXTH SEPARATE BRIGADE, Tacloban, Leyte, P. I., February 22, 1902.

From the reports received of late from every quarter of the island of Samar the brigade commander is constrained to the belief that active opposition to our occupation of the island has crumbled away.

There are undoubtedly a considerable number left in the mountains who remain in opposition to us, but their power of resistance has been shattered. We have in the past compelled them to respect our prowess in arms; we must in the future compel them to respect our generosity of heart toward a vanquished foe and our purity of purpose in waging war upon their misguided leaders and their followers.

Henceforth, then, it must be the labor of our officers and men to assist the loyal natives in repairing the ravages of war. No opportunity should be lost to instruct them that the Americans have come among them not to take from them any of the good things of life, but rather to give them more and in greater measure than they have ever enjoyed before.

But every member of the brigade is enjoined never to lose from sight the fact that he is dealing with a people which, through peculiarities of their island topography, have developed along lines quite divergent from those traveled by the great majority of their fellow-Filipinos. Our troops must always keep in mind that the standards of the natives of Samar were announced to the world at Balangiga. Watchfulness and kindliness henceforth must go hand in hand.

And now that the period when our troops must be constantly on the move has, in the judgment of the brigade commander, virtually passed, he takes pleasure in revoking his former order forbidding the residence within the brigade of the families of officers. In taking this step he utilizes the opportunity to thank those officers who have so cheerfully and loyally accepted the necessary restrictions imposed by him and who have thus been deprived of even those simple comforts of home life which go so far toward reconciling them to duty in this isolated section of the Philippines.

By command of Brigadier-General Smith:

W. E. AYER,
Captain, Twelfth Infantry, Adjutant-General.

[Telegraphic circular No. 5.]

BATANGAS, P. I., December 13, 1901.

To all station commanders:

The United States Government, disregarding many provocations to do otherwise, has for three years exercised an extraordinary forbearance and patiently adhered to a magnanimous and benevolent policy toward the inhabitants of the territory garrisoned by this brigade.

Notwithstanding this fact, opposition to the Government has been persistently continued throughout this entire period by a majority of its inhabitants. The enemy, long realizing their inability to maintain themselves without the unanimous cooperation and support of the entire population, have, in order to keep up their useless struggle, established a reign of terror by resorting to atrocities and expedients which violate the well-known laws and usages of war as announced in General Orders, No. 100, Adjutant-General's Office, 1863, approved and published by order of President Lincoln, for the government of the armies of the United States in the field.

First. They have accepted local offices from the Government and taken the oath of allegiance solely for the purpose of improving their opportunities and facilities for deceiving American officials and treacherously aiding and assisting the cause of the insurrection, in violation of section 26.

Second. They have with bolos and other weapons killed helpless prisoners and soldiers lying on the ground, wholly disabled by wounds which prevented their defending themselves in any way, in violation of sections 49, 56, 61, and 71.

Third. In order to confuse their identity, and thereby be able the more safely to conduct their skulking operations, they have adopted the uniform of our Army and native troops without any plain, striking, and uniform mark of distinction of their own, in violation of section 63.

Fourth. They have improvised and secreted in the vicinity of roads and trails rudely constructed infernal machines propelling poisoned arrows or darts, in violation of section 70, thus placing themselves beyond the pale of the laws and usages of war.

Fifth. Men and squads of men without commission, without being part or portion of the regularly organized hostile army, without sharing continuously in the war, but with intermittent returns to their homes and avocations, and with frequent assumption of the semblance of peaceful pursuits, divesting themselves of the character and appearance of soldiers, have committed hostilities by fighting and making raids of various kinds, after which, concealing their arms, they have returned, posing as peaceful citizens, and secretly lived in the same towns with garrisons of our troops, in violation of section 82.

Sixth. Armed prowlers have stolen within the lines of our army to cut telegraph wires and destroy bridges. Armed assassins, designated and controlled by the enemy, have come, disguised as peaceful citizens, into the very presence of our garrisons and have assassinated, in broad daylight in crowded market places, persons unlawfully condemned to death by the enemy for being friendly to or assisting the legitimately organized government, the fear, sympathy, or cooperation of the entire population effectually preventing our apprehension and punishment of the assassin. This in violation of section 84.

Seventh. The apparently pacific inhabitants of towns occupied by the American army have treacherously risen in arms against it, in violation of section 85.

Eighth. A large percentage of the population, though owing allegiance to the American Government under the provisions of section 26, have acted as spies and war traitors, in violation of the provisions of sections 88, 90, and 92.

Ninth. A very great number of insurgent officials, soldiers, and other aiders and abettors of the insurrection, after voluntarily surrendering and after having been captured, have been pardoned and released from confinement upon taking the oath of allegiance or giving paroles, and have subsequently violated their oaths or paroles without scruple by again entering the service of the insurgent army or aiding or assisting the same, in violation of sections 26, 124, and 130.

Against but one of these flagrant violations of the laws of war, namely, murder, has the United States Government ever adjudged or executed the severe penalties authorized by the sections of the law above cited, in the vain hope that, by this exercise of forbearance and generosity, the people might be conciliated and become reconciled to and convinced of the benevolent purposes of the Government. Instead of having had the desired effect, however, this policy in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna has apparently failed to appeal to even the keenest and most appreciative intellects.

On the contrary, it has been interpreted by many as an evidence of weakness and fear, and, puffed up by a childish and ignorant conceit over what they are pleased to consider successful resistance of our power, the people have become so arrogant that they look down upon our Government and scorn its kindliest efforts at pacification. We consequently find ourselves operating in a thoroughly occupied terrain against the entire population, united in a hopeless struggle, using, conniving at, or tolerating barbarous methods which almost reach the limit in outraging the laws and usages of legitimate warfare.

The reckless expedients adopted by the enemy, especially the policy of intimidation and assassination, leaves to the brigade commander no other means of protecting either the lives of his subordinates or those of peaceful or friendly citizens, or the interests of his Government against the repetition of barbarous outrage except the enforcement of the penalties authorized by the above-cited laws of war, and he has reluctantly concluded it to be absolutely necessary to avail himself of the right of retaliation under the provisions of sections 59 and 148, whenever the duly and carefully ascertained conditions and circumstances warrant the same under the restrictions prescribed in section 28.

The brigade commander therefore announces for the information of all concerned that wherever prisoners or unarmed or defenseless Americans or natives friendly to the United States Government are murdered or assassinated for political reasons, and this fact can be established, it is his purpose to execute a prisoner of war under the authority contained in sections 59 and 148. This prisoner of war will be selected by lot from among the officers or prominent citizens held as prisoners of war and will be chosen, when practicable, from those who belong to the town where the murder or assassination occurred.

It is also his purpose to severely punish, in the same or a lesser degree, the commission of other acts denounced by the aforementioned articles. In this connection the attention of all American officers is invited to the last paragraph of section 29 and to the provisions of section 134. Commanding officers are authorized to enforce the provisions of this latter section whenever they may deem it just and practicable.

J. F. BELL,
Brigadier-General Commanding.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I would not intrude on the Senate at this time, but I am about to leave the Senate for a few days, by an order of the Senate itself, and I wish to say a few words about this bill. I assure Senators that what I shall have to say will be very brief.

On account of the fact that I have been studying the law all my life, I will ask the privilege of saying a few words in reference to the law as it arises in this bill, merely for the purpose of explaining my opinion on this bill.

As a general rule I do not favor radical changes in the form of government. This bill wrenches this republican Government from the rightful and accustomed course in dealing with Territories of the United States, and starts this Government of limited powers on the new, untried, and unauthorized experiment of establishing a vast colonial system on islands confessedly belonging to the United States.

This radical departure from the rightful and usual course is based upon the unfounded assumption that this Government is sovereign in the broad sense of the word. The framers of this bill seem to have lost sight of the fact that this Government is of limited powers.

Here, Mr. President, I will take the liberty of quoting from the old masters, the judges of our Supreme Court, what they have said in reference to this identical subject. Changes may be made in the law by the Congress of the United States, but I do not recognize the power of any court to change the law.

Chief Justice Marshall, in McCullock v. The State of Maryland (4 Wheaton, 405), declared:

This Government is acknowledged by all to be one of enumerated powers.

And the Supreme Court, in the case of United States v. Gratiot (14 Peters, 537), says:

And the Constitution of the United States (Article IV, section 3) provides that Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. The term "territory" as here used is merely descriptive of one kind of property and is equivalent to the word lands.

In Murphy v. Ramsay (114 U. S., pp. 14, 15), decided as follows:

The people of the United States, as sovereign owners of the national Territories, have supreme power over them and their inhabitants. In the exercise of this sovereign dominion they are represented by the Government of the United States, to whom all the powers of government over that subject have been delegated, subject only to such restrictions as are expressed in the Constitution or are necessarily implied in its terms.

In the Mormon Church v. The United States (136 U. S., pp. 42–44) our Supreme Court declared:

The power of Congress over the territory of the United States is general and plenary * * *

Doubtless Congress in legislating for the Territories would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments.

In Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan et al. (3 Howard, 225) the Supreme Court declared:

If it were true that the United States acquired the whole of Alabama from Spain, no consequences would result as those contended for. It can not be admitted that the King of Spain could, by treaty or otherwise, impart to the United States any of his royal prerogatives, and much less can it be admitted that they have capacity to receive or power to exercise them. Every nation acquiring territory by treaty or otherwise must hold it subject to the constitution and laws of its own government, and not according to those of the governments ceding it.

It is thus proved that this Government is not sovereign in the broad sense of that term, but that this Government is one of enumerated and limited powers. The people of the United States are sovereign, but they have delegated only a part of their sovereign authority to the United States Government, and they have delegated a part of their sovereignty to the several States, and still another part of their sovereignty they have reserved to themselves. And "the people" have so expressly declared in the Constitution of the United States, Article X. And the constitution of each State in the Union proves the same proposition.

Every sovereign State, in the broad sense, can grant titles of nobility. The United States can not.

So sovereign States can establish a religion and can change such establishment. The Government of the United States can do neither.

States fully sovereign can define and punish crimes throughout the land. But the power of the United States to define and punish crimes in the States is greatly limited.

Now, as the United States derives all of its powers from the Constitution, and as every officer of the United States—legislative, executive, and judicial—is required to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, it seems impossible for the United States to govern any land lawfully unless that government is in conformity to the Constitution of the United States. If such government is in violation of any limitation of our Constitution, it is a wrong and a usurpation to that extent.

This bill as introduced seemed to ignore the Constitution as far as it guards personal rights. True, the bill has been amended so as to attempt to guard some of these constitutional personal rights by legislative enactment. Other of these constitutional personal rights are left without that feeble protection. But the whole bill proceeds on the theory that the Constitution has no force or effect in the Philippine Islands.

Independent of the constitutional objection there is a most radical departure here from the practice of the United States, from the foundation of the Government, concerning the disposition of the public lands.

Heretofore all public lands have been surveyed, governed, and disposed of under laws passed by Congress. No Territorial government has ever been authorized to sell the public lands.

Why this unwise and radical departure from a custom as old as the United States? I do not know. No one has explained it. But this bill gives full power to dispose by fee simple title to the public lands to the Commission.

Most of the Senators never lived under a carpetbag government, but those of you who have been governed by carpetbaggers can not fail to see what will be the effect of this bill when enacted.

If this bill be enacted, and you could and did give to the real carpetbagger his choice to go to heaven or the Philippine Islands, he would not hesitate. He would say promptly, "I will go to the Philippines."

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer a proposed amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire, in five or ten minutes, to call attention to one or two vital points in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. Of course I do not want to go into an elaborate discussion of the matter again, and I do not desire to take it up in the absence of the Senator. So I will take my chances later on in the debate under the fifteen-minute rule.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish to say but a word or two. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin in the midst of his speech just concluded. I therefore sought to obtain the floor at the close of the speech, but could not then be recognized. He made an allusion to the Confederate soldiers who have seats in this Chamber. Lest a misconception of our position might result from the language used, those of us on this side—and I beg to state I do not assume to speak for all of them, but a majority—have but one idea in respect to this matter. The clear intimation from what he said is that the Confederate soldiers on this side who had gone through the war and knew what war was had not criticised the Army in this debate and did not sympathize with the course pursued by the minority.

I wish, for one, sir, to say that I sympathize most heartily with the struggles of the minority to get at the truth in this matter. I do not believe that the minority desire to cast a slur upon the Army of the United States. I would not sympathize with them in it if they did. It is not my purpose to criticise the Army as an army.

But I do not desire that the Senator from Wisconsin should classify all the Confederate soldiers who are here, myself among the number, as condemning the minority of the committee. We condemn those who have violated the law, who have disregarded the proper spirit that should govern an army, and we uphold the minority of the committee in the effort they are making to get at the truth. We wish to see them dare do right.

That is my idea about it. While I want to sustain them, I want likewise to condemn, as I have done before in a speech I made at the beginning of this matter, improper conduct on the part of those in authority. It is not the men against whom complaint is made, but it is the officers; and the good officers of the Army are delighted to see condemnation visited upon those who have acted badly and are unworthy. Indeed, Mr. President, it is the policy of the Government and not the conduct of the Army that we condemn, not that all Army officers are free from censure, but we feel assured that the manly, worthy ones condemn cruelty and inhumanity.

Entertaining that opinion of the Army, we only condemn those who have disregarded the laws of civilized warfare and indulged in cruelty and inhumanity in their dealing with the weak and helpless. That every ex-Confederate soldier in this Chamber, though silent he may be, vigorously condemns. The Senator from Wisconsin did pay us some compliments, for which we thank him. I am one of those who feel it an honor to have belonged to the Confederate army, and in that, I think, I speak for all, and, as I said, we do not want to be classified as men condemning an army which does its duty. We know that upon both sides during the civil war there were excesses, as in all wars, and we are prepared to make some conciliation in respect thereto. But we condemn wrong wherever we may find it, and we like to see it ferreted out and properly punished. We therefore, as a class, sustain the vigorous and aggressive efforts to ferret out the truth. We do not understand the minority of the committee to assail the entire Army, but only those officers who have violated the rules of civilized warfare and have been guilty of wanton cruelty. In that we, as representative Confederate soldiers, uphold the minority of the committee, and say, "Hew to the line and let the chips fall where they may."

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi obtained the floor.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me to call up a bill?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 2764) for the relief of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company $14,443.93 for transportation of passengers and freight for the account of the United States in the years 1896 to 1898, inclusive, and until November 7, in the year 1899, through the unwarranted treatment of its railroad in the States of Kentucky and Tennessee as land-aided.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I said some two weeks ago what I had to say on this bill, and I did not intend to say anything further, but there is one feature of the bill upon which I should like to express my views, and that is the provision which proposes to turn over the lands of the archipelago to agricultural corporations. I believe by the amendment of the bill there is a limit of 40 acres as the amount that the head of a family or any citizen of the islands can purchase, but there is practically no limit to the land which may be purchased by corporations. In the main, corporations are limited to 5,000 acres; but, as is known to every man, a corporation is an artificial person, and two men may form as many corporations as they can find names for. So they can practically get possession, if they can furnish the money to buy the land, of hundreds of thousands of acres of agricultural land in the Philippine Archipelago.

It strikes me that, this being so, and the islands being described as those being very desirable for the production of sugar, what is known as the sugar trust might get possession of the islands. After a while they would obtain the passage of an act permitting sugar to come in either free or at a very reduced rate, which would compete with the sugar producers of this country and not benefit the sugar consumers, for the reason that the consumers would only consume the refined sugar, and the tariff prohibiting the coming of that in would keep up the price of sugar to the consumer and admit it into the country for the sugar trust. I intended to elaborate that point, but I shall not do so now.

I rose just now, Mr. President, because in the long and able speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] he took occasion to say that the malignity that had been manifested in this debate on the part of the Democratic Senators had gone to the extent that I had attacked General Funston's conduct in Cuba. I know that the kind nature and courteous manner and disposition of the Senator from Wisconsin ordinarily would not have permitted him to use that language, and he did not mean what he said when he spoke of the malignity of the debate on the part of Senators upon the Democratic side the Chamber.

I have not manifested any malignity in this debate. I feel no spirit of malignity against General Funston. But I can not truthfully say that I do not feel indignant at the language of General Funston in attributing falsehood to private soldiers and noncommissioned officers who returned to this country from the Philippine Islands. I can not truthfully say that I do not feel a deep sense of indignation against General Otis when he charged falsehood against the entire American soldiers in the Philippine Islands, in writing back, whether to their mothers or fathers or brothers or sisters or their wives or any of their families.

These charges are made and they are in the documents sent to the Senate by the Secretary of War. While this wholesale slander has been uttered by American generals against the American soldiery, we have heard American Senators stand upon this floor for hours, assailing those who undertake to get at the facts in the Philippine Islands as being slanderers of the American Army. While we have heard so much on the part of Republican Senators about the honor and chivalry and character of the American officers, not one word has escaped from the lips of those Senators denouncing these utterances. They can not say that they did not know of it, because they did. It was called to the attention of the Senate by myself on the 22d day of February. It was again called to the attention of the Senate by me on the 15th and 16th days of this month.

So it can not be said that the Senators did not know that these slanderous utterances come from the tongue or the pen of generals in the American Army against the private soldiers. It may be that it was overlooked; but they were ready at all times to make note of anything that was said against any officer, not as a slander against the officers of the Army generally, but when anything was said as being proved against any officer they were ready to take note. However, no note was made by any Senator on the Republican side of the Chamber of the utterances, and the slanderous utterances, of these two generals—General Fuston and General Otis—against the enlisted men in the Army.

I say it is not just to charge that the Democratic Senators on this floor are slandering the Army or have slandered the Army. It is not just because it is not true as a matter of fact. A slander is a tale or report maliciously uttered, tending to injure the reputation of some other person. There has never been a tale or report maliciously uttered by any Senator in this Chamber on this side against the Army or against any member of the Army. There has been a disposition and a desire and a purpose to get at the facts with reference to what has been done in the Philippine Archipelago, but there has been no slander of anyone, and to charge that the Democratic Senators are slandering the Army, whether it is charged by the platforms of the Republican party, or whether it is charged by Republican Senators or anybody else, is itself a slander.

Mr. President, I did not get up to answer the Senator by way of argument. That will take more time than there is now at my disposal. I feel that the speech can be entirely answered. For instance, the Senator spent a long and eloquent part of his speech in attempting to show that it is the position of the Democratic minority in this Chamber that the vote on the treaty of peace is the cause of the trouble in the Philippine Islands. No Democratic Senator has ever taken that position, but it is an easier position to answer than the position which Democratic Senators have taken. No Democratic Senator has charged that the vote on the treaty caused the trouble, but it is the policy of the Republican party afterwards that caused it.

The Senator has stated that he deprecates the trying of a man in his absence on an ex parte hearing when he is 10,000 miles away and not present to speak for himself. That is in reference to General Smith's order, which he says is sub judice, but which practically is not sub judice at this time. Yet the Senator has tried Aguinaldo on ex parte statements when he is eight or ten thousand miles from here and a prisoner of war, not only not allowed to come here and answer for himself, but not allowed his liberty.

To sustain that charge he has read what he calls a patent of nobility, in which it is stated that the dispatches from two colonels in the Filipino service are photographed and that the paper which is submitted is a photographic copy of what they wrote. But when it comes to Aguinaldo himself they do not pretend to photograph what he wrote, but give the certificate of some unknown man, especially unknown to the Senate, that it is in his handwriting.

I want to read on just one point, and then I shall have done with reference to what is charged to be slanders upon the American Army. Here is a statement from General MacArthur passing in review upon the action of the court-martial upon Capt. George W. Brandle and Second Lieut. Alvin S. Perkins, where it was charged and found that Brandle had hung two Filipino prisoners without law, without excuse.

They were persons who were entitled to his protection, and he had hung them by the neck for about ten seconds, and it was found to be true that he had done so. They struck out the specification which said that it gave physical pain to these parties, but inserted that it gave them mental anguish.

Lieutenant Perkins was tried and convicted of hanging by the neck for about ten seconds one prisoner who was entitled to protection when a prisoner. They struck out all that part of the specification which said it gave him physical pain and they inserted that it gave him mental anguish. In reviewing that General MacArthur says, on page 2110 of the evidence before the Committee on the Philippines:

> In the foregoing cases of Capt. George W. Brandle and Second Lieut. Alvin S. Perkins, Twenty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, the findings and sentences are approved with the remark that the reviewing authority is of the opinion that in the case of the former a finding of guilty on each of the specifications as laid without the exceptions and substitutions made by the court would have been in full accord with the evidence of record, and in the case of the latter a finding of guilty on each of the specifications would have been warranted by the evidence with only a formal modification in the second, third, fourth, and fifth specifications to the effect that the real names of the natives therein referred to were unknown to the court, and without the exceptions and substitutions made by the court.
>
> It is obvious that a cruel and illegal assault was perpetrated by these accused officers upon certain native prisoners; an assault not only criminal in itself under the laws of war, but in remote consequences well calculated to defeat a carefully considered policy and to inflict permanent injury upon essential interests of the nation. The purpose of the United States in these islands is to introduce and plant republican institutions, based upon the beneficent principles of the Constitution. Success in this great and inspiring undertaking depends largely upon securing, through a sense of self-interest and gratitude, the confidence and attachment of the Filipino people. It is therefore indispensable to the true interests of the Republic that Americans in the archipelago, especially officers of the Army, shall in all transactions of business, war, and administration maintain the highest standards of American civilization by practicing dignity and decorum in all intercourse with the natives.
>
> In order to emphasize an important principle it is necessary to severely censure all that is contrary to it.

And that is all that the Senate is trying to do.

> This is more especially true when the vital interests of a great nation are jeopardized by the thoughtless and illegal actions of these accused officers, who for the time being were exercising its authority.
>
> It is believed that the sentence of the court will be sufficiently executed by reminding Captain Brandle and Lieutenant Perkins that by reckless defiance of the ethics of their profession they have inflicted incalculable injury upon the interests of their country and have also cast an unwarranted aspersion upon the reputation of the United States Army for sentiments of honor and humanity

Captain Brandle and Lieutenant Perkins will be released from arrest and returned to duty.

That is by order of Major-General MacArthur. Mark you, it is considered sufficient just to remind these officers that they have done wrong by the hanging of people by the neck who were prisoners and entitled to protection. I suppose if they had been privates they would have probably been sent to prison, as I showed the other day the distinction that was made in the case of an officer of the Army who had committed a crime exactly like that committed by a private soldier, when the officer was remanded to his command with a reduction of 30 files in rank and the private soldier was hung.

It would be well for the Senator from Wisconsin and other Senators, when they are talking about appealing letters that they get from fathers to protect their sons in the Army, to give some kind of protection to the private soldier and have somebody say something in his behalf.

I have read this to show what this general said about the conduct of those officers. Now, I will read from a report, not from the testimony of witnesses. This is not from a witness before the Philippine Committee, and the question does not arise whether it is true or false. It does not leave any room to question the veracity of any witness who testified before the committee, but it is the report of an officer appointed to a civil office under the Administration.

Here is the report of a district attorney. He is not called a district attorney here, but he is an attorney specially appointed to prosecute, and he corresponds to district attorney. It is a report to the attorney-general of the Philippine Islands, appointed under the present Administration, and therefore it can not be said to be an utterance of a Democrat, whether he be a Senator or a private citizen, and it is not the utterance of a witness summoned at the instance of a Democrat.

He goes on in a long report here to the attorney-general, and he reports that Captain Ryan, who had control of this section of the country and was in charge of it as a military officer, had turned over to him certain prisoners whom he charged with being guilty of treason. Mark you, this was before the bill was passed. It was before last November, so that they were only guilty of an offense which would subject them upon conviction to a penalty of from one month to two years and four months' imprisonment. Here is what Mr. Rhode, an officer of this Administration, said on page 2200 of the testimony taken before the committee.

I would not quite feel justified in offering these statements as evidence against the prisoners, for the following reasons: First, they were obtained in the following manner: Each individual before being examined had his arms tied to his body in such a manner that he could not protect his head when falling. Then he was stood up erect upon a wooden floor and had his legs knocked from under him; then his body was lifted and his head jolted against the floor once more, whereupon he was stood upon his head in a bucket of water for a certain length of time, and then was examined. This process was employed three times in succession before Ubaldo Abing made his statement. Secondly, the prisoners do not speak Spanish, and Captain Ryan as well as his Visayan interpreter speak Spanish deficiently, so that the real meaning of the statements made is not clear.

Now, let us see what kind of a man the interpreter was:

Juan de los Santos, in speaking of his marksmanship and his good revolver, stated that he had killed three persons with it, all "while attempting to escape," a phrase of particular significance under the Spanish rule. This man, I was told by Genero Ossmis, the only Spaniard in Jiminez, and who knows about Santos's antecedents, has served eight years of penal servitude in Iligan for murder committed in Guam. This man Santos acted as interpreter at the taking of the statements alluded to.

There is a statement, not from a witness before the Philippine Committee, but an official statement from an officer. "But," says the Senator from Wisconsin, "whenever the American people see these cruelties practiced upon Filipinos they will look beyond and see the cruelties practiced on O'Hearn, who was tied up to a stake and burned until he was nearly dead and then boloed to death." If they look into it as they ought, and as I believe they will do, they will see just exactly what the Senator has said, but they will not rest the inquiry there. They will look to see what is the cause of all this and what brought it about.

When they begin to look into that question they will see that it was not the vote which ratified the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, but it was the policy which provoked a war of criminal aggression upon those people; that to this policy is chargeable all of the cruelties which have been practiced upon the Filipinos and upon the American soldiers, and that the blood of every American soldier which has been shed in the Philippine Islands is at the doors of those who are responsible for that policy. So is the loss of health of every soldier who has lost it or will lose his health in the Philippine Archipelago laid at the door of those who are responsible for this Philippine policy. So is the loss of mind of those who are bereft of reason because of the fact that they have been carried over to the Philippine Archipelago as soldiers in a cruel war, prosecuting a policy that is not beneficial to the United States, and could not be to the entire people of the United States, and which could only be beneficial to those who would exploit the islands.

Mr. President, these are some of the consequences. Upon the authors of this policy the loss of life and the loss of health and reason of soldiers in those islands will be visited. Not only that, but if the people look at this matter in a just light, they will visit upon those who are responsible for this policy every tear that has been shed, every agonizing groan that has been uttered by those who have been separated from their loved ones, because of this cruel policy, which can bring no good to anybody.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to offer a substitute for section 5 and have it printed. I do not care about its being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment to section 5 of the bill, which he asks may be printed. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CARMACK obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he will allow me to move a recess.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that we take a recess until 8 o'clock, with the understanding that no business is to be transacted to-night, no votes to be taken, and nothing to be done except speaking. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock, no business to be transacted.

Mr. FORAKER. Before that motion is put, I should like to make an inquiry. Is there any other Senator than the Senator from Tennessee who desires to speak this evening on either side, if the Senator knows?

Mr. CARMACK. Do you mean on this side?

Mr. FORAKER. On either side. I do not know of any myself. The reason why I make the inquiry is because I wanted, if I could find a convenient time, to occupy a few minutes myself.

Mr. CARMACK. I will see that the Senator from Ohio occupies the time he desires, if I have to yield to him myself to-night.

Mr. FORAKER. If only the Senator from Tennessee is to speak, I will try to follow him and occupy the few minutes that I desire.

Mr. CARMACK. We shall arrange it so that the Senator from Ohio can speak.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] indicated his desire to occupy a little time this evening. There will be no difficulty, however.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Massachusetts said he would take his chances under the fifteen-minute rule.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator from Massachusetts does not intend to speak to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Colorado to move that the Senate now take a recess until 8 o'clock?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; until 8 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.).

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

DISEASES OF THE HORSE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I wish to report a concurrent resolution from the Committee on Printing to correct an error in a joint resolution which has been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Chair will suggest to the Senator from New York that the agreement was that no business should be transacted this evening.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is a mere formal matter, and will not take any time. It will not occupy two minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York reports from the Committee on Printing a concurrent resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills in the enrollment of the joint resolution (S. R. 92) providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report of the Diseases of the Horse, be authorized to correct the title thereof by striking out the words "fifty thousand" and inserting the words "two hundred thousand," so as to make the same correspond with the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said resolution concurred in by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

LIMITATION OF TERRITORIAL INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9334) to amend an act to prohibit the passage of local laws in the Territories, to limit the Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the agreement reached at the afternoon session was that at the evening session no business should be transacted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No business of any kind?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Except the matter of discussing the pending bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I took it for granted that nobody was ready to proceed; and I am quite sure, as far as our side is concerned, there will be no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know that there is any objection to that bill, but there is a growing feeling in the Senate that unanimous-consent agreements are being abused. I do not think there ought to be any violation of any of these agreements under any circumstances.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As a matter of course, if there is any objection I will withdraw the request.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know that there is any objection to the bill at all, but I think Senators ought to observe unanimous-consent agreements when they are made, and nothing should be done contrary to such agreements when made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no desire to violate any unanimous-consent agreement, and I have withdrawn my request.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was a unanimous-consent agreement that nothing should be done at the session this evening, as I understand it, except the delivery of a speech by the Senator from Tennessee and a speech by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the Chair informed me, and when the Chair did so inform me there was not on my part any further request to proceed with the bill to which I referred.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was not criticising the action of the Senator at all.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

[Mr. CARMACK addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. RAWLINS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 10 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 2, 1902, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 2, 1902.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut) announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 1346) granting a pension to Adelbert L. Orr, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEAN presented petitions of Edward S. Brown Post, No. 44, Department of New Jersey, Grand Army of the Republic; of the McKinley Club of Elizabeth, and of the board of fire commissioners of Hoboken, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Avon, N. J., praying for the appointment of a commission to test the practical workings of woman's suffrage in various Western States; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Slate Lick, Pa., and of Carona, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in immigrant stations; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented petitions of the board of directors of the Second National Bank of Atlantic City and of the board of directors of the Atlantic Safe Deposit and Trust Company, of Atlantic City, in the State of New Jersey, praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a public building at that place; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Orange, N. J., remonstrating against the granting of reciprocity concessions and the ratification of reciprocity treaties inimical to American interests; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Turn Verein, of Atlantic City, N. J., expressing sympathy for the people of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented the petitions of William M. Casselberry, of Haddonfield, and of Mrs. J. L. Allen, of Pennington, in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction and maintenance of suitable buildings at the United States military posts and for the betterment of the daily rations of the soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented a petition of the congregation of the Reformed Church of Paramus, of Ridgewood, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation appropriating $1,000,000 for the construction and maintenance of post exchanges; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented petitions of Local Division No. 10, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of Jersey City; of Wilson Lodge, No. 273, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Junction, and of Newark Lodge, No. 219, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Newark, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented a memorial of Camden Division, No. 22, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Camden, N. J., remonstrating against the operations of the so-called beef trust and praying for the repeal of the tariff on meats; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented petitions of the Liquor Dealers' Protective Association of Orange; of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of Rahway; of the West Hoboken Liquor Dealers' Association, of West Hoboken; of the German-American Liquor Dealers' Association, of Elizabeth, and of the German Liquor Dealers' Association, of Trenton, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. DRYDEN) presented petitions of the Essex Trades' Council, of Newark; of Iron Molders' Local Union No. 99, of Bridgeton; of the commissioners of public education of Hoboken, and of the trustees of the Free Public Library, of Hoboken, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the compensation of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Maritime Exchange of Provincetown, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men of the Life-Saving Service and to their widows and minor children, and also to fix the compensation of the district superintendents in the Life-Saving Service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON presented a memorial of the Aurora Turnverein Society, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of the United Mine Workers' Local Union, of Ledford; of Local Union No. 10, of Mapleton; of Local Union No. 633, of Athens; of Federal Labor Union No. 9718, of New Burnside; of Local Union No. 86, of Tilton; of Local Union No. 563, of East Peoria; of the Local Union of Bloomington; of Local Union No. 848, of Donkville; of Local Union No. 1457, of Etherley; of Local Union No. 1064, of Morris; of Local Union No. 1782, of Braidwood; of Local Union No. 1880, of Marion; of Local Union No. 1941, of Johnson City; of the Local Union of Iglesby; of Local Union No. 2, of Spring Valley; of Local Union No. 34, of Wanlock; of Local Union No. 67, of Breese; of Local Union No. 221, of Cable; of Local Union No. 300, of Nilwood; of Local Union No. 309, of Hunrod; of Local Union No. 344, of Greenview; of Local Union No. 348, of Nillery; of Local Union No. 362, of Coal Valley; of Local Union No. 388, of Peoria; of Local Union No. 492, of Springfield; of Local Union No. 522, of Pekin; of Local Union No. 575, of Pinckneyville; of Local Union No. 646, of Taylorville; of Local Union No. 654, of Tallula; of Local Union No. 668, of Worden; of Local Union No. 683, of Murphysboro; of Local Union No. 694, of Girard; of Local Union No. 696, of Middle Grove; of Local Union No. 702, of Carlinville; of Local Union No. 707, of Bartonville; of Local Union No. 710, of Carterville; of Local Union No. 715, of Odin; of Local Union No.

734, of Peoria; of Local Union No. 736, of Spring Valley; of Local Union No. 743, of Lebanon; of Local Union No. 750, of Lynns Station; of Local Union No. 757, of Elkville; of Local Union No. 800, of Streator; of Local Union No. 848, of Donkville; of Local Union No. 859, of Belleville; of Local Union No. 860, of St. Davids; of Local Union No. 883, of Canton; of Local Union No. 892, of Kingston; of Local Union No. 895, of Roanoke; of Local Union No. 951, of Sato; of Local Union No. 982, of Fredonia; of Local Union No. 719, of Edinburg; of Local Union No. 992, of Kangley; of Local Union No. 1104, of Sherrard; of Local Union No. 1207, of Tamaroa, and of Local Union No. 1391, of Thayer, all of the American Federation of Labor, in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented petitions of J. K. Howard, of Livonia; of E. V. Fitzpatrick, of Portland, and of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Elkhart, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in immigrant stations; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of the Wabash Baking Powder Company, of Wabash; of Hulman & Co., of Terre Haute, and of Joseph Strong & Co., of Terre Haute, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the passage of the so-called pure-food bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Westfield Monthly Meeting of Friends, of Westfield, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the National Capitol; which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

He also presented a petition of Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, of Elkhart, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the removal of overhead telephone wires in the city of Washington, and for such extension of underground conduits within the fire limits and overhead wires beyond such limits as will give telephone service to many citizens of the District who are not now able to secure it; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 33, of Indianapolis; of Local Union No. 190, of Buckeye; of Local Union No. 1491, of Sophia; of Local Union No. 1634, of Petersburg; of Local Union No. 1698, of Bicknell; of Local Union No. 1713, of Dugger; of Local Union No. 1744, of Williamsport; of Local Union No. 1755, of Mecca; of Local Union No. 1895, of Embury; of Local Union No. 1952, of Raglesville; of Local Union No. 21, of Princeton; of Local Union No. 24, of Rosedale; of Local Union No. 134, of Alum Cave; of Local Union No. 139, of Lyford; of Local Union No. 198, of Seelyville; of Local Union No. 255, of Dugger; of Local Union No. 277, of Turner; of Local Union No. 390, of Evansville; of Local Union No. 412, of Hymera; of Local Union No. 418, of Seelyville; of Local Union No. 25, of Linton; of Local Union No. 713, of Sophia; of Local Union No. 724, of Heckland; of Local Union No. 756, of Hymera; of Local Union No. 780, of Linton; of Local Union No. 966, of Edwardsport; of Local Union No. 1095, of Dugger; of Local Union No. 1065, of Evansville; of Local Union No. 1075, of Staunton; of Local Union No. 1111, of Eagle; of Local Union No. 1131, of Staunton; of Local Union No. 1156, of Brazil; of Local Union No. 1177, of Vincennes; of Local Union No. 1243, of Boonville; of Local Union No. 1335, of Clinton; of Local Union No. 1383, of Linton; of Local Union No. 1410, of Winslow; of Local Union No. 1411, of Burnett; of local unions of Cannelburg, Midland, Montgomery, and Lyons; of Local Union No. 1460, of Midland, all of the United Mine Workers of America, and State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Trades and Labor Council of Peru, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an increase in the compensation of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Main Lodge, No. 545, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of East St. Louis, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a petition of Local Division No. 29, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the National Hardwood Lumber Association, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5931) granting an increase of pension to Clara E. Daniels, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5944) granting an increase of pension to Frederick W. Willey, alias William F. Willey;

A bill (H. R. 13178) granting a pension to William F. Bowden;

A bill (H. R. 10794) granting a pension to Thomas H. Devitt;

A bill (H. R. 13063) granting an increase of pension to Julia B. Shurtleff; and

A bill (H. R. 13683) granting an increase of pension to Ella B. S. Mannix.

Mr. DEPEW, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6016) for the suppression of train robbery in the Territories of the United States and elsewhere, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. SIMON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11599) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions, to report it favorably without amendment, and I am also instructed by the committee to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon, under instructions from the Committee on the Judiciary, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has reported the bill——

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state it.

Mr. LODGE. I think the understanding was absolute, under the unanimous-consent agreement, that there should be no business done until the completion of the Philippines government bill except conference reports and ordinary routine business.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think we ought to take up any other bill under the unanimous-consent agreement. I have no objection in the world to the bill, but I think it is a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement. If Senators on the other side disagree with me, of course I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the bill favorably and asked unanimous consent for its consideration, which was given. Of course it is open to objection at any time. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not rise to object. I simply wish to inquire what is this district. There is nothing indicated in the bill, that I can gather from hearing it read, to show whether it is a judicial district or what kind of a district it is. I suppose that it is a judicial district.

Mr. SIMON. I will state to the Senator from Florida that the bill undertakes to redivide the judicial district of the Territory.

Mr. MALLORY. I think it had better so state.

Mr. SIMON. It undertakes to divide the business into several districts. It is a matter of some importance that the bill should be passed early.

Mr. HOAR. It comes from the Department.

Mr. SIMON. Yes; the bill was prepared in the Department of Justice.

Mr. LODGE. There is no objection to the bill, I understand.

Mr. SIMON. I was instructed by the committee to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. MALLORY. I only call attention to the fact that there is nothing in the bill to indicate, as far as I have been able to hear, that it is a judicial district which is referred to.

Mr. SIMON. Yes; it is a judicial district.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not know anything about this bill, whether it is in proper form or whether it ought to be passed, but I do know that there has been an understanding in the Senate by which unanimous consent was given that there should be nothing considered but the Philippines government bill, except conference reports. I believe such unanimous-consent agreements facilitate the public business very much, but when there is a practical violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, as the passage of this bill or the passage of anything else would be, it seems to me that it goes very far toward putting things in such a condition here that unanimous-consent agreements will not be hereafter given. I think when unanimous consent is given in the Senate to carry out a particular line it ought to be strictly adhered to and there ought not to be any deviation from it.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. SIMON. If that is the view of Senators, I ask leave to withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request for the immediate consideration of the bill is withdrawn, and it goes to the Calendar.

AMANDA C. MITCHELL.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. COCKRELL on the 29th ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Amanda C. Mitchell, mother of Phelps Mitchell, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 6034) raising the rank of Chief Engineer David Smith on the retired list of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6035) granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Oliver; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 6036) regulating the duties and fixing the compensation of the customs inspectors at the port of Chicago; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6037) for the relief of W. L. Clifford, a letter carrier in the service of the Post-Office Department of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6038) for the establishment of a juvenile court in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6039) to create the district of Sabine, in the State of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 6040) granting an increase of pension to John W. Craine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 6041) granting an increase of pension to Joel H. Warren; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the bill, I present the petition of Dr. Joel H. Warren, together with the affidavits of Dr. L. C. Miller and Dr. N. J. Rains, and also letters from the War Department and Pension Office. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 109) authorizing the President of the United States to cause medals to be struck and presented to officers and soldiers and others who served in the Spanish war, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MALLORY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the construction of a fireproof building for Bureau of Equipment at Pensacola Navy-Yard, Fla., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THE ISTHMIAN CANAL.

On motion of Mr. KITTREDGE, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 783, part 2, first session Fifty-seventh Congress, being additional views of the minority of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals on the bill of the House of Representatives to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

FRANCES L. ACKLEY.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9290) granting a pension to Frances L. Ackley, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

J. H GALLINGER,
GEORGE TURNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. N. W. RUMPLE,
ELIAS DEEMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

KATHARINE RAINS PAUL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11249) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TURNER were appointed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2295.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I will be unable to be here to-morrow and to vote upon this bill, but I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. MCENERY). I am compelled to leave next week for the balance of the session and that arrangement was made based upon the optimism of the steering committee early in the session that they would close the present session of Congress on the 10th of June. That hopeful view seems now hardly possible of realization. Therefore I have secured a pair for the balance of the session.

I wish also to give notice that I will offer a few remarks on Saturday morning, after the routine morning hour, on Senate bill 492, for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains.

Mr. LODGE. On behalf of the majority of the committee, I desire to offer certain amendments to perfect the bill, of which I gave notice when I was last up.

On page 2, line 15, before the word "herein," I move to insert the word "and;" so as to read "thereby and herein."

That was a mistake in printing the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Where is that?

Mr. LODGE. It was an amendment that I put in the other day, suggested, I think, by the Senator from Iowa. He suggested putting in "and herein," and in printing it the word "and" was left out.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see the words in line 15.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts from what print of the bill he is reading?

Mr. LODGE. I am reading from the last print of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. May 29.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the print with all the amendments as adopted, the Chair understands.

Mr. LODGE. These amendments, I will say, are made on the last print, ordered by the Senate on the 29th of May, and when they are adopted I will ask another print to be made to-day, so that Senators may have it on their desks to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 7, line 8, at the end of section 6, I move, after the word "government," to change the period to a colon and to insert:

Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, employ the service of the Census Bureau in compiling and promulgating the statistical information above provided for, and may commit to such Bureau any part or portion of such labor as to him may seem wise.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 9, line 13, after the word "provided," I move to insert "shall classify and;" so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

That the government of the Philippines, subject to the provisions of this act and except as hereinafter provided, shall classify and shall make rules and regulations for the lease, sale, or other disposition of the public lands other than timber or mineral lands, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 19, page 9, I move to strike out the words "next ensuing session" and to insert in lieu the words "first or second session thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. At the end of line 21 on page 9 I move to strike out the word "session" and to insert the word "period;" so as to read:

They shall at the close of such period have the force and effect, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 10, line 18, I move to strike out "8" and insert "12;" so as to read, "Section 12." It is a wrong reference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. At the top of page 11 I move to strike out the words:

Nor more than 5,000 acres to any corporation or association of persons.

And to insert:

But no such land shall be leased, let, or demised to any corporation until a law regulating the disposition of the public lands shall have been enacted under the provisions of section 12.

Mr. HOAR. By whom is that law to be enacted?

Mr. LODGE. By the Philippine Commission, to be drafted and submitted to the President for his approval, and to Congress. It can not become a law without the approval of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any objection to putting in the amendment "and approved as herein provided?"

Mr. LODGE. "Enacted and approved." That is all it means, and I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. "As provided in section 12," I would say.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; "as provided in section 12."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words:

Nor more than five thousand acres to any corporation or association of persons.

And insert:

But no such land shall be leased, let, or demised to any corporation until a law regulating the disposition of the public lands shall have been enacted and approved as provided in section 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 4——

Mr. CULBERSON. I was called out of the Chamber when the amendment on page 9, line 13, was adopted. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that it seems to me it would be better to provide the classification which shall be made. The bill as amended reads, "and except as herein provided, shall classify and shall make rules and regulations for the lease, sale, or other disposition of the public lands."

Now, what do we mean by classify? To classify into what character of lands? Are the lands to be classified as agricultural or as nonagricultural, or into what classification is the lands to be divided? The bill as amended provides for the lease, sale, or other disposition of public lands other than timber or mineral lands.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. And then that those lands shall be classified. How? What character of classification shall be made?

Mr. LODGE. As the section now reads it applies, of course, and is intended to apply, only to the agricultural lands, as a separate provision is made for timber and mineral lands. The idea of the committee, suggested, I believe, by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH], who has visited the islands and is familiar also with the classification of land in the West, is that there is great variety in these agricultural lands. Some are very valuable, others less valuable, and others are of comparatively little value. The Senator from Nebraska thought they ought to be classified, because the classification might have an important effect on the law which was to be drafted regulating the grants, and that it was important that Congress should know about the classification of the different grades of agricultural lands.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is what I desire that the bill shall state. Otherwise there is no direction here as to what classification shall be made. The Philippine Commission is directed to classify the lands. To classify them with reference to what?

Mr. LODGE. We can not undertake here to direct the Commission on the spot as to how they shall classify lands about which we know nothing. What we want to get is a classification made by intelligent and informed persons on the spot. The word I think is clear and is understood in the matter of classifying agricultural lands.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President, I should like to further state, in answer to the Senator from Texas, that in our hearings held to prepare the irrigation bill the matter of classification of lands came up for discussion. That bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior in this country shall classify the lands, and in his judgment shall allot 40 acres under some circumstances as the amount to be given to one person, and 160 acres in another case to another person, all depending upon the productiveness of the land. In the southwestern part of the United States where they grow fruit 40 acres——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DIETRICH. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. The statement of the Senator suggests to me that if the bill would read "that the Philippine Commission shall classify the land according to productiveness"——

Mr. DIETRICH. And the kinds of products that grow in various localities.

Mr. CULBERSON. It would make it plainer. Otherwise the Commission are simply required to classify the land without reference to the character of the land or the productiveness of it, or whether it is watered land or dry land, as we call it in the Southwest. I simply make the suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. I think before I complete these amendments and the bill goes to the printer the Senator can perhaps draft two or three words which we can add to the amendment. I have no objection to making that specification.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. On page 11, line 4, at the end of the line, I move to strike out "thirteen" and insert "fourteen." That is to correct a section reading.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 12, line 10, after the word "land," I move to insert "sufficient for a mill site, not to exceed 10 acres."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 11, page 12, I move to strike out the words "sufficient for a mill site."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 13, line 7, I move to strike out the words "fourteen, to" and to insert "nineteen, shall." That is simply to correct a section reference.

Mr. FORAKER. That amendment refers to the provision in regard to mining claims, I believe?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no doubt the amendment is a proper one to make. I shall support it. But before it is passed upon I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to make some remarks which I have been struggling for several days to find opportunity to make, but unavailingly.

In the course of some remarks I made in this Chamber on the 14th day of May I had occasion to make use of some editorials from various Democratic newspapers over the country. Among others I made use of some editorials taken from the Denver News, for which editorials the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] has told us he is responsible.

I made use of those editorials, Mr. President, as I announced at the time, only for the purpose of defending the action of the Administration of President McKinley in acquiring and retaining the Philippine Islands and in pursuing the policy which has been pursued there ever since we came into possession of them. I had no thought in making use of those editorials of misquoting anybody, or of putting anyone in any false light, or of misrepresenting in any sense the position of anyone.

I did not undertake, and I did not pretend, when I was making use of those editorials, to quote all the editorials in any one of the many papers I quoted from, neither did I undertake to quote all of any editorial from which I made quotation. I did not feel that it was necessary that I should do so, any more than I would deem it necessary, if I should see fit to make a quotation from the speech made by the Senator from Colorado, to which I am going to say something in reply, to quote his whole speech. I quoted enough, as I thought, to properly and fairly show the views entertained at that time by those from whom I quoted, and I so announced.

My quotations were necessarily brief, because I did not want to encumber the RECORD nor encumber my speech with unduly extended quotations from even so able an editorial writer as is the editorial writer for the Denver News.

Notwithstanding I made that announcement, when the junior Senator from Colorado came to make his speech a few days later he took occasion to say that I had omitted to quote an editorial published in his paper on the 2d day of December, 1898; that I had omitted to quote from certain other editorials which had appeared in his paper, and that I had not quoted all of the editorials from which I had taken extracts, and he stated in that connection that I was guilty of a lack of candor and a lack of frankness in making these omissions, and insisted upon that, although I at the time called his attention to the language he employed.

I quote as follows from the speech of the Senator from Colorado:

It is a matter of little moment who wrote the editorials in question. It is sufficient for me to say that I control the paper. I was then and I am now responsible for all its editorial utterances.

But, Mr. President, I have something to say about these editorials in addition to what the Senator from Ohio has said. Until about the 1st day of December, 1898—some two months before the ratification of the Spanish treaty—I favored holding the Philippines and I advocated the government of the Philippines by the United States.

I would not take any time upon this subject were it not that I feel I am but a type of hundreds of thousands of the American people in their changing views upon our duty in the Philippines, commencing with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay, proceeding with the treaty of peace, the annexation of the islands, and the government of those islands, accompanied by their subjugation. It would be a waste of time upon my part to continue reference to these matters if I could not in a proper way show how those views came to be held, what brought about a change in views, if a change occurred, and what it was that led to the stand and induced the changes of mind.

I said that up to the 1st day of December the News consistently advocated the holding of the Philippine Islands, but from that time, commencing with the 2d day of December, two months before the ratification of the treaty, the News and myself, to the best of our ability, advocated a change of policy and stood for the independence of the Philippine Islands and in opposition to all of the conduct that has marked the possession of them by the United States since.

I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that at the time the change I referred to occurred there was no election pending. The election of 1898 had but just occurred, and none was to be held for nearly two years.

There was no Democratic President in office; there was no patronage to seek; there were no friends to reward; it was almost two years from a Presidential election. I can say with truth that the change was made out of no other cause than that of an honest conviction that the policy the Administration had adopted was a bad one both for our country and the archipelago.

Later, in the course of the Senator's speech, the following colloquy occurred:

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will excuse me for interrupting him. I was unavoidably occupied for the moment, and I did not get the date of the change given by the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. The latter part of November, or early in December.

Mr. FORAKER. Eighteen hundred and ninety-eight?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; in 1898.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator to state that he himself and his paper, the Denver News, advocated the acquisition and retention of the Philippine Islands down to November or the beginning of December, 1898.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. And that at that time both changed?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. But that neither the Senator, as the owner and the responsible party connected with the paper, nor the paper itself, has advocated that policy since?

Mr. PATTERSON. Never since; and I say that in the face of the editorials printed in the Denver News in the month of February and read by the Senator; and I will show to the Senate that in reading these editorials the Senator from Ohio was not candid, for he omitted editorials and omitted parts of editorials that would have shown the matter differently from what he sought to convey.

Further along he emphasized this statement, as follows:

As to the putting of other editorials in the RECORD, I will say that until the latter part of November, 1898, the Senator will find many editorials in the News that he did not read along the same line as those that he did read; but after the latter part of November he will find none that point in that direction. Those that he read and many that he omitted, printed after November, 1898, show beyond peradventure the attitude of the paper to be as I state. I find in going over the pages of the Denver News that the identical articles I have in mind bore somebody's check mark, as if whover had gone over the files for the purposes of the Senator from Ohio had checked them off and knew what they were.

Now, Mr. President, let me not be misunderstood. Until the latter part of November, 1898, it was as I have stated; but on the 2d day of December the first editorial opposing expansion was printed, and that editorial had a check mark upon it which indicated that it had been seen; but that editorial was not quoted. The honorable Senator skipped the editorial of December 2 and went to the editorial of December 7. Let me read the editorial in the Denver News of December 2, so that Senators may pass judgment upon it. It is entitled "Management of the Philippines."

He stated further that if I had quoted all of these editorials and all of each of the editorials I quoted from it would have been made to appear plainly, as he then asserted without qualification, that from and after the 2d day of December, 1898, neither he nor his paper, although they favored the ratification of the treaty, and in that way the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, ever favored for the Filipinos anything except only the independence of the Filipinos occupying those islands. In other words, he said they changed their policy on the 2d day of December, 1898, and so announced, and that I ought to have made that appear.

His attention was called to some editorials quoted by me on the 6th and 7th days of February, immediately after the fighting at Manila had commenced. He admitted that they were of the same general character as those appearing before the 2d day of December, 1898, but said at the time when they were published he was under the erroneous impression that the Filipinos were the aggressors instead of the Americans being the aggressors, as he says he has since learned, and that immediately thereafter, as soon as he learned of the facts, he again changed back to the position he had taken on the 2d day of December, 1898, and never, with the exception of these two or three editorials in February, having relation to that conflict at Manila, has there appeared in his paper anything except only a consistent demand for the independence of the Filipinos.

Mr. President, under such a challenge as that, for that is what it amounts to, if that is not too harsh a term, I have taken occasion to examine the files of the Denver News, in order, in the first place, that I might do justice to the Senator from Colorado, if I have done him any injustice, by correcting what I have said and by supplying anything I have omitted that I should not have omitted.

Instead of the Senator from Colorado being sustained by the result of that examination, I find that whatever may have been my lack of candor or frankness, the record will make a pretty strong charge in that respect against the junior Senator from Colorado, if he knew at the time when he made the statement he did of what had appeared in his own newspaper and most of which had probably been written by him, for, Mr. President, omitting very much that I would under other circumstances elaborate and dwell upon if I had the time, I find instead of taking a departure, and so announcing on the 2d day of December, 1898, the Senator took no such departure at that time, but simply on that day commenced to wobble. Up to that time he had been a firm, unqualified, enthusiastic, and zealous advocate of the acquisition and retention of the Philippine Islands and the subordination of everybody there to the authority of our Government, but on that date the Senator in the long editorial, which he himself has put into the RECORD, and to which I point for proof of what I say, after discussing the various troublesome questions arising in consequence of our acquisition, stated in conclusion the various claims of various people as to what should be our policy, but does not align himself with either one of the parties from whom he quotes, or either of the classes from whom he quotes as to what this policy was thereafter to be, and does not announce or even intimate a change of attitude. All that indicates that he was probably "wavering" is his parade of the troubles we were to be called on to meet.

The last paragraph of this editorial shows all I state. I quote it, as follows:

These are but a few of the perplexing questions connected with the possession of our new accessions. What to do with them or how to manage them is, therefore, a problem worthy of the best thought of the best Americans. There are those who suggest that what should be done is, having ratified the treaty, we proceed as rapidly as possible to give freedom to the Philippines. Establish an American protectorate, make person and property secure, require political and religious freedom, and their people, in the setting up of a republic, see that the republic is maintained, obtain reasonable commercial and other advantages to the United States that shall be perpetual, retain ample facilities for coaling stations and cable terminals there and in the Ladrones and Carolines. Startle the civilized world with the most sublimely grand and magnanimous national deed that history has ever recorded Wrest a nation from its oppressors and say to it, "Now you are free."

That the Senator was, at most, only wavering is shown by the following editorial, which appeared in the Denver Daily News, December 21, 1898:

TELLER AND THE PHILIPPINES.

* * * * * * *

It is a proof of the newness of the problems involved in the Philippine question that neither the President nor any of his responsible advisers nor Mr. Bryan nor Mr. TELLER nor any other man in high position has attempted to outline a positive plan for the disposition of the islands. As yet we are so far from discussing details that the chief principles have scarcely been defined.

It is manifest from this editorial that the Senator was in doubt, and that others upon whom he had been accustomed to rely as to political policies were also in trouble as to what should be our policy in the Philippines. It may be that the doubt or trouble that finds this expression in his paper on the 21st of December was caused by an interview with Mr. Bryan published a few days before, and with respect to which, on the 15th of December, 1898, the Denver News editorially said:

Mr. Bryan is opposed to expansion in the sense of acquiring territory at a great distance, in a tropical latitude, and peopled by tropical races. His opinion is worthy of respect. We know that he is not the man to reach any conclusion which is not based upon earnest thought and a desire to be right.

In arranging the final disposition of the Philippines it may be that a plan can be found which will secure for the United States the benefits while avoiding the perplexities of complete sovereignty.

This doubt and uncertainty continued without any change, so far as the examination I have made discloses, until the February editorials quoted in my former speech. They were, it will be remembered, very warlike. But they did not long continue. He again began to waver. I say "waver," because I do not observe any positive change of attitude. The Senator has told us that he not only changed, but why. Whatever the cause may be, it is at least a coincidence worthy of note that on the 12th day of February, Mr. W. J. Bryan, with his accustomed ability and earnestness, in a signed interview that appeared in all the papers, reviewed the situation as to the Philippines and raised the cry of imperialism, with the manifest purpose of making it a national party issue. This interview did not lay down in precise terms what the Democratic policy would be, but closed with this significant statement:

What next? Investigation, discussion, action.

That was the position of Mr. Bryan on the 12th day of February, 1899, immediately after the ratification of the treaty. Investigation, discussion, and then action. What action he only indicated.

The interview was a warning to all Democrats not to go too far in the support of the Government's Philippine policy.

The Denver News, following that interview, in a series of editorials commenced to discuss and to investigate. One of these, which is characteristic of all and which shows how perplexed the editorial mind seemed to be, appeared in the paper, entitled "Filipinos are fighters." In it he went on to point out the very great difficulty ahead of us to conquer the Filipinos and subject everybody in the Philippine Islands to the authority of the United States. I would be glad to read it in full, but I will put it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and now only call attention to it, as I must do as to others, with the remark that even in connection with this there is no taking of any definite, pronounced position by this paper.

The article referred to is as follows:

[Denver Daily News, March 20, 1899.]

FILIPINOS ARE FIGHTERS.

Aguinaldo's insurgents are putting up a desperate fight. They are aided by the heat and the character of the country. Where they obtained so large a supply of modern arms and ammunition is a mystery in this country, although it may be known in official circles. The campaign is demonstrating the heroism and gallantry of the American soldiers, both volunteers and regulars. The insurgents will be beaten and the authority of the United States fully established in the islands. Whatever criticisms may be passed on the diplomacy that led up to this campaign, the direct result was the attack on our lines by Aguinaldo. That has left nothing to do but to fight it out.

Mr. FORAKER. Passing much that I would like to use, I come to April 5, 1899. The fighting commenced in February, 1899, and that is when the Denver News went back to the zealous advocacy of the assertion of our authority and the subordination of everybody in the Philippine Islands to it.

Immediately following that fighting, on the 12th of February, 1899, Mr. Bryan put out his interview, and then, as I said, the character of the editorials to which I have referred, which were not pronounced as to a definite policy but were only of a wavering and uncertain character, followed until this editorial of April 5, 1899. I will put this editorial in the RECORD to show whether after the 2d day of December, 1898, there was an advocacy of the independence at all times of the Filipinos in this paper.

Before I read it let me call attention to the fact that on the 1st day of April, 1899, just after the editorial was put out describing the Filipinos as such great fighters that it would be perhaps impossible, or well-nigh so, to conquer them, we captured Malolos, and the next thing the Denver News heard from the seat of war was that the capital of the insurgents had been captured and that their army had been put to rout, and it looked as though the whole thing was at an end. Now, see the character of the editorial we have:

[Editorial, Denver Daily News, April 5, 1899.]

THE FILIPINO CAMPAIGN.

The campaign in the Philippines may be regarded as ended. Aguinaldo's army is disbanding, and he is to all intents and purposes a fugitive. The most hopeful sign of the situation is the returning of the natives to their homes and the decoration of their houses with white flags. They were doubtless to a large extent terrorized by Aguinaldo and his army, and now that it is so completely beaten and disorganized and having seen practical demonstrations of American fighting, they will be all the more willing to submit to the authority of the United States. In all respects this campaign has been a brilliant one and has displayed the capacity of the American soldier for war. To officers and privates alike let full honor and praise be given.

Now that the natives are convinced of the power of the United States and of its stern determination to maintain that power, it ought to be an easy matter to pacify the islands and assure their inhabitants of the pacific intentions and beneficent purposes of the American Government. The Commission—has arrived there at an opportune time, and is able to definitely announce the intentions and desires of this Government.

That is the Schurman Commission—

If they did announce those intentions and had announced those intentions, it would be to establish our authority as supreme in the islands.

This action ought to have a salutary effect on the Filipinos, who, freed from the odious tyranny and oppressive exactions and taxation of Spain, can look forward to a local government of their own, under the guidance and protection of the United States. But this guidance and protection must imply absolute obedience to the national power. This is the first lesson that the Filipinos must learn. Indeed, it is the first step that will enable them to become prepared for self-government. What liberty actually means they have not the remotest conception. When they know that it is a respect for law and order, for personal rights, and civic equality, then they will begin to appreciate the efforts that the United States is taking for the bettering of their condition. National independence is something beyond their ability to maintain at present, and can only come with the changed conditions that will follow American rule. To abrogate that now would be simply to open the archipelago to a prolonged war, in which every European power would strive to gain the mastery over them.

On the 7th day of April, 1899, he printed another editorial along the same line, entitled "Capacity for self-government," which is as follows:

CAPACITY FOR SELF-GOVERNMENT.

There is very much loose talk from the platforms and very many shallow editorials in various newspapers about self-government and independence for Cubans and Filipinos. Admitting that it all comes from the best of motives, the opinion must be expressed that much of it is based on the want of a proper knowledge or appreciation of existing conditions among those peoples.

Capacity for self-government is not a matter of sudden growth in any nation or among any people. It comes only as the result of long training and experience. In the new possessions which have fallen into our hands this lesson of self-government will have to be taught to their inhabitants. The native Cubans had thought that they would be permitted to retaliate on the Spanish residents for the tyranny they had suffered at the hands of the Madrid Government, and were surprised and indignant when they discovered that the United States would not permit such action. Their idea of freedom and independence was the privilege to practice the same despotism on others as they had endured. They did not understand that civil freedom to all means equal rights to all.

The same is substantially true of the Filipinos. Many of them, and no doubt honestly, entertain the belief that American occupation means the same kind of a rule that Spain enforced. The proclamation of the American Commission ought to undeceive them. By it the United States is pledged to grant civil and religious liberty, local self-government, an efficient and economical administration of the revenues for local purposes, a strict and impartial administration of justice, educational privileges, and whatever else may contribute to the welfare and progress of the Philippine people. But how to conduct their own affairs and administer government so as to secure the results is something these people will have to learn by observation and experience.

In the closing paragraph he employs this language:

In carrying to the people of these islands the gift of civil liberty and free institutions the United States can not be termed an oppressor. The talk of such men as convened in Boston the other evening is the rankest kind of lunacy. Freedom for any race or any people that do not know what freedom is and how to use it or what it means is the most dangerous and destructive thing that can be put in their hands.

I put this entire editorial in the RECORD so that I may not be guilty of a lack of candor or frankness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I can not question the Chair, but I commenced just 2 minutes after half past 11 and it now lacks 2 minutes of being a quarter to 12. I noted the time with great care. I took up some of the time on the amendment which I am discussing. I should like——

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the Senator from Ohio may have the two minutes or four minutes, whichever it is.

Mr. FORAKER. I am much obliged to the Senator from Colorado. If the Chair will let me have it I will hurry through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to say that the present occupant of the chair looked at the clock and thought that he was right in stating that the Senator's fifteen minutes had expired.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that I have four minutes further, so that I will have time enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I will have to omit under pressure of want of time many of these editorials that I wanted to put in the RECORD. This one, and I call the attention of my distinguished friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to it, is an editorial in which a great many liberties are taken with a distinguished citizen of his State. I am reading it in order that the Senate may see its spirit and may determine whether in this paper there was nothing but an advocacy of independence for the Filipinos from and after December 2, 1898. He says as to Edward Atkinson.

[Editorial. Denver Daily News, May 3, 1899.]

EDWARD ATKINSON—TRAITOR.

Edward Atkinson has laid himself liable to an indictment and prosecution for treason. This notorious resident of Boston has long been a public nuisance. As an adept at making figures lie, he is the most successful man who ever posed as an "economist." For several years he has been denouncing the advocates of free silver coinage as "anarchists" and "repudiationists," and as men who would "betray the national honor," for no other reason than that they demanded a return of the national policy to the system of coinage and finance established by Hamilton and Jefferson during the Presidency of Washington.

Having apparently exhausted his vocabulary of hard names and tirade perhaps of prevarication on the silver issue, he has more recently turned his attention to the expansion question, and with the same want of sense that has characterized his treatment of free silver coinage, he has abused and misrepresented all who differed from him, going at last one step too far and laying himself liable to an action for treason. In this case it is to be hoped that the United States district attorney will be instructed to proceed against him.

This is a country of free speech and free thought, and Mr. Atkinson has, with other citizens of the United States, a perfect right to enjoy those privileges. But when it comes to inciting mutiny and sedition among the soldiers of the United States, and to advising and encouraging rebellion against the authority of the United States, that is different. Such action is treasonable. The question is not whether expansion or antiexpansion is the proper national policy—that is a fair matter of discussion, and upon it the best of citizens and patriots may disagree; but no good citizen, no sincere patriot will, as this man Atkinson is charged with doing, incite mutiny, sedition, insurrection, or rebellion against the civil or military power of the National Government. If, as seems to be a well-established fact, Atkinson has done this, let him be punished as the law directs.

The sending of this man to the penitentiary and the consequent stopping of his antisilver, antiexpansion, alleged "economic" fulminations in the press and magazines would be a national benefit. It would abate a common nuisance and place beyond the power of doing further harm to many people the most accomplished mathematical liar of the age.

Now, Mr. President, I have almost concluded what I wish to put into the RECORD. My time is up. I suppose, however, under the rule I have a right to move to amend this amendment and to speak on that motion.

Mr. BERRY. Oh, no, Mr. President; there was no such understanding as that Senators could move amendments and continue their speeches upon them.

Mr. ALLISON. I will suggest to the Senator from Ohio that there will be some other amendments to be offered to the bill, upon which he may be heard.

Mr. FORAKER. I can speak on any other amendment, I understand, but I am almost through with what I was going to say. I am not going to say as much as I intended to, owing to the rule of limitation of debate under which we are proceeding, but I shall be glad if I may be allowed to put in two or three editorials without reading.

Mr. LODGE. I take it there will be ample time for the Senator to speak when other amendments come in. But I should be glad to complete the committee amendments, so that we may have a reprint of the bill by to-morrow with all of the amendments which have thus far been made.

Mr. FORAKER. Then, I will say, without stopping to read them, that if the Senate will give me leave to insert the other editorials to which I have referred so that they can appear in the RECORD I shall be content. I want them inserted together. They will show that the Denver News had many editorials long after the treaty was ratified in which it did not advocate the independence of the Filipinos, but the supreme authority of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The editorial articles referred to are as follows:

[Editorial, Denver Daily News, May 19, 1899.]

END IS NEAR.

It looks as if the end of the Filipino rebellion is near. The last move of Aguinaldo in sending envoys to make peace on some terms indicates that he begins to realize that he is beaten and that the sooner he gives up the better. The Government has but one condition—unconditional surrender with a pledge of amnesty. Considering the long death roll and the cost of the campaign, no other nation on earth would grant such terms.

While these negotiations are going on Hale, Funston, and Lawton will be cleaning up the last remnants of the insurgent army. Gallant as other generals have shown themselves to be, Lawton is the man especially fitted to track down the scattering bands of Filipinos. His experience in the Apache campaign was a demonstration of his knowledge of this kind of warfare. Indifferent to hunger, thirst, fatigue, or hardship of any kind, not knowing what fear is, tireless in pursuit of an enemy, Geronimo said that Lawton never ate, never slept, "but all the heap fight." This is the man with the flying column, and the country need not be surprised at any time to hear that this Apache fighter has brought in Aguinaldo as a prisoner. If once directly on the trail of the insurgent chief, Lawton would follow him until he got him. A bloodhound is not more persistent than Lawton.

[Extract of editorial, Denver Daily News, May 21, 1899.]

THREE NATIONAL ISSUES.

* * * * * * *

The expansion question may or may not assume great prominence in the next campaign, and its particular form is still a matter of doubt. The present outlook is that it will be an object of criticism as to what has been done and the manner in which it was done, rather than a dispute as to what shall be done. If this shall be the case, it will be very far from a paramount issue, thus leaving the campaign to be fought out on silver and trusts and a clear issue to be made between the people and the money power.

[Editorial, Denver Daily News, May 26, 1899.]

TERMS OF PEACE.

Amnesty and local self-government—these are substantially the terms which the Government has offered the Filipino insurgents, and on which it insists on absolute surrender. It could offer nothing more. It could demand nothing less. The plan of government proposed is as liberal, if not more liberal, than Colorado enjoyed when it was a Territory, which New Mexico now enjoys, and which all of the Territories of the United States have always enjoyed. That Aguinaldo does not promptly accept the terms is a clear demonstration that he is using, or is now attempting to use, the Filipinos for his personal advantage. He wants some promises for himself. He is not entitled to any such consideration. In view of the number of brave American lives for which he is responsible, he ought to be satisfied to have his own life spared.

With these terms now so thoroughly understood by Aguinaldo, his generals, and the Filipino insurgents generally, there should be no cessation in the fighting until the rebellion is stamped out. No more envoys should be received unless they come with an absolute acceptance of the Government's terms, and demonstrate their good faith by laying down their arms. Heretofore they have been playing for time. They are shrewd fellows, these Malays, and hoped to reorganize their demoralized forces while their envoys were quibbling over terms of peace. No matter where their envoys are or what they are pretending to do the campaign should go right on. Continuous war is the shortest road to a permanent peace. The Filipinos now fully understand the only terms they can get, and until they make up their minds to accept them, let the fighting proceed.

[Editorial, Denver Daily News, May 28, 1899.]

MATTER OF METHODS.

Recent cablegrams from Manila have indicated differences of opinion between Major-General Otis and the members of the Philippine Commission. How radical these differences were the country has been left to surmise, but a Washington correspondent, with excellent means of knowing, asserts that they are of no especial consequence, being only that difference as to methods which would naturally arise between a military man accustomed to "stern measures" and civilians accustomed to "soft soap and diplomacy." This is probably the full extent of the alleged disagreement.

The average opinion of the country will be that General Otis is right. Before we can treat with these Filipinos, before peace and good order and civil government can be assured to these islands, before the sovereign power of the United States will be respected in the archipelago and the Orient, it will be necessary to establish unchallenged American authority. Then it will be possible to show what self-government under the United States really is. Then the Filipinos can be made to realize that they have not Spaniards to deal with or Spanish methods to combat.

At the present time, therefore, the shortest and surest road to a permanent peace is to continue the tactics of Hale, Lawton, and Funston. Actions, not proclamations, are just at this stage of the game the best peace promoters in the Philippines. Having offered amnesty and local self-government, it is now necessary to convince them that our promises are not of the kind that formerly emanated from Madrid. The greatest stumbling-block in the way of the submission of the Filipinos is their experience of two centuries with the captain-generals of Spain.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 14, line 21, after the word "found," I move to strike out "rock" and to insert "mineral."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 17, line 14, before the word "fraction," I move to insert "claim or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 37, line 7, after the word "section," I move to strike out "28" and insert "58."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 39, line 8, after the word "provinces," I move to insert the word "districts."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. At the beginning of line 9, on the same page, I move to strike out the word "corporations," and insert "municipalities."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, in line 10, before the word "purposes," I move to insert the word "public."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 40, line 7, before the word "only," I move to strike out the word "required," and insert "acquired."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 41, line 11, after the word "section," I move to strike out "64," and insert "66."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 42, after the word "section," at the end of line 22, I move to strike out "65," and insert "67."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 43, line 10, after the word "section," I move to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "sixty-seven."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 50, line 4, at the end of section 78, I move to insert the proviso, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 4, after the word "exercised," at the end of section 78, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under this act, or for any person, company, or corporation receiving any grant, franchise, or concession from the government of the Philippine Islands to use, employ, or contract for the labor of persons held in slavery or involuntary servitude; and any person, company, or corporation so violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit all charters, grants, franchises, and concessions for doing business in the said Philippine Islands, and in addition shall be deemed guilty of an offense and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I send to the desk an amendment to section 79, on page 50, which I ask to have read.

The SECRETARY. In section 79, on page 50, line 9, after the word "created," it is proposed to strike out:

And every corporation authorized to engage in agriculture shall by its charter be restricted to the ownership and control of not to exceed 5,000 acres of land; and this provision shall be held to prevent any corporation engaged in agriculture from being in any wise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

No corporation shall hereafter be authorized to engage in agriculture until and unless provision shall be made therefor under the law regulating the disposition of the public lands enacted in accordance with the provisions of section 12.

Mr. BACON. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would explain exactly what is the change that is made by that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It makes it correspond with the change made in the section with regard to mining lands—that is, that there shall be no land granted to any corporation for agricultural purposes until land laws shall be drafted by the Philippine Commission and shall have been approved by the President of the United States and submitted to Congress.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand from that that it does away with the provision which contemplates the leasing of lands in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. LODGE. That has already been taken out.

Mr. BACON. I did not know that.

Mr. LODGE. This simply provides that there shall be no grant to any corporation at any time, unless provided by law.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand that the entire section which contemplates the leasing of 5,000 acres of land to corporations has been eliminated?

Mr. LODGE. That has been entirely eliminated and remitted to future decision under the land laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 56, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as a new section. I will say that it has been prepared by the Department of War and the Department of Justice. It is rendered necessary for the proper enforcement of certain laws in regard to vessels clearing from the Phillipine Islands and the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, after line 20, it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 96. The laws relating to entry, clearance, and manifests of steamships and other vessels arriving from or going to foreign ports shall apply to voyages each way between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States and the aforesaid possessions thereof, and all laws relating to the collection and protection of customs duties not inconsistent with the act of Congress of March 8, 1902, "temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands," shall apply in the case of vessels and goods arriving from the Philippine Islands in the United States and its aforesaid possessions.

The laws relating to seamen on foreign voyages shall apply to seamen on vessels going from the United States and its possessions aforesaid to the Philippine Archipelago, the customs officers there being for this purpose substituted for consular officers in foreign ports.

The provisions of chapters 6 and 7, title 48, Revised Statutes, so far as now in force, and any amendments thereof, shall apply to vessels making voyages either way between ports of the United States or its aforesaid possessions and ports in the Philippine Archipelago; and the provisions of law relating to the public health and quarantine shall apply in the case of all vessels entering a port of the United States or its aforesaid possessions from the Philippine Archipelago, where the customs officers at the port of departure shall perform the duties required by such law of consular officers in foreign ports.

Section 3005, Revised Statutes, as amended, and other existing laws concerning the transit of merchandise through the United States, shall apply to merchandise arriving at any port of the United States destined for any of its insular and continental possessions, or destined from any of them to foreign countries.

Nothing in this act shall be held to repeal or alter any part of the act of March 8, 1902, aforesaid, or to apply to Guam, Tutuila, or Manua.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as a new section, and in connection with it I ask to have read the letter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated:

The SECRETARY. On page 56, after the amendment just adopted, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 97. That the treasury of the Philippine government shall be a place of deposit for such public moneys as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct.

Mr. LODGE. I now ask that the letter from the Secretary of War may be read, so that it may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 31, 1902.

SIR: We experience very great embarrassment in the Philippines owing to the fact that there is no authorized Government depository in the islands, and the disbursing officers of the Army, who are obliged to have in their possession very large amounts of money, have no right to deposit it in any institution in the Philippines. They are obliged, therefore, to keep the large sums required in the performance of their duties in specie in their trunks or office safes. The Secretary of the Treasury can make any national bank a Government depository, but as there are no national banks in the Philippines he has no such power there. Will you not secure the insertion in the Philippine bill of a clause making the treasury of the Philippine government a Government depository for the funds of the United States?

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. H. C. LODGE,
Chairman Committee on the Philippines, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]; which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now ask that the numbers of the two succeeding sections may be changed to 98 and 99.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection the clerks will change the numbers of the sections to correspond to the amendments which have been made.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Massachusetts is through with his amendments, I desire to call his attention to a small amendment, which I handed to him two or three days ago, in reference to the extension of the patent laws over the Philippine Archipelago. I only ask it because I should like to have him state to the Senate what is his judgment and that of the committee in reference to the matter.

Mr. LODGE. The committee considered the question of extending the copyright, the trade-mark, and patent laws to the Philippines, and omitted it from the bill, as they have a number of other matters, because they were of the opinion that those laws could be reenacted there if desired by the Philippine Commission; that it was a matter which could be safely left to them, and that it was better not to enter into the extension of laws where the Commission was able to deal with the subjects more satisfactorily upon the ground. For that reason the committee did not think it was necessary to put the provision in the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply asked the chairman of the committee to make this statement, for the reason that one or two very good lawyers have talked to me about the matter and handed me an amendment which they thought was necessary to attach to this bill.

Mr. LODGE. I have completed the offering of amendments to be proposed by the committee. The committee have no further amendments to propose and no further subjects of amendment under discussion.

I ask, for the convenience of the Senate, that the bill as amended may again be reprinted and furnished to Senators at the earliest possible moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the bill, as it has thus far been amended as in Committee of the Whole, may be reprinted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, as I understand there are no further committee amendments to be offered, I desire to address the Senate for a few moments.

The discussion which has taken place, nominally in reference to the bill to provide for the administration of civil affairs in the Philippine Islands, has seemed to me to be very peculiar indeed. The great part of the discussion has not been in reference to the bill, but about matters that have long since taken place and are finally settled. We have been favored with accounts and incidents of ancient and modern wars, and ancient history has been resorted to in the speeches which have been made concerning the conduct of the American soldiers in the Philippines.

Mr. President, the war with Spain resulting in the acquisition of the Philippine Islands was reluctantly engaged in by the conservative members of the Republican party. The members of both parties in Congress voted for the resolutions declaring war. The members of both parties in the Senate voted unanimously for an appropriation of $50,000,000 to carry on the war. The Spanish fleets in Santiago and Manila harbors were destroyed and that war soon ended. A commission was sent to Paris to negotiate a treaty of peace. That treaty provided for the cession of the Philippine Islands to the United States at a cost of $20,000,000. That treaty never would have been ratified without the aid of Democratic Senators. The appropriation of $20,000,000 to pay for the Philippine Islands was voted by both Houses, I believe, almost unanimously. That war, whatever may have been its cost to the United States, has placed us in a position among the nations of the world which we could not have acquired by a century of peace. The United States is now recognized by all nations as one of the great world powers.

The President governed the islands, as Commander in Chief under the Constitution, from the date when the treaty was signed until the passage of the Army appropriation bill during the closing days of the last Congress. But all this has passed and gone, and there is no need of discussing that part of our history.

Neither is there anything to be gained by discussing the relation of the Philippine Archipelago to the United States from a legal standpoint. The relationship which those islands bear to us has been decided by our court of last resort, and whether that decision is right or wrong it stands as the supreme law of this land until reversed by a subsequent decision.

Two Commissions have been sent to the Philippines, one for preliminary investigation and the second the Taft Commission. The first Commission has long since finished its labors and made its report, and the second Commission, which has been reorganized into a civil government, with William H. Taft as governor, is now in the islands nobly carrying out the purposes for which it was appointed. Every act of that Commission has been suspiciously scrutinized and examined; the civil governor of the islands and the head of the Commission has been examined and cross-examined and reexamined by the committee reporting the bill under consideration, but the most careful examination has failed to disclose any wrongdoing or, in fact, any substantial objection to the work being carried on by the civil government.

Failing to find in the civil governor or the civil government any substantial objection, the minority turned its attention to the Army of the United States, and for weeks we have been hearing of "the tortures," as the minority members of the Philippine Committee are pleased to term it, which our American soldiers have inflicted on the poor, downtrodden, guiltless Filipino.

More than three years have passed since Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet in the waters of Manila Harbor. Taking into account all the embarrassments and difficulties which we had to encounter, considering the character of the people of the islands, considering the resistance of a portion of the Filipinos, led by adroit and unscrupulous leaders, to the authority of the United States, the success which has attended our efforts has been wonderful, and the country and the world so regard it. It may seem a long time since we first took possession of the Philippines, but we must remember the vast area covered by that archipelago, 119,000 square miles, including about 1,700 islands, many of the islands being so large that they may be considered separate and distinct countries, inhabited by different tribes, speaking different languages.

Senators upon the other side have criticised the conduct of the war and of our soldiers. The truth is, the American people today believe that the speeches made by our Democratic friends have been in the main an attack upon the American army in the Philippines. Scarcely a word has been uttered in condemnation of the treachery, the fearful outrages, and cowardly butchery of our soldiers by the Filipinos, without excuse or extenuating circumstances. The majority of the Democrats in this Senate who have spoken are simply on the side of the Filipino, and they have excused the Filipino and condemned without stint the conduct of the American soldier, if, perchance, the latter under exasperating conditions is found guilty or is charged with unusual punishment of the Filipino.

Now, Mr. President, I do not approve of the water cure or any other conduct of our soldiers not authorized by civilized warfare. But in their zeal for the Filipino, for whom their hearts seem to overflow with mistaken sympathy, they have become a "fire-in-the-rear" party, and have succeeded in convincing the country that they believe the American army in the Philippine Islands is unworthy of a free and liberty-loving people. Some of the officers, some of the men, have done things to be condemned. No great army ever was or ever will be entirely free from fault in some particulars, but, as an army, its men are brave, humane, patriotic, whose hearts are noble as they are brave, and should be so held by our people, and are so regarded.

If the speeches that have been made by Senators are to be taken as conclusive of the situation and the conduct of our Army in the Philippines, one would be led to believe that our Army is composed of a band of barbarians, who are engaged in torturing and oppressing and robbing the Filipinos of their natural rights, and that the people of the islands are in complete revolt against American sovereignty. How different are the facts! The islands are governed by as able a body of men as the country affords; part of the Commission, in charge of the civil government, is composed of native Filipinos; hundreds of towns have been organized under the municipal code; the elective franchise has been given; American teachers have been sent from the United States by the shipload, and American soldiers, instead of torturing, have been teaching the Filipino. Thousands of Filipino children are being given the benefit of free schools. Courts have been established, some presided over by Filipinos, and some by able American lawyers. Great public improvements have been made.

But all this has been gone over fully. The argument of those opposed to this bill seems to be that because the people are content, as is alleged, to live in a condition of ignorance, without schools, without commerce, without knowledge of the fact that their condition can be improved, that they ought to be let alone, to live on for the centuries to come in their own way, of no use to themselves or to the world around them. Every Senator here knows that in every settlement and province where peace has been secured the people are in a better condition and are being treated better than they ever were before. Those islands have come to us as the result of war and treaty. They belong to the United States, and it is our duty, from which as an honorable nation we can not retreat, to take hold of the situation, enforce our authority, build them up, better their condition, give them liberty, give them intelligence, and make them a useful people. That can not be done by the policy adopted by our friends, who are constantly complaining against every step that has been taken in the great work in which our Army is engaged in enforcing our national authority and in trying to erect civil government in the hands of the Filipinos whenever it can safely be done. When it seems clear to the Republican party to move forward, our Democratic friends hold back; when we think it wise to go slow, they are in great haste.

To my mind, Mr. President, the opposition developed to this bill seems strange and unnatural. The great body of the people do not understand it. They believe, in the first place, in the nation doing what it undertakes; in the second place, the people always did and always will repudiate and condemn a fire in the rear party; and, in the third place, they believe by the aid and care of the United States of those people they will some day be capable of self-government and independence; and everybody knows they are not capable of independence now.

It has been asserted that the American Army has burned towns and villages. That is true. They have done so, but only as a necessary incident of war. War, as some one said, is not a lawn party. One of our great American generals said, and said truthfully, "War is hell." It means blood; it means death; it means destruction. The United States Army was sent to the Philippines for the purpose of stamping out the insurrection and establishing the authority of the United States, and it has done so.

The situation as it has appeared in this Senate for six or seven weeks has reminded me of the situation in the country in 1864, just before the collapse of that great civil war. Those opposed to the Republican party met in solemn national convention and resolved that the war was a failure, demanded immediate cessation of hostilities, a convention of the States, and an early peace.

If our friends opposed to this bill will possess their souls with patience the war in the Philippines will soon be over and the Filipinos will be given greater liberty, peace, and prosperity than they have ever known before.

Cases have been cited and witness after witness has been examined before the Philippine Committee showing that in some cases the so-called water cure has been administered. From the examination which I have been able to make of the testimony, in each case where this cure was administered it was not done for pleasure or out of wanton cruelty. It was done where some atrocious crime had been committed by the Filipinos, where arms were concealed and it was necessary to the safety of our own soldiers to secure such arms in order that they might not be used against them by the Filipinos, or for some similar purpose, or the witness testifying to the water cure was not cognizant of the reason why it was administered.

So I think, Mr. President, that the testimony will show in most of the cases of alleged cruelty on the part of our soldiers that there was some aggravation that made the American soldier desperate and to feel that retaliation was justifiable.

When we are informed by the Secretary of War that the war on the part of the Filipinos has been conducted with barbarous cruelty; that the Filipino troops have frequently fired upon our men from under protection of flags of truce, tortured to death American prisoners who have fallen into their hands, buried alive both American and friendly natives, and horribly mutilated the bodies of the American dead, does not the so-called water cure seem very mild in comparison with the conduct of the Filipino?

That our soldiers or officers should have found it necessary to resort to these practices we all deplore and regret, as has been stated over and over again by many Senators on this side.

What I desire, and what we on this side have desired all the time, is that the Filipino shall have as complete a self-government as it is possible to give them. This bill is designed to confirm civil government and to do away with military government when it is safe to do so. It seems to be the purpose of the opposition to prevent the establishment of civil government by eternally discussing the enormities of civil war, and the time has came when, if we want these people to have increased liberty, we should relegate the soldier and the Army to the rear and civil government to the front.

Whether this bill, in all its details, is correct I do not undertake to say. It has been considered and favorably reported to the Senate by a committee composed of able and experienced Senators and legislators, who have considered it carefully. If it is not proper in all its details let us take it up and amend it and pass it, if a majority of the Senate shall determine that it is a proper bill to pass.

Mr. President, as my time has about expired, I desire to have inserted a portion of the testimony taken before the Committee on the Philippines, containing the reason in each case (so far as I have been able to gather it from the testimony), why the water cure was administered. I think it is only fair to our soldiers that this testimony, showing in each case the excuse or justification of the conduct of our soldiers, should be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the matters referred to will be inserted in the RECORD as a part of the Senator's remarks.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Testimony of Governor Taft, p. 75.]

KNOWS NOTHING, OF HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE, CONCERNING WATER CURE.

I have no doubt there were such instances. Of course a great many more than there ought to have been; but dependence upon private letters from private individuals as to what occurred is dependence on a very broken reed. I did not realize the unreliability of such letters until I experienced what it was. But I was at Manila during all this time. I was there when charges of this kind were being made. I was in daily conference with General MacArthur and knew the position he took and knew the position his subordinates took with respect to it.

"But I was explaining some time since the circumstances of provocation to a violation of duty on the part of officers and sergeants, who, by force of circumstances, were placed in irresponsible control to show you that it might have occurred and still have been in the teeth of instructions of the responsible officers. I will tell you what General Bell told me in a conversation. It is sufficient to describe it as a mutilation which was likely to outrage the feelings of any person. A man's bunkie—a bunkie is his chum—comes along and finds a soldier, the man with whom he has been associated, mutilated in an outrageous way; a man whom he had seen alive an hour before. You must understand that a soldier has human nature and that things are done which a commanding officer would not approve and yet can not be prevented because of the outrage of feeling. That is the explanation of a good many things."

[Testimony of Gen. Robert P. Hughes, pp. 654 and 655.]

Heard of but one case of water cure, as we understand the meaning of that term here. That case was administered by the police by what you might call a police force, and they said they would not do it again. They were Americans. They had heard of it, I presume, and they tried it, and my information was that they would never try it again.

I have read a paper since I came home emanating from Boston describing it, and I can assure you, Senator, that the thing was not practiced under my command, or at least I think I am sufficiently well advised as to what was being done to say that that was never practiced in the Department of Visayas. The best information I had is that they tried it in one case and rejected it. I did not know of that case until long afterwards.

[Letter of General Funston (p. 951) to the Adjutant-General.]

In this extract [from Philadelphia paper, January 2, 1902] it is alleged that a soldier who claims to have been with me in the Philippines made the statement that he had helped to administer the water cure to 160 natives, all but 26 of whom died. This statement I wish to brand as a lie, without the slightest foundation in facts. During my service of three years in the Philippines I never had any personal knowledge of the so-called water cure being administered to a native or any other form of torture being used to extract information from them. * * * It is my belief that the water cure was very rarely if ever administered by American soldiers. It was resorted to occasionally by Macabebe scouts, who were not under the control of some officer, to obtain information as to the whereabouts of concealed arms and ammunition. They did this without orders from superiors.

[Letter from Secretary Root to the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, dated February 17, 1902.]

In reply to an inquiry as to the water cure and other tortures being administered by American soldiers, the Secretary of War says:

"Every report or charge of this description which has at any time been brought to the notice of the War Department has been made the subject of prompt investigation, and among the inclosed papers you will find the records of 13 such inquiries in which the results have been reported. You will perceive that in substantially every case the report has been proved to be either unfounded or grossly exaggerated."

The Secretary of War inclosed copy of instructions for the government of the armies of the United States, first promulgated by President Lincoln, which are now in force in the Philippines:

"RULE 16. Military necessity does not admit of cruelty, that is, the infliction of suffering for the sake of suffering, or for revenge, or of maiming or wounding, except in fight, nor of torture to extort confessions.

"RULE 44. All wanton violence committed against persons in the invaded territory, all destruction of property not commanded by the authorized officer, all robbery, all pillage or sacking, even after taking a place by main force, all rape, wounding, maiming, or killing such inhabitants are prohibited under the penalty of death or such other severe punishment as may seem adequate for the gravity of the offense.

"The war on the part of the Filipinos has been conducted with barbarous cruelty, common among uncivilized races, and with general disregard of the rules of civilized warfare. They deliberately adopted the policy of killing all natives however peaceful who were friendly to our Government. Literally, in thousands of instances these poor creatures, depending upon our soldiers for protection, have been assassinated.

"The Filipino troops have frequently fired upon our men from under protection of flags of truce, tortured to death American prisoners who have fallen into their hands, buried alive both American and friendly natives, and horribly mutilated the bodies of the American dead. That the soldiers fighting against such an enemy and with their own eyes witnessing such deeds should occasionally be regardless of the orders and retaliate by unjustifiable severities is not incredible. Such things happen in every war, even between two civilized nations, and they always will happen while war lasts. That such occurrences have been sanctioned or permitted is not true. A constant and effective pressure of prohibition, precept, and discipline has been maintained against them. That there has been any such practice is not true. The cases have been few and far between, scattered infrequently over a great area of country, along the course of three years of active conflict, through thousands of engagements, and among many thousands of troops. That these occasional cases have characterized our Army or its conduct is not true, any more than the deeds of lawless violence which constantly occur in every large city characterize the people of the city. The war in the Philippines has been conducted by the American Army with scrupulous regard for the rules of civilized warfare, with careful and genuine consideration for the prisoner and noncombatant, with self-restraint, and with humanity never surpassed if ever equaled in any conflict, worthy only of praise, and reflecting credit upon the American people."

[Letter of Capt. Matthew A. Batson, Fifteenth United States Cavalry, replying to newspaper accounts concerning the water cure, p. 952.]

I have heard a great deal about the water cure, and do not doubt it has been applied in a few cases. Outrages will be committed in any army in the world. They have been committed against our own citizens, in our own country, by our own soldiers. But I know that such methods were not sanctioned, as alleged in the article referred to, by the military authorities in the Philippines, and that when such proof could be obtained that such methods have been practiced the offenders were promptly brought to justice.

[Report of Cornelius Gardener concerning the province of Tayabas, dated December 15, 1901, p. 884.]

Being in close touch with the people, having visited all of the pueblos one or more times, having lived with them in their homes, I know that such (friendly) sentiment once existed. Of late, by reason of the conduct of the troops, such as the extensive burning of barrios in trying to lay waste the country so that the insurgents can not occupy it, the torturing of natives by so-called water cure and other methods in order to obtain information, the harsh treatment of natives generally, and of failure of inexperienced lately appointed lieutenants commanding posts to distinguish between those who are friendly and those unfriendly and treating every native as if he were, whether or no, an insurrecto at heart, this favorable sentiment is being fast destroyed and a deep hatred for us engendered. If these things need be done they had best be done by native troops, so that the people of the United States will not be credited therewith. * * *

The work of the Philippine Commission and the laws that have been enacted by it are everywhere favorably commented upon by the natives. The efforts being made for the general education of the people are appreciated by all. The provincial government and municipal governments established are slowly bringing order out of chaos and anarchy, and there begins to be visible everywhere in this province progress and prosperity. True loyalty and contentment can only come under civil government.

[November 27, 1900, Charles S. Riley testifies that water cure was practiced upon presidente of Igbaras, Iloilo, pp. 1527–1538.]

Was in Philippines about eighteen months; during this time this was the only instance of water cure I witnessed; I know of no other instances except hearsay from other men.

1536: The reason the cure was administered to the presidente was that information had been obtained from native sources as to his being an insurgent officer. After the treatment he admitted that he held the rank of captain in the insurgent army—an active captain. His police force, numbering 25, were sworn insurgent soldiers. He was the presidente of the town and had been for years, and he always showed himself to be friendly on the outside to the officers and men the same way.

Two treatments were administered. The first to find out whether it was true that he had been treacherous to the American cause, and the second to find out whether warnings had been given to the insurgents of our arrival.

[Testimony of William Lewis Smith, p. 1543.]

Testifies to same case as did Riley, namely, that water cure was administered to the presidente of Igbaras, November 27, 1900, who was accused of treachery.

Also saw water cure administered to two police of same town about same time as to the presidente.

Page 1546: The reason the water cure was administered to these police was that they swore that the whole force of the town of Igbaras had sworn allegiance to the presidente any time they were called to take arms against American troops in the town. They swore to that after the water cure was administered. I do not know positively, but, as I understand it, the water cure was administered for the purpose of compelling information.

[Testimony of Edward J. Davis, p. 1726.]

Testifies to same cases as do Riley and William Lewis Smith, namely, water cure being administered to presidente and police of Igbaras on November 27, 1900.

Page 1731: Does not know positively why cure was administered, but think they discovered he was captain of insurrectos and police; he pretended to be a friend of the Americans at the same time.

On same day also saw American soldiers take the schoolmaster of the town, who was a native, and place a couple of Colt's revolvers at his head instead of the water cure. These were the only four cases of cruelty I witnessed.

[Testimony of Grover Flint, p. 1765.]

Was lieutenant of the Thirty-fifth Infantry; was in the Philippines November, 1899, to April, 1901.

Witnessed the water cure to Filipinos early in May, 1900. The Macabebe scouts, as the towns were approached, would enter the houses and pull out these men and talk with them and take them down to the well and put them through this test, and the men would go off and get the guns. This was done entirely on this occasion by Macabebe scouts to get knowledge of where guns were concealed. After the application of the test we got the guns. On the following day the same thing was repeated and our men took a little part in it, apparently as volunteers. They were not ordered to do so. I witnessed quite a number of cases. I never saw a man die from the torture. I should think about 30 were put through the first evening and perhaps 20 the next morning.

[Testimony of Leroy E. Hallock, p. 1909.]

Was a sergeant, Company I, Twenty-sixth Volunteers; arrived in the Philippines October 27, 1899, left March 6, 1901.

Saw the water cure administered at Leon to about ten or a dozen natives captured that were thought to be implicated in the murder of O'Hearn, a member of our company. The confession of the natives was that O'Hearn was roasted over a slow fire and then hacked to death by bolos. What led to the capture of these natives it was reported that Captain Glenn or some soldiers under his orders gave the water cure to a native and he confessed and told who the others were that took part in the killing of O'Hearn, and these members of our company captured these natives and gave them the water cure and they confessed to having had a part in the killing. The water cure was administered by orders of the first sergeant.

The water cure was given to them on two different days—on August 21, 1900, and August 23, 1900.

Witness also testified to the burning of a town 8 miles from Leon, which had eight or ten thousand inhabitants.

Of the 12 who were captured and to whom the water cure was administered, 5 were shot while attempting to escape, the rest got away with the exception of one, and I think he was released.

[Testimony of D. J. Evans, p. 2060.]

Served in the Regular Army six years; in the Philippines from April, 1899, to February, 1901; was a corporal.

Witnessed the water cure to a native in the Ilianico Province, at Ilocos Norte. The water cure was administered by scouts for the Americans; they tried to get him to tell where the rest of the insurgents were at that time. We knew about where they were, but we did not know how to get to them. They were in the hills, and it happened that there was but one path that could get to them. He refused to tell this one path and they commenced this so-called water cure. While the water was given by natives an American soldier struck this native in the pit of the stomach as hard as he could strike him many times, and it made the native very sick. I believe he told, because I did not hear of any more water cure inflicted upon him. Think there was a lieutenant present at the time.

I know of five towns being burned myself. These towns were composed of bamboo houses, containing probably 20 or 25 huts in a village.

[Testimony of Richard V. Hughes, p. 2236.]

Served in the Philippines as a private soldier from October, 1900, to October, 1901.

Observed the water cure on one occasion; think it was on the 26th of September, 1901. Left Magdalena with a detachment of a company under command of Lieutenant Merchant to capture some rifles supposed to be in a cuartel about 6 miles distant, and also some insurrectos. We arrived there early in the morning, and found the bird had flown, as was generally the case. Lieutenant Merchant seemed provoked that the insurrecto leader had gotten away and that we could get no information, and he had a private strike this native and knock him down; he then could not give any information in regard to the whereabouts of this insurrecto leader, and he was knocked down a second time, and after that Lieutenant Merchant saw he could not get any information, and he proceeded to the cuartel.

The guide we brought with us from Magdalena told us we would find arms and soldiers in that place, but they had gone. Lieutenant Merchant was under the impression that the guide was prevaricating, and he lectured him and had him whipped by two natives with a branch of a tree, and then had the water cure administered to him. This was the only case of water cure I ever saw. He could not give any further information, and the Lieutenant had him whipped again and had some more water poured down his mouth. On leaving there the Lieutenant had the houses burned, and of course the women had to get out, and he left this crippled woman there without any house, and everything they had was burned.

[Testimony of Isador H. Dube, p. 2243.]

I was a sergeant in the Twenty-sixth Infantry for sixteen or seventeen months. I saw the water cure administered. I was on guard. I don't remember the date nor the month. I was in command at Jaro, Panay, and some natives were confined in the guardhouse by order of Captain Glenn; and I was sent with this native to bring him over to Lieutenant Congor's house, which I did; and Lieutenant Congor and Captain Glenn and two or three privates administered the water cure to this native; I do not know for what cause, but the native appeared to me to be a sort of wealthy and intelligent native. He had some education. I do not think that was necessary. I do not know what the circumstances were. That is the only case of water cure I ever saw.

I saw another punishment inflicted. There was a native woman. I was in command of the guard, and there were about fourteen or fifteen prisoners in a back room which we used as a cell, and a woman was ordered to be confined among those prisoners—a native woman. I asked the post commander where this woman was to be confined. He says, "Why, right in with the other prisoners." There was nothing but one room, and I think she was kept in there over three weeks by order of Major Glenn. The woman was 40 years old, and the prisoners varied from 15 to 40 years old. I do not know that the woman was submitted to any indignity by being placed in confinement with the men.

Saw several houses burned in Panay—bamboo houses—and a great quantity of rice.

Two natives were murdered in the town I was in, and one prisoner was cut with daggers by natives; they were supposed to be in sympathy with the Americans.

Lieutenant Wagner started to go to a neighboring town about 30 miles away, on horseback, and he was instantly killed—shot through the forehead.

[Testimony of Janareous Manning, p. 2251.]

Was first sergeant in the Philippines from October, 1899, to March, 1901.

Saw the water cure administered on the 20th of August, 1900, in that town of Leon to prisoners captured for the murder of Private O'Hearn; they were captured the day before, and to get them to tell what they knew about the murder we had to give them the water cure to get it. I directed it to be given by order of Captain Gregg. He ordered me to see that they were not abused; to see that they did not get too much. I would not swear that he ordered me to give them the water cure. When we brought these prisoners in and put them under oath, they knew nothing about the murder of O'Hearn; but the ringleader the day before the body was recovered admitted that he helped to murder him, and he implicated ten or eleven more men. I understand the ringleader had the water cure applied to him the day before, though I was not there. After the application of the water cure they did tell; they first told on the other men and afterwards implicated themselves.

We gave the water cure more than once to some who would not tell on themselves or anyone else two days afterwards, but in the meantime they had been told on by others to whom the water cure had been applied. The first man who gave the information of O'Hearn was the presidente of the town of Miguel. He gave the information to the Gordon scouts, and they telegraphed up to the captain to meet them out there next day near the town. The captain took a detachment out and got O'Hearn's body or the bones under the roots of a tree in a little hole, and they took in between fifteen or twenty prisoners. There was never any doubt in my mind, and so far as I know in the minds of other Americans present, but that these men who received the water cure were responsible and really did murder and burn O'Hearn.

(This was the same case testified to by Hallock, namely, that Private O'Hearn was tied to a tree by natives, burned by a slow fire, and cut to pieces by bolos.)

Q. What did you understand to be the direction and desires of General Hughes and your other superior officers as to the treatment that should be given by you and other soldiers to the people in general who were peaceably inclined as to care and kindness and consideration, or the reverse?

A. The orders were to treat everyone right and treat them kindly.

This man from our country was murdered by the Filipinos, and three men from Company F were also murdered at Calinog.

I have seen a half dozen or so barrios burn, varying in size from 15 to 30 huts each.

[Testimony of George G. Boardman, p. 2310.]

Was in the Regular Army in the Philippines; landed there in February, 1899, and has just returned.

This witness only knew of one case of the water cure, and this was done in order to secure information where guns and ammunition could be found, and afterwards witness and others found 17 guns.

The testimony of the witness is somewhat mixed, but it would appear that a native Filipino boy, 17 years of age, was murdered in the market place by native Filipinos because he had joined the American forces. This murder was committed in the presence of the American soldiers, and the Filipinos probably shot to kill the soldiers as well as the boy. Witness concludes by saying:

"If we left them, the natives, and did not secure their arms and ammunition, they would attack us the next day with those same guns; so we knew by experience that it was necessary to protect our lives to secure the ammunition and guns, and the one I saw the application of the water cure given to was not hurt in the least. He was pretty badly scared; he said himself he could not tell, but he said another party would tell. The other party did tell and he went off and found 17 guns."

(This all occurred in the Batangas Province, where the war is still being carried on.)

See page 2328 for further particulars.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I desire to be heard for fifteen minutes on the bill, and then, possibly, for ten minutes on the substitute, if it is agreeable to the Senate. Otherwise I will consume fifteen minutes now and later in the day will conclude my remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I do not understand that the Senator from Illinois can have fifteen minutes on the bill and then ten minutes on the substitute.

Mr. MASON. Very well. I say, if there is any objection——

Mr. TELLER. I do not object, but I want to keep within the rule, because we can not afford to violate one of these unanimous-consent agreements.

Mr. MASON. I will simply have to wait until later in the day to present the other part of my remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I understand a Senator can speak fifteen minutes, and when an amendment is before the Senate he can speak fifteen minutes again. I think it would not be fair for any Senator to take the floor and speak fifteen minutes on one amendment and then take up another amendment and speak on it, and so on. I do not think that would be within the spirit of the agreement, which is that there are to be speeches limited to fifteen minutes at a time, and then the Senator must give way to some one else.

Mr. MASON. I will ask unanimous consent that my speech may go into the RECORD together. There will be no objection to that request.

Mr. TELLER. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. MASON addressed the Senate. After having spoken fifteen minutes,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MASON. I beg to question the accuracy of the Chair. I started, if this clock is right and has not been stopped——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois started at twenty-seven minutes after 12 o'clock.

Mr. MASON. We look at the clock from different points of view. I wish to say to the Chair that I do not question anything except that he is looking at the clock from the wrong point of view. [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. I have been trying to afford the Senator from Illinois an opportunity to continue his remarks. I offer an amendment and ask that it be read. I offer it now as an amendment. I gave notice of it the other day. Then the Senator from Illinois can proceed on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 5. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in the Philippine Islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain entered into on the 11th day of April, 1899, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the government of the Philippine Islands and as such entitled to the protection of the United States and all the rights and privileges of the bill of rights as enumerated in section 2 of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this amendment the Senator from Illinois may address the Senate.

Mr. MASON resumed and concluded his speech, which in its entirety is as follows:

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, in Herbert Spencer's last book, just published, Facts and Comments, speaking of slavery, he says:

Let me begin with the earliest and simplest, which well serves to symbolize the whole.

Here is a prisoner, with his hands tied and a cord round his neck (as suggested by figures in Assyrian bas-reliefs), being led home by his savage conqueror, who intends to make him a slave. The one, you say, is captive and the other free? Are you quite sure the other is free? He holds one end of the cord, and unless he means to let his captive escape he must continue to be fastened by keeping hold of the cord in such way that it can not easily be detached. He must be himself tied to the captive while the captive is tied to him. In other words, his activities are impeded and certain burdens are imposed on him. A wild animal crosses the track, and he can not pursue. If he wishes to drink of the adjacent stream, he must tie up his captive lest advantage be taken of his defenseless position. Moreover, he has to provide food for both. In various ways, then, he is no longer completely at liberty; and these ways adumbrate in a simple manner the universal truth that the instrumentalities by which the subordination of others is effected themselves subordinate the victor, the master, or the ruler.

Mr. President, I am not here representing the Filipino. While I can not find words in the short time I have to speak to-day to express the sorrow I feel for that poor unhappy people in the Philippine Islands, I beg to be heard in behalf of the man at the other end of the cord, our people who are citizens of the United States, covered and protected by the Constitution which we have sworn solemnly to uphold.

I believe with Herbert Spencer, the philosopher, and with Abraham Lincoln, the patriot, that no man is good enough to govern another without that other man's consent, and therefore no nation is good enough to govern another nation without that other nation's consent. No man can be free who owns a slave, and no nation is free that holds another nation in subjugation. I desire to be free from unkindness, and certainly shall not deal in harsh criticism, notwithstanding the almost brutal assaults that have been made upon me for having simply expressed my opinion on these questions according to the best light which God has given me.

I can not find words to express my feelings when I hear learned Senators, who are familiar with our form of government, talking about "giving" liberty to other people. That we may start right let me read to you in four lines what Daniel Webster thought of one people "giving" liberty to another:

No matter how easy may be the yoke of a foreign power, no matter how lightly it sits upon the shoulders, if it is not imposed by the voice of his own nation and of his own country, he will not, he can not, and he means not to be happy under its burden.

I wish to read just two lines from the president of the first Commission, Dr. Schurman, which he spoke day before yesterday:

The Filipinos will never be content until we allow them to govern themselves.

In the multitude of changes that occur in the march of time, principles never change. That principle was true when Webster pronounced it; when Hungary sought to lift the yoke of Austria.

It was true on the day of the Boston tea party. It was true when the little republics of South America, under the guidance of Bolivar, shook off the yoke of Spain. It was true in Cuba, until they were able to set their own flag in the sky. It is true to-day in South Africa; and it is true to-day, God help us, in the far-off island of Luzon.

I have no disposition to find fault, or to debate long and loud upon the facts. Enough of the facts are agreed upon to show that the purchase of the Philippine Islands, and our attempt to govern them, is the saddest and most unhappy mistake our beloved country has made since the day we began to traffic in slaves. How much, under the law of compensation, we must pay in the future for this mistake the all-wise God only knows. The amount we have already paid for this mistake the human mind can neither compute nor comprehend. The money we have spent would make a chain of gold that would encircle the world.

It would construct our Nicaragua Canal over and over again. One year of our expenditure upon the Philippines would redeem every acre of our arid land and make the American desert to blossom as the rose. Our total expenses there would pay the salaries of the President, the Cabinet, and Senators for a thousand years. It would more than double the public buildings of the nation. It would more than pay our annual pension roll. It would provide for our rivers and harbors for a quarter of a century. The human mind can hardly comprehend the hundreds of millions of dollars which we have taken from the people's pockets in this mighty national blunder. I am speaking now not of the slave but of the man, the master, at the other end of the chain.

Who will estimate the cost in other things? Who will count our heroic dead? I remember very well begging and protesting against this war in the Philippines, when one distinguished Senator said that if there was war a regiment of bluecoats would march across the archipelago and make peace.

Ten thousand American boys have gone to their long home, and the end is not yet. Coffin them, beginning here at the Senate Chamber, and lay them out for the world to see. March by the row of coffins until you have seen the faces of thousands of our heroic dead. Look, then, beyond into the desolate homes of mourning and despair; count, weigh, or measure, if you can, the tears of the widow and the orphan. Then, go to St. Elizabeth's Asylum, within a gunshot of the Senate Chamber, and estimate if you can the misery of the hopelessly insane whom we have brought back from the climate of the Philippines, and after looking into the faces of those who are worse than dead, then blame me, if you can and will, for pleading here to-day for Herbert Spencer's man—for the American master at our end of the chain.

The most dramatic story in mythology that reminds one of our country's situation to-day is the story of the Minotaur, who demanded of a certain government that they should send to his cave annually six of their choicest youths to be devoured by this monster. I remember to have seen a picture of these unhappy youths, painted by some master hand, embarking in a boat and setting sail to meet their doom.

If our present war is to continue, the Minotaur in the Philippine Islands demands many more than six victims from every State represented here. Will you, Mr. President, and you my brother Senators, go into the families of your States and select them? If this bill becomes a law, it means a continuance of the present policy, and a continuance of the war. The State of Lincoln, Grant, and Logan will continue, must continue, to furnish her share of graves. But if to-day this body should promise ultimate freedom and independence to the Filipinos, as soon as we found them capable of self-government, every native would lay down his gun and bolo and patiently await the pleasure of the United States, as the people have in Cuba.

There is honest difference of opinion upon this question, some declaring that the natives are not ready for self-government and others asserting that they are; and by reason of these differences this mighty price of blood and treasure is being paid. Why should we longer debate the question when we can resolve the doubt by giving a trial, without the cost of a life or a dollar in money?

I am but one who believes that every nation and every community can form a government that fits its own needs, and that self-government comes only through the open gate of opportunity and along the rough and rugged road of experience. Others believe that you can teach the art of governing, as you would teach swimming, by writing essays, or the art of painting, drawing, or music without the great factor of practice.

Learned Senators have read by the hour the opinions of distinguished gentlemen as to what would occur if we promised them a chance to try to govern themselves. Why waste the time, money, and the precious lives of American citizens waiting for wise men to guess at what results may follow, when the naked truth, the fact itself, lies before us if we will but open the book of experience and read. Tens of thousands of American people, looking to our experience in Cuba, believe that the promise that the Filipinos should ultimately have the chance to try the doctrine of self-government would make peace and save the lives of our boys and the honor of the nation.

We do not know that we are right; you do not know that you are right; but we all know that we can settle the question in twenty-four hours by making an honest effort in that direction. We have our line of logic and you have yours. In support of our logic we have every line of experience recorded in history to sustain our contention; not ancient history, where precedent may be shattered by lapse of time or incorrect recording, but modern history—the incidents of to-day.

For years we were in possession of the island of Cuba. The governing classes there are of the same language, of the same religion, have the same sports, and are the same in nearly everything as the governing classes in the Philippine Islands. We promised to give the Cubans a chance to try the doctrine of self-government, and they went about patiently to organize their own government, not through a congress or a commission appointed by us, but under the direction of the military arm of the United States.

They patiently awaited the pleasure of the people of the United States, and I had the great satisfaction of looking into the faces of thousands of their citizens when our beautiful flag came down and the flag of Cuba took its place. The first Cuban flag I saw raised there was at daylight, under the shadow of Morro Castle. On the deck of the steamer was a large throng, composed of Cubans, Americans, and some Cubans who had been exiled from their native land. When the flag of the single star floated from the mast I expected a cheer, but upon the happy faces of men and women, young and old, I beheld tears of joy. Strong men knelt upon the deck and sobbed as if their hearts would break for joy; and I said to myself, Where, under our flag, is there an honest American who would deny to these people the glory of self-government?

"Ah," said one old man to me in broken accents and faltering voice, "Senator, if you had taken this away from us it would not have made your country richer, and would have made us poor indeed." I saw our flag come down. It is the most beautiful and most righteous ensign in the world, and it is just as beautiful coming down as it is going up, because it was in the keeping of the promise made in this Chamber when we spoke for the conscience of 70,000,000 of God-fearing people.

But Senators exclaim that we have treaty agreements with the Philippine Islands. So we had with Cuba. Every agreement we have made in the Philippines we will keep, and the promise we ought to make now to give them a chance to try the art of self-government would still leave us in possession of the archipelago, and as we believe in peaceful possession, which will make it ten thousand times easier to keep every treaty agreement we have made with Spain.

But Senators tell us they are a mixed lot of different races and tribes, and different skins and complexions, and they tell us that the inhabitants are mere children and that we are the intelligent race, the Christian race, pressing on with civilization. Ah, Mr. President, were I to see a strong, intelligent, healthy, Christian gentleman fighting with a hungry, crippled, half-witted child in the home of the child, it would not take me long to determine who was to blame for that fight.

When impartial history, freed from racial hatred and personal prejudice, shall record the events of our war in the Philippines, the truth must then be told. Our children, who will continue to pay for our mistake, will write truthfully of it, and, I trust, forgive us, as we have forgiven the fathers who began the traffic in human slaves.

Mr. President, this mistake is not and was not a party mistake, and it is almost pitiable that it should be discussed now from a party standpoint. Republicans and Democrats alike were on the peace commission, and presented the treaty through the President for our ratification. Republicans and Democrats alike in the Senate voted for the ratification of the treaty. The distinguished gentleman, twice nominated by the Democratic party for the Presidency, came to Washington to plead with his friends, and secured votes for the ratification of that treaty.

Go out to Arlington and behold the graves, or visit St. Elizabeth and look at the insane; count the mothers who upon their knees to-night are praying for the safe return of a son in the Philippines; then drag that question down to a party basis and partisan benefit if you can. One distinguished Democratic Senator said on this floor in my hearing that the Republicans who voted for the treaty did it for the purpose of exploiting the country and adding to their wealth, and by his silence as to the motives of the Democrats who voted for it implied that their motives were more patriotic and pure than ours. I can not criticise, I can not condemn, but I have hoped and prayed that for the sake of the honor of our flag no partisan interest should obtrude itself into the sacred precincts of this discussion.

I voted for the ratification of the peace treaty. It was against my judgment, but the people of my State, without regard to party or race, desired its ratification. The legislature of my State instructed me to vote for it. I had received my office from the the people against the wishes and protests of the middleman in politics. I hope I had, I think I had, high conceptions of my duty to the people; yet I never would have voted for the treaty if it had not been the open and notorious understanding that we were to have a vote upon a resolution on the same day, declaring our intention to give to the Philippines self-government as soon as, in the opinion of the people of the United States, they were equal to the task. I believed then and believe now that that promise, similar to the one we made to the Cubans, would have prevented war with the natives of the Philippine Islands. It may have been that we would have been obliged to have stayed for years in the archipelago. It may be that by common consent and for the benefit of all we would have continued in perpetual sovereignty, but our course would have been the course of peace and honor.

This is the resolution I asked for three and a half years ago in this Chamber. I introduced it, and it has been lying in the charnel house of the committee ever since.

Whereas all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Government of the United States of America will not attempt to govern the people of any other country in the world without the consent of the people themselves, or subject them by force to our dominion against their will.

You say that I am wrong? Then if you are honest in your convictions why not try it; it will cost nothing. You have tried your plan over three years at a cost that you can not estimate. We are in possession. No harm can come from the effort, and if we fail we can change the policy in much less time than we have taken to adopt it.

Mr. President, one other great loss has been sustained by the man at our end of the chain. For more than a century this, the mother of republics, has been at liberty to speak for the smaller republics of the world. To-day we are not able to lift our voices in favor of self-government to help the struggling republics of the world. To-day in South Africa there is being waged the most cruel, useless, uncalled-for, and wicked war that history has yet recorded.

For years the life of the Republic of South Africa has been trembling in the balance, yet we have not dared to follow the illustrious example set by the fathers and offer resolutions expressing sympathy for the Republic, and even the resolution hoping for the continued life of the Republic and the speedy termination of the war in South Africa with honor to both sides is locked up in the deadhouse of our committees.

Mr. President, I wish that the man at our end of the chain was as free as he was when Webster spoke for the struggling Republic of Greece and with burning eloquence welcomed Kossuth, the Hungarian, within the walls of his capital. I wish, Mr. President, that the man at our end of the chain was as free to speak as was Blaine when, voicing the sentiment of a liberty-loving people, he welcomed among the nations of the world the newborn republics of South America. Do you dare to speak a word of sympathy for the Republic of South Africa?

The English Parliament would at once and properly respond by pointing to the Philippine Islands. The Assyrian master, pictured by Herbert Spencer, could well afford to point the finger of shame at his brother, who owned a slave, until he himself went into the slave business. And we, the proud inheritors of national liberty, can preach long and loud on the beauties of self-government, but our words must become as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal upon the ears of the nations of the world while we are governing 10,000,000 of people 7,000 miles away by force and against their will.

I make these broad statements, Mr. President—true statements which can not be denied in the face of the record here—knowing full well what it will cost to speak the truth. I will be branded by those editors and speakers who claim to have a monopoly on patriotism as a man who belittles and finds fault with his own country.

I speak the truth, and no one who disagrees with me questions that. I have arrived at the conclusion, after mature deliberation, that the best form of patriotism is to endeavor to keep our country right. If our country was at war with a great power which endangered the life of our nation, we would not even stop to consider the right or the wrong of entering into the quarrel; and even for the Philippine Islands, where I believe we could have made peace at any time in twenty-four hours by promising to the people there the same as we have promised to the people of Cuba, I have voted for every dollar asked for by the President of the United States to furnish aid, comfort, and support to our soldiers in that far-off land.

I have never had it in my heart to complain of our Army. It is the best and bravest army in the world and under the best and most beautiful flag. It executes simply the will of the people, as expressed by Congress. It has adopted the methods of warfare which meet the necessity; and if any mistakes have been made, the responsibility is not upon the men who carry the guns, but rather upon the Senate of the United States when we purchased sovereignty from Spain and directed the Army to subjugate the people. The Senator from Wisconsin said the same men are in the island of Luzon that were in Cuba. Yes; but they are there under different orders from the people.

But Senators say that if the flag is to come down, it must come down in honor, which, standing alone, is a truism which savors of the commonplace. They say that we can not honorably consult a man as to what his future shall be while he has a gun in his hand. We dignify them by sending 50,000 men to conquer them, and with our bold statement of sovereignty over the islands, and with 50,000 guns aimed at them, we refuse to even receive their petition or hear their wishes for their own government. This is supposed to preserve our prestige and national honor.

We boast about being a world power to-day as though it were something new, whereas we have been a world power since our independence was ceded to us by Great Britain.

Some of us are tender and jealous as to what the other nations will say if we compromise with those poor, struggling people. I wish I could draw a picture for you of Gladstone after he had made the convention or treaty with South Africa, even after the great disaster of Majuba Hill. One party of English statesmen, jealous and sensitive of the prestige of the English flag, said in a memorable debate in the House of Commons that Gladstone in compromising with South Africa had dishonored his flag and lowered the prestige of the English arms; and his answer, worthy of the man who made it, settled the question, at least during the life of that statesman. He said in substance: "England is strong; England is a world power; England can with her army crush out the South African Republic; England can afford to put aside the gossip of the nations of the world who will talk about her loss of prestige; England is great enough to do right." It may not be unbecoming, Mr. President, to call attention to this historical fact, so fresh in the minds of this generation.

What Gladstone said of England is true of the United States. Our Republic is strong. We can not be blamed for boasting of our military prestige, but that alone does not represent our strength. The strength of this nation is in the honest mass of 70,000,000 people, and our Army and Navy is an expression of but one arm of our strength. We need not ask here what the world will say about the settlement of the Philippine question. Our Republic is strong enough to be independent of the opinion of the monarchies of the earth, and our Republic is righteous enough to do right, regardless of what the other nations of the world may think or say.

Gladstone said that England would seek only the happiness of the governed. Let us say that to the people of the Philippine Islands. Let us say to them by some resolution here that we intend to let them try the glorious responsibilities of self-government.

The world knows we are strong; the Filipino has felt our strength. Give them this promise, and peace will reign in the archipelago, and you will drive away anxious tears from the faces of the mothers of the Republic. Instead of loss of prestige among the nations of earth, the lovers of liberty from pole to pole will say: "See, the Mother of Republics has put aside the temptation to govern others; she believes in the doctrine she has been teaching for a hundred years—that self-government is the best. She will not try to force her religion and civilization upon others; she is going to help plant a republic that will float its colors in the very gateway of the Orient." The Philippine star and the star of Cuba would then be among the brightest that shine in the crown of our Republic.

Mr. President, I am exceedingly sorry to differ with so many of my friends in this Chamber and out. For two years I have been silent in the Senate upon this subject, hoping against hope to see the end of the war in the Philippine Islands. I have not abused those who have differed with me. I only wish and hope for the same liberty of conscience and speech for myself that I give to others. Many of you ask me in private conversation: "This is what the Anglo-Saxon has always done; it is in the blood." My answer is that the blood has improved, and that we have never before engaged in a war of conquest. We burned witches at one time, and sold slaves—the mother from her children. Who would dare to offer that now as an argument for the selling of slaves or the burning of witches? Yet our fathers did it.

We are told that some other nation might step in and govern the Philippines and that, if we cease in our attempt to govern them against their consent, England or Germany might take our place at our end of the chain. There is no danger of that, Mr. President. Those nations are not asking for a monopoly on graves. More than that, Mr. President, since Dewey spoke in Manila Harbor, since Schley spoke at Santiago, and since the Rough Rider went up the hill at El Caney there is no nation in the world that would dare interfere with the sovereignty granted to the people of the Philippine Islands with our approval and consent or invade the smallest island in the archipelago in violation of any treaty which we have or may make with any nation in the world.

Senators may call my position impractical. I ask only in the name of justice, Why don't you try it? You have tried your plan of subduing them with a strong hand, without the promise of self-government, at the cost of a hundred thousand lives, at least, counting both sides. To try the plan I suggested will not cost one life. It was estimated by the Government that it would require 5,000 soldiers to make peace in the islands. Under your plan you have lost twice that number, and the end is not yet. It will not cost one American life nor one American dollar to point the Filipino to the flag in Cuba and promise him a chance to try it. The plan I suggest would not cost one life. For three years and a half I have asked the question in this Chamber, Why have one plan in Cuba, that brings honor and peace and makes them our friends, and another plan in the Philippines? Yet I have not had an answer.

Again I say, Mr. President, that I can not find words to express the deep personal regret I have to differ so widely with so many men in whose judgment I have great confidence and of whose patriotism I have not the shadow of a doubt. I have never had it in my heart to question either the honesty or the patriotism of my good friends who disagree with me. When but a mere boy I felt the pinch and grind of religious intolerance. I heard men in the pulpit preach that slavery was a divine institution, and that night aided my father, who was a member of the same church, in keeping an under-ground railroad station to help negroes to Canada, where they could pucker up their black lips and whistle Yankee Doodle in free Canada.

In a bird's-eye glance at the history of the world, I find the wheels of progress stopped where civil and religious freedom do not abide; but where these blessings fall men lift their eyes, and looking about them, span continents with the iron rail, chain the mighty waters and the electricity of the air to do their bidding, and open the doors of learning and make education free to all. These strides in civilization come only in self-governing countries, and self-government can be learned only by experience. Senators may call this a mere matter of sentiment; be it so. It is a sentiment based upon historical truth, and a sentiment of which no man need be ashamed. This sentiment was heard in solemn protest and through all the ages, until it finally broke forth in divine tone in the Declaration of Independence.

It was soon seen and read of all men. Moharchies trembled when facing that sentiment, and the declaration made at Philadelphia broadened everywhere constitutional government, and made for the rights of man. In the light of that declaration of self-government, patriots and statesmen for the past century have lived and died. Kossuth said that he had before him our Declaration of Independence when he wrote and fought for his native land; and Bolivar, in South America, when he laid the broad foundation of self-government for the republics there, said he was but following that sentiment just spoken in our Declaration of Independence.

Is our Government to be ruled without sentiment? Are all the great functions of government, which affect the homes of 70,000,000 people, to have nothing in its make-up but the cold, sordid thought of commercialism? Does this flag floating above us speak of nothing but trade and money? Does it stand for nothing but territorial and commercial expansion? Active, thrifty men may use it for a while, but some day a jealous people will snatch that flag from their hands and say to those who have used it for conquest: "Commerce, dollars, and trade are for the Government, not the Government for them."

There is an eagle on the banner as well as on the dollar. This flag will foster and promote all legitimate commerce for the welfare of the people; but it must not by force be set above an unhappy and unwilling people, at the cost of Government treasure and the lives of our children, to increase our trade.

Mr. President, I have faith in the ultimate judgment of the American people. This sad lesson of experience will not be without its use in the future; and if again we are tempted to govern a people without their consent, the charnel houses that come floating back from the Philippines will rise before the people for the people's good. I have faith in the ultimate liberty of all mankind. Sometimes it seems that the mills of the gods grind slow, but I have faith in the consummation of the divine plan. It may not come in your day or mine, but some day not only the people here in the mother Republic, but all over the world—in Cuba, South Africa, and the Philippine Islands—will be free, absolutely free. I can only in my own poor way contribute my feeble share to hasten the hour when all men and all nations may walk unshackled on the footstool of God.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to put into this debate three or four facts which seem to me to overthrow much of the elaborate argument of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

At the time the orders were given to subdue that people by force Aguinaldo had under his command an army larger than General Washington ever had under his command. He had captured more guns than Washington captured during the whole of the Revolutionary war. He had behind him, allowing for all the differences the Senator mentions, men who were devoted to him, who had furnished that army, more in numbers than the whole American people, Whigs and Tories together, at the close of the Revolutionary war.

They inhabited and occupied, in peace and order and law, a territory larger than the settled parts of the United States at the close of the Revolutionary war. They had freed that whole territory from Spain. They had captured many prisoners—more than were ever captured by Washington except at Yorktown.

They had three or four thousand Spanish prisoners committed to them by us to take care of. The Spanish Chapter of the Red Cross, as I am told, decorated Aguinaldo after his recent capture with a medal in honor of the kindness of his treatment to those prisoners.

I will not detain the Senate with an elaborate answer to the elaborate argument of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. No man respects that Senator more than I do, and there are few men that I respect so highly as I respect him. I find, I am sorry to say, in his powerful speech the method of the advocate who deems it his duty to champion a side rather than that of the judge or the Senator. I do not find in it what I should have hoped, the discussion of great principles of national duty.

I do not find that he bases his argument on those simple yet profound and eternal principles which should govern the action of a great people in dealing with the fate of a people who are in its power. He has a few sneers for the Philippine republic. He finds some fault with the leaders who are striving to bring their people out of darkness into light. He thinks that in the conflict of arms that arose on that memorable night the Filipinos were the aggressors, although I believe he concedes that their leader did not desire then to bring on a conflict.

But, Mr. President, no ingenuity can conceal or obliterate the fact that there was on one side a people that had achieved its independence, that had conquered its territory, save a single city, from Spain, that had declared itself a republic, and that there was on the other side the army of a distant and alien nation under orders to subjugate them. Under such conditions how idle the inquiry, Which struck the first blow or fired the first shot? I think we fired first. The Senator from Wisconsin says they did.

My colleague, who says everything so well, has said this thing better than anybody:

> There was much discussion then, and there has been much more since, as to who fired first. It was not a battle. What matters it who fired first? The first blow had been struck, the first blood shed. It said to all the world that a people intended to govern themselves and would die sooner than yield—a very pregnant fact, speaking much louder than words and charged with many meanings.
>
> A wholly new thing this was indeed, to have a people ready to die in battle for their rights, when a large part of the rulers of the civilized world did not recognize that they had any rights to either die or live for. A great example to be deeply considered, and destined to bear much fruit.

These words were written about what happened at Lexington one April morning in 1775. But they were spoken of an event which seems to me contemporary with all the centuries and of a fruit which will grow in every soil.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin says that our troops had been attacked before the treaty was ratified. I do not so understand the history of the transaction. But for the moment let us suppose him to be right. He claims that that is inconsistent with the statement that if the treaty had been amended so as to disclaim sovereignty, or if the Bacon resolution had been adopted, there would have been no further trouble.

Mr. President, the answer to all that is easy. The treaty had been agreed upon by our commissioners; the President had sent it to the Senate with approval; it was notorious that there was a large majority for it, and that the question of its final adoption turned on one or two votes, as the adoption of the Bacon resolution turned on a single vote; and as has been said more than once, President McKinley had made a proclamation demanding submission, and saying that our authority over that people, which they denied, would be enforced, if need be, by military power.

These things were the cause of the war. These things would be taken by any spirited people to be a cause of war and a declaration of war. Now, if the treaty had been defeated, or the Bacon resolution had been adopted, that would have been an abandonment of the scheme. It would have been an abandonment of the purpose declared in President McKinley's proclamation. It would have required the reversal of the orders to subdue that people to our authority, and would have left it only in the power of the President, or have made it only the duty of the President to restore order and then to give over the country to the people to whom it belonged.

Can there be any doubt about that in the mind of any sane man? Does anybody believe that Aguinaldo or his counselors would have encountered the power of the United States or that the hostilities would have kept on after the authentic declaration of our purpose to respect their independence and to hand over the country to them whenever orderly and peaceful government could go on?

I am told, Mr. President, as I just said, that Spain has sent out to Aguinaldo a resolution of thanks and a decoration for his humanity to her prisoners when they were in his power. That is an honor which an American soldier, however brave and brilliant, might well covet. It is an honor which Cervera and his sailors would have been very willing to pay to our naval officers who sunk their ships in the West Indies. Now, this man whom his great enemy, Spain, has so honored, I am told Governor Taft has never spoken to and that the Senate thinks it an affront to their pride to ask him to come over here and tell us his story.

Mr. President, the chapter which recorded the action of the Senate upon this question was closed nearly two years ago. The chapter which records the painful and bloody history of our war of conquest in the Philippine Islands I suppose is closing. I fear, however, that there will be other like chapters to be written before the volume is completed. Some of them may be in the distant future. I expect as the next development to see wealth, unrestrained by constitutional restrictions or by the desire for justice, undertaking to acquire the properties which belong to that people for the purpose of speculation and gain.

I believe the Administration will do what it can to curb and restrain that ambition. I know very well that the gentlemen to whom the Senate has intrusted this subject will do their best to keep the skirts of the National Government clear from all stain. I know that the power of Congress and the power of the Executive is great; but I am afraid, great as it is, it will be inadequate to curb these mighty forces from a distance and keep them within lawful and honorable bounds. This, however, is only anticipation. If I prove a false prophet, no man will be more delighted than I shall be.

The trouble with the attitude of my friends who differ from me is that they have affirmed what seems to me the most pestilential doctrine of all history, the right of one people to judge for another the question of its fitness to govern itself. No tyrant nation will ever refrain to seize upon power when it is strong enough, and no tyrant nation will ever let go its hold on a weaker people when it has got it, if your doctrine be once established.

And, Mr. President, the power of this Republic is such that it can establish the doctrine if it see fit in the permanent practice of mankind. Not all the world can maintain it against the United States or overthrow the great doctrine of human liberty. But the people of the United States, if they will, can cause the great doctrine of the liberty of nations to perish from the face of the earth, and that is the question you are attempting to decide.

What I have said about the soldiers is on the authority and testimony of soldiers. What I have said about the army is on the authority of the army. In saying it I have affirmed, what I repeat, that what has occurred has occurred as a result of the eternal law of human nature. The responsibility for it rests on us who created the conditions. It rests on the legislative and treaty-making power at home and not on the soldiers in those distant islands. If it be said that I have at any time used severe language, I answer to him who reproaches me as Antigone in the Greek play answered the tyrant:

> 'Tis you that say it, not I. You do the deeds,
> And your ungodly deeds find me the words.

If, in putting down a civil commotion, especially when it is caused by oppressive or tyrannical law, the authorities deal harshly or cruelly with the offender, whoever condemns the harshness and the cruelty is not rightly to be charged with an attack on the instrumentalities provided to preserve order. It is not the police, it is the unwisdom of the legislator that is responsible.

I do not charge these things upon the American soldier. I do not charge these things upon the American Army. I charge these things upon imperialism. I charge them on the greed for unjust dominion. I charge them upon the disregard of the fundamental law of the Republic.

They are the natural result of the doctrine affirmed in this Chamber and in the press, the doctrine on which the Spanish treaty was affirmed, that the Declaration of Independence is a lie, and that there is no truth in its sublime affirmation that just government rests upon the consent of the governed. When you undertook to buy sovereignty over an unwilling people from a tyrant they had dispossessed, to take from them the liberty they had won for themselves, to treat them as the spoils of war or the booty of battle, what has happened was as sure to follow as the night to follow the day.

I have estimated the cost of this war up to the present time at $600,000,000, and I believe that estimate not overrated. When you pay $100,000,000 for soldiers and sailors at $13 a month, and when you consider the cost of every transport and of subsistence, and that you are taking them from larger and more profitable employments in the peaceful avocations of life, every hundred million paid from the Treasury represents much more than another hundred million which the country loses. But at any rate you are pledged to a cost in the future which will far more than double what you have already wasted. I believe the war has already cost $600,000,000, without including the future, in which the previous computation has been demonstrated by careful statisticians. But I will not chop logic or quibble about that.

Now, what have you had to go without? You could build with what you have spent and what you expect to spend in the near future two or three isthmian canals to the Pacific, equipped with harbors and defenses. You could have a system of national irrigation which would double the value of the great territory in the middle of the continent and cover it over with happy homes and wealthy States. You could, if you were bent on empire, get with it a navy larger than that of the two largest nations of the world, to get which would make you the foremost sea power on the face of the earth and bring the whole globe to your feet. You could endow in every one of our 45 States a university which would equal Harvard in resources. You would have money enough almost to pension the entire old age of this country, if it were an expedient thing to do; so that not only the soldiers and sailors and civil servants, but every man who had done good work for the Republic in private life could enjoy an honorable and comfortable old age. That is what this miserable doctrine of buying sovereignty for gold, that is what this miserable pride that will not talk with men with arms in their hands, has cost the American people already.

I wish to advert to but one other thing out of the many said by the Senator from Wisconsin. He attempted to meet and parry what he calls an attack on the Army by an attack on the great and sacred reputation of General Grant. He mentioned, as I understood him, that Grant did in Shenandoah Valley order to be done exactly what our generals and soldiers—some of them—have done in the Philippine Islands. He cites General Grant's orders to lay waste the Shenandoah Valley, and seeks to bring the revered figure of the mighty soldier of the civil war to the side of Hughes and Bell, to be an eternal companion in their infamy.

Let us see what General Grant did, and let us see what they did. The Shenandoah Valley was so constructed by nature in its relations to our military operations that if a force could pass through it rapidly, without impedimenta, subsisting upon the country, getting its supplies from the region, it could attack us either in front, or in flank, or in rear by means of the natural outlets which existed there. It was an avenue to attack us, and it was the granary, the storehouse for the supply of the horses and mules of the rebel army.

I am no master of military tactics, but that I understand to be the general situation. So when General Grant ordered that it should be laid waste, it is as if he were destroying a fortress or a storehouse or a place of strength of which the enemy could make direct and almost irresistible use in military operations. He did not order the homes of those people to be destroyed as a means of striking terror or of applying military coercion to their soldiers in the field. He left to private families stores enough to support them six months.

He did not assert the principle which all modern military law not only rejects, but loathes; which Abraham Lincoln's rules and the recent Hague Convention alike repudiate, that you could compel peace by making war more severe, by attacking innocent women and children or noncombatants, and destroying private property. If General Grant had believed in that doctrine, he would have applied it to the whole South alike. There was no reason of confining it to the Shenandoah Valley. The Shenandoah Valley was not a tenth part as rebel in sentiment as other parts of the South. Our Government applied no such doctrine to Louisiana when we got her into our power, or to South Carolina, or Missouri.

Now, contrast with that what was done in the Philippine Islands. We did not order the population of whole districts into reconcentrado camps when we got possession of them in order that we might terrify and coerce male relatives of the people who were in the field. We did not destroy towns and villages for the mere purpose of striking terror into that people, or if we ever did it it is a blot on our escutcheon. On the other hand, what did they do in the Philippine Islands? General Bell, in his order of December 9, 1901, a few days only before Governor Taft started for this country, says:

BATANGAS, December 9, 1901.

To all station commanders:

A general conviction, which the brigade commander shares, appears to exist that the insurrection in this brigade continues because the greater part of the people, especially the wealthy ones, pretend to desire but in reality do not want peace.

He is not speaking there of soldiers, of course. He is speaking of the people—those who pretend to want peace.

That when all really want peace we can have it promptly. Under such circumstances it is clearly indicated that a policy should be adopted that will as soon as possible make the people want peace, and want it badly.

He is not talking about soldiers. He is not talking about armed people. He is talking about people at home who are pretending to be peaceable and pretending to want peace, and he proposes that what is prescribed in this order shall be perpetrated, not against soldiers, but against the populace.

I have extracted from the record the testimony of General Hughes, who shows he is not talking about soldiers. He is talking about people at home living in peace and quiet, whom he orders to be destroyed to make the Filipino people, to use his phrase, want peace and want it badly. When he is asked, when he burned a village, what had become of the population—the women and the children—he said, "That is their lookout." And when a member of the committee asked him, Is that civilized warfare? General Hughes said that it is not civilized warfare.

Now, you say we are attacking the Army when we stand up here and say that this is not civilized warfare, when the very men whom we are criticising declare that they had abandoned it.

Senators talk about the Filipinos firing on flags of truce. In November, 1899, you have in the record which I will put in with my remarks a report of a general who said 300 people came along the railroad waving a flag of truce, and then as he was preparing to fire on them our cavalry fired on them from the right and on the left and they were dispersed. The firing on flags of truce was begun by us according to the reports of the War Department.

Did General Grant, by the means of coercion, order war to be made by attacking innocent women and children and putting to death all boys over 10 years old? Mr. President, the most shameful single thing in this whole transaction is the summoning the authority of General Grant to justify the order of General Hughes. If General Grant had done this thing he would have gone into history as a monster.

"Senator RAWLINS. Is it not true that operations in the islands became progressively more severe within the past year and a half in dealing with districts which were disturbed?

"General HUGHES. I think that is true. I would not say it is entirely so. The severities depend upon the man immediately in command of the force that he has with him. In the department I suppose I had at times as many as a hundred and twenty commands in the field. Each commander, under general restrictions, had authority to act for himself."

In other words he had authority to burn or not to burn, as he might see proper, in his own judgment, and, consequently, as some thought proper to burn a little more freely than others, the rule and practice, according to what he said, varied. He goes on to say:

"These commanders were changed from time to time. The new commanders coming in would probably start in very much easier than the old ones."

In other words, they would not burn the houses quite as much as the old ones. They had not got to be so callous. They had not got to be so absolutely indifferent to all rules of civilized warfare, and consequently they were easier, as General Hughes says:

"These commanders were changed from time to time. The new commanders coming in would probably start in very much easier than the old ones."

"Senator HALE. Very much what?

"General HUGHES. Easier. They would come from this country with their ideas of civilized warfare, and they were allowed to get their lesson."

Now, take General Hughes's testimony in the hearings before the Philippine Committee:

Mr. President, what is General Hughes's testimony on that line? It is found on page 558 of the hearings before the Philippine Committee. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] asked this question:

"In this connection, in burning towns, what would you do? Would the entire town be destroyed by fire, or would only offending portions of the town be burned?

"General HUGHES. I do not know that we ever had a case of burning what you would call a town in this country, but probably a barrio or a sitio; probably a half a dozen houses, native shacks, where the insurrectos would go in and be concealed, and if they caught a detachment passing they would kill some of them.

"Senator RAWLINS. What did I understand you to say would be the consequences of that?

"General HUGHES. They usually burned the village.

"Senator RAWLINS. All of the houses in the village?

"General HUGHES. Yes; every one of them.

"Senator RAWLINS. What would become of the inhabitants?

"General HUGHES. That was their lookout."

Then continuing the examination:

"Senator RAWLINS. If these shacks were of no consequence, what was the utility of their destruction?

"General HUGHES. The destruction was as a punishment."

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator give me the page?

Mr. BACON. Page 558. I had already announced it.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not hear it.

Mr. BACON. It continues:

"General HUGHES. The destruction was as a punishment. They permitted these people to come in there and conceal themselves, and they gave no sign. It is always——

"Senator RAWLINS. The punishment in that case would fall not upon the men, who could go elsewhere, but mainly upon the women and little children.

"General HUGHES. The women and children are a part of the family, and where you wish to inflict a punishment you can punish the man probably worse in that way than in any other.

"Senator RAWLINS. But is that within the ordinary rules of civilized warfare? Of course, you could exterminate the family, which would be still worse punishment.

"General HUGHES. These people are not civilized.

"Senator RAWLINS. Then I understand you to say it is not civilized warfare?

"General HUGHES. No; I think it is not.

"Senator RAWLINS. You think it is not?

"Senator DIETRICH. In order to carry on civilized warfare both sides have to engage in such warfare.

"General HUGHES. Yes, sir; certainly. That is the point.

"I think, if I am allowed to go on, I will come to a place where I shall have something to say that will bear directly on this subject.

CONDUCT OF THE WAR BECOMES STERNER.

"Senator HALE. You made a very interesting statement some time ago that from year to year, or from summer to summer, the conduct of the war was sterner, stiffer, as you called it. You are describing what took place the second summer, not the first?

"General HUGHES. Yes."

General Hughes adds:

In the first campaign the rules of civilized warfare were rigidly enforced. But the next year we found it necessary to adopt more stringent methods in order to reach these people.

That means that we have abandoned the rules of civilized warfare.

Now, what does this all come to? Undoubtedly you have disarmed that people with your superior forces and your water torture. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] says we have reduced our Army from 70,000 to 25,000 or 27,000, I think, and shall reduce it by a few thousand more in the near future. It may be that we have. But you have reduced the Army because you have disarmed the people and not because you have changed their minds.

He says, too, we have got three or four hundred American teachers there and have got 4,000 Filipino teachers there. You would have had, in my opinion, a good many more American teachers there to-day, doing a great deal better work, if you had pursued the Cuban policy instead of your Asiatic policy. Would you not? How many American teachers, how many Cuban teachers are there in Cuba to-day? You have made, in my opinion, on this testimony no advance in any conquest of the hearts of that people. There were in Cuba for the million and a half of people nearly 3,500 teachers.

I submit an article from the Manila Freedom, published just about the time Governor Taft came over, in which the editor says that there is no respectable paper in the Philippine Islands supporting the policy of the Philippine Commission, and that the spirit of insurrection, though subdued, is as strong as ever in the hearts of that people.

[The Manila Freedom, Edward F. O'Brien, editor.]

WEDNESDAY, December 18, 1901.

EDITORIAL.

Nothing can be accomplished in the Philippines until force has defeated, permanently, the enemy. It is useless to fool ourselves. We have tried civil government; we have placed prominent Filipinos in high places; we have prated of Americanism and progress, and with what result? Batangas, Samar, Tayabas, Laguna—and the list might be extended to cover the entire archipelago—all show the results. There is as much insurrection fomenting here as there was three years ago, and there will be as much three years from now.

There is only one remedy. The military must be supreme—must be given absolute control of the situation. There must be an army of at least 75,000 men here, and the desired end will be accomplished sooner with 100,000. The Filipinos must be defeated, absolutely and unconditionally defeated. They must be swept aside, at no matter what cost. Reconcentration—the same reconcentration which we deplored in Cuba—must be used. Those who evidence a desire to be peaceful must be gathered in camps or towns and protected by American troops.

America, unlike Spain and Cuba, must furnish, if necessary, to these people the means of life when their supplies run out. In return they must be made to assist in the erection of trenches and military works. All source of livelihood must be cut off from the enemy in the field. The Navy must furnish sufficient vessels to patrol the islands and prevent filibustering, for we are blind when we deny that the enemy is receiving encouragement from the exterior.

Americans must occupy the positions of responsibility. There are places for but few Filipinos in the government until all armed resistance is put down, once for all.

The results of a policy of this sort must be severe. Thousands of lives will pay the forfeit, but it is the only way to accomplish the desired end. The captures or death of Lukban and Malvar will not end the insurrection, no more than the capture of a hundred others has ended it. For every leader who falls there are a dozen ready to fill his shoes.

The time has come when the matter must be viewed from the front. We have fooled ourselves, and we have made ourselves the dupes of those whom we have trusted. The money we pay, supposedly for peace, is going to strengthen insurrection. It is time to admit that we have made a grand mistake, and undo the skein we have tangled. We must go back to the cross roads and take the other path.

They tell us that capital will conquer the islands. But when is capital coming? Will it come when it is as much as life itself is worth to go through the islands without a bodyguard? The answer is "No." Capital will come to these islands only when peace reigns, and according to our present procedure we will never have peace.

We are only fostering a spirit which will eventually defeat us. This may not come about through force of arms, but it is bound to come about through the taxpayers of the United States, who will refuse to sanction an unending and eminently costly warfare.

Let us have peace, and as a sure means to peace let us have warfare unconditional, and warfare in the sense in which warfare is really meant.

Now, you have on the other hand Governor Taft's dreams, of which he declares himself very uncertain of doing something in one or two generations, or perhaps a century. The Senator from Michigan, as I said just now, takes comfort in the fact that we have reduced our forces to 25,000 or 27,000 men. But you thought when you started that you could get along with 7,000 men. You have had more than 125,000 there since, if I do not mistake. You have not dared to arm, equip, discipline, or organize a single Filipino regiment.

That is a test better than any other of whether you really have a people there who love you and will stand by you. If they are on your side, their armed and disciplined soldiery will be on your side, as the soldiery of Canada are ready to fight for England. If the youth are brought up to love you, they will enlist for you and fight for you and die for you, and you can trust them. Now, when I asked that question my friends of the majority of the committee answered me by talking about policemen and Macabebean scouts, the old instruments of the cruel tyranny of Spain.

Mr. President, I do not deny that you will get peace pretty soon. It has nearly come already, and of course for us peace is better than conflict, but the question is, What are you doing to benefit the Philippine people? There are some things better for a people than voluntary and abject submission to foreign rule. The permanent loss of liberty is worse for a people than war. It is worse for a people than disaster. It is worse even than anarchy.

The great fundamental question in all this business is whether one man has a right to decide this question for another—whether one nation or people have a right to decide it for another. Now, there is a good deal involved in that. This great doctrine of the consent of the governed has been the beacon light of humanity for more than a hundred years. All over the world the eyes of men in darkness have seen that great light, sometimes even when they knew not from whence it came.

The peasant in the Siberian waste, the patriot in his dungeon, the serf in his hovel have looked to it as the one thing that gave manhood dignity or even made life itself tolerable. Whenever a people strove for liberty against tyranny their champions have looked to the United States and have read the great Declaration. Kossuth came here from Hungary; O'Connell looked to us across the sea from Ireland; Garibaldi, whose bust his grateful countrymen gave to the Senate of the United States and which stands in yonder beautiful gallery, looked with longing eyes for our sympathy and encouragement.

The Swiss on his chainless mountains, France, after many bloody struggles, looked to us for this gospel of glad tidings. And now are all mankind to learn that the great people who proclaimed this evangel of liberty have themselves disowned it, that trade and gain, that franchises and nuggets of gold, and the dreams of empire have taken its place in our vision, too.

Nowhere on the face of the earth is the doctrine hereafter to be believed that men or that nations are created equal in political rights, or that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, if the United States have abandoned it. The torch of Liberty enlightening the world is in the hand of the American people to-day. You may keep it blazing aloft, or you may invert it and plunge it into this lake of mire.

Mr. President, the objection to this bill is not in what it does, but in what it claims the right to do. Other Senators will do their duty as they see it. I shall do mine as God gives me to see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the contention in this discussion that all government rests upon the consent of the governed can not be maintained. It ignores the irrepressible conflict between civilization and barbarism. While I do not wish to compare the aborigines of this country with the natives of the Philippines, still it must be admitted that the numerous tribes of Indians who once occupied all of the territory now inhabited by the people of the United States were as much devoted to their independence and had as ardent a desire for liberty as any people who ever lived. If our forefathers had acted upon the theory of distinguished Senators that they could acquire no right to establish government in the land of the aborigines without the latter's consent, North America would to-day be the home of barbarism and not of civilization.

At the time the Declaration of Independence was written there were numerous tribes of Indians in the territory which it embraced living under governments established by themselves and claiming independence against all the world. There were also numerous slaves in this country. How absurd it would have been to consult either the Indians or the slaves in order to obtain their consent to the new government established by the fathers. There can be no doubt that the Declaration of Independence included the white citizens of the colonies who had banded together to set up an independent government of their own. It referred only to those people who were to govern as well as to be governed. It did not refer to any inhabitants of the country who were incapable at the time by nature or by education to participate in the government of the country. The contemporaneous construction of the language of the Declaration of Independence excludes the presumption that the consent of those who would not or could not participate in the proposed government was required.

Both the majority and the minority agree in their reports that it is the duty of the United States to establish a stable form of government in the Philippines. How long it will take to perform that duty no one can now predict. It is certainly necessary to supersede as rapidly as possible the present military establishment by a civil form of government. The bill under consideration is intended to inaugurate civil in place of the military government. To this there can be no objection from any quarter, for it is the plan proposed by both the majority and the minority.

When the treaty with Spain was negotiated we did not know that the obligations to maintain law and order and protect life and property in the Philippines which the United States assumed would be resisted. It was not known that the war which would follow the discharge of our obligations to Spain and to the civilized world would be of the same barbarous character as our war with the Indian tribes from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Having destroyed the despotic rule of Spain against which the Filipinos had protested and fought for three hundred years, we naturally supposed that the natives whom we had delivered from Spanish misrule would at least be friendly.

The minority, deriving their facts from disgruntled citizens at home and the motley crowd of renegade Filipinos and other revilers of the United States abroad, contend that the people of the islands we acquired from Spain were friendly to the United States and willing to cooperate with this Government in maintaining all the obligations assumed in the treaty with Spain. The majority, who rely on the testimony of our gallant generals, our brave soldiers, our commissioners, and other agents of the highest character, are forced to the conclusion that Aguinaldo and his oligarchy treacherously betrayed the confidence of this country and inaugurated a war marked by all the evidences of barbarity, hypocrisy, villainy, and cruelty which characterized the murderous Apaches in their warfare against the United States.

When we reflect that the war with Spain was more especially the work of Democrats than of Republicans, that the treaty was ratified by two-thirds of the Senate of the United States, that appropriations have been unanimously made from time to time whenever necessary to maintain the authority of the United States in the islands acquired by purchase and by war, and that our gallant and devoted Army, recruited alike from Democrats and Republicans, has made unparalleled sacrifices in its conflict with a barbarous and treacherous foe in tropical islands 8,000 miles away, we are astonished that any voice can be heard in the United States to defend the right of Aguinaldo and his coconspirators to rob, plunder, and oppress the very people the United States is solemnly bound to protect. It is still more remarkable that anybody in the United States should be found to take sides with the highwaymen and guerrillas of the Philippines against the citizens and soldiers of the United States engaged in the humane and philanthropic undertaking of conferring the blessings of liberty, law, and good government upon the people of the archipelago.

The excuse of the minority for arraigning the Administration and the Army is an unfortunate one. The minority inform us that they, too, are desirous of establishing and maintaining a stable government in the Philippines until full guaranties can be given by such government that it will carry out all the obligations that the United States incurred by the treaty with Spain, and that it will also protect all the inhabitants of those islands and carry out its treaty obligations with all the world. But the minority say that when all this shall have been accomplished, and not till then, the United States should acknowledge the independence of the government of the islands and invite all the great powers of the earth to assist this Government in maintaining a protectorate over the government established in the Philippines.

The minority contend that although the time required to accomplish this great work can not now be ascertained, yet it is the duty of the United States to promise the guerrillas in arms their independence when a stable government giving the required guaranties has been established. To prove the necessity for such a promise a vast amount of testimony has been collected and spread before the country. Flaming speeches of the most sanguinary, if not the most vituperative, character in the history of the Senate have been made to show that the Administration, the Army, and the civilians engaged in the work of establishing a government in the Philippines have been guilty of all sorts of misdoings, both of omission and commission. It has been contended that it is the duty of the Government to tell the Filipinos that whether they are good or bad they shall have their independence, not on account of any merit they possess, but solely on the demerits of the people of the United States.

We did not need the minority's elaborate illustration of the unkind things that may be said by malcontents at home or enemies abroad. We knew from the beginning that among the vast number of good citizens that free institutions have produced in the United States there is a rare sprinkling of very egotistical, very selfish, and very uncharitable people, who, in the name of goodness, will take the side of the wicked every time. They can not believe that there is any good in the Administration, in the Army, or in the masses at large which they themselves do not monopolize.

Is it any good reason why this bill should not be passed because the majority are unwilling to make promises to be performed in the distant future, the conditions of which can not be known in this generation? Is it any good reason why this bill should not be passed for the establishment of civil government—which both the minority and the majority agree ought to be done—because a very few malcontents in the United States have faith in anything and everything favorable to the enemy and disbelieve everything favorable to the Administration, the Army, or even the Government of the United States, under whose protection they live and prosper?

No man deprecates acts of cruelty on the part of the Army of the United States, even under the most trying circumstances, more than I do; but I protest against the trial of our gallant soldiers, fighting for the flag 8,000 miles away, on ex parte testimony or on stories emanating in the imagination of either the disappointed or the disgruntled elements of society. Even the minority admits that we can not honorably withdraw from the islands until there has been a government established capable of giving guaranties to us, to Spain, and to all the world to protect the lives and property of all the people of the islands, native born and foreign, and to fulfill all international obligations.

Is it fair, while all the resources of the United States, composed of men, money, and statesmanship, are devoted to carrying out the national obligations which have been incurred by both parties alike, to use arguments and publish matter to bring this country into contempt, to engender hatred among the natives of the islands for whom our people are making unparalleled sacrifices to rescue from barbarism and to secure for them the blessings of civil liberty?

There can be no question that our Democratic brethren have made a mistake in allowing the issue between them and the majority apparently to involve the honor of the country, the Administration, and the Army.

The Senators on the other side appear to realize that they are in a false position, and regard themselves as called upon to disclaim any opposition to the Army and protest that they are the true friends of the soldiers. It is unfortunate that their position in this debate has placed them apparently in opposition not only to the Army but to the Government of the United States.

No one doubts the loyalty of those Senators to their country or their pride in the achievements of our soldiers, but it is unfortunate for them that by accident or otherwise they have fallen into a false position. If they do not realize it now, they certainly will when the whole case is summed up before the people in the next campaign. The country will indorse the Administration and the Army in executing the obligations assumed by the Government and every department thereof in maintaining law and order in the archipelago.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to ask what amendment is now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], as the Chair understands.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we can have a vote on that amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Under our agreement we can not have a vote on anything until 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the agreement may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The Chair understands that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was submitted as an amendment which he intended to propose, and was printed. The Chair does not understand that he has yet offered it.

Mr. TELLER. I have offered it to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware of that fact.

Mr. TELLER. No; the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time I offered the amendment. It is now pending. It is to strike out section 5 and insert the amendment, which is a modification of the language contained in the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] calls for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that it be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not ask for that; but I do not object to its being read.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment has been read.

Mr. BATE. I think, if there is any doubt about the agreement which has been arrived at, the matter had better be determined now, because other amendments will come in and other questions will arise.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the agreement read. I do not understand that we can vote on the amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement as it appears on the Calendar will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Before it is read, I desire to say a word. I did not understand what has been stated by the Senator from Colorado to be the purport of the agreement. We have agreed to ten or fifteen amendments this morning.

Mr. TELLER. But those were acted upon by unanimous consent, as I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think so. I mean to say that I did not so understand it. I understand the agreement to be that on whatever amendments may be pending at 4 o'clock to-morrow the vote shall be taken, and afterwards that a vote shall be taken upon the bill. I agree, of course, that we can not take a vote on the bill until 4 o'clock to-morrow, but I do not understand that the agreement precludes voting on amendments during these two days of fifteen-minute debate.

Mr. TELLER. Let the agreement be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement as it appears in the Calendar will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Thursday and Saturday of this week and on Monday and Tuesday of next week; that general debate on S. 2235, "A bill temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," shall close on Saturday; that on Monday and Tuesday debate shall be limited to fifteen minutes, and that at 4 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, without further debate, the Senate shall proceed to vote on all pending amendments, and amendments to be offered, and then on the bill. This agreement is not to interfere with reports of committees of conference.

Mr. TELLER. I should like the construction of the Chair on that agreement. I am not particular about it, only I should like to know what the Chair's construction of it is.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Chair construes it, I wish to say that I understood the object of the fifteen-minute debate was to give Senators an opportunity to explain amendments offered, and to hear objections thereto.

Mr. TELLER. I thought so.

Mr. ALLISON. It was with that view that the time for a short debate on amendments was proposed, and I think the reasonable construction is that which I suggest; but of course I yield to the construction of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing specified in the agreement as to when votes shall be taken upon the amendments. Certainly the Chair can find nothing to that effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was in the chair at the time the agreement was made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I chanced to be in the chair at the time, and I think the statement was, as it appears on the Calendar, "that at 4 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, without further debate, the Senate shall proceed to vote on all pending amendments and amendments to be offered, and then on the bill."

Mr. BERRY. Amendments pending at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; on pending amendments and amendments to be offered.

Mr. TELLER. And all amendments that might be offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; and it was the distinct understanding that amendments might be offered in addition to the amendments pending.

Mr. TELLER. There was certainly no purpose to cut off amendments after we begin to vote.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to mean that all amendments are to be left pending until 4 o'clock on Tuesday?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I would say, I think not. I think the understanding was that the Senate would proceed to vote on amendments pending at 4 o'clock, and that other amendments could then be offered.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not mean that, but I mean as to the action on amendments in the meantime. That is the question the Senate is now considering.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are to vote on amendments then pending and on the amendments to be offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. And on amendments to be offered.

Mr. BERRY. We are talking about whether we can now vote upon amendments.

Mr. TELLER. The question is whether we can vote on amendments now.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has offered an amendment, and I ask that we take a vote on that now, unless some Senator wants to speak on it.

Mr. BATE. If we should do that we would be doing an injustice to a great many Senators who are not here now, because I think Senators understood there would be no vote taken on any amendment until 4 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that this morning the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines presented many amendments, which were acted upon this morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to add, Mr. President, that, as I understood the matter, having happened to be in the chair at that time the agreement was made, there was nothing suggested that would preclude voting upon amendments prior to the hour of 4 o'clock to-morrow, as was done this morning. I do not think, unless there is an objection to voting upon an amendment, that it would be out of order to vote upon any amendment prior to 4 o'clock on Tuesday. However, that would be for the Senate to decide.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendments this morning were committee amendments and were not controverted amendments which were to be discussed and decided upon by a yea-and-nay vote or anything of that kind. I suppose, as a matter of course, the committee having the bill in charge have a right to amend it at any time with amendments that do not change the bill materially and about which there is no controversy.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I meant to say—amendments not controverted.

Mr. TELLER. It is quite immaterial to me whether or not we vote upon the amendments now, except that I think this matter ought to be understood by the Senate, so that Senators will not be absent who might want to be here when the vote is taken.

I offered an amendment to strike out section 5 and insert an amendment which, I think, exactly carries out the idea of the committee, except where the committee say that the Filipinos shall be "citizens of the Philippine Islands" I insert that they shall be "citizens of the government of the Philippine Islands." I am not myself able to conceive that they can be citizens of an island. There must be a sovereignty, as I understand it, and for that reason I have offered the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if no one is prepared to go on with the discussion of the unfinished business, I ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside for thirty minutes.

Mr. TELLER. I think we had better not do that. A number of Senators have gone out to lunch who will probably return in a few moments, and meantime, as I want to say a few words, I may as well say them now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I noticed there was a lull in the discussion, and that is the reason I made the suggestion.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not regard section 5 as a matter of any great importance, because it seems to me that it really does nothing. When you say that the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands are "citizens of the Philippine Islands," that conveys no information to me, for I can not conceive of their being citizens of an island that has not sovereignty. I propose to amend that by saying that they shall be "citizens of the government of the Philippine Islands." I do not know what would be the effect of the committee's provision. The committee provides that the Filipinos are "entitled to the protection of the United States," while my amendment provides that they shall be "entitled to the protection of the United States and all the rights and privileges of the bill of rights as enumerated in section 2 of this act."

Mr. President, that is a matter of no very great consequence. I want to say a word or two, however, about this debate. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] who has just taken his seat followed the regular course of his associates on the other side of the Chamber, which seems to be to divert the whole question from one of consequence to one of inconsequence, or one of comparatively no consequence. It is not a question we are considering here now, whether the American Army has within its confines some cruel or wicked men, nor is it a question whether the American Army is being somewhat brought into discredit by the misconduct of some of its members and some of its officers. Those are not the questions which we ought to consider, though we are considering them. The question we ought first to consider is as to whether it is a proper thing for us to govern those islands in the way we are now governing them, or whether they ought to be governed in a different manner.

Mr. President, I wish to read a word or two from what the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said in the Senate before the treaty was ratified, January 24, 1899:

> I believe we can be trusted as a people to deal honestly and justly with the islands and their inhabitants thus given to our care. What our precise policy shall be I do not know, because I for one am not sufficiently informed as to the conditions there to be able to say what it will be best to do, nor, I may add, do I think anyone is.

I think that was a correct statement.

> But I believe that we shall have the wisdom not to attempt to incorporate those islands with our body politic or make their inhabitants part of our citizenship or set their labor alongside of ours and within our tariff to compete in any industry with American workmen.

I skip some, because I do not desire to consume all my time in reading.

> I believe that we shall have the wisdom, the self-restraint, and the ability to restore peace and order in those islands and give to their people an opportunity for self-government and for freedom under the protecting shield of the United States until the time shall come when they are able to stand alone, if such a thing be possible, and if they do not themselves desire to remain under our protection.

Skipping again:

> During the campaign of last autumn I said in many speeches to the people of my State that I could never assent to hand those islands back to Spain; that I wanted no subject races and no vassal states, but that we had by the fortunes of war assumed a great responsibility in the Philippines; that we ought to meet it, and that we ought to give to those people an opportunity for freedom, for peace, and for self-government; that we ought to protect them from the rapacity of other nations and seek to uplift those whom we had freed. From those views I have never swerved, and I believed then, as I believe now, that they met with the approbation of an overwhelming majority of the people of Massachusetts. I believe those results can be and will be obtained. I can not forecast the future, as so many others have been able to do. I can but proceed step by step, and the only step I can see now to take is to ratify the treaty, for in that way alone can we take the islands from Spain and give ourselves opportunity to deal with them and bring peace and freedom to their inhabitants.

Again, he says:

> The treaty commits the disposition of the Philippine Islands to Congress and to the ways and practices of peace.

I believe that was practically the opinion of the majority of the Senators at least who voted for the treaty. I read this because the Senator in that statement expressed the idea which I had expressed, not so finely as he did, but as positively as I could on that question.

It does not seem to me as if it were worth while now to spend very much time over the question whether we had the power to take the islands. On that I myself have never had any question. We have as much right to take territory by conquest of war or by purchase as any other nation in the world. I have so contended and still contend. I said in the fall of 1898 that it was a question simply of what we would do with the islands when we had them; that we were not going to give them to Spain; that we were not going to trade them off to any other country; that we were not going to withdraw from them and say that the task was too big for us; but that we were going to endeavor, I stated, as the Senator from Massachusetts did, to establish a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

I said in express terms that our flag would stay there until we put up something better; that it could not come down until we put up something better, just as happened in Cuba the other day. We put up a flag for the Cubans. They could not have put it up without our help. We had to drive out Spain. Of course you may say they put it up. I noticed what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] said about the putting up of the Cuban flag. A gentleman called on me yesterday, who was present and saw the flag put up, and he said there were thousands and thousands of people in the city of Habana, and when our flag came down and the Cuban flag went up, he had expected to hear a great shout, but on the contrary the people were quiet, subdued, and thousands of them were in tears. That flag went up not amid the cheers of an unthinking crowd, but it went up amidst the tears of men who had fought to see it put up, of men who had sacrificed everything except life to see it go up.

So we said when this treaty was ratified here, "Our flag is there; we are going to keep it there until we put up something better," which will be the Filipino flag when it is put up.

Mr. President, I feel inclined to complain somewhat of the attempt to put upon us the charge that we have been traducing and slandering the Army. I say nothing of the kind has been done. The Republican Senators during this debate have constituted themselves the special champions of the Army, as it appears. They have gone into heroics over the honor of the Army and inveighed against the wickedness of those who complain not of the Army but of the individual misconduct of officers and soldiers.

They have not of late denied that there has been gross violation of the rules of warfare recognized among the Christian nations of the world.

Some of the Army officers have declared that the Filipinos are not conducting the war according to the rules of civilized warfare, and that that justifies our soldiers in disregarding such rules. I have not heard any Senator assert that such is the law, and I do not suppose I shall hear any Senator assert it. No one can defend an atrocity or violation of the recognized rules of warfare by such an excuse. I am glad that excuse is confined to a very limited number outside of the Senate.

Have the opponents of the present conduct of the war abused the Army? Have those who complain that it has not been properly conducted abused the Army? Have the opponents gone beyond what is right? They certainly have not abused the Army unless they have brought false accusations against the Army or against members of it. Have we done that? I say without hesitation we have not.

We have said that at times, and in places that we have stated, the laws of civilized warfare have been disregarded, and we have called for a reform in these cases.

Is it not admitted by the Administration that these charges are true? It is also true that Republican Senators and Republican newspapers throughout the land condemn such acts, and they have not found defenders anywhere except by a few men in the Army. The great body of the officers and soldiers repudiate and condemn such acts as heartily as we do.

Where do these charges primarily come from? Who makes them? I think it is safe to say 90 per cent of them come from soldiers in the field or returned soldiers just from the field. They have all appeared in the public press of the country, not by the procurement of Democratic Senators, but by the action of the soldiers themselves or their families and friends. The other 10 per cent can be found in the official reports of Army officers or civil governors who in many cases are also Army officers.

It is said that in some instances these violations of the laws of war are to be attributed to the cruelties inflicted on our soldiers or on the inhabitants friendly to us. These facts may be considered as palliative or extenuating, but not as a defense. Such circumstances may be properly considered as mitigating the offense. But many of these authenticated cases do not admit even of such palliation, for there was no such inciting cause; on the contrary, some of the cases complained of could not have been caused by the especial misconduct of the Filipinos or by the general conduct of the war on their part.

Is it inconsistent with proper respect for the Army for those who know or have reason to suppose such violations of the rules of war are taking place to denounce them or to call the attention of Congress to them?

I do not mean to charge that any member of this body has any degree of sympathy with such acts, or any violation of the rules of warfare, but in the very nature of things the Republican Senators will hesitate to bring to the attention of Congress those things that may be used to condemn the policy of the party in respect to these islands.

We do know that notwithstanding their disapproval and condemnation of such acts they have refused to admit their existence until the proof compelled such admission. I can understand how a party believing that their policy is just and wise will satisfy their consciences by the hope that such cases are merely sporadic and do not represent any considerable sentiment in the Army, and that for them at least there may be some mitigating circumstances.

But is it fair, is it just, to say that those who demand that if such crimes have been committed they shall cease and the authors shall be punished are moved by partisan feelings only and a desire to discredit a branch of the public service?

If the newspapers of the country of all kinds publish these charges, giving them great publicity; if official reports contain such charges, as they certainly do to some extent, why is it that those who declare they do not approve such violation of the laws of war denounce in unmeasured terms those who but at most reiterate them, and in most cases have not gone beyond asking that the reports may be considered by the proper authorities for the purpose of punishing the offenders if true and showing their falsity if false.

Is it not to secure to their political party the advantages that may be secured by discrediting the reports in the first instance, and if that is not possible, making it appear that the parties complaining are moved only by hostility to the Army? With courts-martial finding facts that are so atrocious as to meet the condemnation of the best of our military officers and the condemnation of the President of the United States, with courts-martial yet to be held to determine the truth of these charges, it would seem to the ordinary citizen that enough has been proved and is likely to be proved to justify all efforts that have been made to have the war conducted as becomes a civilized and Christian nation.

A Senator has said on the floor of the Senate:

> I stand for the army of McKinley, the army that is supported in its mission by the American people at the polls.

What is the mission of the Army? No man knows what it is and no man has dared to declare what its mission is. When will the party in power declare its mission? What is meant by the army of McKinley? Is the American Army the Army of the President? Is it not subject to the laws of the country? Is it not open to criticism if deserving of criticism? Is the question how the war shall be conducted a question for the Army or for Congress?

Is it the honor of the Army that is involved, or is it the honor of the nation? It seems to me that our national honor is involved in this matter, and the nation's acts must be determined by national authority, and that is the Congress of the United States.

Why complain that the Democratic Senators insist that cruelties have been practiced by soldiers in our Army and that they must be discontinued?

A large number of influential and devoted Republicans all over the land are making the same charges that are complained of, and are insisting that the war as carried on is a disgrace to the nation.

A large number of influential divines of every denomination of the Christian religion are making the same complaint.

A great number of Republican newspapers are reiterating the charges. Public meetings are held, not of Democrats, but composed of men of all political parties and of all religious thought, demanding that there must be a change in the conduct of the war.

Why do Senators on the other side of the Chamber waste their time in charging that all of the suggestions made here which have appeared in the public prints and in official reports are simply presented in order to discredit the Army?

Mr. President, there has been a good deal of discussion as to inconsistency. I observe, however, by the indications on the part of the Chair, that I have about used up my fifteen minutes, and therefore I will withhold what I was about to say in addition.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Colorado can go on if no one else desires to proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I hardly think I ought to do so. Some one else may wish to speak. I will take occasion on some other amendment to submit what I have to say.

Mr. BACON addressed the Senate. After having spoken thirteen minutes, he said:

Mr. President, I do not know how much of my time I have consumed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Georgia has two or three minutes left.

Mr. BACON. I was about to say that I have another authority which I wish to read, but I do not want to start on it unless I have the opportunity to complete it, and I could not do so in that time. I have something else to say in connection with it. I will have plenty of opportunity to do so hereafter, and therefore I will suspend for the present.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 31st ultimo approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1172) granting an increase of pension to Catharine F. Edmunds;

An act (S. 1464) to establish storm-warning stations at South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan;

An act (S. 3129) for the authorization of the erection of buildings by the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations on military reservations of the United States;

An act (S. 3666) to authorize the sale of a part of the Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, in the State of Nebraska;

An act (S. 3848) granting a deed of quitclaim and release to Lorillard Spencer, his heirs and assigns, of all the right, title, and interest in and to certain land in the city of Newport, R. I.;

An act (S. 3908) granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Bridger, Fort Sanders, and Fort Laramie military reservations, and Fort Laramie wood reservation, in Wyoming, the right to purchase one quarter section of public land on said reservations as pasture or grazing land, and for other purposes; and

An act (S. 4264) providing that the statute of limitations of the several States shall apply as a defense to actions brought in the United States courts for the recovery of lands patented in severalty to members of any tribe of Indians under any treaty between it and the United States of America.

PAY OF THE NAVY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, a statement prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Navy of all expenditures under the head of "Pay of the Navy" in the naval appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1902, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

GARFIELD HOSPITAL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting an estimate of appropriation for equipping Garfield Hospital with appliances for escape and protection from fires in the sum of $3,000; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, certain information relative to quarters rented by the Navy Department, giving the location, area of floor space occupied, and the annual rental thereof; which was referred to the Committee an Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLESTON (S. C.) NAVY-YARD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 27th ultimo, estimates covering such public works as can either be erected or started during the next fiscal year at the navy-yard at Charleston, S. C.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LAWS OF PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the Journal of the Executive Council of Porto Rico, Second Legislative Assembly, and the Minutes of the House of Delegates of Porto Rico, First Legislative Assembly, Second Session, 1902, submitted by the secretary of the Territory of Porto Rico; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

BRITISH SHIP FOSCOLIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read. The attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is directed to the message.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith the bill (S. 173) entitled "An act for the relief of the owners of the British ship Foscolia and cargo."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, June 2, 1902.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest, inasmuch as the bill is signed by the presiding officers of both Houses, the message and bill had better lie on the table, if that course is agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to state that the entire matter set out in the bill has already become a law through the President affixing his signature to the so-called omnibus claims bill. Whatever course is necessary to dispose of the bill I wish to take at the proper time, whether it is to indefinitely postpone it or otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proper course is that the message and bill shall lie on the table, and that order is made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to transgress upon the unanimous-consent agreement, but if there is nothing doing on that I should like to report a joint resolution and ask for its consideration, because it is intended to correct a matter in the public-building bill which lately passed and is now before the Executive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to present, out of order, a report. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., to report it without amendment.

Mr. BACON. If no other Senator desires to speak, I do not know that it would be a violation of the agreement for me to proceed with what I was saying.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. I hope the Senator from Georgia will proceed, as no other Senator is ready to speak. Of course the unanimous-consent agreement excludes all other business.

Mr. BACON. Of course when any other Senator desires to be recognized, I shall yield the floor to him.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I hope Senators who wish to speak will do so.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire in any manner to trench upon their rights.

Mr. WARREN. Will not the Senator from Georgia allow the joint resolution to be acted upon?

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator was through. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator has any objection——

Mr. BACON. Not at all. It was an inadvertence on my part.

Mr. LODGE. This morning a request was made for unanimous consent to have a bill passed, and objection was made on both sides of the Chamber that it was in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to transgress. As I said, it is merely a correction, and I know that no one will object to it, but at the same time——

Mr. LODGE. I dislike exceedingly to have any violation of the unanimous-consent agreement made, even in a matter of detail.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that this possibly might be an exception, as I understand the Senator from Wyoming to say that it relates to a bill now in the hands of the President, and if the correction is not made there may be no remedy in the future. Am I correct?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; it is in that nature. It applies to the public-building bill, which is in the hands of the Executive.

Mr. BACON. I think under those circumstances the unanimous-consent agreement would not be violated by its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that of the sum authorized at this session of Congress to be expended in enlarging and improving the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, use not to exceed $45,000 for the purchase of additional ground; but such additional ground shall be contiguous to the present site and shall have a frontage on Forsyth and Adams streets of not less than 50 feet and a depth of not less than 208 feet.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to perfect an amendment offered this morning, which I said I would do after the others were agreed to.

On page 9, line 13, where the words were inserted "shall classify and" I move to insert after "classify" the words "according to its agricultural character and productiveness;" so as to read: "shall classify according to its agricultural character and productiveness and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. The Public Printer can be notified of this additional amendment.

Mr. BACON resumed and concluded his speech. The entire speech is as follows:

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there has been a good deal said in this debate about the character of the Filipino people, and a good many things have been said which I think are contrary to the facts and unauthorized. I desire to put into the RECORD, in order that they may appear in this debate, some estimates which have been made of this people by those who have had the best opportunity to judge of their capacity.

I will say in the beginning that criticism has been made upon those of us on this side of the Chamber who oppose this bill, that while we profess to deprecate military rule we do not support a bill to establish civil government when the opportunity is offered. It is not the fact that we are unwilling to support a bill to establish civil government, but that we object to a bill which is not proper in itself.

And speaking of the details of the bill I wish to say that in addition to the fundamental objection that no promise of independent nationality is given to the Filipinos, my particular objections to it are two. One is that it fails to give to the Filipinos opportunity for participation in their government through their representatives, and the other is that it affords an opportunity for exploitation, and as I said the other day, I think all matters with respect to the disposition of the property and franchises of those islands should be postponed until the people themselves can have an opportunity to determine what shall be done with reference to them.

My purpose now is not to make anything like a speech, but simply to call attention to and to have put in the RECORD the testimonials which have been given by others as to the capacity of this people. The first person whose testimony I will give is that of Admiral Dewey. I will remark that many of the extracts, if not all of them, have already been mentioned in the Senate at various times, but I desire them to appear consecutively as a part of the debate.

On the 27th of June, 1898, in response to a telegram sent to him by the Secretary of the Navy, Admiral Dewey sent this reply, which will be found in the report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1898, volume 2, page 108:

In my opinion these people are far superior in their intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races.

DEWEY.

Then in Senate Document 62, which contains the documents sent by the executive department to the Senate, there is another dispatch from Admiral Dewey, found on page 383, in which he says this, referring to the former telegram:

In a telegram sent to the Department on June 23 I expressed the opinion that "these people are far superior in their intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races." Further intercourse with them has confirmed me in this opinion.

We have sent two commissions to the Philippine Islands which have made very careful examinations into the question as to the capacity of the Filipinos to participate in their own government. Each of these commissions has sent a recommendation, which is before the Senate, that the Filipinos be permitted to have participation in their government to the extent of the election of a representative body by them which shall be clothed with legislative powers. The Schurman Commission and the Taft Commission have both made that recommendation.

The Schurman Commission made a very elaborate examination into the question of the capacity of the Filipino people and their character, and the testimony takes up almost the entire second volume of the report of the Schurman Commission, where is set out the testimony of a great many witnesses, men of standing and capacity, and who have had opportunity to judge. The testimony is abundant in that volume as to the belief that these people are of sufficient intelligence and character to participate through representative bodies in the control of their own government. As a result of that examination and as a conclusion, the Commission, on page 119 of the first volume of their report, use this language in giving the reasons why in their opinion those people are capacitated to participate in their own government.

For this confidence it has the following, among other grounds: First, the study by educated Filipinos of the various examples of constitutional government has resulted in their selection, as best adapted to the conditions and character of the various peoples inhabiting the archipelago, of almost precisely the political institutions and arrangements which have been worked out in practice by the American people; and these are also, though less definitely apprehended, the political ideas of the masses of the Philippine people themselves.

This point has been frequently illustrated in the course of the preceding exposition, and it must here suffice to say that the commission was constantly surprised by the harmony subsisting between the rights, privileges, and institutions enjoyed by Americans and the reforms desired by the best Filipinos. Secondly, in addition to the adaptation of the American form of government to the Filipinos, the Filipinos themselves are of unusually promising material. They possess admirable domestic and personal virtues, and though they are uncontrollable when such elemental passions as jealousy, revenge, or resentment are once aroused, most of them—practically all of the civilized inhabitants of Luzon and Visayas—are naturally and normally peaceful, docile, and deferential to constituted authority.

On the suppression of the insurrection the great majority of them will be found to be good, law-abiding citizens. Thirdly, though the majority of the inhabitants are uneducated, they evince a strong desire to be instructed, and the example of Japan is with them a cherished ideal of the value of modern education. A system of free schools for the people—another American institution, it will be noted—has been an important element in every Philippine programme of reforms. Fourthly, the educated Filipinos, though constituting a minority, are far more numerous than is generally supposed, and are scattered all over the archipelago; and the Commission desires to bear the strongest testimony to the high range of their intelligence, and not only to their intellectual training, but also to their social refinement, as well as to the grace and charm of the personal character. These educated Filipinos, in a word, are the equals of men one meets in similar vocations, law, medicine, business, etc., in Europe or America.

That which I have just read is a part of the report of the Schurman Commission, of which Professor Schurman, Mr. Denby, Professor Worcester, Admiral Dewey, and, I believe, General Otis, were members.

In a book published by a member of the same Commission, written before the Spanish war and at a time when there was no inducement to partisanship, entitled "The Philippine Islands," by Dean C. Worcester, on page 479, he draws this very attractive and interesting picture of the character and social conditions of the Filipinos.

The civilized Filipino certainly has many good qualities to offset his bad traits. The traveler can not fail to be impressed by his open-handed and cheerful hospitality. He will go to any amount of trouble, and often to no little expense, in order to accommodate some perfect stranger who has not the slightest claim on him; and he never turns one of his own race from his door.

If cleanliness be next to godliness, he certainly has much to recommend him. Every village has its bath, if there is any chance for one, and men, women, and children patronize it liberally. Should the situation of a town be unfortunate in this particular, its people will carry water from a great distance if necessary, and in any event will keep clean.

Hardly less noticeable than the almost universal hospitality are the well-regulated homes and the happy family life, which one soon finds to be the rule. Children are orderly, respectful, and obedient to their parents. Wives are allowed an amount of liberty hardly equaled in any other Eastern country, and they seldom abuse it. More often than not they are the financiers of their families, and I have frequently been referred by the head of a house to "mi mujer" when I wished to make a bargain. Women have their share of the work to do, but it is a just share, and they perform it without question and without grumbling.

At vespers in the evening there is always a pretty scene. An instant hush comes over the busy village. In each house father, mother, and children fall on their knees before the image or picture of some saint and repeat their prayers. The devotions over, each child kisses the hand of his father and his mother, at the same time wishing them good evening. He then makes an obeisance to each of his brothers and sisters, as well as to each guest who happens to be present, repeating his pleasant salutation with each funny bow. Host and hostess also greet one in the same way, and in remote places, where white men are a rarity, the little tots often kneel to kiss one's hand.

The civilized native is self-respecting and self-restrained to a remarkable degree. He is patient under misfortune and forbearing under provocation. While it is stretching the truth to say that he never reveals anger, he certainly succeeds much better in controlling himself than does the average European. When he does give way to passion, however, he is as likely as not to become for the moment a maniac and to do someone a fatal injury.

He is a kind father and a dutiful son. His aged relatives are never left in want, but are brought to his home and are welcome to share the best that it affords to the end of their days.

Among his fellows he is genial and sociable. He loves to sing, dance, and make merry. He is a born musician, and, considering the sort of instruments at his disposal, and especially the limited advantages which he has for perfecting himself in their use, his peformances on them are often very remarkable.

He is naturally fearless and admires nothing so much as bravery in others. Under good officers he makes an excellent soldier, and he is ready to fight to the death for his honor or his home.

Mr. President, in connection with what I read from Admiral Dewey, making comparison between the capacity and the intelligence of the Filipinos and the Cubans and awarding superiority to the Filipinos, I desire to say that I have asked a great many Army officers, who have served both in Cuba and in the Philippines, what their estimate was, and without a single exception every Army officer has given me the same opinion that Admiral Dewey expressed in these two telegrams to the Secretary of the Navy, that the Filipinos are superior in point of capacity and intelligence to the Cubans. Of course, he is speaking of the average of the two peoples.

It is exceedingly gratifying to me that the testimony of Admiral Dewey and the statement of Professor Worcester in his book is corroborated by all of the official documents which have been sent to us by the Executive Department in regard to that matter and also by the testimony which has been taken before the Senate Committee on the Philippines.

I have in my hand a part of the testimony. I can not refer to a great many things that are in it, but I will refer to a few only. Governor Taft is very emphatic in his commendation of the Philippine people as a people of character and good disposition and intelligence. On page 410 of the testimony there is this question and answer, the chairman asking the question of Governor Taft:

The Filipinos are temperate?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir; the Filipinos are temperate, but they drink. They drink a little vino, and vino shops have been very largely reduced since our occupancy and under the civil government.

Then Governor Taft, in response to another question on the same page, said what I shall read:

The CHAIRMAN. The sale of liquor has been regulated and reduced since you have been there?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir; it has; and I venture to say that the moral condition of the city of Manila is as good as that of any American city I know of.

On page 77 of the same volume of testimony there is a statement by Governor Taft in the nature of a voluntary statement on his part, and I think it important to call attention to it in view of the very general and unqualified assertions which have been made as to the character of the Filipinos in their prosecution of the war. Governor Taft says:

I desire to say, with respect to the treatment of American prisoners by the insurgent officers high in command, that there was usually very little to criticise. When you get to officers lower in command you will find instances of the murder of American prisoners, not many, but enough to cause comment as to the difference in treatment.

In this connection I read the cablegram, to which I have already called attention, from Admiral Dewey, of June 27. He says:

HONGKONG, June 27, 1898.

SECRETARY OF NAVY, Washington:

Receipt of telegram of June 14 is acknowledged. Aguinaldo, insurgent leader, with 13 of his staff, arrived May 19, by permission, on Nanshan. Established self Cavite, outside arsenal, under the protection of our guns, and organized his army. I have had several conferences with him, generally of a personal nature.

Consistently, I have refrained from assisting him in any way with the force under my command, and on several occasions I have declined requests that I should do so, telling him the squadron could not act until the arrival of the United States troops. At the same time I have given him to understand that I consider insurgents as friends, being opposed to a common enemy. He has gone to attend a meeting of insurgent leaders for the purpose of forming a civil government. Aguinaldo has acted independently of the squadron, but has kept me advised of his progress, which has been wonderful. I have allowed to pass by water recruits, arms, and ammunition, and to take such Spanish arms and ammunition from the arsenal as he needed.

Here is the part to which I wish to call attention:

Have advised frequently to conduct the war humanely, which he has done invariably. My relations with him are cordial, but I am not in his confidence. The United States has not been bound in any way to assist insurgents by any act or promises, and he is not to my knowledge committed to assist us. I believe he expects to capture Manila without my assistance, but doubt ability, they not yet having many guns. In my opinion these people are far superior in their intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races.

DEWEY.

General MacArthur, in his testimony before the Committee on the Philippines, said what I shall read. He was speaking as to the policy of granting to the Filipinos the opportunity to participate through representative government in the control of their own affairs. I can not go back entirely, but I will take up enough to make the connection.

Senator CARMACK. Will not that depend very largely on granting them at least a considerable measure of political rights and share in the government that is established over them?

General MACARTHUR. Undoubtedly, and they are getting that.

Senator CARMACK. In what way?

General MACARTHUR. They have almost complete control of their municipal governments. They have been given a very considerable control of the provincial government, and what they get in the general government depends upon future action. So far as I am concerned, I should be glad to give them a very considerable voice.

Senator BEVERIDGE. Do I understand you by that to mean that as they demonstrate their fitness and capability in these minor and smaller fields of political action their participation in larger affairs would be increased accordingly?

General MACARTHUR. Yes; I think of course that is——

Senator PATTERSON. I do not think it is just or fair for the Senator to make such a statement——

Senator CARMACK. I understand you to say that you would be willing to give them a very considerable share in the general government?

General MACARTHUR. Yes.

Senator CARMACK. Do you think they should have that now?

General MACARTHUR. I would be willing to give it to them, as I have said. I have become attached to those people and have a good deal of faith in them.

Senator CARMACK. You speak of them as quick, generous, and intelligent people.

General MACARTHUR. I so consider them. Of course the society is classified, as it is everywhere else.

Senator CARMACK. But as a whole, General, I believe in your reports you speak of the Filipino people in an appreciative way—as a people with considerable native intelligence, quick and apt and generous, flexible and teachable.

General MACARTHUR. I believe that is the general tenor.

Senator CARMACK. That is the general tenor of your report?

General MACARTHUR. Yes.

Senator CARMACK. You do not regard the people of the Philippine Islands, as a whole, as a miserable, corrupt, cruel, and a degraded race, do you, General?

General MACARTHUR. Oh, by no means.

And so on.

Now, Mr. President, there is a very interesting and detailed statement made as to the character and social conditions of the Philippine people, to which the attention of the Senate has more than once been called, and parts of which have been inserted in the RECORD, but which I desire now to have read in this connection.

It was alluded to on Saturday by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and the effect of these statements by two naval officers was endeavored to in some degree be depreciated by the suggestion that the officers did not have an opportunity to see anything except such things as the Filipino people desired them to see, in order that they might not have a true appreciation of conditions as they existed; but the fact is that these two officers were for several weeks going through the islands, and the general narration which they gave shows that they saw not a limited and circumscribed part of the conditions as they existed, but that they mingled generally with the people and had the best of opportunity for forming an estimate of their character and their social condition and habits.

It is a report made by two naval officers, Paymaster W. B. Wilcox and Naval Cadet L. R. Sargent, who made an extended tour through northern Luzon in the autumn of 1898. This is an extract from a book written on the Philippines by Albert G. Robinson, and it is found beginning on page 284.

I will state that this visit was made by these two officers at a time when the American Army was in Manila, and when the entire island of Luzon, to say nothing of any other part of the archipelago, was under the control of the Filipino government, and that whatever there was of order and of orderly government in that island at that time was entirely under the authority of the Filipino government, with which the American Government at that time had no connection, and over which the American Army attempted to exercise no control.

As it is a little long I will ask that the Secretary may read it for me, and in order that the connection may be maintained I will ask him to begin at the beginning of the chapter, on page 282, and read through to page 290, or so much as may be necessary to preserve the continuity, the whole of it being afterwards reproduced in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

On August 20, 1896, the never wholly quenched flame of rebellion against an obnoxious rule broke out afresh in the Philippine Islands. Although interrupted at times, and seemingly ended by the treaty of Biacnabato, the fire still burned, and it is now known that at the time of the arrival of the American Army in Manila, in June, 1898, almost the entire area of the Philippines—practically all, with the exception of one or two of the larger coast cities—was in the hands of the insurgents. Not only were they in control of the country; they were administering its political affairs as well.

This they continued to do for the greater part of the island throughout the following year, practically until the autumn of 1899. Up to that time the territory occupied by the forces of the United States in the island of Luzon was confined to a very limited area in the vicinity of Manila, with a filamentary extension northward for some 50 or 60 miles along the Manila-Dagupan Railway. Very much the same condition obtained on the other islands. One thing is certain; although greatly disturbed by the conditions of war, this territory was under some form of governmental administration.

Luzon is approximately as large as Ohio, and the principal islands of the Visayan group cover an area a little less than that of West Virginia. I leave out the southern islands, Mindanao and the rest, because they never had much government anyway. That this sixty or seventy thousand square miles of territory in Luzon and Visaya is not inhabited by savages is now apparent. Between the downfall of Spanish authority and the American military occupation there was an interim of more than a year. Who governed the country during that time?

Few facts are known concerning the Administration during that period. Conflicting reports reached Manila. Official headquarters reported the receipt of many complaints of a state of anarchy. Private sources reported a state of law and order. Personal observation and investigation was impossible for foreigners. The latest wholly reliable information was obtained by two American naval officers, Paymaster W. B. Wilcox and Naval Cadet L. R. Sargent, who made an extended tour through northern Luzon in the autumn of 1898. Their trip was made before the opening of hostilities between the Americans and the Filipinos, and after a Filipino government had been established and in operation for several months. Mr. Sargent's story of their journey was published in the Outlook, and because of its value and exceeding interest I take the liberty of quoting a review of it here.

Mr. Sargent, in opening his article, recalls the conditions in October and November, 1898, when the journey was made:

"It will be remembered that at that date the United States had not yet announced its policy with regard to the Philippines. The terms of the treaty with Spain were being negotiated by our commissioners at Paris, and the fate of the islands hung in the balance. In the meantime the native population, taking matters into their own hands, had declared their independence from all foreign jurisdiction, and had set up a provisional government with Aguinaldo at its head. Although this government has never been recognized, and in all probability will go out of existence without recognition, yet it can not be denied that, in a region occupied by many millions of inhabitants, for nearly six months it stood alone between anarchy and order.

"The military forces of the United States held control only in Manila, with its environs, and in Cavite, and had no authority to proceed farther; while in the vast remaining districts the representatives of the only other recognized power on the field were prisoners in the hands of their despised subjects. It was the opinion at Manila during this anomalous period in our Philippine relations, and possibly in the United States as well, that such a state of affairs must breed something akin to anarchy. I can state unreservedly, however, that Mr. Wilcox and I found the existing conditions to be much at variance with this opinion. During our absence from Manila we traveled more than 600 miles in a very comprehensive circuit through the northern part of the island of Luzon, traversing a characteristic and important district.

"In this way we visited seven provinces, of which some were under the immediate control of the central government at Malolos, while others were remotely situated, separated from each other and from the seat of government by natural divisions of land, and accessible only by lengthy and arduous travel. As a tribute to the efficiency of Aguinaldo's government and to the law-abiding character of his subjects, I offer the fact that Mr. Wilcox and I pursued our journey throughout in perfect security and returned to Manila with only the most pleasing recollections of the quiet and orderly life which we found the natives to be leading under the new régime."

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia how much of this volume he proposes to have read.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing that the remainder of it shall be inserted in the RECORD without reading. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. The whole volume?

Mr. BACON. No; only the extracts made from the report of these two naval officers, and the only part——

Mr. ALLISON. That report has been printed in the RECORD two or three times.

Mr. BACON. I stated, though the Senator was not in the Chamber at the time, that it had been previously partly read to the Senate, and that I simply desired it to be put in in this connection. Of course, I do not desire to detain the Senate by reading it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think everybody knows the situation under which those naval officers passed through the island of Luzon, when they passed through there, and the surrounding circumstances. I remember very well it was read here once before, and that it was distinctly stated that in every town they came to they found officers of the so-called Filipino army, I only object to any lengthy reading of this volume, written by some gentleman——

Mr. BACON. No; I do not want to have any part of the volume read except simply the connecting parts, the fragments of this report, the parts which connect the one with the other.

Mr. ALLISON. In a fifteen-minute debate we can probably dispense with the reading of a portion of this volume, unless the Senator from Georgia very much desires it. I have no objection, however, to a reprint of what these two officers say.

Mr. BACON. I have stated that I did not desire it read if it could be put into the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that there are two or three more pages, and, in the absence of objection, they will be inserted in the RECORD without reading. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

The remainder of the report referred to is as follows:

In his descriptions of the many towns they passed through Mr. Sargent leaves on the mind only a picture of peace, order, and happiness among a bright, intelligent, and ambitious people, although their knowledge of the affairs of the world was limited. Quotations from the article will illustrate this effect upon the reader:

"From Nueva Viscaya for the next three weeks of travel we passed from one hospitable town to another and enjoyed a round of novel entertainments. Our route now carried us through the valley of the Rio Grande Cagayan, probably the largest area of level country in Luzon Island. With the exception of the region in the immediate vicinity of Manila and of the narrow strip of land along the western coast, this valley, previous to the revolution, was the firmest and most ancient seat of Spanish authority on the island. Its towns throughout give evidence of the labor that has been expended on them. There are comparatively few nipa huts and many substantial frame buildings. Each town, moreover, has an elaborate church and convent, usually built of brick.

"Many of these churches date back into the last century, one which I remember particularly bearing the date of 1780 as that of its completion. Our entertainment in the different towns varied according to the facilities at hand, but in all cases music was a leading feature. In the absence of all accessories the village band would be called into the building in which we were received, and would play tune after tune well into the night while we conversed at our ease with the village fathers. At the little village of Cordon, which has a population of only a few hundred, we passed one of the pleasantest evenings of our journey. In this instance four accomplished little girls gave the entertainment its particular charm. Soon after our arrival the entire village trooped into the large room of the public building that had been turned over to our party. The floor was cleared for a dance, and the band commenced with a waltz.

"The towns of Ilagan and Aparri, with their wealthy and pleasure-loving population, provided the most elaborate entertainment. Ilagan is the capital city of the tobacco-raising province of Isabella and is situated near the head of navigation of the Rio Grande; Aparri is situated at its mouth in the province of Cagayan and is the only seaport of the valley. These towns are laid out in regular streets and have many squares of substantial frame buildings. They have each a population of between 10,000 and 15,000. We spent three days at Ilagan, and I think that it was here that we were brought into closest touch with the Filipino character.

"The cultured class, which I have spoken of before, was strongly in evidence, and I think that before leaving we had discussed views with nearly every member of it. They all realized that they were passing through a crucial period in the history of their people, and young and old were eager to acquire all possible knowledge that might assist them to think clearly at this crisis. Their realization of the gravity of their position did not, however, rob their character of its natural gaiety, nor make them forget their duty as hosts. On the evening following our arrival a ball was given in our honor, which was attended by all the élite of the town.

"There were present about 50 young women and twice that number of men. All were dressed in European fashion. The girls were pleasant and intelligent. The men comported themselves in all respects like gentlemen. It was hard to realize that we were in the very heart of a country generally supposed to be given up to semisavages. At intervals between dances many songs were sung, usually by one or two of the guests, while all frequently joined in the chorus. The national hymn was repeated several times with great enthusiasm. The ball lasted until nearly 3 o'clock in the morning and broke up with good feeling at its height.

"On the second evening we were invited to attend the theater, where two one-act Spanish plays were presented by the young society people of the town. The theater itself had been constructed by the villagers only a few weeks before. It was a large bamboo structure, one end of which was used as the village market, while the stage occupied the other end. The stage arrangements were good; curtain, side scenes, and footlight all en règle. In the performance of the play we saw our friends—the typical young Filipinos—in a light in which very few of our nation have had an opportunity to view them. They comported themselves with credit in a position where humor, intelligence, and artistic ability were the requisites of success.

"During our stay at Ilagan we lived at the house of the mayor. This building was of great size and was built of magnificent hard wood from the neighboring forest. One wing, containing a reception room and two bedrooms, was turned over to us. The reception room was very large, with a finely polished floor and with windows along two sides. It contained a piano and a set of excellent bamboo furniture, including the most comfortable chairs and divans imaginable. There were two tall mirrors on the wall and a number of old-fashioned pictures and framed paper flowers. * * * There was one form of hospitality which we met at Ilagan and Aparri that we would gladly have avoided. I still shudder to recall the stupendous dinners that were spread before us night after night. The Filipinos pride themselves on their cookery, and it is indeed excellent."

Mr. Sargent, in testifying as to the drinking habits of the natives, says he did not once see an intoxicated man on his journey. He continues:

"Our party proceeded on the Oslo from Aparri around the northwestern corner of the island and landed on the coast near the northern end of the province of South Ilocos. From here we proceeded by land southward through the western provinces. During this part of our journey we were thrown into closer association than previously with the military element of the population, of which I hope to have an opportunity to speak further in a subsequent article.

"The towns on the western coast are even larger than those on the Rio Grande. Vigan, the capital of South Ilocos, has a population of about 28,000, and Candon, farther to the southward, is not far behind this figure. The mayor of Candon was of the hustler type, and was evidently on the outlook for an opportunity to 'boom' his town. On our departure he presented us with a written description of its exceptionally desirable location from a business standpoint. Every town gave evidence of the bitter fighting that had taken place between the natives and the Spaniards, many of the larger buildings which had been used for defense being riddled with bullet holes.

"We no longer passed from town to town through unsettled stretches of country. The fields on both sides of the road were under cultivation and were dotted with laborers, while on the road itself there were always many travelers. The laborers in the fields worked in the shade of large screens of nipa leaves, which they carried with them from place to place."

In conclusion, Mr. Sargent says:

"I can not see what better gauge we can obtain at present of the intelligence and ambition of the whole Philippine race than the progress that has been made by its favored members with the limited opportunities at their command. Throughout the islands a thirst for knowledge is manifested and an extravagant respect for those who possess it.

"I have seen a private native citizen in a town in the interior exercise a more powerful influence than all the native officials over the minds of the inhabitants, simply because he was known to have been educated in the best schools at Manila, and was regarded, for that reason, as a superior man. The heroes of these people are not heroes of war, but of science and invention. Without rival, the American who is best known by reputation in Luzon is Mr. Edison, and any native with the slightest pretension to education whom you may question on the subject will take delight in reciting a list of his achievements. The ruling Filipinos, during the existence of their provincial government, appreciated the necessity of providing public schools to be accessible to the poorer inhabitants.

"Had events so shaped themselves as to have provided an opportunity for carrying into effect the plans formed on this point, it seems possible that the mental plane of the entire population might have been raised gradually to a surprising height.

"Out of respect to the statements of other people, which the narrative of my experience may seem to contradict, I wish to say that I have found the native of the interior of Luzon an astonishingly different character from the one ordinarily met in Manila. Previous to my journey I regarded those whom I had encountered in that city with great dislike, and after my return I was unable to overcome that feeling. They are not a fair sample of the race, and I can not expect anyone who has formed his judgment on the subject merely from observations of that type to express an opinion similar to mine as recorded above."

The experience of these gentlemen does not point to any very fruitful soil for widespread anarchy, such as sundry alarmists have pictured as the result of Filipino self-government.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the order of business, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULLOM. There seems to be nothing going on here. Would it be in order to lay aside this bill and consider any other bill or subject? It seems that there is no disposition on the part of Senators to speak or to consider amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the agreement was, and it may be so understood by Senators who are absent, that no other business would be considered to-day or to-morrow but the Philippine bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Will it be in order to move to go into executive session for the purpose of considering executive business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Beyond doubt.

Mr. CULLOM. Unless some Senator desires to occupy the attention of the Senate, I shall very soon ask the Senate to go into executive session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to address the Senate, but not until the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is present.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent to consider a bill on the Calendar, in which the Senator from Iowa is very much interested. There does not seem to be any objection to it. It is the bill (H. R. 949) for the relief of Charles H. Robinson.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Are we taking up the Calendar now, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order.

Mr. STEWART. Everything is out of order except the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. KEAN. I can ask unanimous consent, I suppose.

Mr. STEWART. You can not have unanimous consent, because I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not object to the unanimous consent, as there seems to be nothing doing here now.

Mr. STEWART. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know; but there is no regular order now, except silence.

Mr. LODGE. The regular order is the consideration of the Philippine bill under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Beyond a question.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the unanimous-consent agreement limits debate upon any amendment to fifteen minutes. Now, these amendments are not offered one by one and acted upon, but they are upon the table, and any one of them, as I understand, is subject to discussion, and that is the only way it can be done.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; that is quite right.

Mr. BACON. I do not know in what way we can proceed unless a Senator may be allowed to discuss any amendment which he may call up.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If no one else desires to call up any amendment I have a right to call up one, as I understand, and discuss it or any pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly. That is what the fifteen-minute rule was made for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I will then say that I desire to submit some few remarks in reference to the amendment which proposes to give a representative body to the Filipinos, which is embraced, as I understand, in the substitute offered by the minority. In addition to what I shall say personally and what is really of more importance, I propose to submit some extracts from an address recently delivered by Doctor Schurman, the president of the first Philippine Commission.

The question as to whether or not the Filipinos should be allowed representation, of course is largely involved in and dependent upon the question whether they are capacitated for it; and therefore the pursuit of the subject on which I was engaged when my limit of time was reached is not out of order, nor am I seeking here by any device to bring in a subject not germane, but, on the contrary, my discussion is strictly germane to that question.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on Saturday last made a very broad statement that there were no schools in the Philippine Islands other than those which were furnished by the Americans. Of course he was speaking in a general sense, but even in that sense his statement was unwarranted by the facts. I have a little memorandum here, which I think is of interest, and which certainly is in conflict with that very broad statement made by the Senator.

In the city and suburbs of Cebu, prior to the occupation of the American forces, there was a very comprehensive and extensive public-school system. The city of Cebu is on the island of Cebu, one of the Visayan islands, and contains, with its suburbs, 37,000 inhabitants. In that city of 37,000 inhabitants, prior to American occupation and subsequent to American occupation, and prior to any institution of American schools, there were these native schools: In two seminaries and in the public schools of that city of 37,000 inhabitants there were 3,000 students. Eight hundred of them were in the male seminary, 450 of them were in the female seminary, and the remainder of them in the ordinary public schools of the city. The public schools, educating outside of the seminaries some eighteen hundred children, were supported entirely by the people of the community, almost all of whom were native Filipinos.

Mr. President, it is certainly a most remarkable fact in the consideration of the intelligence of that people and of their effort to improve themselves and educate their children that in a city of 37,000 inhabitants there should be these seminaries and this public-school system, with 3,000 students in attendance. That was the condition prior to the occupation of the Americans in February, 1899, and it continued thereafter. I do not think that even yet there has been a complete organization of American schools in that island. There had been a very partial one up to last summer, and those native schools were still in existence.

I will state to the Senate that that information is not mere hearsay, but was given to me on the ground by an officer of the Army who was on duty and I think occupied the position of assistant adjutant-general of that department, not attached to the personal staff, but an official position which required of him to have this information, and it was given to me by him personally.

It is due that I should say that the male seminary and the female seminary, being institutions of higher learning, were not entirely dependent for their scholars upon the local community, but they came from other parts of that island and from the neighboring islands, just as in the same way in this country students come from different parts to institutions of higher learning than they can get in their immediate locality.

What is true of schools in Cebu is true in greater or less degree in all the important cities and towns of the Philippines. In a much greater degree it is true in Manila, where there is a university and colleges and schools of high rank. I have cited Cebu specially only because I happened to have the figures in that case.

I have already read, Mr. President, the statement of the Schurman Commission, made as the conclusion of their very elaborate examination, that the educated people of the Philippine Islands are the equals of men one meets in similar vocations—law, medicine, business, etc.—in Europe or America. This language is strong, sir, because it is direct and without qualification. It is the conclusion of men than whom in opportunity and capacity to accurately judge there are none superior.

In the more limited opportunity for observation which was afforded to me I saw, not only in Manila, but in the smaller towns and even in the villages, homes which were the abodes of refinement and most cordial hospitality, where were found that surest index of civilization—accomplished and gracious women. What I say in this regard will, I am sure, be indorsed by every officer who has seen service in the Philippines.

I have alluded to the fact that both the Schurman Commission and the Taft Commission have recommended in their reports that these people be allowed to have a representative government. Governor Taft, in his testimony before the committee, repeats it. His testimony is to be found on page 333 of the evidence taken before the Philippine Committee. Governor Taft used this language:

I think that a popular assembly is what the people desire, and I think it is the best possible means of educating their educated men in popular government. It will give them an opportunity to meet, to express their views, to take part in legislation, to propose and enact laws which they deem useful in the country; it will give them a part in the government, and will by practice teach them what self-government is. We recommend that in our report, and I am sure that with that the people will have confidence that our statement to them, that we desire to educate them in self-government and give them a measure of self-government, increasing it gradually as they become more fitted for it, is true.

Senator ALLISON. It is a legislative body of all the provinces; that is, it is a general body?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir. I would not include therein the Moro provinces, for, as I have already stated, the Moros do not desire popular government.

In another place he recommends that they be allowed to elect such a popular representative body not later than January, 1904.

The Schurman Commission was even more emphatic in its recommendation in this regard. Its views are echoed in the recent address of President Schurman, extracts from which, with the consent of the Senate, I shall include in my remarks.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

The time approaches to set our Philippine compass by the fixed stars.

I take as my starting point the motives and objects with which we went into the Philippines. They were impressively voiced by President McKinley, and I have already told you how he set them forth to me three years ago. Our purpose was not selfish, it was humanitarian; it was not the vanity of self-aggrandizement, it was not the greed of power and dominion; no, no, not these, but altruism caring for the happiness of others, philantrophy relieving the Filipinos of oppression and conferring on them the blessings of liberty. This was the supreme consideration with President McKinley.

* * * * * * *

The political emancipation of the Filipinos was the controlling object with the President and the people of the United States. I am of course aware that other and less worthy aims appealed to individual Americans and to groups of Americans. It would be strange if it were otherwise, considering how diversified human motives are apt to be. The jingo saw in the annexation of the Philippines another avenue for spread-eagleism; to Americans in the Orient it meant an accession of American influence in Asia; to the Protestant churchman it offered a new field for missionary enterprise; the exploiting capitalist was fascinated by the riches of Philippine forests, lands, and mines, which showed like "the wealth of Ormus or of Ind;" and the sensational press, still delirious from the fever of war and surfeited with the staleness of piping peace, discerned in the Philippines material for new sensations which promised to be as stirring as the excitant was remote, unknown, and dangerously explosive.

All these influences, and others, were undoubtedly at work. Yet, it was not these forces singly or in combination that carried the day; it was the humanitarian object of liberating the Filipinos from Spanish tyranny and bestowing upon them the boon of freedom that decided the President and people of the United States to compel Spain to cede to us her sovereignty over the Philippine Islands.

Fortunate, indeed, that no lower motive prevailed. Any other object than the humanitarian one of carrying the gift of freedom to the Filipinos would have ended in vast and bitter disappointment, or, perhaps, even in poignant remorse. Did we need the Philippines to make our power felt in Asia? No, for we can exert the most potent national influence in all quarters of the world without owning adjacent territory, as our recent experiences in Pekin and Panama have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the most incredulous.

And had we gone into the Philippines for commercial gain, when, think you, would our traders' profits have amounted to the hundreds of millions of dollars which the archipelago has already cost us? And what shall I say of the thousands of brave and generous young Americans who have lost their lives in the Philippines? No prospect of profit however assured, no wealth or advantage however colossal, could ever atone for the precious American lifeblood swallowed up by the hungry soil of Luzon and the Visayas. For such a sacrifice there is only one justification. It is the discharge of duty, service in a righteous cause. If our presence in the Philippines be not justified in its purpose and intent, then our soldiers' blood is on our hands; aye, and all the blood, in that case innocent, of the Filipinos we have fought, the misery we have caused their families, and the devastation we have wrought in their homes.

This awful responsibility we can not escape either before our own consciences or at the bar of history unless we have done what we have done in the Philippines for the sake of redeeming the Filipinos from foreign oppression, saving them from domestic anarchy, and leading them into the ways of self-government and freedom—a blessing at once unmeasured and immeasurable. But I assert that to confer this blessing was the final cause of our acceptance from Spain of sovereignty over the Philippines. Nothing has happened since to alter our purpose. Indeed, all subsequent occurences have gone to confirm the wisdom and transcendent nobility of this end and to exhibit the folly and delusion of any other end. Self-seeking ends of every sort are excluded by American policy and stultified by actual conditions in the Philippines. We are in the Philippines for the sake of the Filipinos; but while American sovereignty is to the Filipinos a great boon, to us this extension of sovereignty is not advantageous, but burdensome.

* * * * * * *

I wish the Federal Constitution might be amended so as to provide for the perpetual exclusion of Asiatic countries from partnership in our great American Republic. But, whether the Constitution be amended or left intact, I am sure it is the policy of the American people to admit no Asiatic country to the status and privileges of a State or Territory in this Republic of the United States of America. Consequently that independence which is the final term of progressive liberty for the Filipinos, since it can not realize itself by incorporation in our union of American States, must, perforce, when the hour arrives, find embodiment in a separate and self-contained national organization.

Thus, if you look beyond the present and the near future, you descry in the distance an independent and sovereign Philippine republic. The watchword of progress, the key to the future of the political development of the archipelago, is neither colonialism nor federalism but nationalism. The destiny of the Philippine Islands is not to be a State or Territory in the United States of America but a daughter republic of ours—a new birth of liberty on the other side of the Pacific, which shall animate and energize those lovely islands of the tropical seas, and, rearing its head aloft, stand as a monument of progress and a beacon of hope to all the oppressed and benighted millions of the Asiatic continent.

* * * * * * *

Very well, what then? A colony, a dependency? For a time this status may suffice; as a permanent arrangement it is impossible. For you propose to dower the Filipinos with an ever-increasing measure of liberty; but liberty grows by what it feeds on and moves rapidly to its goal, which is independence. Then, too, the Filipinos have condensed the experience of centuries into these last half dozen years. They have dreamed of liberty; they have fought for liberty; they have seen in the East the star of independence. These are facts as potent as any other, and deeper than most, in the life of nations.

* * * * * * *

From the American point of view, then, ever-increasing liberty and self-government is to be our policy toward the Filipinos; and it is the nature of such continuously expanding liberty to issue in independence. This, then, is our programme for the future, both near and remote. And I believe that while the great heart of the American people rejoices at the privilege of granting progressive liberties to the Filipinos, it throbs with still keener delight at the prospect of a day when the process shall be completed by the grant of a perfect independence. This, I say, is the necessary outcome of our policy toward the Filipinos. From the American point of view, Philippine independence is inevitable. And, from the American point of view, Philippine independence is a consummation devoutly to be wished. Let us now see toward what goal the conditions and aspirations of the Filipinos themselves point.

* * * * * * *

These Americans, patriotic but unversed in history, who desire to recreate the Filipinos in their own similitude, will always be able to demonstrate that that oriental clay is still without shape and comeliness in the American potter's hand, and that for a perfect product, a vessel of honor and glory, the American wheal must be kept going for years, or perhaps for generations, or possibly even for centuries. Heaven save the Filipinos from such an impertinent and meddlesome earthly providence! The Filipinos are to develop along their own racial lines, not along ours; and it is colossal conceit and impudence to disparage them because they are different from ourselves.

Capacity for independent self-government does not necessarily mean capacity like ours to administer a commonwealth like ours, but merely capacity of some sort to maintain peace and order, to uphold law, and to fulfill international obligations. It may be a matter of only a short time when the Christian Filipinos of Luzon and the Visayas will be as well qualified to discharge these functions as Mexico, Peru, Argentina, or Venezuela, and when they are so qualified the American Government has no further duty or business in the archipelago. Any decent kind of government of Filipinos by Filipinos is better than the best possible government of Filipinos by Americans.

For that reason, as I have already said, I am anxious to see Congress grant the Filipinos representative institutions at once. It is no argument against this policy that even educated Filipinos do not possess our conception of civil liberty or of official responsibility. With such powers, ideas, and sentiments as they have, get them in harness quickly and let them tug and sweat under the burden of national affairs. This is the way men are trained in government. Political aptitudes and political sentiments are the gift of nature and the acquisition of personal experience; they can not be donated by one person or nation to another. And if you do not at once take the educated Filipinos into active partnership in the government of the Philippine Islands, your monopoly of power, if it does not alienate and embitter them, may have the still worse effect of tending to discourage and emasculate them.

If the Filipinos are to learn to govern themselves in the manner of the really free nations, the sooner they get at it the better. Passive acquiescence, without partnership, in American Government of the Philippines will atrophy their own native capacity for self-government. In that way their dependence would mean their servitude. The beginning of all national, as of all personal, freedom is this: "Son of man, stand upon thy feet!" America can not endow the Filipinos with liberty, but by permitting them to govern themselves, starting now with representative institutions and gradually enlarging their powers, it can at least put them under conditions favorable to the development of liberty. To give them a good government from above without evoking their own active cooperation—as England has done for the people of India—is to sap and atrophy their own capacity for self-government.

* * * * * * *

In view of subsequent facts and experiences, however, I think it may be not only possible, but feasible, to shorten the period of preparation and transition under American sovereignty. First of all, remember that the first Philippine Commission reported that ultimate independence (after a period of American tutelage) was the goal and aspiration of all intelligent Filipinos. Then we have the testimony of the Taft Commission that the native officials have proved reasonably capable in the administration of public affairs. The test we have made of the governing capacity of the Filipinos has resulted more favorably than could have been anticipated by deduction from their previous political inexperience. Nor is this all, or even the principal item.

Far more important and pregnant of hope is the more or less distinct emergency, under the storm and stress of the last two or three years, of a community of attitude, interest, sentiment, and aspiration, in matters political, among all the Christian peoples of Luzon, the Visayas, and the littoral of Mindanao. Undiscoverable, or at any rate undiscerned, if it existed, in 1899, this consciousness of nationality is to-day so manifest and powerful that General Chaffee, looking at it with the eyes of a military man, has declared, or at least is reported to have declared, that the natives of these islands are all traitors to American sovereignty—all have their hearts set on independence. We know that the strife and passion of war release pent-up mental as well as physical energies and bring to the light of day as realities slumbering fancies, hopes, and sentiments which in times of peace merely flit about the background of consciousness.

* * * * * * *

It is quite conceivable, therefore, that the restricted aspiration after immediate independence, which the first Philippine Commission discerned in the Philippines (and reported) in 1899, should, after three years of fighting in all or almost all the provinces of Luzon and the Visayas, have become a universal passion, animating and uniting all these diversified communities. This is all the more probable, as from the beginning the racial aspect of the case has been prominent; and as against the white man of America, who succeeded the white man of Europe, the multifarious peoples of Luzon and the Visayas, at least, felt themselves Malayans and Filipinos. I am not surprised, therefore, if to-day we have to reckon with a universal sentiment and idea of nationality among all the peoples of Luzon and the Visayas with a demand or desire for immediate independence.

* * * * * * *

I shall not, however, indulge in guesses as to the date when the new fabric should be reared. On that point I desire to be informed by the Filipinos themselves. And I want to hear not the voice of individuals, however prominent, but the voice of the people. There is, however, only one way of securing it. The people can speak only through the representatives they elect to a popular assembly or house of representatives. Here, then, is another reason why Congress should not delay granting representative institutions to the Filipinos.

To secure representative institutions they took up arms against Spain; the half million educated and propertied Filipinos who would be more immediately represented under the limited suffrage proposed will be conservative rather than radical; and what they, and the poor and ignorant millions of their fellow-citizens for whom they speak, desire, must, in the long run, prevail in the archipelago. The United States is the last people in the world to argue any other people into political subjection. And against a whole nation aspiring and struggling to be independent, it is as impossible to-day to draw up an indictment as it was when Burke repudiated the task in connection with the people of the 13 American colonies.

If the Filipinos desire independence, they should have it when they are qualified to exercise it. The reports of General Chaffee and Governor Taft demonstrate (whatever their own personal views) that the difficulties in the way of independence are gradually disappearing. Let a Philippine popular assembly or house of representatives say whether the Filipinos want independence or not and, if so, at what date they think the grant should be conferred, and we shall then have before us all the conditions necessary for the final solution of the Philippine problem.

If it appears probable, as recent experience seems to indicate, that the Christian Filipinos of Luzon and the Visayas might, at no distant day, govern themselves as well as the average Central or South American Republic, then, in the name of American liberty and democracy, in the name of the political aspirations and ideals of the Filipinos, and in the name of justice and humanity, let the Philippine republic be established. As President McKinley said to me three years ago, we went into the Philippines solely with the humanitarian object of conferring the blessings of liberty on the Filipinos. In its highest potency, liberty and independence are one and inseparable.

And to repeat what ought not to need repetition anywhere within the limits of our free Republic, any decent kind of government of Filipinos by Filipinos is better than the best possible government of Filipinos by Americans.

Mr. BACON. I want to say, Mr. President, if I may be pardoned for speaking of anything included in my personal experience in the Philippines, that my observation of that people satisfied me that they were a very far superior people to what I supposed they were before I went there. They are in some respects far superior to any other Asiatic people I have ever seen. They certainly have a very much higher regard for the outward observance of the decencies and modesties of life, as we understand them and as we observe them, immeasurably more so, than any other Asiatic race which it has ever been my fortune to see. What is the cause of that I do not know, unless it is the ameliorating influences of Christianity upon them, for it is a fact, Mr. President, that they are, speaking of them generally, a Christian people and a people of great devotion to their religion.

Something has been said here about the Filipinos having organized the only republic ever organized in Asia, and there has been controversy as to whether or not they did in fact organize a true republic. I do not propose to go into that question, but there is one thing that I think is absolutely true, and that is that they are the only Christian people in the whole of Asia, either on the mainland or on the islands of that continent. If there is any other Christian people in the whole of Asia, except the Filipinos, I do not know of them. In that vast continent, embracing nearly one-half of the entire human race, among them all there is no Christian people except the Filipinos. Of course, I do not include in that statement the Russians who have gone to Siberia, because they are not an Asiatic people, but a European people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Among those Christian people of whom the Senator speaks, does he include the Moros?

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator include the Igorrotes?

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator, I will state exactly what I do include. I include the Visayans, who constitute some 2,600,000 people; I include the Tagalogs and others of the islands of Luzon and the neigboring islands, making in all, according to the report of the Schurman Commission, some 6,500,000 people. Those are the number whom I include.

Out of an estimated population of between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 people, 6,500,000 of them are devoted Christians. There are more than twice as many Christians in the Philippines than there were people of every class in the thirteen colonies when they wrested their independence from England and founded this mighty nation. They do not belong to the denominations which are most popular—when I say "popular" I mean most numerous—in the United States, but they are none the less most devoted Christians, and the number of them is stated by the Schurman Commission to be 6,500,000. In everything except language they are one people—in religion, in blood, in dress, in habits, in domestic and social customs and observances, and in a strong feeling of common nationality. Whatever was formerly lacking in this last regard they have now been welded together in the white heat of four years' war.

I wish to say further, Mr. President, that all I have said in reference to the Philippine people relates to this particular class and does not include the Moros nor the Negritos nor the Igorrotes. I am speaking of those who are recognized as the representative people of the islands. The Moros, the Senator from Indiana will recognize, are not called there Filipinos in the Moro country. When you go into Mindanao, where there are a great many Moros and also a great many of those we ordinarily call Filipinos, even there there is that distinction made among themselves. In speaking of themselves they say "such a man is a Moro" and "such a man is a Filipino." I am glad of the opportunity to draw the distinction to which the Senator from Indiana has attracted my attention. I am very much obliged to him that he has done so, because I do not wish to be misunderstood in regard to that matter.

But, Mr. President, in speaking thus of the Filipinos, I do not say this with any disposition of criticism or controversy, but simply in connection with the contention which I am endeavoring to make as to the propriety of our conferring upon those people liberal free institutions. The fact that they are a Christian people, a people devoted in their observances of the requirements of the Christian religion, a people whose Christianity has developed into the observances of the outward decencies and modesties of life, a people whose Christianity has developed into the virtues of home and society which characterize Europeans and Americans who are also Christians—all these things, I say, Mr. President, should appeal to us most strongly in dealing with this people and influence us to confer upon them the freest institutions which it is possible for us to conceive them capable of appreciating and enjoying.

It does seem to me the very irony of fate—one that can not fail to sadden any man who goes there and looks upon that people—the very irony of fate that the people who alone in all Asia who share with us our religion and worship with us at the same altar; the people who alone in all Asia have, through the influence of our religion, grown into the love of the social and domestic virtues, which are our richest inheritance; the people who have come nearest to us in our civilization, so far as personal characteristics and observances go; the people among whom this is seen even in the matter of their dress, which closely approaches that of Europeans and Americans, the only people who in all Asia even approximate the outward dress of civilized nations—I say it seems to me to look like the irony of fate that we, the great Christian Republic of all the world, should have been brought into a situation—not criticising it now, but speaking of it simply as an unfortunate fact—that we should have been brought into a situation where there should have been between us this bloodshed, this terrible war, with its death and desolation and devastation. Mr. President, they are too far away, they belong to a different race, they can never be with us and a part of us, but every good sentiment appeals for their right to be a people, a nation free from yoke or thraldom.

Mr. President, I have felt that it was proper I should say this much for this people. I am not speaking now, as I say, in a controversial spirit or in a spirit of criticism for the purpose of attacking anything that has been done or anybody by whom it has been done. It is a very difficult thing in the heat of war and in the presence of the narration of outrages committed by some of that people upon our own soldiers, of barbarities and atrocities that nobody can possibly defend and everybody must condemn, and which I know the good people of that country condemn, it is extremely difficult for us to recognize the humanities of the situation; and it is with the hope that some one word I say may reach the American people in the presentation to them of the fact that, in spite of the horrors of war, in spite of all the prejudices which grow out of this conflict of life and death between man and man, and between people and people, in spite of all that, that they are a people who should peculiarly commend themselves to us; that they are the only people in the whole of Asia that have the same religion that we have; that they are the only people in Asia that have the same outward regard for the decencies of life and modesties that we have and as we understand, and that they are the only people who have and prize the same social and domestic virtues that we have.

I do not mean to say that other Asiatic nations have not the domestic virtues—far from it, because that would not be true, and it would be unkind in me to state it if it were true—but I say the peculiar social and domestic virtues, those that we most value and that peculiarly appeal to us, they are the virtues that strikingly distinguish the Filipino people from all other Asiatic people. And most deeply impressed, sir, as I am by this fact, I am impelled to the utterance that these are things which should appeal to us most strongly to deal with this people in the kindest, the most considerate, the most indulgent possible manner.

Not only so, but they should appeal to us most strongly to recognize the fact that a people of such religion, a people of such social and domestic virtues, a people with a love of country, which I believe is as strong in them as in any people in all the world, if they desire their liberty, if they desire an independent nationality, these are facts that should appeal to us most strongly, and we should not turn to them a deaf ear either through greed for wealth, the pride of conquest, or the lust of dominion.

Mr. President, I will take the opportunity to say that I have avoided, as Senators know, speaking of any fact connected with either the civil or military administration which came to my knowledge in the Philippine Islands, because I am unwilling to be put into a position of testifying or of appearing to do so. I have carefully avoided it, but, at the same time, it is not improper that I should speak of these general conditions.

There is one thing which appealed to me most pathetically in my intercourse with a great many people there. I take occasion to say that I had no intercourse with any except those who had recognized the sovereignty of the United States and were professedly loyal to it, who were not insurrectos—certainly not actively engaged in insurrection. But a fact which came to my knowledge—and I know it not only came to my knowledge, but to that of a great many others, because I have heard American officers speak of it—was this: That one great apprehension of that people is that the occupation of those islands by the American people means the extermination of themselves as a people.

That is the grave apprehension of that people. It is with them an ever-present haunting fear. I myself do not think to the extent of their fear the apprehension well-founded. If the islands shall be exploited by Americans, I doubt not that the Filipinos will be pressed to the wall and that under such circumstances they will never be the governing class in their own country. But I do not think the apprehension of utter extermination is well-founded, solely for the reason that, on account of climatic conditions, the islands can never be inhabited by white people. If they could be inhabited by white people I believe our occupation would have the effect of the practical extermination in time of the native population.

Mr. President, I venture to narrate to the Senate a little incident which came within my personal knowledge. I have narrated it elsewhere, but it will not be out of place here, as illustrative of the feeling of the Filipino people and their desire for nationality—a desire which, I think, is as universal as it has ever been among a people.

In conversing with a man who was not a politician and had never been a soldier, who was a man of property, a man of business, and who deprecated the war and wished it to cease, and was extremely anxious to that end that the authority of the United States should be recognized and that there should be no resistance to it, but who still thought that the Filipino people were entitled to their nationality, he said to me in a very dramatic manner, speaking of the condition in which the sovereignty of the United States would leave the islands and the effect upon the political status of its people: "I am not a Spaniard; I am not an American; I am not a Filipino. What am I?" indicating the utter hopelessness in that man's mind of the status of himself and his people, that he was no longer a Spaniard, that he could never become an American, and that as nationality was denied to his race he was not even a Filipino.

In this connection, while it is a little out of order for me to say it, I think one great defect in the pending bill is that there is no provision in it—at least there is not unless it has been made by amendment—under which any Filipino can ever become a citizen of the United States even if he comes to America.

Mr. President, I did not expect to make this statement relative to the Filipinos when I rose. I rose principally for the purpose of putting these documents in the RECORD in order that they might be preserved in some degree of continuity as a part of this debate, and unconsciously I have drifted into this. But, sir, now that I have said I do not regret it, and I would that I could say more, for my heart is heavy with the fate of that unhappy people. I do feel that no man can go to the Philippine Islands, unless he is an extreme partisan, and fail to be interested in that people and to entertain a very great desire that there should be meted out to them much of kindness and much of indulgence and much of consideration, and that above all there should be remembered the extreme desire and anxiety of that people for an independent nationality. I would that to-day we might set their feet in the path that shall lead to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish formally to offer an amendment. By request I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill, and I ask that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not quite gather the purport of the paper presented by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I presented, by request, an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I asked that it be printed so that we may have it on our desks to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that course, but if it is not too long it might be well to read it so that we might meditate upon it. I will not ask its reading, however, if it is very long.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is fairly lengthy.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not ask for its reading.

Mr. CULBERSON. Unless it is insisted upon, I think it had better not be read.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will ask the Senator whether it is materially different from the substitute pending or whether it contains only some small alteration.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is some difference between the two. I would not undertake to say how much or the character of the difference.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] referred to some remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] the other day in regard to the condition of the people of the Philippine Islands. The other night I had occasion to refer to some statements of Mr. Sixto Lopez in regard to that matter, and I failed at the time to ask the permission of the Senate to have them inserted as a part of my remarks. I wish now to ask unanimous consent to print this statement, which I have obtained from Mr. Sixto Lopez, in regard to affairs and conditions in the Philippine Islands, languages, etc., as an appendix to my remarks made the other night, instead of putting me to the trouble of reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut). The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print a statement——

Mr. CARMACK. It is a reply to some questions propounded by myself to Mr. Sixto Lopez in regard to affairs and conditions in the Philippine Islands, and especially with regard to the character of the people and the difference of language and everything of that kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that——

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Maryland permit the Chair to state the request?

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the statement of Sixto Lopez, in reply to questions propounded by the Senator from Tennessee, may be incorporated in the RECORD without being read.

Mr. McCOMAS. I dislike to make objection to a request of the Senator from Tennessee to print anything as an appendix to his remarks, but, as he has now stated, this is a statement made by Mr. Lopez, who has not been in the islands for a very long while, and that it is a series of answers, as I understand, to a series of questions propounded by the Senator from Tennessee, who is himself a member of our committee, I think objection should be made. Of course the Senator does that which he thinks is his duty, but as the committee has not heard and probably will not hear this witness, it seems to me the interrogation of this witness on the subject-matter of the investigation, presented by a member of the committee, had better not go into the RECORD.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not understand the last remark of the Senator.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator himself is a very busy member of the Committee on the Philippines, and he says it is a series of questions propounded by himself to this person.

Mr. CARMACK. Yes.

Mr. McCOMAS. I question very much whether it ought to go in as an appendix to his speech. Is it long?

Mr. CARMACK. It is a matter of no consequence. I will get it into the RECORD, just the same. It will merely put me to the trouble of reading it. I have sent to my secretary at the office for it, and will get it in a few moments and will personally read it to the Senate. I do not care. If I had it here I would rather read it than merely to have it printed. Objection being made, I will take the first opportunity to read it. I think the Senator ought to hear it, anyway.

I will say to the Senator that I was one of those who insisted that Mr. Lopez and others ought to be brought here to testify before the committee. He has been persistently attacked by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. They have brought witnesses from the Philippine Islands; one witness is here now, brought all the way. He was in the service of Aguinaldo, and quit his service in order to take service with the United States. He has been brought all the way from the Philippines to testify before the committee, after the committee has persistently refused to hear the testimony of anybody on the other side, even where the witnesses were here. In this case there is a man of unusual intelligence——

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. CARMACK. A man of high education and culture. I did propound questions to him, and I do intend to have his testimony put into the RECORD, although the committee is determined that it shall not be heard by the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator state the name of the witness who has been brought here by the committee from the Philippine Islands?

Mr. CARMACK. I say he has been brought here. I do not know that he was brought here by the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. Brought by whom?

Mr. CARMACK. For the purpose of testifying. I refer to Buencamino.

Mr. McCOMAS. Brought by whom?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know that he was brought here. He is here.

Mr. LODGE. He has come here at his own expense, because he is placing his sons at college in this country.

Mr. CARMACK. My impression is that he stated before the House committee that he came here at the expense of the Federal party, which is simply an adjunct of the Philippine Commission.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then I understand——

Mr. LODGE. He has not been called by our committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then, I understand, the Senator from Tennessee did not say he was brought here by the committee?

Mr. CARMACK. No; I said he had been brought here—brought here for the purposes of the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. It now appears that he was brought here by himself, being of age.

Mr. CARMACK. It may so appear to the Senator from Maryland. It does not so appear to me.

Mr. McCOMAS. He will say when he appears how he came here; and if he came at the request of the Federal party, he came under his rights.

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, well; I suppose so. There is no law to keep him from coming. All right. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee insist upon his request?

Mr. CARMACK. I do. I make the request, and let them object to it if they want to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the statement prepared by Sixto Lopez in response to questions propounded to him by the Senator from Tennessee may be put into the RECORD without being read. Is there objection?

Mr. McCOMAS. Since this statement——

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will excuse me for a moment, I wish to have it printed as an appendix to my remarks delivered the other evening. I will say that it was a matter of forgetfulness on my part at the time that the statement was not read and put into the RECORD. I had it there for that very purpose; but I found I had consumed a little over two hours, that I was very tired and very unwell, and I stopped very suddenly in my speech. I remembered a minute afterwards, when it was too late, that I had forgotten to use this document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CARMACK. My speech has not yet been printed.

Mr. McCOMAS. This appears to be the submission to Lopez by a member of the committee of a series of interrogations answered without cross-examination, and I am inclined to think I ought to continue to object to the printing of that as an appendix which appears to be an examination and is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well; I will get it into the RECORD in some way, I suppose. So far as concerns the statement of the Senator from Maryland that there is no cross-examination, I will say that that is the fault of the Senator and of those who are associated with him, who have determined not to permit this witness to testify because they believe he will bring forth statements of facts which they do not wish to hear. They could very easily have the opportunity to cross-examine this witness if they wish to do so. The only reason why they have had no opportunity to cross-examine him is that they have refused to permit him to come before the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. If one thing be true, perhaps I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CARMACK. I have not yielded to the Senator from Maryland. What did the Senator say?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCOMAS. Did the Senator ask in his questions whether Lopez was or was not a member of the Hongkong junta?

Mr. CARMACK. I did, and he said he was not.

Mr. McCOMAS. And had not been?

Mr. CARMACK. My impression is he said he had never been. I will not say positively, but my impression is that he said he was not. I know he said he is not a member of the Hongkong junta; and, more than that, he said he was opposed to war between the United States and the Philippine Islands, although he was entirely in sympathy with the aspirations of his people for independence.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator says, "I think." If the Senator means to tell me he is quite clear in his recollection that this man said that he was not and had not been a member of the Hongkong junta, I would want to withdraw my objection.

Mr. CARMACK. The paper will show for itself. The Senator means to imply that if he were a member of the Hongkong junta he would not be worthy of belief. I suppose the inference is that he would tell a lie about it. So his statement would not relieve the matter from his view.

Mr. McCOMAS. I would not want a man, who is plotting and planning insurrection against the United States, against American soldiers——

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator is willing to take his word——

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator says the man was not a member of the junta, that would be on the face of it a reason to induce me to withdraw my objection.

Mr. CARMACK. He does say he is not a member.

Mr. McCOMAS. And has not been?

Mr. CARMACK. I will not be positive on the point that he never was. The impression made upon my mind was that he was not a member of the Hongkong junta at any time. I am not sure about it.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let the Senator get his paper, and if that appears I will withdraw my objection, perhaps.

Mr. CARMACK. I will get it into the RECORD anyhow, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARMACK. There is one other matter which I wish to present. I have probably about consumed my time, though.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has three or four minutes remaining.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to speak briefly to the amendment I offered, which I should like to have read. The amendment is to come in at the end of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Before we pass from the matter just up, will the Senator yield to me for one moment?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make an appeal to my honorable friend the Senator from Maryland, and I would make the appeal if I were zealously in favor of all the opinions he so honestly and so zealously entertains about the pending matter. I have repeatedly made a like appeal, and it has very generally been yielded to, in regard to subjects where I had no sympathy with the matter sought to be introduced.

As I understand it, a member of the Senate says he intended to add to his speech a statement of certain opinions made by a person whose opinion he thought of value, and that he forgot it, being fatigued, and he now desires to supply the omission which he made under those circumstances, when he was in a state of illness, by adding in the RECORD to his speech what he had a perfect right to put in and what nobody would have thought of considering improper, from his point of view, to put in. That is the request.

Mr. President, where any single Senator, representing his State, of course, says that a newspaper or other article on current politics, on the tariff, on any question of finance, or currency, or the homestead law, or anything else is important enough to have printed, instead of requiring him to read it, as he has a right to do, we have been accustomed to let him print it, always as a document, and very frequently in the RECORD. It saves us a great deal of tedious time in debate, and it also keeps or tends to keep our debates good-natured. I am glad to know they are in general, at least.

Now, I ask my honorable friend whether, considering those circumstances (I do not say anything about the right of the Senator from Tennessee to get up and have it read), he will not withdraw his objection. It would take a half hour, and we should have to remain here and listen to it. I can vouch myself for the fact that Sixto Lopez is a very intelligent man, a man whose opinions and arguments, even if they do not convince anybody, the Senator would like to consider as a strong statement on the other side. I desire to appeal to my honorable friend from Maryland whether, under the circumstances, it would not be best, not so much with reference to the pending matter, but as a general practice and habit of the Senate, to let such a request be granted.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the Senator from Tennessee has been quite frank about this matter, and his last statement, I said, was quite pertinent to the removal of my objection. Sixto Lopez has, in my belief, been a member of the Hongkong junta; I do not know, but that has been my sincere impression based upon circumstances. If he has been and has been secretly raising money and making efforts to wage war against our Army and our flag, it has seemed to me, since the effort was made frankly and openly to have him examined before the committee, that at this time, when we are waiting, because of the failure of explosive utterances, and since the Senator from Tennessee has examined this witness ex parte—of course according to his view of his duty in the matter—and since the testimony was not taken before the committee and the witness has not been cross-examined, it would be well that at least a part of the testimony be read.

The Senator has said that when the paper is produced he thinks it will appear that the witness has said he never was a member of this treasonable organization against our flag and our Army. The bias of a witness is an important matter. There are witnesses who testify, whose testimony is shadowed, colored, and made of no account by the bias of their position, their motive, or their enmity. Now, in this case I should be glad to hear these things, and I have already said that when the Senator from Tennessee refreshes his mind and finds out, as he may, that this man disclaims all connection at any time with that organization, then I expect to withdraw my objection.

The Senator says he will send for the paper, and when that is done, if that appears, my objection will be withdrawn, because I shall have very great anxiety and earnestness to find out whether that statement be a true statement, because if it be not true all the statements must stand together or fall together. So the Senator from Massachusetts need not make the appeal. The Senator from Tennessee has already made a statement which will, when he so finds the fact, remove my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CARMACK. So far as that is concerned——

Mr. McCOMAS. I will take the floor and yield it to the Senator from Tennessee, inasmuch as I have consumed his time, if I can do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not.

Mr. CARMACK. I rose first to make a request, and I rise now to discuss the amendment. Am I recognized for that purpose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Tennessee under the circumstances.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, so far as the other matter is concerned, when I read the statement of Sixto Lopez I will read it all, and I will read it in my own right. The Senator from Maryland has simply put me to a little extra trouble; that is all. It is not a question of Sixto Lopez or his character, but of ordinary courtesy to a Senator, when I said to the Senator that I had the statement before me the other night for the purpose of reading it, but, being very tired, had suspended my remarks. I forgot to read it when I could have done so without asking permission of him or anybody else.

Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the United States regard with extreme disfavor any movement having for its object the early or ultimate admission of the Philippine Islands as a State or States of the Union; and any action on the part of persons holding office under the authority of the United States that gives sanction or encouragement to such movement is hereby condemned.

That to confer the rights and privileges of citizens upon the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands would tend to destroy the integrity of the citizenship and to degrade the character of the Government of the United States.

That to maintain the relation of sovereign and subject between the Government of the United States and a people under its dominion would be repugnant to the principles of the Constitution.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, this amendment, it seems to me, is of considerable importance, in view of the relations existing between the Philippine government and the Government of the United States and what is called the Federal party in the Philippine Islands. This party took its name as an indication of its purpose—the Federal party; a party of federation; of federation with United States, which is one of the declared purposes of the party. In the history of the Federal party, written by native members of the Philippine Commission, it is declared that that is the purpose of the Federal party. The three native members of the Philippine Commission, the three associates of Governor Taft, and the other American members of the Commission openly declare that their purpose and desire is to obtain statehood in the American Union, and when Governor Taft was before the committee I myself put the question to him as to whether or not he believed that eight or ten million Malays should be incorporated into the body of our citizenship and a Malay archipelago admitted to statehood in the American Union. His answer was that it was a question which at that time he could not answer either yes or no.

Now, Mr. President, we have had here, brought by Governor Taft, laid before the Senate and before the Congress of the United States, the memorial of this Federal party, in which they expressly declare that "We reject everything which tends to a colony," and they declare that "to make of the Philippines a colony of the United States would be to hand the islands over to disorder and to anarchy, to destruction, and to chaos."

This Federal party is opposed to the independence of the Philippine Islands. The three leaders of the party are members of the Philippine Commission. They demand annexation to the United States. They demand citizenship in the United States. They demand that their country shall first be organized as a Territory with full constitutional rights to all of the people, and then admission to statehood in the Union.

I asked the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] as to whether or not he was in favor of that part of the amendment declaring against statehood in the American Union. He said that he would answer at some time or other, but the time has not come.

Now, in view of the fact that these declarations have been made on the part of the men who are closely associated with our own Government in the Philippine Islands, that this Federal party is the open and avowed agency of the Philippine government in conducting their campaign to bring the people to the support of American sovereignty, and that it has been through this party, as Governor Taft himself declared, that more has been accomplished in pacifying the people than by all the armies in the field, it becomes a matter of great importance to know whether those who are representing the Government and the Administration and the party in power are in sympathy with this movement of the Federal party.

Gen. Luke E. Wright, the acting head of the Philippine government in the absence of Governor Taft, made some very significant remarks upon this very question, as quoted in the Manila Times on February 24. The speech of Governor Wright was made on the 22d day of February, Washington's birthday, before a meeting of the Federal party, and in that speech he said:

> It is especially gratifying to all Americans that the Filipinos of the Federal party have begun to realize the generous intentions of the American people; that they are beginning to understand that America has not invaded these islands in order to deprive the inhabitants of their rights or to make them political slaves [great cheers], but that the purpose of the American people, if they were permitted to do so, was to establish here their same altars on which shall be lighted the fires of liberty which exist in America, at which all can worship. Any other policies would be both shortsighted and contrary to all the glorious traditions of the American people; they would give a lie to the American principles which Washington gave, and debase all he taught as a delusion and a snare. We have become great and prosperous by adherence to his teachings. Whatever differences may have existed among the American people in principles as to holding these islands, there never has been a doubt that Filipinos would not in time enjoy the same liberties and become part of our nation. [Loud cheering.]
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> It is because the American authorities believe in the patriotic purpose of the Federal party, because they believe the party understands and appreciates the intentions of America, that they extend the right hand of fellowship to it. It is welcomed into the field because the policy it announces is in accordance with American principles.

And again:

> It is true that you will not be aiding in the establishment of a weak and nerveless government which will be a prey to desire for more powerful powers and a prey to personal ambitions, but you will be engaged in preparing yourselves to be worthy of citizenship in the great American Republic. [Great cheers.]

There is an express indorsement by an American member of the Philippine Commission, the acting head of the Philippine Commission, of the platform and declaration of purposes of the Federal party, which includes citizenship, the incorporation of all the Filipinos into citizenship in the United States, with the promise of admission to statehood in the American Union.

I say under the circumstances, when men so close to the Administration, men in the confidence of the Administration, can make these open and public declarations, practically promising the people of the Philippine Islands that they shall be given American citizenship, and that their country shall be admitted to statehood in the American Union, it becomes a matter of duty for the party in power, holding every branch of this Government, to make a declaration of its purposes; not to make a declaration to the Filipinos, but to make a declaration to the American people as to whether or not it intends that 8,000,000 or 10,000,000 Malays 10,000 miles from our seat of Government shall be incorporated into the body of our citizenship, and as to whether a Malay archipelago 10,000 miles away shall be admitted to statehood in the American Union.

During Mr. CARMACK'S speech, the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I have not thought it worth while until the very last to say a word in answer to the various charges and inuendoes against our army in the Philippines. In fact, Mr. President, the worse the charges the better I have been pleased, for the quicker will come the refutation and the stronger the reaction which is sure to follow in the minds of the people. In fact, Mr. President, the Army represents, as it always has, the very best sentiment and opinion of the people. Our military and naval organizations make them legally perpetuated, continuous bodies, never expiring, and therefore retaining their principles and character more than any other bodies of men. The highly educated and trained officers of our Army hand down from one generation to another the unwritten laws, customs, and traditions which have controlled the Army from the first.

The personality, teachings, and spirit of Washington, Steuben, and Greene, of Grant and Sherman and Sheridan animate and inspire it still. It has the same high sense of honor and justice, the same respect for law, the same spirit of kindness to the defeated enemy and to whatever wards the fortunes of war have thrown into its keeping. It is the same Army, Mr. President, that has shed its blood from Quebec to the City of Mexico, from Bunker Hill, Brandywine, and Yorktown to the Pacific, at Vicksburg, Gettysburg, and in the Antilles, on the Asiatic main, and now in the islands of the East. It has twice fought with our parent stock, and once, in the greatest of all wars, with our own brethren of the South. I may fairly say that it is the same Army that, divided against itself, under Lee and Jackson and the Johnstons, fought so bravely against its other half, for those gallant leaders were born of it and had long been a part of it. The men in this Chamber and elsewhere who served under those great captains will not traduce the character of the American Army. The very reason why it was the greatest of all wars was because it was an American army on both sides. It is the same Army, Mr. President, which, in burning homes, blazed its broad path under Sherman through South Carolina.

That was war, and only cruel because war is cruel. The great West, Mr. President—and in this I include the 19 States and 3 Territories west of the Mississippi River—owes a debt of untold magnitude to the Army of the United States.

It was our Army that made the settlement and civilization of the States represented by Senators in this discussion from Colorado and Idaho and Utah possible generations before it could otherwise have been; the same Army, Mr. President, that has fought the Indians on the plains and in the mountains of the West hundreds of times marching and fighting in the almost arctic cold of mountain winters and in the torrid heats of the plains in summer. It has suffered at the hands of its savage foes torture, massacre, and mutilation. It has sometimes inflicted terrible punishment in return. In these sudden and sharp conflicts Indian women and children have sometimes been killed. It could not be otherwise. But, Mr. President, how would it have been if those Indian wars had been carried on by the settlers, the constituents of my friends the Senators from Colorado and Idaho.

Which would show the more mercy, Mr. President, the border settlers or the Army? Who did the Indians learn to respect and trust, the border settlers or the Army? Who did they look to for protection and fair treatment in times of trouble and when their rights were invaded by the white man's greed for their lands? I make the assertion, Mr. President, without fear of contradiction, that there is no class of men in our country such true and consistent friends of the Indians as the officers of our Army who had to fight them. It was one of the trying duties of the Army to conduct the Indians when legislated from one reservation to another, when torn from their long-time homes and driven many times with their little belongings under the most trying circumstances hundreds of miles to strange lands and inhospitable climes.

Was the Army ever otherwise than kind and considerate in the performance of this sad duty, often sacrificing their own needs for the comfort and greater necessities of their wards? There was never a charge against them in this respect. The bravest are the tenderest, Mr. President, and our Army is as brave as ever and as true to the dictates of humanity. A few months' service in the Philippines has not entirely changed the character it has maintained for a century and a quarter. The people can not be made to believe that it has.

How would it be to-day, Mr. President, if the constituents of those Senators to whom I have referred were settling in the Philippines and had the same treacherous foes to encounter? What would be the story of cruelty and outrage, and would those Senators have been attacking or apologizing for it? It is the same Army, Mr. President, which was noted above all the other contingents in China for its good order, kind treatment of the people, and restraint from looting. The opportunity and provocation for cruelty and rapine was as great in China as in the Philiippines. Did the Army change so suddenly from bad to good and on its return from the Philippines back to worse in a few weeks?

Mr. President, there are some things that the officers of our Army can surely be counted on to do, and some not to do, at all times and under all conditions. They will fight when it is their duty to. They will not lie or steal. They will be as generous and humane to their foes as they have ever been. Our Army will, as I have said it always has been, be true to the best sentiment of our people and be the same brave, loyal, honorable, and humane body it has always been. All honor, I say, Mr. President, to the American Army.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, Felipe Buencamino has lately arrived in the United States and is heralded as coming here for the purpose of declaring his admiration of the American Government and his earnest desire that the purpose of the Administration to conquer and hold the Philippine Islands shall succeed; and he was hastened before one of the committees of Congress to give his testimony along that line.

Now, whether he came here at his own expense or was brought here by the Government or came as a representative of the Federal party is of little moment. What I want to do is to read to the Senate an address that was made by Felipe Buencamino to the Congress of the United States in the month of August, 1899, at a time when he had charge of the foreign portfolio of Aguinaldo's government. This address is simply signed by himself, as follows:

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, yours, very respectfully,
FELIPE BUENCAMINO.

It is really a very interesting document.

After reading for some time—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent to publish the entire document as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD as part of his remarks the remainder of the document from which he has been reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The document above referred to is as follows:

[Official translation.]

To the honorable the members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The government of the Philippine republic being informed that it is the intention of the President of the United States to convene a meeting of the honorable members of Congress at a comparatively early date for the purpose of discussing and passing a resolution having for its object a just decision as to the policy to be pursued in reference to the present situation in the Philippines, I believe it to be consistent with the dictates of courtesy, as well as a duty to humanity, that, in view of the fact that I have been intrusted with the portfolio of foreign affairs, I should respectfully submit this document to you, setting forth the aspirations of the Filipino people and their reasons and justification for wishing to be recognized by your influential Government as an independent state.

Allow me, gentlemen, to lay before you for your distinguished consideration the facts and rights that form the grounds upon which the claim for recognition is made and sustained.

FIRST.

It is generally accepted as an axiom that as regards international affairs the larger and more powerful a state the greater is the obligation morally to support and maintain lesser states in the independence, the welfare, and the happiness with which God in his bountiful goodness has designed should be theirs, and of which the greater states are guardians.

For instance, it appears evident that the powerful and wealthy nation which you, gentlemen, represent in Congress has been deputed by God to assist the weak Filipinos in the arduous and difficult task of restoration of their independence.

Eloquent proof of this is to be found in the cooperation offered and rendered to Don Emilio Aguinaldo in May, 1898, by the United State consuls at Hongkong and Singapore (Mr. Rounsevelle Wildman and Mr. E. Spencer Pratt) in order that our illustrious leader might continue the revolutionary war waged against Spain in 1896 and 1897, hostilities in connection with which were suspended under the provisions of the compact of Biac-na-bato.

The cooperation referred to consisted of the facts: That the U. S. dispatch boat McCulloch, attached to Admiral Dewey's squadron, conveyed Don Emilio Aguinaldo from Hongkong to Cavite, where he arrived on the 19th May, 1898; that Admiral Dewey received Don Emilio Aguinaldo with the ceremony and honors due to a general, in the presence of the whole of the officers and men of the flagship Olympia, and, besides, gave him 60 Spanish Mauser rifles to aid in a renewal of the revolution against Spain; that Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo was allowed to establish in Cavite, which was then held by the United States naval forces, the headquarters of the Filipino government, which commenced to exercise the functions of government on the 24th May, 1898, issuing therefrom a proclamation declaring war against Spain to wrest from her our independence. (Proclamation attached hereto.)

The letters of the aforesaid consuls, which are attached hereto for the information of the free and enlightened citizens of the United States, confirm the above statements.

Mr. Pratt, in one of his letters, says he congratulates himself on the rapid triumphs of Don Emilio Aguinaldo over the Spaniards, as it proves the wisdom of his judgment in recommending him to Admiral (then Commodore) Dewey and the Government at Washington, and he added that he hoped to receive, when General Aguinaldo captured Manila, some historic memento of the place and of the incident, such as the flag or keys of the city or principal fortress.

Consul-General Wildman, of Hongkong, instructed Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, in a letter attached hereto, respecting the treatment of Spanish prisoners, advising General Aguinaldo to give them only rice and water and treat the Spaniards "as they would treat you," advice which our humane leader declined to accept and act upon.

Thus, in this wholly unexpected and unforeseen way, bonds of good will and friendship were formed between Americans and Filipinos, resulting, as is well known, in the heroic and triumphant campaign of the Filipino army against the Spaniards, though it must be admitted, with due regard for the truth, that after the above-mentioned assistance and cordial cooperation, our army received no more aid from the high officers of the United States, the Filipino army thereafter prosecuting the war against the Spanish land forces independently of any authority other than that exercised by our successful and brave leader, Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, who, while directing the military operations with well-nigh miraculous skill and startling results, was also engaged in the task of organizing the Filipino national government on the model of Western nations, which are, admittedly, founders and leaders of modern civilization.

Thus it is plain that it was through providential agencies that the Filipino state came into being on the 24th day of May, 1898, and has existed to this day, replacing the alien Spanish Government, which fell definitely on the 13th day of August, 1898, on which day our troops, which, in fact, and as set forth in Consul-General Pratt's letters, had closely invested Manila for more than two months, captured the suburbs of Manila, driving the Spaniards from their defenses, while the United States forces peacefully occupied the walled city in accordance with the terms of capitulation signed by the Spanish general.

It would seem, therefore, that there can be no doubt that God, in His infinite goodness, wisdom, and mercy, intrusted to the honor of the United States the liberation and independence of the Filipinos; but notwithstanding the evidence that the hand of Providence has guided the course of events, the United States are now endeavoring to prevent the consummation of the glorious and just purposes of the Creator. By whom, by what agency, were the two peoples united in the bonds of sympathy and friendship? Who could have prevented it?

Who is it that has caused these two friends and brethren to wage war upon one another? Alas, esteemed citizens of the great American Republic, you know well who is the cause of such reckless perturbation. It is the President of your Republic, Mr. William McKinley, who, using as a pretext alleged rights obtained through the purchase of the more than doubtful sovereignty of Spain, gives evidence of his intention to ignore the bonds of friendship and guardianship which should unite the two nations by imposing on us by force of arms the sovereignty of the United States. Is this line of conduct of Mr. McKinley in harmony with the canons of morality simply because the American nation is greater, more opulent, and more powerful than the Filipinos? Surely it is not, for if moral obligations, which bind parties to respect the generally accepted codes of morality, are applicable in international affairs it is beyond question that there should be no evasion of obligation on the part of the great American nation to stand by and protect the small Filipino nation until the great work of securing the recognition of our existence as an independent nation is recognized and thereby firmly established—a great work to which your consuls (above mentioned) and commanders unquestionably and providentially applied themselves.

In the name, therefore, of Almighty God, of humanity, and of national honor, I now appeal to the great and influential citizens of the United States to fulfill these obligations by passing, as a matter of paramount importance, a just resolution in your national Congress officially recognizing our independence, thereby bringing to an end this inhuman and wicked war and restoring the reign of peace and harmony between Americans and Filipinos, who, in accordance with the infallible will of God, should live under the happy conditions of brotherhood.

SECOND.

Accomplished facts are accepted in dealing with things political as rights unless the facts are at variance with the doctrines laid down in international law or the eternal principles of justice. Strictly in accordance with these incontrovertible principles the independence of the United States was realized and recognized in the last century.

In the same manner, and in more recent times, the Kingdom of Italy and the German Empire have come into existence, the ruling principle being, and the reason of it, that all men are born equal and possess inalienable rights of life, liberty, independence, and freedom in the pursuit of happiness.

Now, it is indisputable that we, the Filipinos, defeated the Spaniards, capturing 9,000 prisoners, and set up a republican government in the place of the one which had been vanquished. It is also beyond question that these accomplished facts have been recognized in a practical manner by the high officers who at that time, and since then, represented the United States in this archipelago, which is proved by the correspondence of our leader with Admiral (then Commodore) Dewey and Generals Anderson, Merritt, and Otis, copies of which are attached hereto for the information of the citizens of the United States.

It is to be observed, in the first place, that in his first letter to Gen. Don Emilio Aguinaldo Admiral Dewey states that he has received, with pleasure, the documents forwarded to him by our distinguished leader, promising to transmit them to their respective destinations. The documents referred to are the first proclamation issued by Gen. Don Emilio Aguinaldo, announcing his arrival and the establishment of the dictatorial government at Cavite; also the proclamation of Philippine independence, issued in the town of Cavite in the province of the same name; some to be forwarded to the United States Government in Washington and others to be forwarded to the representatives of the powers in Manila.

Secondly, it is to be noted that the Admiral, in another letter, asks General Aguinaldo for passports for several gentlemen recommended by the British consul, who was also acting consul for the United States of America in Manila, to enable them to travel freely and safely through our territory.

And, finally, it is noteworthy that Generals Anderson, Merritt, and Otis, in their correspondence, styled—as was only right and proper that they should—our leader "general commanding the Philippine revolutionary army," while General Anderson asked Gen. Don Emilio Aguinaldo for quarters and camping ground for the forces under his command, as well as other assistance and cooperation in the campaign against the Spaniards, our "common enemy." It is also a well-known fact that the American commanders applied to us for positions and trenches for their troops in Maytubig, so as to place their forces side by side with our troops in the siege of Manila. In fact, the records prove that everything was done in a manner that indicated full recognition of our triumphant revolution and the noble ends kept constantly in view, namely, our liberty and independence, and owing to which (the righteousness of our cause) the new Filipino state, by its just and irreproachable procedure, unquestionably merited the consideration and respect of the American commanders.

This explains how Admiral Dewey submitted for the disposition of Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo a protest lodged by the French consul in respect of the capture of the steamer Compania de Filipinas, which had been seized by us, the Admiral stating positively that he and his forces had nothing to do with the affair; held no jurisdiction in the premises.

In the light of the correspondence, it is readily understood how Generals Anderson and Merritt came to address telegrams to Gen. Don Emilio Aguinaldo on the 13th August, 1898 (the day on which our troops captured the whole of the suburbs of Manila and the Spaniards in the walled city capitulated to the forces of the United States), requesting General Aguinaldo to give instructions for his troops to evacuate the suburbs in order to avoid the dangers inseparable from a dual military occupation, and offering to negotiate with General Aguinaldo afterwards.

Lastly, it is quite comprehensible how General Otis came to appeal to General Aguinaldo in the name of the United States Government for the release of the friars held by us as prisoners—acts which show in an eloquent manner distinct recognition of the sovereign power and authority of the Philippine people, which had been recovered from the Spaniards since then and reassumed in the exalted and worthy personality of our leader, Gen. Don Emilio Aguinaldo.

Viewed from another standpoint, the above-mentioned incidents might be held to indicate that they were clear evidence that it was the bounden duty of the American commanders to harass and if possible quel the Philippine revolution, not convey our illustrous leader to Cavite to begin with, and thereby afford him very favorable opportunity (in view of the mode of conveyance, his reception by the Admiral, and the permission granted him to establish his headquarters in Cavite whence he issued, without protest of any kind by Admiral Dewey or anyone else, a proclamation calling on the people to rally round his standard and wage war upon Spain to wrest from her the sovereignty of the archipelago) to revive the revolution against Spain, using his prestige and exercising his authority and genius to that end. But far from being indiscreet or ill-considered action, the recognition of General Aguinaldo's power and prestige, the arrangement to bring him back to the Philippines, the courtesy extended to him by Admiral Dewey, and the conduct of your consuls and generals was, on the contrary, rightful recognition of our revolution, in that our sovereign rights and independent authority in the archipelago was practically conceded and accepted as accomplished facts. It is therefore evident that we have a perfect right, and are not straining any points, in demanding from the Government of Washington official recognition of our independence, basing the demand on the above-mentioned reason that accomplished facts in affairs political constitute right.

This is altogether apart from and does not clash with the victories of your troops over the Spaniards, nor the cession of sovereignty by Spain in the treaty of Paris of the 10th December last in favor of the United States.

As regards your victories, there are the proclamations of General Merritt and the letters of General Anderson, clearly setting forth that America did not come to the Philippines to make conquests, much less to wage war against the natives, but to free the people from the galling yoke of Spain. "We came not as enemies, but as liberators." Such were the solemn pledges of your Generals Merritt and Anderson to the Filipinos when they arrived in these islands.

Therefore it is plain that it can not be claimed that by reason of your victories over the Spaniards rights of conquest accrue to you as being due from the Filipinos for the all-sufficient reason that you were not engaged in war with us between the 1st May, 1898, and the 4th February, 1899, during the night of which latter date your forces, in accordance with the orders of President William McKinley, commenced hostilities against our forces for the purpose of establishing American sovereignty in our archipelago by force of arms.

As for the cession of sovereignty, I have to say it is a null and void agreement in every respect, for it has been celebrated in contravention of all rules of international law and in opposition to the eternal principles of justice.

For example: It is not moral, nor could it be just, and much less is it in accord with international right to say to a nation: "I will help you to sweep away Spanish sovereignty and make you independent, and after helping you to sweep away and destroy the said sovereignty, I come and buy the sovereignty from Spain by title of cession and impose it by force of arms upon the protected people."

Such a proceeding is self-condemnatory, for its accomplishment rests only with arbitrary power and in the power of any one exercising such power and carrying it to the extent of injuring an ally or a friend to whom protection is offered. Fiore, Bluntschli, and Hallet, authorities on international right, established as a rule to be universally applied, the following: "It is not just, under the pretext of assumed laws of nations, to amalgamate or segregate a people against their obvious will, spontaneously and voluntarily acclaimed."

Therefore the cession in question is an act completely null and void, being neither moral nor just; nor is it even licit according to international law.

On the other hand, in respect of cessions the essential conditions include the possession of what is ceded, and when it concerns inhabited territories the concordance and express consent of the inhabitants is necessary. Neither of these conditions have been fulfilled in respect of the cession of the Philippines by the treaty of Paris of the 10th December, 1898. First, because at that date, and long before it, Spain exercised no sovereignty whatever over any Philippine territory, which was reconquered by us, and governed by us since June, 1898, which facts were well known to the Governments of Washington and Madrid. Second, because the Philippine people had publicly and loyally manifested to the Government of Washington and to the whole world that it was their desire to live independently of all alien sovereignty, and perhaps on this account our wishes were not consulted when the cession was made—an act, without doubt, of bad faith on the part of the two contracting parties, who were perforce obliged to make the terms null and void by reason of this false step.

Consequently the treaty of Paris of 10th December, 1898, does not convey any sovereign rights whatever in favor of the United States over any of the Philippine Islands or its inhabitants. Nor are the United States in any way entitled by it to impose upon the Philippine people an alien sovereignty by force of arms.

The United States, therefore, can not be excused from recognizing our independence either on account of their victories over the Spaniards or by reason of the provisions of the treaty of Paris. We, however, readily admit that our gratitude and full recognition are due to the great North American nation for the generous assistance proffered us by their consular representatives and commanders in bringing from Hongkong to Cavite our illustrious leader to continue the rebellion against Spain, and then, by respecting that revolution, recognizing it as the sovereign power which replaced that which Spain had lost; but from the fact of oppressing us and endeavoring to filch from us our liberties, subjecting our independence, so dearly won, to the influence of a new foreign yoke there is a wide gulf fixed which is as limitless as the distance to another world, and the only possible way to accomplish your object is to destroy the lives of 8,000,000 Filipinos, an act which would leave on the hitherto spotless pages of your glorious history and traditional liberality an everlasting and indelible stain.

THIRD.

The Filipinos can justly boast of a social status on a par with cultured peoples and are fit to commingle and live on an equality with civilized nations, forming in common with them part of the magna civitas.

We are a community of 8,000,000 people, politically organized on well-defined territory, with our own government, which is competent to and sufficient for the protection of the rights of our citizens and capable of assuming full responsibility for our acts in the conduct of relations with other States. We have an official language—Spanish. We have accepted an enlightened religion—the Roman Catholic faith. Strict morality, which emanates from Christianizing influences, governs our manners and customs. Our laws are on a par with statutes of other civilized States, being identical with those in operation in these islands during the last few years, which have been generally accepted as meeting the requirements of civilized communities; and, lastly, we live in families, in towns, and in cities, affording permanent evidence of a status of cultured and civilized society, it being universally conceded that the Philippines, unlike other Far Eastern States, have invariably extended hospitality to all foreigners and enjoy the reputation of exceptional faultlessness and the strongest aversion to anything in the nature of barbarous conduct.

We, the Filipinos, respect life, honor, and rights in property, and punish with severe penalties all violations of these governing principles of humanity. We also have laws encouraging the knowledge of science and arts, protecting industries, commerce, and agriculture, and we profess, finally, our acquaintance with all the most noble sentiments of friendship, gratitude, and honesty.

We possess, therefore, all the conditions requisite for existence as an independent State according to article 37 of the International Code of the famous jurisconsult Fiore, and that being so, we are perfectly justified in demanding from all the great civilized States official recognition of our independence in conformity with articles 44, 48, and 49 of the said standard work, which provides, moreover, that such recognition can not, under the circumstances, be denied us, nor should it be unduly delayed. It is clearly set forth in articles 55 and 56 of Fiore's work that any course of procedure in contravention of the foregoing articles is opposed to the principle of high policy.

To better prove to the people of the United States our culture and state of civilization there are annexed to this document copies of our fundamental laws and various decrees relating to the establishment of our executive and judicial administration, our educational establishments, and our army regulations. In this way perhaps the people of the States will be better able to grasp the truth respecting our advancement along the high road of modern civilization and be thereby convinced of our ability to rule and govern ourselves in an independent manner.

These are the reasons why we appeal for official recognition of our independence, reasons which we confidently submit to the deep conscientiousness of the enlightened people of the United States, a people destined by God to decide the fate of our unfortunate country, a fate which would be better if, heeding the dictates of justice and humanity, your President, Mr. McKinley, had not chosen to wage this cruel, devastating war against us with your powerful land and sea forces.

It is sometimes said that we are to blame for the outbreak of hostilities during the night of the 4th February last, but this is not an established fact.

In the first place, because we, the Filipinos, were expecting at that very time (the beginning of February) official recognition of our independence from the Government of Washington, an expectation which was justified by the annexed letter of Gen. E. S. Otis, dated 25th January; also on account of what took place at the conferences of the mixed commissions of Americans and Filipinos, which sat in Manila during the latter part of the said month of January to discuss matters and arrange for a basis of friendly relations between the two parties, which, it was hoped, would be permanent. Moreover, there was another reason, namely, the Filipinos were fully aware of the superior strength of your forces, against whom it would have been criminal folly to pit our inexperienced and undisciplined army.

Accordingly, it is unquestionable that we were not the aggressors, for we knew full well that were we to act on the offensive we could look for neither military nor political gain of any kind. On the contrary, we regarded such action as bordering on suicidal folly and well nigh sure to bring down on us the hatred and contempt of the American people. We had, in fact, nothing to gain and very much to lose by aggression.

Esteemed citizens of the United States, if with the foregoing reasoning there be borne in mind the fact that we were living in peace and harmony with your forces since June, without the smallest intention or inclination to commence hostilities, at a period when your forces were smaller and therefore more easy to cope with than subsequently, I verily believe that the enlightened people of the United States will not be slow to realize that it is not in the least degree probable, nor is it reasonable to assume, that we were the aggressors, seeing that we stood in need of their good will and were anxious to court and maintain a favorable impression with the American electorate in the interest of our cause. Peace and good will were essential to the success of our cause—a cause which would at once be jeopardized by any overt act of aggression.

We are neither celebrated warriors nor great fighters, nor are we as Quixotic as the Spaniards. We took up arms to obtain our independence, and it is self-evident that we did not develop our little armed force for the purpose of making an enemy of such a great and mighty people as the citizens of the United States in order that thereby our noble cause might the more easily triumph.

If we call to mind the fact that your President, Mr. McKinley, caused reinforcements to be sent to Manila after the capitulation by Spain on the 30th August, 1898; if we remember his refusal to listen to our humble petition to him, praying for recognition of our independence through our representative, Don Felipe Agoncillo, whom he refused to receive; or whether we recall the fact that he refused to give ear unto our appeal through the good offices of General Otis, as is proved by a letter from the general and the —— too: and if we take into consideration that, lastly and finally, the treaty of Paris was so framed as to involve the cession of the sovereignty of Spain to the United States, I am of opinion that the most natural sequence of these incontestible moves of Mr. McKinley is to be found in the outbreak of hostilities, namely, an order from your President to General Otis to commence with acts of aggression and impose on us that odious sovereignty by force of arms, notwithstanding the fact that we had demonstrated and made it evident in every possible way from the first that we would accept no solution other than our independence.

You, honorable representatives of the people of the United States, having in view the providential bonds which bind the fate of the Philippines to your supreme decision, surely you will not be unmindful at such a momentous epoch of the sublime principles of right and justice proclaimed by the illustrious founders of your independence on 4th July, 1776. Endowed with those magnificent principles, your nation advanced rapidly along the paths of progress till it became great and powerful, admired and respected by all the aged States of Europe.

Trusting, therefore, in your glorious traditions of humanity and liberality, the Filipinos look forward with confidence to obtaining from your acknowledged rectitude a just resolution officially recognizing the independence of our beloved country.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, yours, very respectfully,

FELIPE BUENCAMINO.

TARLAC, P. I., August 20, 1899.

[Inclosures.]

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Singapore, June 10, 1898.

To His Excellency Gen. EMILIO AGUINALDO.

MY DEAR GENERAL: Allow me to tender you my most sincere congratulations on the brilliant success of your recent military achievements, the news of which prompted the patriotic demonstration here on the part of the Filipino residents of which I hand you the report inclosed.

All is coming to pass as I had hoped and predicted, and it is now being shown that I was right in arranging for your cooperation with Admiral Dewey, and equally right in asking that you are given the support and intrusted with the confidence of the American Government.

I trust that I shall next have the pleasure of congratulating you upon the capture of Manila, and when that occurs let me ask that you will send me some historic memento of the place and the incident, such as the flag or keys of the Ciudad or principal fortress, in souvenir of our meeting at Singapore and of the important results which have ensued.

It would also afford me particular pleasure to have an account from you direct of your proceedings since landing at Cavite, and I hope you will not hesitate to write anything that you may desire to communicate either to me personally or through me to the Government or the public.

Believe me, your sincere friend,

E. SPENCER PRATT.

CONSULATE GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Singapore, June 11, 1898.

To His Excellency Gen. EMILIO AGUINALDO.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I was most pleased to receive your letter of the 27th of last month informing me that you have safely arrived at Cavite and had been so well treated by the officers of the McCulloch on the way, as I was sure you would be.

I wrote fully to Admiral Dewey concerning you, and to the American Government have pointed out that you and you alone were equal to the occasion.

Write me fully, and believe me, your true friend,

E. SPENCER PRATT.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Hongkong, June 21, 1898.

Gen. E. AGUINALDO, Cavite, etc.

MY DEAR GENERAL: Your kind favor received.

Mr. Agoncillo has written me that you wish to send some of your Spanish prisoners to Hongkong; that they are an expense to you for food, etc.

I thoroughly appreciate your position and the difficulties of looking after so many.

In case your prisoners can pay their steamship fare to Hongkong and His Excellency the Admiral has no objection to their leaving, I see no objection to your relieving yourself of them on their oath not to take up arms again. If you find any of them break oath and you capture them with arms in their hands give them the full penalty.

However, do not let any of your prominent prisoners leave or escape. Keep them as hostages. You may need them to redeem some of your own generals. Never mind about feeding them three meals every day. Rice and water will be a good diet. They have been living too high for the last few years.

Consult with Consul Williams and he will do everything in his power for you. He has your interests at heart.

Your representative here, T. Sandico, esq., who leaves to-day by Zafiro, has rendered you splendid service here. He is active, wise, and honest. I am greatly pleased with him, and trust you will send him back whenever you need anyone in Hongkong. The capture of Mr. Agoncillo's steamer, the Pasig, delayed all our plans and made the police very watchful. However, Mr. Evans is working as rapidly as possible. You will hear from him soon.

I trust Mr. Evans's steamer, the Kwong Hoi, with 43 of your leaders, arrived all right.

Accept my regards and congratulations.

Very truly, yours,

ROUNSEVELLE WILDMAN,
Consul-General.

P. S.—I am sending some packages of medicine from M. Basa.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Hongkong, June 23, 1898.

MY DEAR GENERAL AGUINALDO: I am sending you the mail by Jackson and Evans's steamer. In this morning's Press you will see a telegram to me from Port Said that notifies us that the Spanish relief fleet is on its way out to Manila.

Do not let this news disturb you. We have powerful monitors on their way from San Francisco.

Now, insomuch as the Spanish want more bloodshed in the Philippines, I trust you will let them have a taste of real war. Do not be so tender with them. Handle them as they would treat you.

I suppose you have taken Manila by this time. I hope so.

I am sorry that Mr. Evans has not been able to get more arms to you He has started three times, but each time the police have headed him off. They are very much on the alert since the capture of the Pasig. That was a most unfortunate affair, but no doubt Mr. Sandico has explained these matters to you.

Accept my sincere thanks for the Mauser. I will send the one to Mr. Consul-General Pratt in a few days.

Do whatever you can to aid Mr. Evans, and trusting victory will ever perch on your banners,

I am, very sincerely, yours,

ROUNSEVELLE WILDMAN,
Consul-General.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AT HONGKONG, Hongkong, July 14, 1898.

Gen. E. AGUINALDO,
Cavite, Manila.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I have your kind favor of the 8th instant, and it is always a pleasure for me to hear from you and of your continued wonderful success in the field. You have certainly fulfilled nobly all the promises I made on your behalf to Admiral Dewey.

By the time you receive this you will learn of the wonderful victory achieved by Admiral Sampson at Santiago de Cuba—every Spanish ship sunk and not one of our ships injured and only three men killed. Every minute we expect to hear of the fall of Santiago.

I am very anxious that Manila should fall before peace negotiations come on. It looks very much now as though Spain was going to sue for peace, and that a truce will be declared within another two weeks. Manila should be taken before that time.

I am very sorry that Mr. Evans has not been able to deliver to you the arms. The seizure of the Pasig has put every official, Chinese and English, on the watch. However, you have seen Mr. Evans, and he can explain the matter to you thoroughly and what his future plans are.

I hear that the Pasig is now in Macao loading provisions and is going from there to Canton to try and ship arms. I hope they will succeed and soon be with you. I am very glad that there was no truth in the rumors that were afloat regarding your displeasure with Mr. Sandico.

The Mauser rifle came to hand, and I shall prize it highly as a gift from you. With kindest regards to your cabinet and officers,

I am, as ever, your friend,

ROUNSEVELLE WILDMAN,
Consul-General.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Hongkong, June 25, 1898.

General AGUINALDO, Cavite.

MY DEAR GENERAL: The Petrarch leaves to-morrow morning, and I want to write you a few lines regarding the international situation of the Philippine Islands. I trust you will receive them in the same kindly spirit in which they are tendered.

Your work and ability has been fully recognized by not only the people of the United States but by the entire civilized world. Since the Cuban leaders have fallen to quarreling among themselves and their general, Garcia, has declined to have any further dealings with the United States to free Cuba and the Philippines from the cruel yoke of Spain, it all remains with you to retain this proud position. If you stand shoulder to shoulder with our forces and do not allow any small differences of opinion and fancied slight to keep you from the one set purpose of freeing your islands from the cruelties and robberies under which it has been groaning for so many hundred years, your name in history will be a glorious one, and your reward from my own great country will be sure and lasting.

The latest telegraphic dispatches assert that all the great powers of Europe (except Great Britain) have arrived at an agreement that the Philippines can not become a part of the United States, but will be divided up among themselves, as has been the case with China. Should this prove to be true you have a greater battle on your hands than you have already had, and it will require all the power of the United States and Great Britain to keep your islands intact and to hold you as the first man in them. I have vouched for your honesty and earnestness of purpose to the President of the United States and to our people, and they are ready to extend their hand to you as a brother and aid you in every laudable ambition. There are greater prizes in the world than being the mere chief of a revolution. I look to you to bear me out in all my promises, and I give you my assurance that you can always call upon me to act as your champion should any try to slander your name.

Do not forget that the United States undertook this war for the sole purpose of relieving the Cubans from the cruelties under which they were suffering, and not for the love of conquest or the hope of gain. They are actuated by precisely the same feelings toward the Filipinos. Whatever the final disposition of the conquered territory may be, you can trust the United States that justice and honor will control all their dealings with you. The first thing is to throw off the Spanish yoke. Do not let anything interfere with that. I believe in you. Do not disappoint me.

Sincerely, yours,

ROUNSEVELLE WILDMAN,
Consul-General.

Proclamation announcing dictatorial government.

BELOVED COUNTRYMEN: I accepted the terms of peace arranged by Don Pedro A. Paterno with the captain-general of these islands conditionally, laying down our arms and disbanding the army, believing the adoption of that policy more conducive to the interests of our country than continuation of the insurrection with the limited resources at my disposal. However, as some of the conditions could not be fulfilled (some of our troops being dissatisfied and retaining their arms), and owing to the fact that up to the present time a period of five months has elapsed without the reforms being conceded which we stipulated for to fit our country for inclusion in the comity of civilized states, like our neighbor, Japan, for instance, which in the brief period of about twenty years had so progressed as to leave little cause to envy others, demonstrating her vigor and superiority in the recent war with China, I am cognizant that, even if willing, the Spanish Government is incapable of coping with certain elements which invariably obstruct the advancement of their country and which lethal influence was the principal cause of the uprising of the masses. Now, therefore, as the great North American nation has evinced disinterestedness in our welfare and stretches forth her hand to help us to obtain our liberty, I again assume control of our hosts in their endeavors to attain the grand object we all have in view, establishing a dictatorship and issuing decrees on my own responsibility, with the advice and approval of illustrious fellow-countrymen, until such time as all the islands own our sway, when a properly constituted popular assembly can be formed and elect a president, with a cabinet, into whose hands I will surrender supreme authority.

Done in Cavite on the 24th day of May, 1898.

EMILIO AGUINALDO.

UNITED STATES NAVAL FORCE ON ASIATIC STATION,
FLAGSHIP OLYMPIA,
Cavite, P. I., June 16, 1898.

DEAR GENERAL AGUINALDO: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 15th instant, and will take pleasure in transmitting the inclosed decrees to my Government.

The letters which accompanied the above have been forwarded to the British consul at Manila, as requested.

Yours, sincerely,

GEORGE DEWEY,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy.

His Excellency Gen. Don EMILIO AGUINALDO, Bacoor.

UNITED STATES NAVAL FORCE ON ASIATIC STATION,
FLAGSHIP OLYMPIA,
Cavite, P. I., June 23, 1898.

DEAR GENERAL AGUINALDO: Mr. Rawson Walker, the British consul and acting United States consul at Manila, requests me to ask that you will grant passes (1) for Mr. Fitton to go to Malabon in a British launch and bring back to Manila some Chinese who desire to go to Hongkong, list of whom is enclosed; (2) for Messrs. Charles T. Broyud, George Moore, and Robert Brough to return to their duties in the railway depot at Caloocan.

I am, very sincerely,

GEORGE DEWEY,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy,
Commanding United States Naval Force on Asiatic Station.

His Excellency D. EMILIO AGUINALDO, Cavite.

UNITED STATES NAVAL FORCE ON ASIATIC STATION,
FLAGSHIP OLYMPIA,
Cavite, P. I., July 4, 1898.

DEAR GENERAL AGUINALDO: I beg to inform you that I am requested by Mr. E. H. Rawson Walker, British consul and acting United States consul, to transmit to you the following requests for passes:

From Messrs. Smith, Bell & Co., merchants, of Manila, for any member of their staff to travel through the northern provinces to keep up communication with their rice mills at Gerona, in Tarlac, and Bayambang, in Pangasinan, and with all outside buying stations.

From Mr. R. W. Hooper, of Manila, to travel in the various provinces to the northward to look after his rice business and Calumpit rice mill.

I am, very sincerely,

GEORGE DEWEY,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy.

His Excellency Gen. D. EMILIO AGUINALDO.

UNITED STATES NAVAL FORCE ON ASIATIC STATION,
FLAGSHIP OLYMPIA,
Cavite, P. I., July 16, 1898.

DEAR GENERAL AGUINALDO: I send herewith a copy of a letter from the French consul at Manila regarding the taking of the steamer Compania de Filipinas.

I replied to him that the forces under my command were in no way concerned in this affair, but that I would transmit his letter to you with a request that you would show due regard for French interests.

Yours, sincerely,

GEORGE DEWEY,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy.

His Excellency Gen. Don EMILIO AGUINALDO, Bacoor.

[United States Volunteer Signal Corps. (Telegram received.) R. Ry. S. 26 words, dated Camp Dewey, 13.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
August 13, 1898. (Received at 8 a. m.)

To General AGUINALDO,
Commanding Philippine Forces, Bacoor:

Do not let your troops enter Manila without the permission of the American commander. On this side of Pasig River you will be under our fire.

ANDERSON, Brigadier-General.

[United States Volunter Signal Corps. (Telegram received.) Kllws 32 words. dated Ermita headquarters, 2d Division, 13.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
August 13, 1898. (Received at 6.35 p. m.)

To General AGUINALDO,
Commanding Filipino Forces:

Taken. Serious trouble threatened between our forces. Try and prevent it. Your troops should not force themselves in the city until we have received the full surrender. Then we will negotiate with you.

ANDERSON, Commanding.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY GOVERNOR,
Manila, P. I., October 14, 1898.

General EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding Philippine Revolutionary Forces, Malolos, P. I.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 16th ultimo and beg to apologize for the late official recognition of the same, presenting as a reason for my delay the necessity of obtaining certain information in order to arrive at conclusions in matters materially affecting the substance of our late correspondence, the securing of which has been attended with considerable difficulty.

I fully appreciate the friendly spirit manifested toward my Government in your expressions of regard, which your action in retiring your troops has confirmed, but I believe that there has existed and still exists some misunderstanding as to the limits of territory which that Government is compelled to occupy and administer under its international obligations with Spain, the responsibility for which it can not escape.

The articles of capitulation transferred the city of Manila with suburbs and all defenses, as I had the honor to inform you in my letter of September 8. It was found impossible to determine definitely on any existing map either the limits of the city or the lines of its defenses. The latter had been variously placed, at some points retired and at others thrust out beyond conceded city limits. I therefore directed my chief engineer, by a careful search of the municipal records and an actual survey, to ascertain the lines within which occupation by United States troops was obligatory by reason of the terms of the surrender. He has finally concluded these directed labors and has presented a map, of which the inclosed blue print is a copy, on which is traced in white the lines determined upon. By reference to this print and a comparison of the same with all former existing maps of the city and suburbs it will be perceived that the latter varies materially from it, especially as to the trend of the Pasig River and the location of the Spanish defenses.

The lines of circumlocution on the print begin at the Bocana de Vitas. From thence they follow Maypajo Creek until they reach the line of the Lico road, produced, thence proceed along said line and road to Lico, thence to the junction of the two roads in front of the Chinese Hospital, thence along the road in front of said hospital to the north corner of the hospital wall, thence to blockhouse No. 4, thence by blockhouses Nos. 5, 6, and 7 to San Juan del Monte Creek at the Aqueduct Bridge, thence down said creek and up the Rio Pasig to the mouth of Concordia Creek, thence by Concordia and Tripa de Gallinas creeks to a point opposite the place where the road from Singalon to Pineda (Pasay) turns sharply to the right, thence by road to Maytubig, and thence to the mouth of Malate Creek.

This map is believed to be correct, as the surveying and plotting were executed with the greatest care and with a desire for accuracy. The lines do not include all of the territory which the late Spanish chief engineer of the city has described as lying within its suburbs, and a larger proportion of them are drawn within the lines of the city's defenses, but they are partial and include all portions of the suburbs which my Government, under its promises to Spain, could be expected to hold possession of under any demands which Spain might present.

In your withdrawal of troops I note that to the north they retired to the line described on the map furnished by my predecessor, General Merritt, while to the east and south his request was not observed. As far as Paco is concerned it was understood that the troops in that section would be withdrawn within a short period of time, and I have now the honor to represent that the retention of that mutually conceded suburb has been a source of great annoyance to the American authorities, and as fully, I believe, to yourself, while the revolutionary forces along the Singalon and connecting roads have been the cause of complaint from the inhabitants of that section.

I am therefore compelled, by reason of my instructions, which direct me to execute faithfully the articles of the Spanish capitulation, because of the interests of my Government and, as I sincerely believe, the welfare of your own forces, to ask that you withdraw all your troops beyond the lines marked in the accompanying blue print, which are above described, and I must request such withdrawal on or before the 20th instant, else I shall be forced into some action looking to that end.

Permit me, in conclusion, General, to bring to your attention facts of which you are doubtless ignorant, and which all connected with the American authorities, especially that vast majority who have entertained a decided and pronounced friendly interest in the Philippine people, have viewed with more or less indignation.

In a number of instances kidnaping and robbery have been committed recently within this city by parties who claim to be connected with your forces, some of whom stated that they were acting under your instructions. This I can not believe; but the high-handed offenses committed by these persons show how important it is, for the interests of all concerned, to withdraw your troops as herein requested.

In numerous instances my officers have submitted complaints to me that they have been arrested and been compelled to turn back to the city, though journeying as unarmed and peaceful citizens, merely with the intent to seek health and recreation. And on Sunday last a funeral party of the British war ship Powerful, now lying within the harbor, was so delayed by the insurgent forces at Paco when proceeding to its English cemetery that it was obliged to return to its vessel and repeat the journey on the following day. I fail to see how such proceedings can be justified before enlightened public opinion, and it is matter of profound surprise to me that a people seeking relief from the control of a government by which, in the pronounced judgment of a large portion of the civilized world, it has been oppressed for centuries, should permit its armed authorities to so conduct themselves as to arouse the indignation of friendly and assistant nations. The indignities which my Government has suffered from the revolutionary forces still illegally maintained at Paco (few of them are cited herein) can not be tolerated in future. Resistance to the high-handed proceedings there committed is not merely considered a duty from which there is no escape, but would be esteemed a virtue by any civilized government cognizant of the facts. I do not for a moment permit myself to entertain the impression that either you or the able advisers by whom you are surrounded have authorized these insults to my Government, but I must bring them to the notice of the authorities which maintains these troops and upon which rests the legal responsibility for their conduct.

There is another matter which I beg respectfully to present for your distinguished consideration. There is a great number of United States troops within this city and a large accession, primarily intended and equipped by my Government for use against the armed forces of Spain, is en route for this port. The continued unhealthfulness of the city, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts we are making for a thorough policing of the same, may make it necessary to temporarily encamp such troops as are suffering from diseases contracted here on some point of land near by promising favorable sanitary conditions for restoration to health. Should the emergency become imminent the dictates of humanity and the overwhelming demands of my Government would oblige me to establish a convalescent camp in this locality to which troops could be sent for recuperation and to relieve the congested situation which must attend the presence of so large a body of armed men within a thickly populated city. I have in mind for this possible camp the grounds on the shore of the bay formerly occupied by United States troops and designated "Camp Dewey," or the high ground to the east of the city. It is my great desire to place it at a locality which would not inconvenience any organizations connected with your forces or the surrounding inhabitants; and to the emergency of this anticipated proceeding I respectfully invite your consideration and ask your assistance should execution become necessary.

Should action of this character be decided upon, I beg of you to rest firmly in my unqualified assurances that it will be undertaken in a spirit of the greatest friendliness and with the sincere desire to neither compromise nor affect in the slightest degree your interests and those of the people whom you represent, but on the contrary to enhance them.

Permit me to subscribe myself, General,

With highest respect, your most obedient servant,

E. S. OTIS,
Major-General, U. S. Volunteers,
U. S. Military Governor in the Philippines.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY GOVERNOR
IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
Manila, P. I., October 27, 1898.

Gen. EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding Revolutionary Forces, Malolos, P. I.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 22d instant, and have awaited the result of correspondence and conferences upon the subject of which you treat.

Concerning the conference of the 18th instant with your representative, Dr. Pardo de Tavera, it resulted in an honest misunderstanding between us in one slight particular only. The Doctor very ably, by letter, submitted your wishes, one of which was the retention of the blockhouses on the designated line. In regard to this matter I said that I was powerless to make any concessions, and in the conversation which followed remarked in substance, through the interpreter, that we did not wish to occupy them, as we did not consider them of any importance. The Doctor, I can conceive, very naturally misconstrued my meaning—in fact the interpreter might have done so—and when, on the 24th instant, the Doctor again called and forcibly expressed his construction of my language, I was so impressed with his earnestness and honesty of purpose and convictions I thereupon remarked that although the law would not permit a concession I would not raise any objection unless hereafter compelled to do so by my superior authority if your forces continued to occupy the blockhouses to the north of the Pasig River.

I have referred to General Merritt's letter of August 20, which you mention, and find, of course, that it is as you state. Unfortunately I am bound by the terms of capitulation, which recite "the city and defenses of Manila and its suburbs." Pandacan is certainly far within the line of defense and from information obtained from two weighty sources I have been led to believe that it has of late been considered one of the city's suburbs, although we have been unable to find any Spanish decree which fixes its status with definiteness.

In regard to the establishment of a convalescent camp for the restoration to health of members of my command, it was my intention to consult you and arrive at an understanding in the matter before attempting anything of the kind. I knew that you would not offer objections if it could be so placed as not to give your people annoyance, since it could not be in any wise a menace, but, on the contrary, would place our sick within your power and to a certain extent under your protection. I have that confidence in your humane sentiments and in the kindly impulses of your people as to believe that you would surely consent to a measure of this character, and I think that the poorer class of surrounding communities would be pecuniarily benefited by the small trade that it will give rise to, as hospitals make many purchases of edible products which your people would be glad to furnish. Should necessity arise under which I would be forced to take action, it will be my pleasure to confer with you before proceeding in the matter, and I am fully convinced that you will give assent and also assistance.

Permit me, General, to assure you that I fully appreciate the difficulties under which you labor in your endeavors to carry out the desires and demands of your people. As I have already expressed myself in former communications, I am fully convinced of your wish to maintain harmonious relations with the United States forces and government of Manila, and that you deplore with me any proceeding which may disturb that harmony and friendly feeling. I have been fully aware that all unpleasant incidents which have occurred, and to which I alluded in my former letter, were due entirely to the irresponsible and unwarranted action of subordinates, and I am constantly called upon to correct misconceptions entertained by my troops and to punish offenses which they have wantonly committed.

I am gratified with the success, both as concerns the interests of the Philippine people and the United States troops, which has attended our mutual efforts for the amicable adjustment of affairs, and sincerely hope that the manifested good will which now exists by and between our forces may be long continued.

I am, General, most sincerely, your obedient servant,

E. S. OTIS,
Major-General, U. S. Volunteers,
U. S. Military Governor in the Philippines.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY GOVERNOR
IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
Manila, P. I., November 2, 1898.

Gen. EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding Philippine Revolutionary Forces, Malolos, P. I.

GENERAL: By direction of my Government, I have the honor to present for your distinguished consideration a subject which is causing much comment and a great deal of severe criticism of the actions of the Filipino people throughout Europe and among the very large class of Catholic citizens of my own country, and that is the retention as prisoners of the Spanish Catholic clergy and nuns. I believe that a vast majority of the reports of great cruelty and barbarous treatment practiced by the Filipinos toward these individuals which have been put in general circulation are untrue. Indeed I have forbidden cablegrams prepared on this subject, which I had good reason to suppose could not be substantiated, to be sent to other countries, and I have informed the United States authorities that the many rumors of this nature in circulation throughout the civilized world were greatly exaggerated. Still, however, facts stand out prominently that these individuals have suffered privations and hardships and are still held in captivity, and upon these, fabrications charging most cruel and inhuman treatment, resulting in loss of life, will continue to be spread abroad to the great detriment of the interests and welfare of the Filipino people. I do not consider that I sacrifice in any particular the confidence reposed in me by my Government in communicating to you that it has been requested by the Vatican at Rome and by many distinguished men high in the councils of nations to employ its good offices in efforts to secure the liberty and freedom of action of the Spanish clergy and all individuals connected with religious orders now held in durance, among whom are especially mentioned the bishop of New Segovia and the nuns in the northwestern portion of the island of Luzon.

It is, of course, needless for me to present to you or the able counselors by whom you are surrounded, and, indeed, it may be considered a presumption on my part to invite your attention to the fact, that the clergy, and, indeed, the civil functionaries of the Spanish Government, can not, under a strict interpretation of the rules of international law, be declared prisoners of war, except in certain very aggravated cases. It would require most decided action on the part of members of religious orders to place them in that category, and the seizure and retention of or the interference with nuns in the practice of what they consider their duties under their sacred religious vows is invariably looked upon with marked disfavor by all nations claiming to practice civilized warfare. All this is well known to you, and I only allude to it to account in a measure for the erroneous impressions which publicly prevail regarding the humane sentiments and good intentions cherished by the Filipinos, and which are so damaging to them in securing a position as a people which they seek to invoke. You will please pardon me for this allusion, but the matter is so important to the best interests of the Filipinos that I have taken the liberty, uninvited, to present it.

Confident that you seek the welfare of your people, may I, in that confidence, ask you to use your conceded influence to correct this condition of affairs and to act with me in efforts to put an end to the acrimonious criticisms which now so widely prevail? I would be pleased to receive them here at Manila and care for them while they make preparations to leave the country, as I am informed many of them desire to do; and more particularly does it appear to me as most essential that prompt action be taken with regard to the nuns. Any traveling expense or cost of food which would be required to effect their removal to this point I would be glad to meet should you desire it.

I am, General, with great respect, your obedient servant,

E. S. OTIS,
Major-General, U. S. Volunteers,
U. S. Military Governor in the Philippines.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Cavite Arsenal, P. I., July 4, 1898.

Señor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO Y FAMY,
Commanding Philippine Forces, Cavite, Luzon, P. I.

GENERAL: I have the honor to inform you that the United States of America, whose land forces I have the honor to command in this vicinity, being at war with the Kingdom of Spain, have entire sympathy and most friendly sentiments for the native people of the Philippine Islands.

For these reasons I desire to have the most amicable relations with you and to have you and your people cooperate with us in military operations against the Spanish forces.

In our operations it has become necessary for us to occupy the town of Cavite as a base of operations.

In doing this I do not wish to interfere with your residence here and the exercise by yourself and other native citizens of all functions and privileges not inconsistent with military rule.

I would be pleased to be informed at once of any misconduct of soldiers under my command, as it is the intention of my Government to maintain order and to treat all citizens with justice, courtesy, and kindness.

I have, therefore, the honor to ask your excellency to instruct your officials not to interfere with my officers in the performance of their duties, and not to assume that they can not visit Cavite without permission.

Assuring you again of my most friendly sentiments and distinguished consideration.

I remain, with all respect, THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Cavite Arsenal, Luzon, P. I., July 6, 1898.

Señor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO Y FAMY,
Commanding Philippine Forces.

GENERAL: I am encouraged by the friendly sentiments expressed by your excellency in your welcome letter, received on the 5th instant, to endeavor to come to a definite understanding, which I hope will be advantageous to both.

Very soon we expect a large addition to our forces, and it must be apparent to you as a military officer that we shall require much more room in which to camp our soldiers, and also store room for our supplies. For this I should like to have your excellency's advice and cooperation, as you are best acquainted with the resources of this country.

It must be apparent to you that we do not intend to remain here inactive, but to move promptly against our common enemy. But for a short time we must organize and land supplies, and also retain a place for storing them near our fleet and transports.

I am solicitous to avoid any conflict of authority which might result from having two sets of military officers exercising command in the same place.

I am also anxious to avoid sickness by taking sanitary precautions. Your sanitary medical officers have been making voluntary inspections with mine, and fear epidemic disease if the vicinity is not made clean. Would it not be well to have prisoners work to this end under the advice of the surgeon?

I again renew my assurance of distinguished consideration.

I am, with great respect,

THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Cavite Arsenal, P. I., July 14, 1898.

Señor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding Philippine Forces.

GENERAL: Wishing to get complete information of the approaches to Manila from every direction, I, therefore, have the honor to request that you give my officers all possible assistance in making reconnoissance of the lines and approaches and that you favor them with your advice.

Officers coming from me will bear a note to that effect.

With great respect,

THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Cavite Arsenal, P. I., July 19, 1898.

Señor D. EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding General, Philippine Forces.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant. Your offer of assistance is appreciated and your assurances of good will are most gratifying. The difficulty of collecting supplies, referred to by you, is apprehended and will be considered in fixing compensation.

As a medium of communication with your people we will be pleased to have you assure them that there will be no confiscation of their property, that our requisitions will be reasonable, and that a fair compensation will always be given.

I remain, General, with all respect, your obedient servant,

THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES EXPEDITIONARY FORCE,
Cavite Arsenal, P. I., July 19, 1898.

Señor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding General, Philippine Forces.

GENERAL: The bearer, Maj. J. F. Bell, United States Army, was sent by Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, United States Army, to collect for him, by the time of his personal arrival, certain information concerning the strength and positions of the enemy and concerning the topography of the country surrounding Manila.

I would be obliged if you would permit him to see your maps and place at his disposal any information you may have on the above subjects, and also give him a letter or pass, addressed to your subordinates, which will authorize them to furnish him with any information they can on these subjects and to facilitate his passage along the lines upon a reconnaissance around Manila on which I propose to send him.

I remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, U. S. EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Cavite Arsenal, P. I., July 21, 1898.

Señor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding General, Philippine Forces.

GENERAL: I have the honor to request that passes and such other assistance as practicable be given to the bearer, Lieut. E. I. Bryan, and party, who are making a reconnaissance of the surrounding country.

Thanking you for assistance given on previous occasions.

I remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, U. S. EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Cavite Arsenal, P. I., July 23, 1898.

Señor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding Philippine Forces.

GENERAL: When I came here three weeks ago I requested your excellency to give what assistance you could to procure means of transportation for the American army, as it was to fight in the cause of your people. So far we have received no response.

As you represent your people, I now have the honor to make requisition on you for 500 horses, 50 oxen and ox carts.

If you can not secure these, I will have to pass you and make requisition directly on the people.

I beg leave to request an answer at your earliest convenience.

I remain, with great respect,

THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, U. S. EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Cavite Arsenal, Luzon, P. I., July 24, 1898.

Señor Don EMILIO AGUINALDO Y FAMY,
Commanding Philippine Forces.

GENERAL: Your favor of the 26th ultimo, in relation to requisitions for cattle, horses, etc., is satisfactory. I regret that there should have been any misunderstanding about it. The people to whom we applied, even for the hiring of carromatas, etc., told our people that they had orders to supply nothing except by your orders. I am pleased to think that this was a misapprehension on their part.

We are not so unreasonable as to suppose that all we want can be supplied at once or from one place. We may even have to send to other islands. Our quartermaster will establish a depot near the American camp, where he will receive and pay for supplies, and from which he will send out parties to whatever places your excellency will indicate to transact business with your people.

With great regard, your obedient servant,

THOMAS M. ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PACIFIC AND EIGHTH ARMY CORPS,
Manila, P. I., January 9, 1899.

Gen. EMILIO AGUINALDO,
Commanding Revolutionary Forces, Malolos, P. I.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of to-day, and I am much pleased at the action you have taken. I greatly regret that you have not a clear understanding of my position and motives, and trust that my explanation, assisted by the conference I have invited, will make them clear to you.

In my official capacity I am merely the agent of the United States Government to conduct its affairs under the limits which its Constitution, laws, precedents, and specific instructions prescribe. I have not the authority to recognize any national or civil power not already formally recognized by my Government unless specially authorized so to do by the instructions of the Executive of the United States. For this reason I was unable to receive officially the representatives of the revolutionary government and endeavored to make that inability clear to the distinguished gentlemen with whom I had the pleasure to converse a few evenings since. They will bear witness that my course throughout my entire official connection with affairs here has been consistent, and it has pained me that I have not been able to receive and answer communications of the cabinet officers of the government at Malolos, fearing that I might be erroneously charged with lack of courtesy.

Permit me now briefly, General, to speak of the serious misunderstanding which exists between the Filipino people and the representatives of the United States Government, and which I hope that your commissioners, by a thorough discussion, may be able to dispel. I sincerely believe that all desire peace and harmony, and yet by the machinations of evil-disposed persons we have been influenced to think that we occupy the position of adversaries. The Filipinos appear to be of the opinion that we meditate attack, while I am under the strict orders of the President of the United States to avoid conflict in every way possible. My troops, witnessing the uneasiness, the comparatively disturbed and unfriendly attitude of the revolutionary troops and many of the citizens of Manila, conclude that active hostilities have been determined upon, although it must be clearly within the comprehension of unprejudiced and reflecting minds that the welfare and happiness of the Filipino people depend upon the friendly protection of the United States. The hand of Spain was forced, and she has acknowledged before the world that all her claimed rights in this country have departed by due process of law. This treaty acknowledgment, with the conditions which accompany it, awaits ratification by the Senate of the United States; and the action of its Congress must also be secured before the Executive of that Government can proclaim a definite policy. That policy must conform to the will of the people of the United States expressed through its Representatives in Congress. For that action the Filipino people should wait, at least, before severing the existing friendly relations. I am governed by a desire to further the interests of the Filipino people and shall continue to labor with that end in view. There shall be no conflict of forces if I am able to avoid it; and still I shall endeavor to maintain a position to meet all emergencies that may arise.

Permit me to subscribe myself, General, with the highest respect, your most obedient servant,

E. S. OTIS,
Major-General, United States Volunteers, Commanding.

MANILA, P. I., January 7, 1899.

I am authorized by General Otis to say that he, as commanding general of the United States army in the Philippines, will appoint two representatives to confer with a like number appointed by General Aguinaldo, commanding general of the revolutionary forces, should General Aguinaldo desire, as has been intimated to me.

I am also authorized to say that General Otis would be pleased to meet, at any time, representative Filipino men of character and influence.

O. W. CARMAN.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY GOVERNOR
IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
Manila, P. I., January 25, 1899.

Brigadier-General HUGHES,
Chairman of committee appointed to meet a committee appointed by General Aguinaldo to confer with regard to the situation of affairs and to arrive at a mutual understanding of the intent, purposes, aim, and desires of the Filipino people and the people of the United States.

SIR: I am informed that the Filipino people do not place confidence in our good intentions which they are seeking from this conference. The fact that the President has appointed a commission seems to have confirmed them in their impressions. It might be well therefore to give you a brief history of events having relation to these commissions. They are as follows:

Early in December Admiral Dewey and myself received instructions from Washington to report the condition of affairs and offer suggestions. Upon December 7 Admiral Dewey telegraphed as follows:

"It is strongly urged that the President issue a proclamation defining the position of the United States Government in the Philippine Islands and showing the inhabitants that it is our intention to interfere in the internal affairs of the Philippines as little as possible; that as they develop their capabilities of government, their powers and privileges will be increased. That will allay the spirit of unrest. The Spanish soldiers should be expatriated as soon as possible; they are a source of discord and danger."

And the Admiral goes on to say that a force of several regiments raised from among the best insurgent troops and officered by the best of their leaders would do much to disarm opposition.

Upon this suggestion I think the proclamation was issued. Later, Admiral Dewey cabled (I think some time about the 1st of January). I am not aware of the date that he thought the appointment of a commission by the President would be an excellent thing. On January 10 I was asked by the Washington authorities what I thought of the appointment of a commission to confer with the revolutionary authorities and I replied that I thought it might do excellent work here. Before this date, early in January, I had been requested by prominent Filipinos to appoint a committee from my own command to meet a like committee to be appointed by General Aguinaldo. This was done on January 9, one day before receiving the Washington dispatch asking if I thought the appointment of a commission by the President would be advantageous. Hence, what might be styled the two commissions, have no relationship whatever, the one of which you are president sitting to ascertain the desires of the Filipinos and having no authority to grant concessions except by permission of the Washington authorities, the other commission, appointed from Washington, comes with full instructions from the President of the United States and empowered to act for him.

On January 16 I telegraphed to Washington as follows:

"Conditions improving, confidence of citizens returning, business active. Conference held Saturday. Insurgents presented following statements, asking that it be cabled. Undersigned commissioners of commander in chief of revolutionary army of these islands state to commissioners of General Otis that aspiration Filipino people is independence with restrictions resulting from conditions which its government agree with America when latter agree to officially recognize the former. No conclusion reached; another conference to-morrow evening. I understand insurgent wish qualified independence under United States protection."

To this dispatch no reply has been received.

Upon another matter, viz, the sending of regular troops here, the purpose of which has been greatly misconstrued, you may communicate the following dispatch, received on December 7:

"General OTIS, Manila:

"The Secretary of War directs you to send Astor Battery home on first returning transport. If you can spare volunteers to take first returning ships send them in the order of their arrival. Six regular regiments are in course of preparation to report to you. It is probable that part of them will sail direct from this coast by way of canal, thus to give you good transport available for service from San Francisco."

The meaning and intent of this dispatch was to return the volunteer troops as soon as possible and to send part back in the transports then in the harbor if practicable. The Astor Battery was sent home, but I declined to send the other volunteer troops at that time, as the revolutionary government had assumed a threatening attitude, notwithstanding our great desire for peace and harmony. The orders from Washington have not changed. I still have authority to return the volunteer troops, so that they can be discharged in the United States, by any returning vessel available, but I decline to return them as long as we are threatened with active hostilities. Under the articles of capitulation still prevailing with Spain, as there has been no ratification as yet of a treaty, I am obliged to hold Manila and its defenses, but no hostile act will be inaugurated by the United States troops.

Very sincerely, yours,

E. S. OTIS,
Major-General, United States Volunteers,
United States Military Governor in the Philippines.

REPORT ON THE JOINT COMMISSION.

MANILA, P. I., January 29, 1899.

The sixth conference of the commissioners appointed by Major-General Otis and General Aguinaldo was held at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the above date. The commissioners first engaged in the reading, correction, and amending of the proceedings of the previous meetings, which were definitely approved and signed by both commissioners, each one retaining two copies, one in English and the other one in Spanish, of the proceedings of each session.

The commissioners of General Otis presented to those of General Aguinaldo a letter directed by the first-named general to Brigadier-General Hughes, which was read there and a copy of which is herein attached, marked "Exhibit A."

The commissioners for General Aguinaldo then presented to the commission for General Otis the alleged constitution of the Philippine republic claimed by them to have been formed and also a list of the delegates to an alleged Congress which framed said alleged constitution. Said documents are marked exhibits "B" and "C," respectively.

Thereupon the commissioners for General Otis and the commissioners for General Aguinaldo having fully set out their views during the various conferences, it was announced that there was no further business for the present to be transacted by the commissioners of the respective parties.

The commissioners of General Aguinaldo stated afterwards that they were pleased to acknowledge the great courtesy with which the commissioners for General Otis had treated them and to which they had endeavored to correspond, although feeling sorry that the several conferences held had not given the positive result which they desired and which would satisfy the just and legitimate aspirations of the country.

To which the commissioners of General Otis responded that they were reciprocally indebted to the commissioners of General Aguinaldo for a courteous, calm, and deliberate discussion of the various matters raised in their conferences; that they believed the true interests of the Philippine people were in substantial harmony with American interests in these islands, and that recognition of this fact and substantial agreement could not be long delayed.

The joint commission thereupon adjourned to meet on Tuesday, January 31, 1899, at 4 o'clock p. m.

R. P. HUYLUS.
JAMES HJUNLT.*
ELLELERRSODE.*
FLORENTINO TORRES.
A. FLORES.
MANUEL ARGÜELLES.

Certifico: que los documentos en Inglés transcritos que anteceden son copia fiel de sus originales que obran en los Archivos de ésta Secretaria.

Tarlac, 20 de Agosto de 1899.
El Secretario de Negocios Extrangeros,
[Seal of the secretariat.] FELIPE BUENCAMINO.

[Translation.]

I certify that the foregoing documents are true copies of the originals, which are kept in the archives of this secretariat.

Tarlac, August 20, 1899.
[SEAL.] FELIPE BUENCAMINO,
Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I now desire to read a document which I asked to have printed a little while ago. These are a series of questions propounded by myself and replied to by Sixto Lopez.

Q. Will you please state from what part of the Philippines you come and what relations you have had with other Filipinos or with those claiming authority under the native government?

LOPEZ. I am a Tagal from Balayan, in the province of Batangas, Luzon. I have been working for the last twelve years in order to secure the independence of the Philippines. I am in no sense an official representative of any governmental or military body, nor do I belong to the Hongkong or any other junta. But as a Filipino, knowing the desires of the Filipinos, I claim the right, as a private citizen, to state what those desires are and to tell what I know about my fellow-countrymen.

Q. Were you ever engaged in affairs of government, local or general; and if so, in what capacity?

LOPEZ. Under the Spanish régime I held the position of Cabeza de Barangay in Balayan during the years 1880 to 1892.

Q. Have you been in any of the islands other than Luzon?

*Signature very indistinct; impossible to decipher.

LOPEZ. Yes. I traveled in one of our family's ships for twenty months throughout Luzon, the Visayan Islands, and Mindoro, visiting Cavite, Bataan, Laguna, Rizal, Bulucan, Dagupan in Pangasinan, Zambales, Batangas, Tayabas, South Camarinis, Albay, Sorsogon, Mindoro, Marinduque, Burias, Masbate, Ticao, Zamar, and Leyte. I have also lived, at various times, for nearly eight years in Manila, in which students gather from all parts of the archipelago.

Q. You claim to have a knowledge of your countrymen's political desires, as well as their attainments and abilities?

LOPEZ. Yes. I have followed the fortunes of my country for a longer period and with closer attention than probably any American has done. I have what few Americans possess, namely, a personal knowledge of the conditions that existed prior to the insurrection against Spain, and long prior to the time when any American gave attention to our country. My knowledge has not been gained by a few months' residence in the islands during a period of war, when most of the normal conditions have been upset, and when an accurate estimate of the real facts is difficult, if not impossible, to obtain. I have noted the changes that have ensued during the last ten years, and have been in touch with, or have watched the career of, prominent Filipinos who have taken part in public affairs during the last fifteen years. I mention these facts, not with the idea of boasting, but in order to show that I have probably as extensive a knowledge of Philippine affairs as many of those who claim to speak for the Filipinos. But I do not claim to have as great a knowledge of my countrymen as the many able Filipinos whose testimony could easily be obtained, and ought to be obtained by the Senate committee, before any legislation is inflicted upon the Philippines.

Thus, if the evidence of statesmen is required, call Mabini, Barretto, Raimundo, Melliza Ocampo, Guerrero, Ponce, Paterno, Potenciano Hilario, Dr. José Luna, Aguilera, Loizaga, Palma, Osmena, Gracio Gonzaga (civil governor of Cagayan Province), Climaco (governor of Cebu), Nosario Constantino, Aguedo Velarde, Dr. Albert, Arsenio C. Herrera, Diego Gloria, or Dr. Justo Lucban.

If the evidence of soldiers is sought for, summon Aguinaldo, Malvar, Trias, Sandico, Lucban, Louis Luna, Alijandrino, Concepcion, Villa, Cailles, Delgado (governor of Iloilo), Ambrocio Flores (governor of Rizal Province), Canon Bolaños, Paciano Rizal (brother of the martyr), Pablo Tecson, Ison (banished to Guam), Mascardo, Hermandez, Tino, Dancel, Riego, Katigbak, or Kalaw.

Merchants and business men would be represented by Gonzalo Tuason, Telesforo Chuidian, Mariano Linghap, Crisanto Lichanco, Pedro P. Roxas, Vincente D. Fernandez, Luis R. Yangco, Rama, Bernardo Solis, Pascual Ledesma, or Genato.

While professional men would be adequately represented by Dr. Rigidor, Chief Justice Arellano, Dr. Apacible, Dr. Ilustre, Judge Aranlio, Dr. Boldomiro Roxas, Dr. Llorente, Solicitor-General Aranetta, Dr. Ortigas, or Dr. Miciano.

If it be the desire to know the real situation without hedging or trimming to suit any particular policy, the aspirations of the Filipinos and their ability to maintain those aspirations, and what the Filipinos think of the campaign of forcible subjugation and its effects upon the relations of the two peoples call some of these men that I have mentioned. It is true that they are opposed to the present policy, but broad-minded statesmen will not think less of them or seek to discredit their evidence on matters of fact simply because they are opponents.

Q. What proportion of the inhabitants of the archipelago may be considered a homogeneous race?

LOPEZ. The proportion can be stated approximately only. Assuming that the population of the entire archipelago is 10,000,000, I should say that 90 to 95 per cent are of common racial descent and religion, and are as homogeneous a people as the Japanese. These are the inhabitants of Luzon, Masbate, the Visayan Islands, and the coasts of Mindanao, who speak several dialects which are based upon, and are very similar to, Tagal, which in turn is allied to the older Malayan language. The Moros of central Mindanao and the Sulu Islands are of slightly different racial origin, and practice the Mohammedan religion. These people, together with the Negritos, the Igorrotes, and a few unimportant mountain tribelets, number probably less than half a million.

Q. How do the Filipinos, assuming that they were granted independence, propose to deal with the Moros and the condition of slavery among them?

LOPEZ. The problem of how to deal justly, under one central government with a people whose institutions are contrary to the principles of personal liberty, would be less difficult for the Filipinos than for America. The Moros have signified their willingness to join with the Filipinos in forming a government, and the union would be more natural than a union with America, for, with the exception of religion and polygamy and slavery, there is much in common between the two peoples. Our constitution provided for complete personal liberty and the purity of the marriage relation, and it would be our duty to uphold those principles. But we do not propose to force our ideals upon the Moros. If they join with us and accept our constitution, we shall be glad; but if for a time they preferred to maintain a semi-independent relation, with some form of federal union for defensive and commercial purposes, we should be satisfied. Some such arrangement as this would meet their case until moral suasion induced them to recognize the civilized world's conception of the purity of marriage, and to admit that "man has no right of property in man."

Q. Would chaos, bloodshed, and disorder follow the withdrawal of American control?

LOPEZ. That is a gratuitous assumption, for which there is not the slightest warrant in fact or in history. It is not a reason, but an excuse for a continuance of foreign rule. As to the liability of tribal disputes and internecine wars, I have no hesitation in saying that the danger exists no more in the Philippines than in America or in any other country. The so-called "tribes" in the Philippines are no more tribes in the sense of being distinctive aggregations of people than are the people of the 45 States of America. There is not even that healthy rivalry which ought to exist, such as is found among the States of this Union.

All statements or prophecies as to what may occur in the future are of small value compared with what has really happened in the past. If such tribal animosity had existed it would have shown itself during the Spanish régime, for Spain's control was too feeble to have prevented its manifestation. But during the entire three hundred years of Spanish occupation there has not been a single case of tribal war or feud. The only two instances of Filipinos fighting against each other (and these were not tribal conflicts) were when Magellan, for his own purpose, induced part of the Visayan inhabitants of the island of Negros to fight against the fellow Visayans in the same island; and when the Spanish, and later the Americans, for the same purpose as Magellan, induced the Macabebes (who are not a tribe, but simply the inhabitants of the town of Macabebe in Pampange) to fight against their fellow-Pampangos and the Filipinos generally.

Furthermore, during the period of about ten months when our Government held control of practically the entire Christianized population (for all that time the American forces were confined to a small area around Manila) there was no single instance of tribal discord or anarchy. On the contrary, good order existed, and life and property were respected and their security maintained. Our family and the people of our province testify that never within known history had there been such peace, contentment, and good government as then existed under Filipino rule. This was not because our government was well organized, for that was impossible in so short a time, but because the Filipinos are naturally a law-abiding people, which counts for more in stable government than the most perfect and powerful organization.

There is also the groundless fear that if internal control were given to the Filipinos those of our fellow-countrymen who had supported American authority would be liable to maltreatment and disability. But we know that a large proportion of those who openly support American authority do so only to avoid suspicion. There may be some who, for reasons of their own, have taken up a position in favor of American occupation, temporary or permanent, and there are a few also who have fought against their fellow-countrymen. The treatment by our people of such men as Buencamino, Dr. Pardo de Tavera, Legarda, and the Macabebes,—who, notwithstanding the fact that they opposed the Filipinos in the insurrection against Spain, were given positions under Aguinaldo's government,—is in itself sufficient to dispel any fear of future ill treatment. But at the proper time satisfactory undertakings could be given of protection and of amnesty to those who have taken up arms against our people for all acts done under American authority. America would always have the right and the means to enforce such contracts, and thus ample protection would be given to these men.

From my knowledge of my fellow-countrymen, I have no hesitation in saying that the whole alleged difficulty is purely fanciful, and to inflict us, on that account, with a period of American occupation—half American, half Filipino, with responsibility thus resting on two stools—would be unwise and impracticable. Under such a régime the best Filipinos would hold aloof and the government would be crowded with office seekers and self-seekers whose interest would be confined chiefly to what they could make. If we should be placed even for a time under a half-and-half government, where responsibility could be pushed off from one set of shoulders onto the other, and vice versa, the result will be deplorable to our people and ruinous to our country. Whereas if we are granted control of our own internal affairs, and a full measure of responsibility, the best and most public-spirited Filipinos would come to the front with a genuine desire to serve the public interest and to secure the success of our government. This, of course, would not prevent America from adopting any legitimate means of safeguarding her interests and obligations or of exacting guaranties for the due fulfillment of all agreements or treaties. But it would save our government from being exploited by the worst class of both Americans and Filipinos.

Q. Who are the Macabebes?

LOPEZ. There is a great deal of misapprehension about these Macabebes. It is believed by many persons in America that the Macabebes are a separate and distinct "tribe of savages" who have an undying hatred to the Filipinos. Whereas the Macabebes are simply the inhabitants of the town of Macabebe, in the province of Pampanga. But it is wrong to suppose that all the people of this town are opposed to the Filipinos. Furthermore, there are, as Governor Taft admits in his evidence before the Senate committee, other Filipinos fighting with the American forces, all of whom are classed as Macabebes. Now, all of these men are the traitors—the Benedict Arnolds—and the offscourings of criminality and wickedness. That such men should have been permitted to march under your sacred Stars and Stripes is one of the marvels of the twentieth century. That such men as these should have been used by America, of all nations, to crush liberty out of a struggling republic is unquestionably the eighth wonder of the world.

It has been said that the man who criticises his country when it is actually at war comes perilously near being a traitor. What shall be said, then, of the man who joins the invader and fights against his fellow-countrymen? And what shall be said of the invader who employs and consorts with a regiment of Benedict Arnolds to fight under the symbol of light of law?

Q. What did the Filipinos hope to obtain by fighting?

LOPEZ. I have always held that war was not the means by which to obtain our rights. I have sent many dispatches to the Philippines urging Aguinaldo and the Hongkong junta to cease hostilities and to endeavor to secure our rights by peaceable means. I knew that a war between an Anglo-Saxon and an Eastern race was sure to degenerate into a wholesale massacre. But I believed, and most of the Filipinos believed and still believe, that although they could never hope for one moment to defeat America they would have been able to defend themselves if the war had been confined to civilized methods. This belief has had some justification, for the Filipinos were not defeated until it was found to be necessary, and declared to be necessary, to adopt the methods of Weyler, with reconcentration and torture and wholesale slaughter. Let me say here that although I abhor torture and cruelty, I do not lay the blame upon those who were set a task which admittedly they could not accomplish without resorting to such methods.

The desire for national liberty is so strong with the Filipinos that nothing but cruelty and wholesale slaughter could give a temporary victory to those who wished to crush it out. And in the future nothing but absolute despotism will hold that desire in check. The war has at least served one good purpose of giving unquestionable proof that the Filipinos are thoroughly in earnest about independence, and the torture and horror necessary to end that war have made the proof absolute. Let me also point out that wholesale slaughter alone has not been sufficient to secure a victory over the Filipinos. It has been necessary to pass laws under the civil government to take away the most elementary rights of a civil community. It has been necessary to imprison noncombatants and neutrals who, it was and is declared, were to be protected; to seize and confiscate the property of the wealthy who were once declared to be in favor of American rule; and to bring about a reign of political terror under which no Filipino dared even to whisper the desires of his heart; and to cause that ill-starred island of the Pacific to be still the prison of honest men. If anyone doubts these statements or fondly imagines that the tortures and imprisonments have been "greatly exaggerated" it is easy to obtain convincing evidence.

Call the Filipinos to testify; there are thousands of them now in prison who can tell the story. Examine the laws made by the so-called civil government and inquire why it was necessary to make such laws. Do not rest satisfied with the conscience-easing assumption that the reports have been exaggerated. Ask Capt. George Curry, chief of the Manila police, to testify. He is a fearless, honest man, without an ax to grind or a personal interest to serve, and will tell the truth, even if it cause parties or administrations to fall. And if the Filipinos have committed atrocities, let that be investigated also. The Filipinos do not shrink from inquiry or desire to have those of their people shielded who have committed punishable offenses.

Q. What proportion of the natives of the archipelago possess a liberal education?

LOPEZ. The whole question of education in the Philippines has become confused by want of definition of the terms used to describe it. The word "educated" has often been applied indiscriminately to the highly educated and to the merely literate. "Literacy" has been applied without distinction to those who can read and write Spanish, as well as to those who can read and write the native language. By thus using indefinite terms apparently different conclusions have been reached by those who have given evidence on the subject.

Let me therefore state what I understand to be the facts, and then compare those facts with the evidence of others:

The number of those who can read and write in the Spanish or the native language and have an elementary knowledge of arithmetic, etc., has been estimated by various authorities at from 60 to 80 per cent of the Christian population. My own belief is that probably 75 per cent can so read and write. Of these about 90 per cent can speak Spanish; some, of course, indifferently, but many as though it were their mother tongue.

Of course until a proper census has been taken it is difficult to accurately determine the extent of literacy in the Philippines. The difficulty presses with equal force upon friend and opponent, but there are other sources of information by which a fairly accurate idea of the truth is obtainable.

Prior to the Spanish occupation elementary education was probably more extensive in the Philippines than in any other European country at that time. Dr. de Morga, the first governor-general, in his book published in 1609, tells how the Filipinos had a written language of their own, and declares that "there were very few who could not write well and correctly." Notwithstanding Spanish indifference and monastic opposition, the Filipinos have opened elementary schools in almost every village. They have also founded high schools and university colleges throughout the archipelago, and a university, two large normal schools for male and female teachers, and five large schools for women in Manila. In a recent article in the Outlook, Mr. Atkinson, superintendent of public instruction in the Philippines, states that "Since the coming of the Americans private schools have sprung up like mushrooms." Mr. Atkinson is wrong in implying that these schools are a result of American activity, for in most cases they formerly existed but had been closed by the war. The Schurman Commission declares that "A system of free schools for the people has been an important element in every Philippine programme of reforms."

General MacArthur holds that "this almost universal aspiration for education should appeal strongly to American sympathy." The president of the Royal University of Manila, one of the bitterest opponents of the Filipinos, had to admit in his evidence before the Schurman Commission that, all things considered, "education in this country is very far advanced, both in the primary grades and in the university grades;" whilst in an article submitted to the Senate committee when Governor Taft was giving his evidence and stated by Mr. Root to have been "compiled in the Division of Insular Affairs from standard works and the records of the Department, supplemented by the personal experience of returning officers," it is stated that "most of them (Filipinos), both men and women, can read and write."

In view of all this testimony taken, please observe, from non-Filipino sources, it is inconceivable that the Filipinos are as ignorant and illiterate as some persons declare them to be.

It is also difficult to say what proportion of Filipinos have received a liberal education. It would be just as difficult for an American to say what proportion of Americans have received a liberal education, for statistics are not easily obtainable, and the term liberal education has no definite meaning. But the president of the Royal University of Manila declares that education in the university grades is very far advanced. The Schurman Commission reports that the educated Filipinos are far more numerous than is generally supposed, that they are not confined to Manila, but are found throughout the archipelago, and that they are "the equals of the men one meets in similar vocations—law, medicine, business, etc.—in Europe or America."

Q. Are the Filipinos, in your opinion, fit for self-government?

LOPEZ. The Filipinos have all the qualities essential to fit a people for self-government. According to the Schurman Commission, the Filipinos "are naturally and normally peaceful, docile, and deferential to constituted authority," possessing "admirable domestic and personal virtues." They are naturally a law-abiding people, as was shown by their peaceful demeanor during the above-mentioned period, when there was no well-organized authority. But above all, not only is education fairly well advanced, and this under the most adverse circumstances, but the desire for education is, and always has been, uppermost in the minds of the people. Furthermore, the Filipinos have had a bitter lesson in the ill effects of bad government. They know by personal experience, which is worth more than mere theorizing, the disasters that corruption and dishonesty bring. And, like the Americans of 1776, they know what it is to have liberty denied them, and that is the most important factor of all, for only those who have suffered the loss of liberty know how to appreciate it, and to extend it to others.

The war, too, has served to weld the people into a unity which does not usually exist in communities which for long years have been at peace. It has also served to sift the wheat from the chaff, to determine who could be trusted with the responsibility of the public welfare and who were merely self-seekers, ready to desert the standard at the first breath of calamity or to sell their country to a higher bidder.

Our educated and intelligent men would naturally be at the head of affairs, as is the case in every other country. And with a law-abiding people, with education ever increasing under our own guidance, with prosperity increasing under the new incentives to industry, which would go to swell our own national wealth, I have no fear but that self-government would be such a success in our country as to put to shame and confusion all those who have been theorizing about our inability and their superiority.

Q. Are the Filipinos in favor of independence, immediate or ultimate?

LOPEZ. Yes; the Filipinos, both rich and poor, great and small, educated and uneducated, are in favor of independence—immediate, if they can get it, or ultimate if it is not to be granted immediately. They are universally opposed to foreign rule. First, because they have suffered from it in the past, and secondly, because they have a God-implanted desire to see their country subject to no power save that of their Creator. Whatever is done in the Philippines, let it it not be based on the false assumption that the Filipinos desire American rule. I have repeatedly urged the taking of a plebiscite on this issue in, say, ten of the most representative cities and towns in the archipelago, and I hereby challenge those who contend that the Filipinos are in favor of foreign rule to put their contention to this test. The Filipinos would be prepared to pay the incidental expenses of such a plebiscite, and to abide by the result.

Q. Would the Filipinos object to the sale of public lands and franchises under present circumstances?

LOPEZ. Most assuredly they would. Until the Filipinos have at least internal control of their own affairs it would be a most improper thing to alienate the public lands or to dispose of franchises to foreign capitalists. Under present conditions, when the Filipinos are impoverished by six years of war, when their crops and towns have been destroyed, and when their working animals have almost all died of rinderpest, it would be most unfair to the Filipinos to compel them to compete with foreign capitalists in the purchase of public lands and franchises. The foreign capitalist could, in every case, outbid the native, and the result would be another and a worse Ireland, with everything of value in the hands of absentees, whose only interest in the country would be what profits could be squeezed out of it. Besides, the greatest danger to the independence of the Philippines would come from vested interests. We might be as fit for self-government as any country in the world, but the fact would not appeal to the foreign investor.

The theory that trade follows the flag is not a tenth part as true as the fact that the flag is made to follow capital. The capitalist naturally wants his own country to have control wherever his capital is invested. He wants maximum profits with minimum risks, and the interests of the native inhabitants are always made subservient to the interests of capital. Furthermore, the sale of such franchises during a period of American control would be a sale by Americans to Americans of property which belonged by moral right at least to Filipinos. It would be in the interests of Americans and not necessarily in the interests of Filipinos, yet if the effects were politically detrimental it would be the Filipinos and not the Americans who would have to suffer. It may be urged that the sale would be to the interests of both parties, but if that be true, then let the sale of lands and franchises be in the hands of the Filipinos, who are the real owners and who would have to bear the consequences of any mistake.

Q. Does the Roman Catholic Church exercise a baneful influence upon the Filipinos?

LOPEZ. No. The church is not, and never has been, a baneful influence, but its influence for good is very materially impaired by the monks, who are a disgrace to the church and to the country from whence they came. To imagine that because the Filipinos are opposed to the monks they are therefore opposed to the church is altogether a mistake. The Filipinos are stanch Catholics, and the influence of the church itself can not be other than a good and blessed influence if administered by good men. But the present tacit support which is being given to these monks, who have outraged the teaching and everything that is beautiful in a church which it is their sacred duty to maintain, is a menace to its existence and a placing of the claims or property before those of religion in the Philippines. At present we have only one church and one creed, and whatever supposed defects the Protestant may see in that church, we should still prefer to have unity and peace, rather than a multiplicity of sects. We can not therefore look with favor upon missionary enterprise within our Christian communities. And if the Moros are to be turned from the error of their ways, it would be better that the change should be brought about by the Catholic Church in the Philippines.

Q. Would a form of government modeled on that of the United States be suitable for the Philippines?

LOPEZ. The constitution of Malolos was similar in many respects to the United States Constitution, and would have suited our people, subject to such modification as time and experience made necessary. It is, however, certain that the republican would be the only suitable form of government for the Philippines. We have had enough of despotism and government without the consent of the people. Representative government is the only real safeguard to individual liberty and purity of administration. But a constitutional convention—such as was convened in Cuba—could determine the actual details and make provision for all local conditions and necessities.

Q. What would be the effect of a definite promise of independence upon the present conditions in the islands?

LOPEZ. The effect would be to change the conditions in a manner in which they will never be changed without such a promise or intimation. At present there is discontent, distrust, and the bitter feeling of having been crushed by superior force. The peace thus achieved is not a permanent peace, nor is it a condition on which to found a stable government. It seems hardly necessary to tell Americans that stable government can rest only upon the recognized rights of the people. The promise of independence would have a similar effect, and would bring about a similar result to that secured in Cuba. Instead of the present soreness of heart there would be universal rejoicing throughout the islands. Instead of distrust there would be mutual confidence and a desire to join with America in the establishment of a government of the people. Instead of enforced submission there would be a sense of liberty and a sentiment of kindness and good will. The people would have what they most desire and would be willing to accord to America every concession or demand that she could reasonably make. A mantle of forgetfulness would be thrown over the misunderstandings and horrors of the past, and our country would begin a new era of peace and prosperity, hand in hand with its deliverer and friend.

The principles of democracy would be established in the ancient East, where despotism has reigned for thousands of years, and the bread of self-denial thus cast upon the waters would return in 10,000 ships to the giver of peace and liberty. The old bell of Independence Hall could be tolled once more, and Filipinos would come from afar to visit Concord and Lexington, and as the tears of gladness coursed down their cheeks they would know that the seeds of liberty thus planted had borne rich fruit after more than a hundred years.

Q. Will you please state what you know about the native language used in the Philippines?

LOPEZ. A number of erroneous statements have been made, and as a result the most absurd misapprehension exists in reference to the language of the Filipinos. It has been said, for instance, that there exists "a bewildering multiplicity of languages which are mutually unintelligible." All such statements have been made by men who do not speak or write or know anything about the native dialects, and whose knowledge of Spanish even is somewhat rudimentary. One can therefore judge how well these men are qualified to speak on such matters.

The facts of the case are as follows, and I challenge disproof of the statements which I am about to make.

Among the Christianized inhabitants of the Philippines—which comprise 90 to 95 per cent of the entire population—seven dialects are spoken, namely: Tagal (or Tagalog), Visayan, Bicol, Ilocano, Pangasinan, Pampangan, and Cagayan. The latter six of these dialects are modifications of and are very similar to the Tagal; so that in reality there is one language from which have arisen six dialects. In these statements I have the support of no less an authority than Prof. Aristide Marre, who is a member of the Royal Institute of The Hague and of the Society of Batavia, associate of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Turin, president of the Malay and Madagascar Section of the Twentieth Congress of Orientalists, held at Rome, 1899. In his "Tagalog Grammar" Professor Marre says: "There are no important differences in the various idioms spoken in the Philippines. The Visayan, Bicol, Ilocano, Pampagan, and Pangasinan have, as a common type, the Tagalog language, which is understood in the whole extent of that vast archipelago."

The difference between Tagal and Visayan or Bicol, etc., is less than the difference between Spanish and Portuguese or Italian.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the Senator to be reading the statement of another person; but I should like to know at this point whether the Senator thinks that a Spaniard can communicate with an Italian.

Mr. CARMACK. I am not much of a scholar, and my friend from Indiana is. I hope he will not expose my ignorance by talking to me about foreign languages. I am one of the common people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. One of the common people, yes.

Mr. CARMACK. And have not the culture that pertains to men of his class. So I hope he will not get up here and expose my ignorance before the galleries just out of pure meanness.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is the first time I have ever heard a Senator refer to the galleries.

Mr. CARMACK. I knew when the Senator arose to ask me the question that it was for the benefit of the galleries.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no; I was quite serious. If this is meant to mean anything, it is meant to mean that the Filipinos are a united people; it is attempted to be shown that they have a similar language; and the comparison is seriously made between the Spanish and Italian languages. I was asking the Senator, who was introducing this remarkable statement, whether he thought a Spaniard could communicate with an Italian or if a Viscayan could communicate with a Tagalog. If that be not the case, that part of the argument falls. I will state to the Senator that that inquiry is addressed to him and to the Senate, and not to the galleries.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I will simply have to make the confession that I do not speak Spanish, Portuguese, or Italian. I am not scholar enough to answer the question of the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will simply say, in the way of pleasantry between the Senator and myself, that I have been delighted to find the Senator on two occasions, when we were engaged in pleasant controversy, making two confessions, both of which I think were good for his soul.

Mr. CARMACK. I will simply say here that I am quoting from a witness who, I am inclined think, is a better educated man than either one of us.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is he a Filipino?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes; it is Lopez.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That explains the Senator's belief.

Mr. CARMACK. Probably so; and the fact that the Senator is a Republican explains his.

Lopez continues:

Although I do not know Italian, I have found little difficulty in conversing with Italians.

He is a Spaniard; that is, he speaks Spanish. His education was in Spanish. He says, "Although I do not know Italian, I have found little difficulty in conversing with Italians."

Mr. President, while, as I said, I am not educated in these languages, I do know that Spanish and Portuguese are very closely akin, and that Spanish and Italian are closely akin. They are both offshoots of the Latin, one of the Romance languages.

Mr. TILLMAN. They are all Latin in their origin.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Since we have a contribution on the question of linguistic science from the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I should like to ask whether he thinks a Spaniard can speak Latin?

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I will say in answer that a man's capacity to speak a language is born with him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, because they are both derived from the Latin language, the inference is that the Spaniard can speak Italian and the Italian can speak Spanish.

Mr. CARMACK. It seems that anybody can speak what he pleases in my time. This testimony continues:

Indeed, at the Vatican, where I was mistaken for a Japanese, I was complimented on "being able to speak Italian so well." And similarly, when I visited the Visayan Islands and the Bicol provinces I found less difficulty in conversing with the inhabitants of those parts. A Tagal can become conversant with any of these dialects in a fortnight, and vice versa.

The following table of familiar words will serve to show the similarity and identity of Tagal and Visayan, which is the most widely spoken dialect in the islands:

English.	Tagal.	Visayan.
Yes	Oo (pronounced ō)	Oo (pronounced ō).
No	Hindi	Hindi.
I	Ako	Ako.
My, mine	Akin	Akun.
Me	Ako or akin	Ako or akun.
We	Kita	Kita.
Sun	Araw	Adlaw.
Moon	Buan	Bulan.
Star	Bituin	Bituon.
River	Ilog	Ilong.
Water	Tubig	Tubig.
Town	Bayan	Banua.
Eat	Kain	Kaun.
Count	Bilang	Bilang.
Divide	Bahagi	Bahagi.
Help	Tolong	Tolong.
Sweet	Matamis	Matamis.
Wet	Basa	Basa.
Dear (costly)	Mahal	Mahal.
Thanks	Salamat	Salamat.
How are you?	Kamusta kayo?	Kamusta kamu?
One	Isa	Isa.
Two	Dalua	Dua.
Three	Tatlo	Tulo.
Four	Apat	Apat.
Five	Lima	Lima.
Six	Anin	Anun.
Seven	Pito	Pito.
Eight	Walo	Walo.
Nine	Siam	Siam.
Ten	Sampo	Pulo.

The grammatical construction of all the dialects is the same as that of the Tagal.

The difference in dialect between these several provincial peoples would not form a difficulty to independent self-government, first, because the difference is so slight, and, secondly, because Spanish is the official language of our country and is spoken by the educated people of all the provinces. Other countries do not find that a difference in language even forms a difficulty to self-government. In Austria three distinct languages are spoken; in Switzerland two languages and a local patois; in Belgium, two languages, and in Germany high and low German. Until recently there were Scottish Highlanders speaking Gaelic, and in Wales at the present time there are parts where the English language is unknown except to the educated few. In almost every self-governing country in the world two or more languages or dialects are spoken by the people; and the only difficulty in regard to language in any of these countries has been due to jealousy as to which language should become the official one. This difficulty has already been settled in the Philippines. But if language were a difficulty under Filipino rule it would be a difficulty under any other rule and a special difficulty under American rule, due to the necessity of introducing English, which would form a third language in our country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN (to Mr. CARMACK). Ask that it be printed.

Mr. LODGE. Unless some other Senator desires to go on, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CARMACK. I desire to go on. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator from Tennessee insist that I shall not move an executive session until he has ceased to desire to go on? [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to strike out the last section of the majority bill.

Mr. CARMACK (to Mr. PATTERSON). And shall I speak to that motion?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; speak to that.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that we have the House rule here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it has never been recognized by the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the same rule which he recognized when I was upon the floor would be in order now. That was that the Senator could speak to another amendment provided no one else wished to speak.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Senator going on or having the document printed or doing anything he likes with it. I have no objection in the world——

Mr. MONEY. I will take the floor.

Mr. LODGE. But I thought if no Senator desired to speak——

Mr. MONEY. I do.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator could have it printed and the Senate could go into executive session, as several Senators have asked me to move such a session. But, of course, that motion is withdrawn if any Senator desires to speak.

Mr. CARMACK. I asked to have it printed and objection was made.

Mr. MONEY. I will take the floor on the pending amendment, and as I can not see to read, I will request the Senator from Tennessee to read the paper for my benefit.

Mr. BERRY. We have never done that here.

Mr. MONEY. There is objection raised to having it read through a substitute. I can not read it myself or I would do it. I do not see why some Democrat does not take the floor and read it himself.

Mr. PATTERSON. Or ask the Secretary to read it.

Mr. MONEY. Or ask the Secretary to read it. As the Senator from Indiana interjected his remarks about languages to a degree which prevented the Senator from Tennessee finishing his remarks, it seems to me there should be no objection to this request. Some one in an indirect way should get before the Senate what the Senator from Tennessee desires to place there. But I will withdraw the request. [To Mr. BERRY.] Do you want to have an executive session?

Mr. BERRY. I do not. The only reason I made the aside remark to the Senator from Mississippi was this: Since I have been in the Senate it has never been the practice, after a unanimous agreement had been made, to move to strike out the last word in order to extend the time. I objected this morning to the Senator from Ohio doing that thing, when he made the proposition, and for that reason only. If the Senator desires to do it, I make no objection.

Mr. MONEY. I made no amendment whatever. I have spoken to the pending amendment. I did not move to strike out anything. My intention was to have the article read which was begun by the Senator from Tennessee, and as I can not see to read it myself I asked to have him read it for me. But I would just as soon have the Secretary read it. I will therefore ask that the Secretary read it in my time, as I am unable to do it.

I wish to say frankly that I do not desire to hear it, but as there was an interruption which seemed to me without any adequate cause, I want to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Can you give any evidence of friendly relations existing between the peoples speaking these several dialects?

LOPEZ. I can only give such facts as occur to me, for I never dreamt that it would be necessary to prove the nonexistence of the alleged tribal animosities that have been charged against the Filipinos. The idea of these provincial or tribal animosities never arose with the Filipinos or with anyone else prior to the conflict with America. It was born in the imagination of those in search of difficulties to Filipino self-government. It is the duty, therefore, of those who make the assertion to furnish the proof, and it is certain that if proof had existed it would have been brought forth long ago, instead of the bald assertions of those who do not understand our people and who have reached conclusions in no way warranted by facts.

Nevertheless, though it is not my duty to prove a negative, I can mention some things which go to prove that friendly relations do indeed exist between the several provincial peoples.

When our government was first established emissaries came from almost all the provinces and islands, declaring their support on behalf of those from whom they came. Even the Moros of Mindanao and the Igorrotes, who had never been subdued by Spain, acclaimed Aguinaldo and were prepared to recognize his government. Our asamblea or representative chamber, under the new constitution, comprised representatives from all the provinces. Of these 110 representatives about one-third were elected by the people with the electoral machinery then existing for the election of petty governors, etc. About two-thirds were first appointed by Aguinaldo and his advisers to represent the then unorganized provinces, and many of these were subsequently elected by the people, the remainder holding office by tacit consent until elections could be held. From these facts have arisen the charge that Aguinaldo appointed all the representatives.

The interrelations of the people of the several provincial districts show that no tribal enmity existed. In the schools and colleges, especially in Manila, there are representatives of all the provincial peoples, but it would be impossible to tell which were which. And although there is considerable rivalry among the students, this rivalry is not between Visayans, Tagals, Bicols, etc.

There are several institutions in the Philippines, the benefits of which are not confined to the people of any one province. For example, there was an educational institution (purely Filipino) granting scholarships which enabled the winners to study in Europe. These scholarships were open to all Filipinos in the archipelago.

In Japan the official representative of the so-called "Tagalog despotism" was an Ilocano. In Madrid all the Filipinos resident there formed themselves into a committee and worked unitedly for independence. The president of this committee was a Bicol, the vice-president was an Ilocano, the secretary a Visayan, the treasurer a Tagal, and the remainder of the committee were Visayans, Bicols, Tagals, Pangasinans, and Ilocanos. In Barcelona, in Paris, and in London the same diversity of province and the same unanimity of purpose obtained. All this represented the universal attitude of the Filipinos in a state of peace. In war, where there was every opportunity for tribal enmity to show itself had it existed, there was the same unity of purpose, the same interrelations between the several provincial peoples. The generals, officers, and rank and file who supported Aguinaldo were representative of all the provinces. There were Visayan generals commanding Tagal troops, and vice versa. There were composite regiments officered by Bicols, Ilocanos, Tagals, Visayans, etc.

Lucban is a Bicol who commanded the Visayans in Samar, and included in his command were Tagals and Bicols. Delgado is a Visayan who commanded Tagals and Visayans in Panay. Ricarte, an Ilocano, was in command of Tagals in Nueva Ecija. Tino, a Tagal, commanded Ilocanos in Ilocos. Concepcion, a Visayan from Iloilo, was on Aguinaldo's personal staff. Villamore and several of his relatives, all Ilocanos, were officers under Aguinaldo. Ison and Dicon, Pampangans, and Leyba, a Tagal-Spanish mestizo, commanded composite regiments of Tagals, Pangasinans, Bicols, Pampangans, and Cagayans. Even the Igorrotes were fighting in many regiments under Aguinaldo. There has been fighting against America in every part of the archipelago with the exception of the Sulu Islands, and the fight has been for the independence of the Philippines. Can it be believed that those who were fighting for a single end against a common foe were split up by racial animosities?

As a matter of fact, with the exception of the Moros of central Mindanao and the Sulus and the Igorrotes and Negritos and a few relatively unimportant mountain peoples, the Filipinos are a homogeneous, Christianized people, practicing the morals and arts of civilization, united in the desire for independence and for the purpose of maintaining a stable independent government.

Q. How do the Filipinos regard the introduction of English and the use of English as a teaching medium in elementary schools?

LOPEZ. I should be the last to say anything against a useful reform, and especially against anything in the way of education, but I can not help thinking that to make English a teaching medium in elementary and infant schools in a country where not a tenth per cent of the people speak English is a waste of energy and calculated to retard the progress of education in the islands. Undoubtedly there are many Filipinos who, for commercial purposes, desire to learn English. There are also many students who desire to become acquainted with the avenues of English literature. If English were taught in the high schools and colleges, these desires would be sufficiently provided for. But to teach English to children who may never make use of it, or to make English the medium for teaching children who speak an entirely different language in their homes and in every walk of life is as valueless as it is futile. Why does America try to "rush" things in this way? Perhaps in the distant future, by teaching English in the high schools and colleges, and by commercial intercourse with English-speaking peoples, the Filipinos might accept English as the official or universal language of the country. But to force English upon infants with the object of Anglicizing the Filipinos is about as wise as it would be to teach a school of parrots to say the Lord's prayer with the object of Christianizing the whole feathered tribe.

It may look well on paper to send a thousand teachers to the "benighted" Filipinos. At a time when so much evil is being done it may be well to do (apparently) a little good. But I want to tell the American people that we have thousands of capable teachers in the Philippines who would undertake to work at less than half the cost of the American teachers now being sent to the islands, that we have had for the last thirty or forty years two large normal schools in Manila for the training of male and female teachers, and that we are capable of conducting our own educational affairs. Undoubtedly we are anxious to learn from America and other countries all that is new and good in their educational systems, but this should be done by sending out Filipino teachers and by securing the services of a few experts from these countries to teach in the normal schools. This would be more effective and more economical than employing thousands of teachers, who naturally will not go to the Philippines unless they are paid abnormal salaries.

Q. Can you give any facts about the land tax imposed by the civil government in the Philippines?

LOPEZ. The land tax has not been made operative in the provinces under military rule, and so, as my own province of Batangas has been under military rule, I can not speak from experience in reference to this tax. But I have conversed with a number of Filipinos who are strongly opposed to the imposition of the land tax under present circumstances. The contention is that to impose a land tax at a time when the country has been impoverished by rinderpest and when the land is producing practically nothing would be to compel the Filipinos to sell their lands to speculators—presumably foreign speculators. I have already said that to alienate the public lands under present conditions would be most unfair and unjust. But if to this is added the forced sale of private property the injustice will be tenfold. At present our own plantations in Batangas are being worked to a very limited extent with the object of trying to keep them in order, and they are not paying their way. Before any substantial return can be expected working animals will have to be provided, and crops planted and harvested. If we had no other sources of income, and if we were, nevertheless, compelled to pay a land tax, the hardship would be very great. I believe that the agricultural industry in Batangas will not be restored to its former condition for another ten years, and what is true of Batangas is true of most of the other provinces of the islands. It will therefore be necessary to give every encouragement and aid to agriculture, which is the chief industry of the islands, and I can not conceive that the imposition of a land tax, under conditions of abnormal impoverishment, would aid agriculture. It is certain that the Filipinos would not impose a land tax under present circumstances if they were governing themselves.

In the Schurman Commission's proclamation of three years ago, which was intended to induce the Filipinos to cease resistance to American authority, it was stated that "with such a prudent and honest fiscal administration it is believed that the needs of the government will in a short time become compatible with a considerable reduction in taxation." This was a prophecy that we never believed, and we have found ample justification for our skepticism. At the present time taxation is heavier than it ever was in Spanish days, and the cost of living, in the towns and cities at least, has been increased about fourfold. These are facts that ought to be remembered when the statement is made that the Filipinos are now earning double what they earned in former times.

It can not be denied that the present government is a very costly one especially in view of the fact that only the most urgent public necessities are being provided for. What the taxation would be if provision were being made for all public requirements and for necessary public works it is appalling to contemplate. Undoubtedly such heavy taxation under the present impoverished conditions can only result in a transfer of the real estate of the Filipinos into the hands of foreign speculators.

Will not Congress come to our aid in these matters? America has the power and has used the power to deny us our own government with the consent of our own people. Power entails a corresponding responsibility, and those who use the power ought to see to it that a great injustice shall not be done to those whose power of self-protection has been taken away.

SIXTO LOPEZ.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MONEY. The Secretary has not completed the reading of the paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has completed the reading of the first paper sent up by the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. I sent up another one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MONEY. I am sorry that I could not finish these remarks this evening. I shall try to get them in to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3360) for the promotion of First Lieut. Joseph M. Simms, Revenue-Cutter Service, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. ADAMSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution, tendering the thanks of Congress to Hon. John Hay for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of William McKinley, late President of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2276) to fix the time of holding the circuit and district court for the southern district of West Virginia;

A bill (S. 2510) extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Oacana, S. Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 357) for the relief of Levi Maxted;

A bill (H. R. 2901) to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams;

A bill (H. R. 7319) granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Anthony;

A bill (H. R. 8752) authorizing the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz County, Ariz., to issue bonds for the erection of a court-house and jail for said county;

A bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriation for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 91) providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

RECALL OF BILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration. It is for the recall from the House of Representatives of certain bills which are included in the omnibus claims bill.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bills (S. 20) for the relief of Joseph W. Carmack, (S. 21) for the relief of John S. Neet, jr., and (S. 22) for the relief of Ezra S. Havens.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. John Hay for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of William McKinley, late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1902, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of William McKinley be requested to communicate to Mr. Hay the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who was chairman of the committee on the part of the Senate, I suppose would like to have the concurrent resolution referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the Senate had passed such a resolution and sent it to the House.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate passed one long ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. How did this get here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a House concurrent resolution which has just been laid before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not the resolution passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I suggest that it be printed and lie on the table until the Senator from Ohio comes in, as he had charge of the matter, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. If no one desires to continue on the Philippine government bill, as it is now nearly 5 o'clock, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 3, 1902, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 2, 1902.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

George W. Bibee, of Sheridan, Oreg., to be receiver of public moneys at Oregon City, Oreg., vice William Galloway, term expired.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY—GENERAL OFFICERS.

To be brigadier-generals.

Col. Samuel M. Whiteside, Tenth Cavalry, May 29, 1902, vice Harbach, retired from active service.

Col. Sumner H. Lincoln, Tenth Infantry, May 29, 1902, vice Spurgin, retired from active service.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Infantry Arm.

Lieut. Col. William Quinton, Fourteenth Infantry, to be colonel, May 28, 1902, vice Harbach, First Infantry, appointed brigadier-general, United States Army.

Lieut. Col. Jesse C. Chance, Twenty-sixth Infantry, to be colonel, May 28, 1902, vice Spurgin, Fourth Infantry, appointed brigadier-general, United States Army.

Maj. Ralph W. Hoyt, Tenth Infantry, to be lieutenant-colonel, May 28, 1902, vice Quinton, Fourteenth Infantry, promoted.

Maj. George A. Cornish, Fifteenth Infantry, to be lieutenant-colonel, May 28, 1902, vice Chance, Twenty-sixth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Charles H. Bonesteel, Twenty-seventh Infantry, to be major (subject to examination required by law), May 9, 1902, vice James, Twenty-third Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Lyman W. V. Kennon, Sixth Infantry, to be major (subject to examination required by law), May 28, 1902, vice Hoyt, Tenth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. William Lassiter, Sixteenth Infantry, to be major, May 28, 1902, vice Cornish, Fifteenth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Charles G. Morton, Sixth Infantry, to be major (subject to examination required by law), May 28, 1902, vice McCammon, Sixth Infantry, retired from active service.

First Lieut. George F. Baltzell, Fifth Infantry, to be captain, May 9, 1902, vice Bonesteel, Twenty-seventh Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Edgar T. Conley, Twenty-first Infantry, to be captain, May 26, 1902, vice Russell, Eighth Infantry, deceased.

First Lieut. Edgar T. Collins, Eighth Infantry, to be captain, May 28, 1902, vice Kennon, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Seaborn G. Chiles, Eleventh Infantry, to be captain, May 28, 1902, vice Lassiter, Sixteenth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Lyman M. Welch, Twentieth Infantry, to be captain, May 28, 1902, vice Morton, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Walter J. Manion, to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 11th day of April, 1902, vice Lieut. John L. Purcell, promoted.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) George E. Gelm, to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 11th day of April, 1902, vice Lieut. Robert F. Lopez, promoted.

Asst. Surg. Francis M. Furlong, to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy from the 16th day of September, 1901, to fill a vacancy existing in that grade on that date.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 19, 1902.

POSTMASTERS.

Conrey M. Ingman, to be postmaster at Marysville, in the county of Union and State of Ohio.

Allan Graham, jr., to be postmaster at Ottawa, in the county of Putnam and State of Ohio.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 2, 1902.

CONSUL.

Alfred K. Moe, of New Jersey, to be consul of the United States at Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION AND CONSUL-GENERAL.

Edward L. Adams, of New York, to be secretary of legation and consul-general of the United States at Stockholm, Sweden, to take effect June 2, 1902.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

Charles Richardson, of Massachusetts, to be third secretary of the embassy of the United States at Berlin, Germany, from July 1, 1902.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Frank W. Tucker, of Arkansas, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Arkansas.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

Artillery Corps.

Charles F. Donnohue, of Indiana, late first lieutenant, One hundred and fifty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

William B. Brister, of New Jersey, late first lieutenant, Fourth New Jersey Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Roger O. Mason, of Delaware, late second lieutenant, First Delaware Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Harrie F. Reed, of New York, late second lieutenant, Two hundred and first New York Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Walter C. Baker, of Pennsylvania, late sergeant, Company C, Sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Charles A. Clark, of Illinois, late sergeant, Company I, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Avery J. Cooper, of Oregon, late private, Company L, Second Oregon Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Robert Davis, of New York, late first sergeant, Company F, Two hundred and first New York Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Frank Geere, of Wyoming, late sergeant, Company G, First Wyoming Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Natt F. Jamieson, of Vermont, late sergeant, Company L, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers (now private, Company C, First Battalion of Engineers, United States Army), September 23, 1901.

Richard I. McKenney, of Minnesota, late private, Company C, Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Nelson E. Margetts, of Utah, late corporal, Battery A, Utah Volunteer Artillery, September 23, 1901.

John V. Spring, of Texas, late sergeant, Company I, First Texas Volunteer Cavalry, September 23, 1901.

Sergt. Emmett R. Harris, Troop L, Eighth Cavalry, United States Army, to be second lieutenant, September 23, 1901.

Frederick E. Gignoux, of Nevada, late first lieutenant, Eleventh Cavalry, United States Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Guy B. G. Hanna, of Iowa, late sergeant, Company D, Porto Rico Regiment, United States Volunteer Infantry, September 23, 1901.

George P. Hawes, jr., of Virginia, late private, Company A, First Cavalry, United States Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Andrew W. Jackman, of Illinois, late private, Company F, First Illinois Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

George L. Wertenbaker, of Virginia, late sergeant, Company D, Third Virginia Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Richard P. Winslow, of Mississippi, late corporal, Company F, First Tennessee Volunteers, September 23, 1901.

Cavalry Arm.

Hamilton Bowie, of Alabama, late first lieutenant, Fortieth Infantry, United States Volunteers, February 2, 1901.

Thomas E. Cathro, of Indiana, late corporal, Company D, One hundred and fifty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, February 2, 1901.

Infantry Arm.

Algernon E. Sartoris, of the District of Columbia, May 22, 1902.

Charles A. Hunt, of New Hampshire, May 22, 1902.

Leo B. Dannemiller, of Ohio, May 22, 1902.

Harry Griffin Leckie, of Virginia, May 22, 1902.

Claire R. Bennett, of Washington, May 22, 1902.

Charles Wells, of Pennsylvania, May 22, 1902.

Robert O. Ragsdale, of Tennessee, late first lieutenant, Thirty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, February 2, 1901.

Augustus F. Dannemiller, of Ohio, late private, Company I, Eighth Ohio Volunteers, February 2, 1901.

MEDICAL OFFICER OF VOLUNTEERS.

Francis J. Bailey, of Oregon, contract surgeon, United States Army, to be assistant surgeon, United States Volunteers, with the rank of captain, May 26, 1902.

POSTMASTERS.

James P. Fitch, to be postmaster at Morgantown, in the county of Monongalia and State of West Virginia.

John P. S. Fenstermacher, to be postmaster at Kutztown, in the county of Berks and State of Pennsylvania.

William Goodin, to be postmaster at Farmington, in the county of Van Buren and State of Iowa.

Giles P. Lecrenier, to be postmaster at Moodus, in the county of Middlesex and State of Connecticut.

John W. Wilson, to be postmaster at Del Norte, in the county of Rio Grande and State of Colorado.

Harry L. Bras, to be postmaster at Mitchell, in the county of Davison and State of South Dakota.

Joseph A. West, to be postmaster at Provincetown, in the county of Barnstable and State of Massachusetts.

Thomas A. Hills, to be postmaster at Leominster, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts.

Alexander Y. Jones, to be postmaster at Renovo, in the county of Clinton and State of Pennsylvania.

Rueben K. Sawyer, to be postmaster at Wellesley, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts.

Olive L. Stauffer, to be postmaster at Gladbrook, in the county of Tama and State of Iowa.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 2, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 29, 1902, was read, corrected, and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. I also present the statement of the House managers.

A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio presents the statement of the conferees on the part of the House on the river and harbor bill, which will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with the rule.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will state it.

Mr. BURTON. The conference report is quite voluminous and it has already been printed in the RECORD of the Senate proceedings of Wednesday, May 28. I desire to ask if it is necessary to repeat the printing of that report, which is exactly the same, except the order in which the names of the conferees are signed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the printing of a report in the RECORD under the proceedings of either House is a compliance with the rule recently adopted.

Mr. BURTON. I further give notice that I shall seek to bring up this report for action to-morrow.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. Referring to the conference report on the river and harbor bill, I suppose that unless the House takes some action the report will be printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he obtain unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair held that the report having been printed in the proceedings of the Senate, that would be a compliance with the new rule. The gentleman from Ohio has filed the statement for the purpose of having that printed.

Mr. PAYNE. The statement and not the report.

The SPEAKER. Not the report, that having been printed already.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the changes proposed by Senate amendments, 207 in number, and of the effect of the action recommended in the conference report published in the RECORD of the Senate proceedings for May 28, 1902, on each of said amendments, namely:

(In amendments describing items for expenditure upon projects not in the House bill the word "appropriation" is used. In case of increase of House items the word "addition" is employed.)

No. 1: Breakwater, Mount Desert to Porcupine Island, Maine: Appropriation of $25,000; Senate recedes.

No. 2: Bucksport Harbor, Maine: Appropriation of $20,000; House concurs.

No. 3: Little Harbor, New Hampshire: Appropriation of $13,000; House concurs.

No. 4: Hendersons Point, near navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: Appropriation of $749,000, cash and authorization; Senate recedes.

No. 5: Sandy Bay Harbor of Refuge, Massachusetts: Verbal amendment; House concurs.

No. 6: Harbor at Manchester, Mass.: Appropriation of $5,000; House concurs.

No. 7: Cohasset, Mass.: Addition of $11,000; Senate recedes.

No. 8: Scituate, Mass.: Appropriation of $15,000; Senate recedes.

No. 9: Plymouth and Provincetown, Mass.: Deduction of $5,700; House concurs.

No. 10: Provision for certain examinations; Senate recedes, provided for elsewhere.

No. 11: Point Judith Harbor of Refuge, Rhode Island: Appropriation of $100,000; House concurs, with verbal amendment.

No. 12: Harbors of refuge at Block Island and Great Salt Pond, Rhode Island, and entrance to Point Judith Pond: Addition of $15,000 for Block Island; House concurs. Appropriation of $60,000 for Great Salt Pond; House concurs in $50,000. Appropriation of $15,000 for Point Judith Pond; Senate recedes. Provision for surveys retained as in House bill.

No. 13: Milford, Conn.: Addition of $10,000; House concurs.

Nos. 14 to 18, inclusive: Mattituck, N. Y.: Appropriation of $10,000; Senate recedes. Appropriation of $10,000 for Sag Harbor; House concurs, with an amendment grouping Sag Harbor with other harbors on Long Island.

No. 19: Buttermilk Channel, New York Harbor: Appropriation of $200,000; House concurs in $90,000.

No. 20: Raritan Bay, New Jersey: Verbal amendment; House concurs.

No. 21: Curtis Bay, Baltimore Harbor, Maryland: Appropriation of $50,000 cash and $146,000 authorization; House concurs.

No. 22: Harbors and rivers on the easterly shore of Chesapeake Bay, Maryland: Addition of $14,000; House concurs.

No. 23: Cape Charles City, Va.: Addition of $10,000; House concurs.

No. 24: Charleston Harbor, South Carolina: Authorization for the expenditure of unappropriated balance of amount heretofore authorized for former project; House concurs.

No. 25: Inland waterway between Charleston, S. C., and opposite McClellanville: Appropriation of $50,000; House concurs.

No. 26: Brunswick Harbor, Georgia: Addition of $25,000; House concurs.

No. 27: Brunswick Harbor, Georgia: Formal amendment; House concurs.

No. 28: Biscayne Bay, Florida: Appropriation of $150,000 cash, also $466,667 authorization; House concurs in $50,000 cash and $250,000 authorization.

No. 29: Key West, Fla.: Formal amendment; House concurs.

No. 30: Pensacola, Fla.: Designation of width of channel; House concurs.

No. 31. Pensacola, Fla.: Addition of $25,000; Senate recedes.

No. 32: Mobile Bay, Alabama; Authorization to expend $50,000 upon channel through outer bar; House concurs.

No. 33: Biloxi, Miss.: Appropriation of $10,000; House concurs.

No. 34: Calcasieu River, Louisiana: Addition of $40,000; House concurs.

Nos. 35 and 36: Sabine Pass, Texas and Louisiana: Change in phraseology; House concurs in No. 35 with an amendment, and Senate recedes from No. 36.

No. 37: Brazos River Channel and Dock Company: Addition of $400,000; Senate recedes.

No. 38: Galveston Harbor: Provision for turning basin; Senate recedes.

Nos. 39 and 40: Galveston Harbor: Authorization for change in plan of south jetty; House concurs.

No. 41: Galveston Channel; inner harbor: Appropriation of $200,000 cash, also $400,000 authorization; House concurs in $100,000 cash and $200,000 authorization, with change in designation of the improvement to be made.

No. 42: Amendment directing examination of property of the United States; House concurs.

No. 43: Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio: Addition of $35,000; House concurs.

No. 44: Cleveland Harbor, Ohio: Verbal amendment; substitution of another paragraph.

No. 45: Huron, Ohio: Addition of $15,000; House concurs.

No. 46: Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan: Additional authorization of $135,000; House concurs in $100,000.

No. 47: Marquette, Mich.: Authorization for expenditure of part of appropriation on Presque Isle breakwater; House concurs.

Nos. 48 and 49: Menominee Harbor and River, Michigan and Wisconsin: Addition of $30,000 and recognition of new project; House concurs.

No. 50: Ahnapee, Port Washington, and Oconto, Wis.: Addition of $5,000; House concurs, with the addition of a formal amendment.

No. 51: Sheboygan, Wis.: Formal amendment; House concurs.
Nos. 52 and 53: Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis.: Deduction of $75,000, and omission of provision for a dredge; House concurs.
No. 54: Warroad Harbor and River, Minnesota: Appropriation of $45,000; House concurs.
No. 55: Oakland Harbor, California: Addition of $868,208 authorization; House concurs in $150,000.
No. 56: Coos Bay and Harbor, Oregon: Addition of $65,000; House concurs in $40,000.
No. 57: Tacoma Harbor, Washington: Addition of $222,000 authorization; House concurs in $100,000.
No. 58: Tacoma Harbor, Washington: Deposition of dredged material. Verbal amendment; House concurs with an amendment.
No. 59: New Whatcom Harbor, Washington: Addition of $25,000; Senate recedes, but this amount is added to the appropriation for Puget Sound and tributary waters.
Nos. 60 and 61: Waterway connecting Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington; change in phraseology; Senate recedes from No. 60, and House concurs in No. 61 with an amendment.
No. 62: San Luis d'Apra, Island of Guam: Appropriation of $150,000; Senate recedes.
Nos. 63 and 64: Kennebec River, Maine. Addition of $20,000 cash appropriation and $41,000 authorization; House concurs.
No. 65: Connecticut River: Survey between Hartford and Holyoke; formal amendment; House concurs with an amendment.
No. 66: Hudson River: Authority to change line of channel near city of Troy; House concurs with amendment. Provision for a survey with reference to gorges and freshets, given as an amendment, numbered 186, is inserted here.
No. 67: Wappinger Creek, New York: Appropriation of $1,500; House concurs.
No. 68: Rancocas River, New Jersey: Appropriation of $3,000; House concurs.
No. 69: Mantua Creek, New Jersey: Addition of $15,000; House concurs in $10,000.
No. 70. Allegheny River at Natrona, Pa.: Appropriation and authorization of $289,622; Senate recedes.
No. 71: Susquehanna River, Maryland: Verbal change; House concurs.
No. 72: Elk River, Maryland: Appropriation of $16,665; House concurs.
No. 73: Anacostia River, District of Columbia: Appropriation of $150,000; House concurs, with an amendment limiting the scope of the improvement.
No. 74: Pagan River, Virginia: Appropriation of $10,870; House concurs.
No. 75: James River, Virginia: Addition of $50,000, and extension of locality in which improvement is to be made; House concurs, with an amendment.
No. 76: Appomattox River, Virginia: Addition of $25,000 cash appropriation and $175,000 authorization, with recognition of new project; House concurs.
No. 77: Cape Fear River, North Carolina: Appropriation of $150,000; House concurs in $50,000, with an amendment.
No. 78: Fishing Creek, North Carolina: Appropriation of $2,000; House concurs.
No. 79: Survey Norfolk Harbor, Virginia, to Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina; Formal nonconcurrence, but provision for examination and survey is made as a substitute for amendment numbered 187 in the list of examinations and surveys.
No. 80: Ashley River, South Carolina: Appropriation of $25,000; Senate recedes.
No. 81: Oconee River, Georgia: Addition of $10,000; House concurs.
No. 82: Coosa River, Georgia and Alabama, locks and dams: Appropriation of $75,000 cash and $199,845 authorization; Senate recedes.
Nos. 83 and 84: Coosa River, Georgia and Alabama: Addition of $10,000, of which $5,000 is added for the Oostenaula and Coosawattee Rivers; House concurs.
No. 85: Appropriation for inside water route between Savannah and Fernandina, $15,000; House concurs, with amendments making more general the locality in which the improvement is to be made.
No. 86: Indian River, Florida, between Goat Creek and Jupiter Inlet: Appropriation of $2,000; House concurs.
No. 87: Escambia and Conecuh rivers, Florida: Designation of locality of improvement; House concurs, with amendment.
Nos. 88 and 89: Water hyacinths: Appropriation made available for the State of Texas as well as for the States of Florida and Louisiana.
No. 90: Withlacoochee River, Florida, from mouth to loading pool in the Gulf of Mexico: Appropriation of $25,000; House concurs in $15,000.
No. 91: St. Johns River, Florida: Formal amendment; House concurs.
No. 92: Tombigbee River, between Demopolis, Ala., and Columbus, Miss.: Provision for survey; Senate recedes.
No. 93: Pascagoula River, Mississippi: Appropriation of $50,000 cash and authorization for $250,000; House concurs in $25,000 cash and $125,000 authorization.
No. 94: Sabine and Neches rivers, Texas: Addition of $46,000; House concurs.
No. 96: Galveston Ship Channel and Buffalo Bayou, Texas; House concurs, with amendment retaining and making more clear the provision as contained in the House provision.
No. 97: Trinity River, Texas: Addition of $25,000 cash and $150,000 authorization; House concurs in cash addition of $25,000 and $25,000 authorization.
No. 98: Change in amount authorized to be expended for canal in West Galveston Bay; Senate recedes.
No. 99: Upper White River, Arkansas: Addition of $200,000; House concurs.
No. 100: Levee, Walnut Bend, Ark.: Appropriation of $30,000; House concurs.
No. 101: Tennessee River: Diverting a portion of appropriation for maintenance between Chattanooga and Riverton: Senate recedes.
No. 102: Cumberland River, Tennessee: Addition of $95,000; House concurs, with an amendment providing for completion of Lock and Dam No. 1.
No. 103: Cumberland River: Lease for water power may be granted to highest responsible bidder, whether owner of abutting land or not; House concurs.
Nos. 104 and 105: Big Sandy River and Tug and Levisa forks of the same, West Virginia and Kentucky: Appropriation of $250,000 cash and authorization of $250,000; House concurs in $175,000 cash and $175,000 authorization.
No. 106: Ohio River: Provision for improvement of levee at Shawneetown, Ill.; concurred in, provided improvement is required in the interest of navigation.
No. 107: Ohio River: Site for lock and dam No. 7; appropriation of $23,000; House concurs.
No. 108: Ohio River: Appropriation for site for lock and dam No. 19, $95,000; House concurs.
No. 109: Saginaw River and tributary streams: Increase of diversion for Flint, Shiawassee, and Bad rivers from $5,000 to $12,500; House concurs.
No. 110: Flint River, Michigan: Added to streams tributary to Saginaw River appropriated for; House concurs, with amendment.
Nos. 111 and 112: Michigan-Lake Superior Power Company, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.: Changes in paragraphing; House concurs.
No. 113: International Commission: Great Lakes and tributary waters: Reduction of amount for compensation and expenses from $25,000 to $20,000; House concurs.
No. 114: Verbal amendment; House concurs.
No. 115: Grand River, Michigan: Addition of $25,000 and change of limit of improvement; House concurs.
No. 116: Strikes out provision for Miller Bay, Wisconsin; Senate recedes.
No. 117: Minnesota River, Minnesota: Conditional appropriation for removal of the dam at the mouth of, $2,500; House concurs.
No. 118: Fox River, Illinois: Affirmative expression that permission grants no release from liability for damages; House concurs.
Nos. 119, 120, and 121: Change taking from the Mississippi River Commission survey of certain portions of Illinois and other rivers; Senate recedes.
Nos. 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, and 128: Addition of $670,000 cash and $150,000 authorization for the Mississippi River below Cairo, separating amounts for harbors on the Lower Mississippi from general appropriation for the river; House concurs in adoption of $250,000 cash and $150,000 authorization, amounts for harbors to be taken from general appropriation.
No. 125: Sawyers Bend, in the harbor of St. Louis, Mississippi River: Diversion of $50,000 for work already done; House concurs, provided the improvement was required in the interest of navigation.
Nos. 129 and 130: Missouri River: Addition of $280,000, and includes the words "continuing improvement" in describing the work to be done; House concurs in addition of $195,000 and in designation of work.
No. 131: Dams and reservoirs at Lake Kampeska and other places, South Dakota: Appropriation of $52,500; Senate recedes.
No. 132: Stockton and Mormon channels, Stockton, Cal.: Appropriation of $50,000 cash and $175,000 authorization; House concurs.
No. 133: Columbia River at the Cascades, Oregon: Provision for the removal of rock: House concurs.
No. 134: Addition of $15,000 for Upper Columbia and Snake rivers, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, to be used in the portion of the Snake above Lewiston; House concurs.
No. 135: Snake River: Change in provision designating more specifically the locality in which work is to be done.
No. 136: Columbia River at The Dalles, Oregon and Washington: Makes available unexpended balance appropriated for ship railway and authorizes appropriation of $400,000; House concurs, except authorization is diminished to $100,000, with an amendment providing that a further survey shall be made by a board of engineers.
No. 137: Columbia River at Vancouver, Wash.: Appropriation of $18,000; House concurs in $2,000.
No. 138: Siuslaw River, Oregon: Addition of $9,000; House concurs.
No. 139: Willapa River and Harbor, Washington: Amendment in spelling; House concurs.
Nos. 140, 141, and 142: Puget Sound and tributary waters, Washington: Addition of $5,000 by Senate, which amount is added to the sum to be available for removing the log jam in Nooksack River and authorizing the cutting of a new channel; House concurs and authorizes a transfer of $15,000 added for New Whatcom Harbor, Washington.
No. 143: Okanogan and Pend Oreille rivers, Washington: Addition by Senate of $12,500; House concurs.
No. 144: Preliminary examinations, surveys, etc.: Addition by Senate of $50,000; House concurs.
No. 145: International Commission: Verbal amendment; House concurs.
No. 146: Repeal of provision for certain projects: Cypress Bayou, Texas and Louisiana; omitted from repealed items; House concurs.
No. 147: Striking out option to punish by imprisonment in certain cases; Senate recedes.
No. 148: Provision for 1,000 copies of an index to reports of the Chief of Engineers; House concurs.
No. 149: Option to the Secretary of War to require bonds from a surety company; Senate recedes.
No. 150: Authorizing the Secretary of War to extend time for completion of bridges without action by Congress; Senate recedes.
No. 151: Verbal change in numbers; Senate recedes.
The following pertain to provisions for examinations and surveys:
No. 152: Fish River: Designation of locality; House concurs.
No. 153: Belvedere Harbor in San Francisco Bay, California; House concurs.
No. 154: Smyrna River, Delaware; Senate recedes.
No. 155: Wilmington, Del.; Senate recedes.
No. 156: Entrance to St. Andrews Bay, Florida; House coucurs.
No. 157: Volusia Bar and Lake Monroe Bar, Florida; Senate recedes.
No. 158: Naples Harbor, Florida; Senate recedes.
No. 159: Key West, Fla.; House concurs.
No. 160: Skiddaway Narrows, Georgia: Change in phraseology; Senate recedes.
No. 161: Club and Plantation Creeks; House concurs.
No. 162: Harbor at Mound City, Ill., on Ohio River; House concurs, with amendment limiting examination to interests of navigation.
No. 163: Ohio River from Mound City, Ill., to Cairo, Ill.; same as last.
No. 164: Chicago River, Illinois: For turning basins; Senate recedes.
No. 165: East bank Mississippi River, near Quincy, Ill.; House concurs.
No. 166: Ohio River: Dam below the mouth of Salt River, Indiana, and Kentucky; Senate recedes.
No. 167: Sand Island, in the Ohio River, Indiana and Kentucky; House concurs.
No. 168: Pond River, Kentucky; House concurs.
No. 169: Tennants Harbor, Maine; Senate recedes.
No. 170: Cape Small Harbor, Maine: House concurs.
No. 171: Channel from Patapsco River to Sparrows Point, Md.; House concurs.
No. 172: Minnesota River, Minnesota: Striking out provision; House concurs.
Nos. 173, 174, and 175: Continuing survey, Divers Lakes, Minnesota and South Dakota: House concurs.
No. 176: Tallahatchie River, Mississippi: From Batesville to Coldwater; Senate recedes.
No. 177: Lock and dam in Yazoo River, near the mouth of the Big Sunflower, Mississippi; Senate recedes.
No. 178: Cassidy Bayou; Senate recedes.
No. 179: Horn Island Pass, Mississippi; House concurs.
No. 180: Hampton River and Harbor, New Hampshire; House concurs.
No. 181: Colorado River, Nevada; House concurs, with an amendment.
No. 182: Raritan Bay, New Jersey; House concurs.
No. 183: Wappinger Creek, New York; Senate recedes.
No. 184: Fire Island, New York; Senate recedes.
No. 185: Harlem Kills, New York; House concurs.
No. 186: Hudson River; Senate recedes, this provision being placed with the general item for Hudson River.
No. 187: Swanquarter Bay, North Carolina; Provision stricken out and provision for inland waterway inserted in its place.
No. 188: Bennetts Creek, North Carolina; Senate recedes.

No. 189: Shallotte River, North Carolina; Senate recedes.
No. 190: Cape Lookout, Oregon; Senate recedes.
No. 191: Yamhill River, Oregon; House concurs.
No. 192: Yaquina River, Oregon: Extension of proposed improvement to Elk City; House concurs.
No. 193: Willamette River, between Portland and Oregon City, Oreg.; House concurs.
No. 194: Willamette River, near Albany, Oreg.; Senate recedes.
No. 195: Tillamook Bar, Oregon; Senate recedes.
No. 196: Pittsburg Harbor, Pennsylvania; Senate recedes.
No. 197: Georgetown Harbor, South Carolina; House concurs.
No. 198: Walls Cut, South Carolina; Senate recedes.
No. 199: Hiwassee River, Tennessee; House concurs, with an amendment correcting the spelling.
No. 200: Sabine River, Texas; House concurs, with an amendment defining the limits of examination.
Nos. 201 and 202: Columbia River, Washington; Senate recedes.
No. 203: Snohomish River, Washington; House concurs.
No. 204: Puyallup and other waterways, Tacoma, Wash.; House concurs.
No. 205: Canal between Puget Sound and Grays Harbor; Senate recedes.
No. 206: Harbor at South Milwaukee, Wis.; Change in the phraseology; Senate recedes.
No. 207: Miller Bay, Wisconsin; Senate recedes.

SUMMARY OF AMOUNTS APPROPRIATED AND AUTHORIZED.

Amount appropriated for the next fiscal year in the House bill was	$24,014,107
Amounts authorized to be expended after June 30	36,674,160
Total as passed by the House	60,688,267
From this amount the Senate made deductions aggregating	80,700
Balance	60,607,567
Additions by the Senate amendments aggregate	9,554,872
Total as passed by the Senate	70,162,439
Senate additions concurred in	$4,500,035
Senate additions nonconcurred in	5,054,837
Deduct additions nonconcurred in	5,054,837
Balance total appropriations and authorizations agreed upon	65,107,602
Divided as follows:
Amount appropriated for the next fiscal year	$26,521,442
Amount authorized to be expended after June 30, 1903	38,586,160
	65,107,602

T. E. BURTON,
WALTER REEVES,
RUFUS E. LESTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

LEAVE TO PRINT ON SUBSIDIARY COINAGE BILL.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of several members I ask general leave to print on the bill (H. R. 12704) to increase the subsidiary coinage, for five days from to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that members have leave for five days to print remarks upon House bill 12704, to increase the subsidiary coinage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALLEGED MILITARY SUPPLY CAMP IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That, if compatible with the interests of the public service, the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House of Representatives full information as to the investigation, by his order, recently made as to the alleged maintenance of a British military supply camp in the State of Louisiana, where military supplies, including horses and mules, are collected and shipped directly to the the theater of war in South Africa in violation of the laws of neutrality; and to send to the House of Representatives the report of the officer charged with such investigation, and all documents, letters, and papers on file bearing upon the matter."

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution No. 272, calling upon the President for full information as to the investigation made upon his order as to the alleged military supply camp in the State of Louisiana, having duly considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it be amended by the adoption of a substitute, as follows, and passed:

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the interests of the public service, full information of the investigation recently made by his order as to the alleged supply camp in the State of Louisiana for the collection and shipment to South Africa of military supplies, including horses and mules."

Mr. HITT. The committee recommends the adoption of the substitute, and it covers the ground of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

THANKS TO SECRETARY HAY.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of House concurrent resolution 39, and pass it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules and pass the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 39.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. John Hay for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of William McKinley, late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1902, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of William McKinley be requested to communicate to Mr. Hay the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Tennessee, who will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 52.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much time is allotted?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes on a side?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Missouri the control of the time for this side.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire only to state that by invitation of the House and of the Senate, by concurrent resolution, Mr. Hay was invited to appear before the joint assembly of the two Houses and deliver a eulogy upon the life and character of William McKinley. The date was fixed and the two Houses assembled, and in the presence of the two Houses, the diplomatic corps, the Supreme Court, the President and his Cabinet Mr. Hay delivered the address. Following that occurrence a resolution, written in the exact language of the resolutions adopted by the House and the Senate on each of the former occasions of the similar death of a President—the death of President Lincoln and the death of President Garfield—thanking Mr. Hay for his effort and asking him for a copy for publication, was introduced, went to the committee, and was reported with the unanimous report of the committee favoring its adoption. Objection having been made to its passage in the House, it comes here now simply for the action of Congress, acting upon a concurrent resolution, thanking Mr. Hay for his address and complimenting him by asking him for a copy of the same. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I recognize very clearly that to oppose the passage of this resolution subjects the man who does it to the adverse criticism of every editor in the United States who is also a postmaster and every editor in the United States who hopes to become a postmaster or to secure a Federal office. I am equally clear that in opposing it I am doing right. I do not intend in what I am about to say to be drawn into making any intemperate remarks. It so happened when the "McKinley committee" met that I was the only member of the committee who suggested any opposition to the vote of thanks to Mr. Secretary Hay for the speech he delivered on the 27th day of February in this House on the life and character of William McKinley; whereupon the papers that I have named jumped on me. Well, now, their jumping on me in no way modifies my conception of public duty and in no degree deters me from discharging it according to my lights. Consequently I am going to express my opinion about it fully, although rather unexpectedly, as I had no idea that the resolution would be called up to-day.

When Mr. Hay rose to deliver his address he had such an audience as only two other men in the entire history of the Government ever had—George Bancroft, when he eulogized Abraham Lincoln, and James G. Blaine, when he pronounced his eulogium upon James A. Garfield—and all of us hope that a similar occasion will never again arise—the death of a President by the hand of an assassin. For the purposes of the orator, Colonel Hay faced the most magnificent audience that can be assembled on this continent—the President and his Cabinet, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps, a prince of the German Empire and his suite, both Houses of Congress, the head of the Army, high officers of the Navy, every distinguished man in official and unofficial life betwixt the two oceans that could be crowded into this historic Hall, together with much of the beauty of the land. It was such an audience as any orator would be fortunate to address—such an audience as no orator now living will most probably address.

In many respects I entertain a high opinion and a high regard for the Secretary of State. He is a most amiable and accomplished gentleman. From his youth up he has been associated with intellectual giants. For four years he was brought into daily contact with Abraham Lincoln, which in itself was a liberal education. Colonel Hay is himself a great historic personage. He has achieved eminence in two difficult fields of human endeavor—in literature and in diplomacy. He has been ambassador to the Court of St. James and is now Secretary of State. In literature he has performed the unusual feat of winning fame in both poetry and prose, such fame as any man in the House or Senate or in the whole country might envy. His Life of Abraham Lincoln, or "Abraham Lincoln: A History," as it is entitled, is one of the standard historic works of the world; but in my judgment Mr. Hay's literary reputation will rest more on his Pike County Ballads than upon anything else he has written. Of their class they are about as good as anything else in the English language. As an earnest of what he might have done in poetry, they lead one to regret that their author deserted the muses for the stormy world of politics.

Colonel Hay is a seasoned hand at literature. His address was carefully wrought out in his library. What he said was not uttered in the "heat of debate" or on the spur of the moment. Consequently he can not complain if he is held strictly to the highest standard of good taste.

Not only did he have a distinguished and brilliant audience, but he had an audience entirely sympathetic in its character. I undertake to say, without the fear of successful contradiction, that there was not a man or woman within these walls that day, not a man or woman in his greater audience—the entire American people—who would have objected to any word of eulogy he could have pronounced on William McKinley, however extravagant, for McKinley was a popular favorite—popular with all citizens, all classes, and all parties, in a most extraordinary degree.

The objection I make to thanking the Secretary of State is not that he delivered a eulogy upon Mr. McKinley—that was what he was invited to do, what he was expected to do, what we all, myself included, wanted him to do—but because with that unequaled opportunity, with that magnificent audience, he departed from the language of eulogy and, disregarding the proprieties, injected into his memorial address a high-class Republican stump speech.

King Solomon says: "There is a time for every purpose under heaven." Of course there is a time for Republican speeches. I do not object to Republican speeches at the proper time. Strange as it may seem, I rather enjoy hearing a good Republican stump speech, although I doubt exceedingly if any Republican in these later days can make a stump speech without committing blasphemy. If the gentleman from Ohio, General GROSVENOR, for instance, will make a Republican speech, I will hear him gladly. If my distinguished friend from Indiana, Mr. LANDIS, will do it, I will be delighted to hear him. If divers men on that side of the Chamber would rise and make Republican speeches in this House, I would listen with pleasure. I have heard my friend from Pittsburg, the Hon. JOHN DALZELL, make Republican speeches on dry economic subjects in this House which came near being epic poems in their character.

But I will never be willing to thank any man anywhere at any time or in any place for making a Republican speech. [Laughter.] That is what we are asked to do in this resolution. I want to say this to the members of the House, because it ought to be said, that as a literary performance Colonel Hay's address will take high rank. There are some phrases in that oration that are of extraordinary excellence and almost entitle him to the dubious honor of being placed in the same class with Grover Cleveland as a phrase maker. [Laughter.]

I have no objection to the literary character of it, but I am willing to submit it to as good a critic of political speeches as the gentleman from Ohio himself, General GROSVENOR, as the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCALL, or as the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HITT, or any other man on that side of the Chamber who has literary taste and let him pronounce if Mr. Hay did not violate the proprieties of the occasion when he injected into that eulogy upon President McKinley a Republican stump speech.

He knew himself he was violating the proprieties, because he states—I can not quote the language exactly; I have not time to hunt it up—that he craves the indulgence of those that are hearing him if perchance he injects into the speech remarks that ought not to have been made. Then he proceeded to make a stump speech. For instance, he stated in one place that the very month in which Mr. McKinley was inaugurated steel rails sold for $18 a ton. I would like very much for some man to state as a literary proposition whether, according to the canons of taste and to preserve the unities of a great historical oration, the fact that steel rails sold at $18 a ton in the month of March, 1897, had anything to do with the character of William McKinley or with the feeling of kindness and pride which the American people entertain for him.

As a matter of fact, if steel rails sold for $18 a ton in the month of March, 1897, William McKinley had nothing to do with it, because he had not been in Congress since the 4th day of March, 1891. No Republican had been in office in a high executive place for four years in that month, and if steel rails sold for $18 a ton at that time, and as it was an unprecedented thing in the history of the country, then the credit ought to have been given where credit is due—to the Democrats of this country—instead of trying to filch it for the Republican party. But, from the sentence that opens up with that declaration until near the close of the address, it was as fine a Republican stump speech as has been delivered on the American continent within the last two years.

I will tell you what will happen, and I know it just as well as that I am living: If you pass this resolution, every Republican candidate for Congress in the United States will not only circulate this speech as the strongest possible Republican campaign document, but at the same time he will circulate the resolution of Congress thanking him for delivering it.

When I objected to the unanimous report of the committee my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] rose and asked me to withdraw it, and I would not do it. I asked for three days to consider the matter whether I would make a minority report, and within the three days I read Mr. Blaine's speech delivered over James A. Garfield as critically and as carefully as any speech was ever read on the American continent.

The difference in situation was that Blaine delivered his speech under the most difficult circumstances that could possibly have surrounded a human being called upon to speak on such an occasion. Here sat the Republican party, divided into two bitter and warring factions. He had to avoid saying too much in praise of Garfield, and he had to avoid insulting what was called the "stalwart" faction of the Republican party. Yet any American citizen could take Blaine's speech and read it from beginning to end without feeling that any impropriety had been committed. It is a magnificent oration. There is not a solitary syllable in it that would offend "feather-head" Republicans, as they were then called, or a "stalwart" Republican, or a Democrat of any of the numberless varieties of that party which there are in this country. [Laughter.] Mr. Blaine observed the proprieties and spoke in perfect good taste.

When Mr. Hay arose to speak, he had no difficulty to confront him. He had simply to observe the rules of good taste—literary taste—to observe the canons of literary criticism. But he did not do it. So far as I am concerned, if there is not another man in this House who votes against thanking him for it, I propose to so vote.

I want to repeat that I am not hide-bound on the subject of politics. I am a Democrat, and always expect to be one. Politics has absolutely nothing to do with my opposition to this resolution of thanks. I recognize that every man has the right to his political opinions and to express them on any occasion that is fitting in terms that seem to him right and proper. As a matter of fact, less than two months ago I sat in my place here and led the applause for my distinguished friend from the State of Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] when he was delivering a brilliant Republican speech [laughter]; and I performed the very same kindly office for my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] when he delivered his great oration on the Cuban reciprocity scheme. But I believe, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that the House simply sinks its own dignity when it votes to thank a man for delivering a political speech (I care not how classical its phrases), when he ought to have observed all of the proprieties of the occasion which he not only failed to observe, but which he violated in the most flagrant manner. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has seven minutes and the gentlemen from Ohio seventeen minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I came into this Hall a few moments ago when we were voting on seconding the motion to suspend the rules on this proposition. Sir, I had the honor to be appointed by the Speaker as a committeeman from the State of Mississippi on the joint memorial committee of both Houses of Congress to present suitable resolutions in honor of our deceased President, Mr. McKinley, and to select an appropriate speaker to deliver the eulogy on that occasion. I accepted the position, and united in the selection of the present Secretary of State to deliver the eulogy.

I came into this Hall on the day when the Senate, with the Supreme Court and the foreign ambassadors assembled with us here, and I listened with great care and attention to the address delivered by Mr. Hay.

I think I am as good a Democrat as my friend from Missouri; I think I am as keenly alive to everything that affects the interests and the honor and the welfare of the Democratic party as my friend from Missouri, whom I so much admire, but from whom I entirely dissent on this occasion. I listened to that address with great care, with great caution, and even with a disposition to criticise if anything wrong had been said. But I failed to detect in the whole of that address anything that I thought was improper to be said or anything said in a party spirit.

And I feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that if a man selected for the great duty of speaking upon that occasion the sentiments of the American people had dared to inject into his address anything that was an appeal to party spirit and party sentiment the shade of our great President breaking the cerements of the tomb would have appeared before him and at once challenged his utterances. Any man who would have made here on such an occasion a speech political in its character would in doing so have dishonored the memory of McKinley's great absence of partisan feeling and partisan ideas.

President McKinley was a Republican; the man selected as orator by the joint committee was a Republican. Did we expect to select any other? I was charmed with his address. I listened to it with great pleasure, and I am sure that the great personage he was talking about would not have countenanced for a moment any exhibition of partisan spirit or partisan heat. It never entered my own mind that he had such an idea. I know Mr. Hay slightly and have had several interviews with him, none since he delivered that speech, however; but I am frank to say that I listened to that speech with great pleasure, and believed that it was worthy of the great man about whom he talked. McKinley was a Republican, an honest man, an upright man, a man whose great heart and whose loyal nature took in all the people of his country. When he came to be President he had the admiration and support of all the people of his country, not of one party, but of both.

Mr. Speaker, I shall never forget the last time I saw that great spirit in the flesh. I was passing through the city of Washington on my way to New York. I called to pay my respects to the President of the United States. We had served thirteen or fourteen years in this Hall together. I sat on this side, he sat on that. Our intimacy had been great, and when I called to see him he kindly introduced me to some Ohio friends who were in the room and said, "Take a seat, I want to talk with you about our long service together in Congress."

He seated me while these gentlemen were still there, and when I was about to go he said to me, speaking to me with the kindliness of nature that always characterized him: "Mr. HOOKER, is there anything I can do for you?" I said: "No, Mr. President, I have simply come to pay my respects to you, as I chanced to be passing through the Federal city." "Well," said he, seizing my one hand with both of his, "if you have a young man in your region of country who acquitted himself with credit in the Spanish-American war, I would be glad to give you a lieutenancy for him." I said: "Why, Mr. President, I had not thought of such an honor. It is very generous on your part." But it was just like McKinley.

I saw it in the same kindly feeling that had existed between him and myself for twelve or thirteen or fourteen years. I said to him, "I can not now think of any young man specially worthy of the high honor which you propose to confer, but I will communicate with my friends in Mississippi; I will communicate with my friend Governor Lowry and with my son;" and they suggested the name of Richard P. Winslow, whose father and grandfather I had known.

I knew by the character of the family, although I did not know the boy intimately, that he must be worthy of the honor. I wrote to Mr. McKinley at his home in Canton, before he made the fatal visit to Buffalo, and when I returned from the mountains of Virginia, where I passed the summer, I said to myself, "I will go to the War Office and see what came of the offer that McKinley so generously made;" and when I went up there, Colonel McCain, of the United States Army, from my own State, in the Adjutant-General's Office, said, "I will look over the books and see whether any such name is there." And when he had examined he found the name of Richard P. Winslow, and on the margin a big hand was drawn with the index finger pointing to the name of Richard P. Winslow, and opposite that name was this memorandum in red ink: "The President requests that this nomination be made special." I am glad to say that young man stood his examination a few days ago and his name has been favorably reported and is now on the Senate Calendar for confirmation.

He never forgot me. He was not the kind of a man who forgot. And I say that the man selected to deliver the address in commemoration of him and to utter the sentiments which all the people of this country entertained for him, and proudly entertained, would not have dared to undertake to deliver a political address when he was speaking of a man of such high character, such noble nature, such pure life, as our assassinated President. [Applause.]

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, the time of Mr. HOOKER having expired, Mr. CLARK yielded to him five minutes of his time.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will consume the remainder of his time.

Mr. CLARK. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I care to use even two minutes. I simply desire to say that I listened with a great deal of interest to the address of Secretary Hay on the life and character of Mr. McKinley. I thought at the time that there were some things in that address of a partisan character not entirely appropriate to a funeral occasion. But there was much in the address to be admired, especially his eloquent tribute to the high personal character of the late President, and I fear a vote against this resolution would not be considered as a mere criticism against the partisan portion of the address, but might have a tendency to detract from that profound tribute of respect which the American people unite in paying to the memory of our martyred President, and I shall, therefore, support the resolution.

Mr. CLARK. I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will observe the ordinary courtesies of debate, and close on his side now, and let me have the closing speech.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I will yield a minute to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want that minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition either to fence with the gentleman from Missouri or to say anything on an occasion like this that will in any way irritate or annoy any gentleman who sees fit to vote upon this question one way or the other.

I hope the House will insist upon this action, however. Had this committee not brought this resolution here there would have been world-wide criticism of the committee for having failed to do that which is customary under circumstances such as we were surrounded by. It would have been said in every newspaper of the country that, having invoked the address and assembled a great audience to hear it, we had ourselves condemned the occasion by refusing to go through with the ordinary duty of complimenting the gentleman who delivered the address. Therefore the committee took up the question, considered the resolution, and brought its report to this House; and now it is a question for this House to say, not whether it shall indorse whatever of politics may have worked its way incidentally into that address, but whether upon the whole this distinguished man, having been invited to make this address, should now be condemned, or as the gentleman from Illinois has very well suggested, whether the memory of McKinley shall be condemned in the House of Representatives of his country.

I took a great deal of pains, following the criticism that was made in the committee by the gentleman from Missouri, to scan through two or three different clipping bureaus utterances of the Democratic press of this country upon the occasion and upon the address of Mr. Hay. Almost without exception there was a universal acclaim of praise of Mr. Hay, not only because of the literary character of his production, but of the temper and spirit which he had manifested. Now let me quote the argument made in one of the leading Democratic newspapers of the country in opposition to the suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri. It was this. The editorial said:

> It may be said that some of the language of Mr. Hay approaches very closely upon the line of political argument. But—

Said the editor of that paper—

> how can you eliminate William McKinley from his life work?

William McKinley was a partisan Republican, and he was admired by the masses of the Democrats of this country because of his manly partisanship. And now that he is dead and his eulogist speaks of the results of his life work gentlemen complain. The gentleman from Missouri says that he mentioned the fact that steel rails were sold at $18 a ton on some occasion, and the gentleman from Missouri, with some lack of his usual acumen in a case of this kind, has failed to develop what it is that grew out of that suggestion that he complained of. But I will not discuss it. You can not eulogize a dead politician, a dead statesman, a great man dead without referring to what he has done. I have sat upon this floor and have heard eulogies of Randall and a large number of leading honorable and distinguished Democrats, and I have heard repeatedly, over and over again, the proud boasts of their eulogists of their achievements in behalf of the Democratic party, and yet we have always printed those eulogies. If there was anything useful for stump orators in referring to the character of such men as Randall and other men to whom I might refer, it was that they had become valuable as illustrators of the policy of the party to which they belonged.

Mr. Speaker, you can not speak of McKinley without you curtail your own independence, if you say nothing about his attitude upon these great political questions. I undertake to say that no mere eulogistic address is freer from it than this. Freer than any eulogy that ever was presented in this House upon the character of distinguished men, such as Hendricks, of Indiana, and a dozen others whom I might name. Why are we afraid to have go to the world the suggestion made by an intimate friend and Cabinet officer of McKinley, that he had accomplished something as a partisan. Why, Mr. Speaker, it would go forth to all the world that the Democratic party of this House, after all their high eulogiums of McKinley, after all their sincere and honest regrets for his death, after all that they have said and done in this House, yet when the last moment came when they could strike one blow at his fame and mar his standing before the world that they had availed themselves of that which was practically a funeral occasion to condemn the words of eulogy made on that occasion. I can not believe that the partisanship of this country has led men to such a position as that, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no vote on this floor against this resolution.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution; and upon that question the gentleman asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 46, answering "present" 25, not voting 151; as follows:

YEAS—130.

Alexander,	Fitzgerald,	Latimer,	Reeder,
Allen, Mo.	Fletcher,	Lawrence,	Reeves,
Barney,	Foster, Vt.	Lessler,	Rhea, Va.
Bartholdt,	Gaines, W. Va.	Littauer,	Rumple,
Bates,	Gardner, Mich.	Littlefield,	Sherman,
Bellamy,	Gibson,	Lovering,	Showalter,
Bishop,	Gill,	McAndrews,	Sibley,
Blackburn,	Glenn,	McCall,	Smith, Ill.
Bowersock,	Grosvenor,	McCleary,	Smith, Iowa
Breazeale,	Grow,	Mann,	Sperry,
Brick,	Hamilton,	Mercer,	Steele,
Bromwell,	Hanbury,	Metcalf,	Stewart, N. J.
Brown,	Haskins,	Mickey,	Storm,
Burleigh,	Hedge,	Minor,	Sulloway,
Burton,	Hemenway,	Mondell,	Sutherland,
Caldwell,	Henry, Conn.	Moody, N. C.	Tawney,
Cannon,	Hepburn,	Moody, Oreg.	Thayer,
Capron,	Hill,	Morris,	Thomas, Iowa
Cassingham,	Hitt,	Moss,	Tirrell,
Connell,	Hooker,	Mudd,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Conner,	Howard,	Needham,	Tompkins, Ohio
Coombs,	Howell,	Nevin,	Tongue,
Cousins,	Hull,	Olmsted,	Van Voorhis,
Cromer,	Irwin,	Otjen,	Vreeland,
Crumpacker,	Jenkins,	Parker,	Wachter,
Cushman,	Jett,	Patterson, Pa.	Wadsworth,
Dalzell,	Jones, Wash.	Patterson, Tenn.	Wanger,
Davidson,	Kehoe,	Payne,	Warnock,
Deemer,	Kitchin, Claude	Perkins,	Watson,
Dovener,	Knapp,	Powers, Mass.	Williams, Ill.
Eddy,	Lacey,	Prince,	The Speaker.
Esch,	Landis,	Ransdell, La.
Evans,	Lanham,	Ray, N. Y.

NAYS—46.

Adamson,	Cochran,	Lever,	Slayden,
Ball, Tex.	Conry,	Lewis, Ga.	Smith, Ky.
Bartlett,	De Armond,	Little,	Sparkman,
Bowie,	Feely,	Lloyd,	Spight,
Brantley,	Green, Pa.	McCulloch,	Stark,
Brundidge,	Henry, Miss.	McLain,	Sulzer,
Burgess,	Johnson,	Maddox,	Underwood,
Burleson,	Jones, Va.	Mahoney,	Wheeler,
Burnett,	Kern,	Neville,	Williams, Miss.
Candler,	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Richardson, Tenn.	Wooten.
Clark,	Kleberg,	Scarborough,
Clayton,	Lester,	Sims,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—25.

Bell,	Gilbert,	Norton,	Small,
Brownlow,	Hay,	Reid,	Smith, H. C.
Cooper, Tex.	Ketcham,	Richardson, Ala.	Stephens, Tex.
Cowherd,	Lamb,	Rixey,	Thompson.
Crowley,	Livingston,	Robinson, Nebr.
Finley,	McClellan,	Rucker,
Gaines, Tenn.	Naphen,	Shallenberger,

NOT VOTING—151.

Acheson,	Bingham,	Butler, Mo.	Dahle,
Adams,	Blakeney,	Butler, Pa.	Darragh,
Allen, Ky.	Boreing,	Calderhead,	Davey, La.
Aplin,	Boutell,	Cassel,	Davis, Fla.
Babcock,	Bristow,	Cooney,	Dayton,
Ball, Del.	Broussard,	Cooper, Wis.	De Graffenreid,
Bankhead,	Bull,	Corliss,	Dick,
Beidler,	Burk, Pa.	Creamer,	Dinsmore,
Belmont,	Burke, S. Dak.	Currier,	Dougherty,
Benton,	Burkett,	Curtis,	Douglas,
Draper,	Hildebrant,	Moon,	Sheppard,
Driscoll,	Holliday,	Morgan,	Skiles,
Edwards,	Hopkins,	Morrell,	Smith, S. W.
Elliott,	Hughes,	Mutchler,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Emerson,	Jack,	Newlands,	Snodgrass,
Fleming,	Jackson, Kans.	Overstreet,	Snook,
Flood,	Jackson, Md.	Padgett,	Southard,
Foerderer,	Joy,	Palmer,	Southwick,
Fordney,	Kahn,	Pearre,	Stevens, Minn.
Foss,	Kluttz,	Pierce,	Stewart, N. Y.
Foster, Ill.	Knox,	Pou,	Swanson,
Fowler,	Kyle,	Powers, Me.	Talbert,
Fox,	Lassiter,	Pugsley,	Tate,
Gardner, N. J.	Lewis, Pa.	Randell, Tex.	Tayler, Ohio
Gillet, N. Y.	Lindsay,	Robb,	Taylor, Ala.
Gillett, Mass.	Long,	Roberts,	Thomas, N. C.
Goldfogle,	Loud,	Robertson, La.	Trimble,
Gooch,	Loudenslager,	Robinson, Ind.	Vandiver,
Gordon,	McDermott,	Ruppert,	Warner,
Graff,	McLachlan,	Russell,	Weeks,
Graham,	McRae,	Ryan,	White,
Greene, Mass.	Mahon,	Schirm,	Wiley,
Griffith,	Marshall,	Scott,	Wilson,
Griggs,	Martin,	Selby,	Woods,
Hall,	Maynard,	Shackleford,	Wright,
Haugen,	Meyer, La.	Shafroth,	Young,
Heatwole,	Miers, Ind.	Shattuc,	Zenor.
Henry, Tex.	Miller,	Shelden,

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the resolution was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. HILDEBRANT with Mr. MAYNARD.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. BOREING with Mr. TRIMBLE.

Mr. BULL with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. BELMONT.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. TATE.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Until further notice:

Mr. SHATTUC with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. ADAMS with Mr. SELBY.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. KLUTTZ.

Mr. JACK with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. PIERCE.

Mr. DAYTON with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

Mr. LONG with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. EMERSON with Mr. GILBERT.

Mr. MCLACHLAN with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. BURKETT with Mr. SHALLENBERGER.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. NAPHEN.

Mr. CURTIS with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. CREAMER.

Mr. POWERS of Maine with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. SNODGRASS.

Mr. REEDER with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. FOX.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey with Mr. MOON.

Mr. GORDON with Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. HOLLIDAY with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

Mr. SKILES with Mr. TALBERT.

For this day:

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. LINDSAY.

Mr. HUGHES with Mr. MCDERMOTT.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. VANDIVER.

Mr. WARNER with Mr. REID.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. LASSITER.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania with Mr. SHEPPARD.

Mr. KYLE with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. KNOX with Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. GRAFF with Mr. JACKSON of Kansas.

Mr. FOWLER with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. FOSTER of Illinois.

Mr. FOERDERER with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania with Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota with Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. BEIDLER with Mr. BUTLER of Missouri.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. SNOOK.

Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

Mr. DICK with Mr. WILEY.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. ROBB.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.
Mr. BALL of Delaware with Mr. GOOCH.
Mr. JOY with Mr. RUPPERT.
Mr. STEWART of New York with Mr. ZENOR.
On this vote:
Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota with Mr. MCRAE.
Mr. SCHIRM with Mr. SHAFROTH.
Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. MUTCHLER.
Mr. DRAPER with Mr. FLEMING.
Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. DAVIS of Florida.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. BANKHEAD.
Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. SMALL.
Mr. MORRELL with Mr. RYAN.
Mr. GILLET of New York with Mr. GRIFFITH.
For ten days:
Mr. MILLER with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont with Mr. POU.
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.
For one week:
Mr. CURRIER with Mr. PUGSLEY.
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. BELLAMY.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. DOUGHERTY.
Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. THOMPSON until June 9.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the negative, but I find I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SHATTUC, and I withdraw my vote and wish to be marked "present."

The Clerk called Mr. RUCKER's name, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Speaker, has my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE] voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Then I desire to withdraw my vote, which was cast in the affirmative, and be recorded as "present."

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I have voted on this proposition in the affirmative. I notice, however, that I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR]. I therefore desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I notice that I was announced as paired with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER]; but as that gentleman is present I have voted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the pair withdrawn?

Mr. STEELE. I do.

The SPEAKER. The pair will be withdrawn.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2764. An act for the relief of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; and

S. R. 100. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for an equestrian statue of the late Maj. Gen. William J. Sewell, United States Volunteers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9290) granting a pension to Frances L. Ackley.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 11249) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TURNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 19) for the relief of George A. Orr.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 567) for the relief of H. B. Matteosian.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1999) for the relief of Albert C. Brown.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills, in the enrollment of the joint resolution (S. R. 92) providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, be authorized to correct the title thereof by striking out the words "fifty thousand" and inserting the words "two hundred thousand;" so as to make the same correspond with the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said resolution concurred in by the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. 91. Joint resolution providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle; and

S. 92. Joint resolution providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I call up for present action the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes. The report and the statement of the House conferees have already been printed in the RECORD. I ask that the statement be read, omitting the report.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the reading of the report will be dispensed with.

The statement of the House conferees, as published in the proceedings of May 29, was read.

The question being taken, the conference report was agreed to.

FIRST LIEUT. JOSEPH M. SIMMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 3360) for the promotion of Lieut. Joseph M. Simms, Revenue-Cutter Service, the bill having been returned from the Senate with the information that the amendment of the House was disagreed to and a conference requested.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. ADAMSON as conferees on the part of the House.

RETIREMENT OF MEDICAL OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. I move to suspend the rules so as to take up and pass the bill (S. 5213) providing for the selection and retirement of medical officers in the Army.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to select one from such medical officers of the Army as have served forty-one years or more, nine years of which shall have been as Surgeon-General, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him a major-general of the United States Army, for the purpose of placing him on the retired list.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not object to that; but I think this question ought to be debated.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the motion to suspend the rules will be considered as seconded.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is entitled to the floor for twenty minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House more than a minute or two. This bill is designed to retire the Surgeon-General of the Army only one grade higher than the rank which he now holds, and to place him on an equality with the Surgeon-General of the Navy, who has recently been retired. The bill has received a unanimous report in its favor from the Committee on Military Affairs, gentlemen of both parties on that committee concurring. If the bill should pass it will make the present Surgeon-General of the Army a major-general on his retirement, the 8th day of this month. The bill has already passed the Senate. There is nothing else involved in it than this one proposition. I think that in justice to this distinguished man, who has served over forty years and has advanced the cause of science more, probably, than any other one professional man in the United States, he should receive on his retirement this recognition at the hands of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment or two?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] for two minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will pass this bill. The medical fraternity of my State, in convention assembled, has recommended its passage. So have similar conventions in several other States of the South. During the prevalence of yellow fever in the State of Alabama this man was the only officer who dared go there and remain through the entire prevalence of the epidemic. He remained there while five other physicians died. In rendering this service he took his life in his hands. He is a most worthy man. As has just been stated by the chairman of the Military Committee [Mr. HULL], the passage of this bill would simply put this officer upon an equality with others who have received this promotion. I hope that gentlemen on both sides of the House will unite in passing the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. HULL. For how long?

Mr. CANNON. For two minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have some acquaintance with the Surgeon-General of the Army. I have always found him a pleasant gentleman. So far as I know or believe he has performed his duties well. He is shortly to retire, I understand, on three-fourths of the regular pay. His present rank is that of brigadier-general. This bill, as I understand, proposes to retire him with the rank of major-general. Now, I must say—I hope it may not seem ungracious for me to make the remark I am about to make; I hope it may not look as if I were speaking unkindly of this particular individual, for I speak without any malice—but I must say for one that I am tired of pursuing the policy of promoting an officer to a rank that he never held and then retiring him. [Applause.]

To me it seems a mere gratuity, and while we inveigh here against civil pension lists, I will not discuss that subject. We understand what our system does for us and the abuses that exist in it. We must in the future have a large Regular Army compared with what we have had heretofore. The chances are that it will be larger instead of smaller. We start out to have as good a Navy as any nation in the world. The evolution and growth of our Navy and Army are necessary to our civilization. If these things are to be done, they ought to be done along the line of general policy. Now, I think I have said all I want to about this matter, and for one, having nothing against General Sternberg and everything, so far as I know, in his favor, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized to control the time in the negative.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I concur with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said in reference to General Sternberg. He is an excellent gentleman, an able officer, a kindly man; but when are we going to stop using the money of the Government of the United States for gratuities to reward those men whom we personally like? Now, there are other bills before this committee of the same kind as this.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is the report on this bill unanimous?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. From what committee does it come?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. From the Military Committee. I have not looked at the report or read it, but I know the facts. I will correct myself and say that I did read the report some days ago; but there is a bill before this committee for the promotion and retirement of Colonel Greenleaf. There is a bill before this committee for the promotion and retirement of General Smith. Neither of these bills has been reported. They have been hanging around here for years. Both are in the same Department, both excellent men, both men entitled to credit; but I agree that those bills ought not to be reported. Colonel Greenleaf and General Smith have had no members to curry favor with, because they have not been at the head of a great department; neither have they had the opportunity to go around and get up resolutions from State medical associations to come here and ask Congress to promote them. Now, that is all there is in this bill. My friend from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] stated the fact absolutely when he said he was going to vote for this bill, not because this man was going to promote the service of the United States, not because he is entitled to $2,000 a year more for the balance of his life, but because the State Medical Board of Georgia has asked that he be promoted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If our constituents send us here to have State societies direct us how to cast our votes, we had better go home and let them send men here who can do their thinking for themselves.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman is badly mistaken when he says that I predicated my vote on the action of the board.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that to be what the gentleman said.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir; I gave that simply as an evidence that he was worthy. I want to ask the gentleman one question now. If the gentleman has not read the report of that committee, which he says he has not read, upon what does he predicate his opposition to the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I corrected that statement.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to say that is a unanimous report, Democrats and Republicans both signing it. Now, you say you have not read it. Upon what do you predicate your opposition?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. As I stated to your colleague from Georgia, I first said that I had not read the report, but I remembered that I had, and it is not on that report that I base my opposition. I know there is not a man who has ever occupied the position that General Sternberg has during the entire history of this Government who has ever been retired at a higher rank than brigadier-general. The men who occupied that high position during the civil war, with all the great responsibilities and duties that rested on them, were only retired as brigadier-generals; and now because this officer, an efficient officer, I grant you, has seen fit to go through the country and secure the indorsement of State medical boards in the various States to come here and lobby with us for his promotion, to pay him $2,000 a year more than his rank entitles him to and more than the law entitles him to, and more than anything else on earth entitles him to except that he wants as a gratuity to be paid $2,000 more a year retirement pay, without rendering any service to the Government of the United States, that is no reason why we should vote to do it.

I say if that hour and day has come when, because a man is a good fellow, because he has friends throughout the United States, because he is able from the various districts to petition that he may run his hand into the Treasury of the United States and appropriate to himself the money that is put there for the benefit of the people—if that hour has come, then I say this man is entitled to it. But if we are to stand here to do justice and to pay a man what he is entitled to and no more, there is no reason on earth why General Sternberg should be promoted above every other man that has ever occupied his position and be retired as a major-general rather than as a brigadier-general, and for that reason I oppose this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill, like others that preceded it, raises a question which deserves consideration. Do existing laws make fair, reasonable, and ample provision for the retirement of superannuated military officers? If not, the general laws should be revised. If the pay of retired officers authorized by the statutes is insufficient, then a higher rate of pay should be allowed. I have observed that officers who reach the age of retirement find somewhere in the House or in the Senate, or both, a sufficient number of personal friends to secure the introduction and favorable report of bills recommending retirement, with a rank higher than that enjoyed during the time of service, with the pay of the higher rank; and so the matter invariably comes before us in such a way as to make the discussion personal instead of general.

When a bill of this kind comes up, to oppose it has the complexion of hostility to the beneficiary of the bill. This places members of the House in the attitude of personal hostility to the retiring officer, when, in fact, they only feel a repugnance to a proceeding that has become so frequent that the general laws governing the question are rendered nugatory. It is a new departure, this habit of giving to Army officers upon retirement for the remainder of their lives vastly larger pay than is provided by the general law. The sooner the House refuses to pass bills of this kind the better.

It is pertinent to inquire is this connection whether the statutes now in force do not generously provide for superannuated military officers. If one could enter civil employment with the understanding that during good behavior he would receive fair compensation for his services and at the end of a certain period of service be retired with three-quarters or four-fifths pay during the remainder of his life, we would look upon such a person as extremely fortunate. I believe the pay of our retired officers is large enough. I believe that to constantly increase the allowances is sheer extravagance. Presumably when an officer retires from active service, it is at a time of life when his necessities are no greater and presumably much less than during his earlier years. If he has a family, his sons and daughters have been educated. The expense of living of people of advanced years is certainly no greater than that of people in the meridian of life.

Very early in the history of the Government we concluded to provide in their declining years for our military officers. The laws on the statute books do this. I know of no case recently where a distinguished military officer has been retired without advancing his rank. We deal with them one by one and pass special laws as one after another is retired. If the pay provided for retiring officers is too small, the general law should be changed. If it is large enough, legislation originating in the circle of personal friends and promoted as a mere expression of good fellowship is wrong.

This rests upon the fact that he has been conspicuous in the military service of the country for forty-one years. Has he been well paid during that time; did he seek the employment, and was he satisfied with it? There is no complaint that his emolument as an official was insufficient. The mere fact that retirement at three-fourth's pay is guaranteed to our officers makes it unnecessary for them during their service to make provision for old age which people in private employment are compelled to do. I see no reason on earth why bills like this should be brought in one after another. Every man gives some reason why a general law should be revised, and it should not be a personal matter, and then we could pass upon the general merits of the subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I think that the protest of the gentleman from Illinois is very timely. It occurs to me that there is no principle of justice which demands the passage of this measure. Certainly no appeal to the charitable feeling we have justifies its passage. It is sought to have Congress pass this measure upon the alleged ground of the long and distinguished services of the Surgeon-General. Mr. Speaker, the fact is, the proposition, stripped of all excuses, is simply a proposition to give General Sternberg larger pay than he has earned under the law under the general existing statute. The purpose is that he may be the recipient of a gratuity, a bounty from Congress.

Now, it is not right for the members of this House to take public money and devote it to such a purpose as that. The Surgeon-General, in his present rank as brigadier-general, will get three-fourths of the $5,500 that he draws as a brigadier-general; and under this measure, if this bill should become law, he would draw three-fourths of $7,500. He would get about $1,500 more than he is entitled to under the existing law. May I ask what right have we to take the public money, coming from the people by way of taxation, to give to some official who has been pleasant in his dealings with us, and who has rendered valuable service to his country? There is no officer to-day in public service, I dare to say, that could not make a strong case why he should be retired with increased pay.

Every man thinks he is entitled to more pay. Nearly every man on the floor of this House thinks he is entitled to more pay as a Congressman. Nearly every man here thinks that if the Government should go into this business, if it go into bounties for people who have served their country, there is, at least, the same reason for giving pay to men who have served here a long time as there is to a man like this one, who has drawn public pay for forty years. There must be an end to this evil. For one, I can not vote for this bill. Every time you pass a special bill of this sort you create a precedent that is going to give us trouble; and, while I do not worship precedents, I do not think we ought to pass any bill that may create a bad precedent hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that we should stop this kind of legislation. What does this bill propose? First, to promote an officer to a higher rank; second, then retire him; third, with an increased salary. Promote an officer, increase his salary, to do what? Nothing. This is a drastic and endless-chain policy that is in derogation of the public welfare. Throughout my career in Congress I have steadfastly opposed such laws.

But I have another reason which I might assign for retiring the distinguished gentleman for whose benefit this bill is proposed—General Sternberg. In his last official report, at page 127, General Sternberg says: "The health of the Army must be regarded as having been unusually good during the calendar year of 1900, the medical certificates of which are tabulated in the present report." Let us see, then, what the "present report" shows. This, mind you, is the professional and official opinion of General Sternberg. Bear in mind that he is speaking of "the health of the Army" encamped within the limits of the United States and elsewhere, and that he says the health of our Army "has been unusually good during the calendar year of 1900," as shown by the present report.

His report shows that before the Spanish war, in the year 1897, the death rate amongst our troops "serving in the United States" was "3.14 per 1,000 of men from 'disease' only;" that amongst our troops "serving in the United States" the death rate from "disease" only, in 1899, was 6.56 out of every thousand of men, and 4.83 in 1900 per 1,000 of men "serving in the United States." Even this showing demonstrates that the death rate was higher in the United States—that is, "amongst troops serving in the United States"—in 1900 than in 1897. But the troops "serving in the United States" was not the whole "Army," and as his report speaks of "the health of the Army," we will see now what his report shows the death rate from "disease" was amongst our troops serving outside of the United States—in our colonies.

This same report shows that a death rate of our troops serving in the Philippine Islands per 1,000 of men was, in 1899, 15.30, and in 1900, 20.26; that is, 5 more men died from disease in the Philippine Islands out of every thousand than in 1899, and about 17 more in 1900 than in 1897, before the Spanish war, when our troops were "serving within (the limits of) the United States."

This report further shows that our troops while serving in China died at the rate of 23.62 from "disease" out of every thousand of soldiers, or 20 more than when serving in the United States in 1897. These troops in China—the most of them—came from the Philippines, others from Cuba; and although China is a cold climate, they were so broken in health and poisoned with tropical disease that the death rate was greater in actual warfare than in 1900 or 1899, when in the Philippine Islands in actual warfare.

Yet this distinguished surgeon now asks Congress to promote and retire him, and on an increased salary, because of his great public service, his friends say, in the face of this professional and official opinion of his, incorporated in his official report and sent to Congress and given to the American people, to inform them that "the health of the Army" of the United States "must be regarded as having been unusually good during the calendar year 1900."

He would have Congress and the American people to read his opinion, and the young men who want to join the Army, at the same time setting forth certified information in his report that fairly overthrows and repudiates his opinion, and shows that it is unfounded and altogether misleading, however little he may have intended to mislead.

Now, when an officer of this Government will allow such official language as this, which I have quoted, to go before Congress and the American people to create, as it has created, the impression that "the health of our Army" is improving—"unusually good during the calendar year 1900"—I for one am ready to retire such a public officer, but without promotion and without an increase in his salary. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HULL. How much time has the gentleman from Alabama remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has four minutes remaining.

Mr. HULL. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has fifteen minutes.

Mr. HULL. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I admire as much as anybody can the stern economy of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the patriotism of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who seem to think that if any bill is brought in here for the purpose of granting some reward to some man who has distinguished himself the members of the committee who report the bill, and the gentlemen of the House who vote for it, ought to be scolded. Now, the gentleman from Alabama says that men who come here and vote for bills of this sort, because medical societies ask them to do it, ought to stay at home and let somebody come here who has a mind of his own. I venture to say the gentleman from Alabama frequently votes for measures that come before the House in accordance with what he believes to be the views of his constituents.

Now, if there is any profession in this country that is qualified to say who of its members should be honored it is the medical profession. I am willing to take the views of the medical societies of this country upon a question as to whether or not a great surgeon and a great physician, a man who has rendered great services to his country and to science, is such a man as should be distinguished and honored by the American Congress. Such a man is General Sternberg.

Gentlemen talk about his having pay, and that, stripped of everything else, the only object of this measure is to give him additional pay. That is not correct. The reason why I support the measure is that, being familiar with the record of General Sternberg, knowing the services he has rendered, knowing that he has rendered distinguished services to his country, I believe that he is a fit subject for this Congress to bestow a high honor and a distinction upon.

Gentlemen say we ought to stop this kind of legislation—that it has gone far enough. I challenge any gentleman on this floor to point me to a bill of a similar character which has passed this Congress during the last six years, or even before that time. I would like to ask my distinguished friend from Missouri to tell me when a bill has passed which is of a character like this. This is a bill which stands by itself. There has been no bill of the kind passed that I know of, except, perhaps, in the case of General Corbin, and even that was not on all fours with this bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is one reason why I am opposing this bill. I do not want to create a new precedent.

Mr. HAY. No; the gentleman said he opposed this bill because he wanted to stop this kind of legislation.

Mr. CLAYTON. And because I did not want to make any new precedent.

Mr. HAY. If it has not begun, how can it be stopped? What objection has the gentleman to bestowing an honor upon a gentleman who has rendered such distinguished service?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not want to create a new precedent.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not want to do something that ought to de done.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not agree with the gentleman that it ought to be done. I do not think we ought to spend the people's money in this way.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is very chary of the people's money, and yet a great many bills go through this House spending the people's money and the gentleman makes no objection to them.

Mr. CLAYTON. I vote against them every time.

Mr. HAY. Oh, you vote against them every time.

Mr. HANBURY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. HANBURY. Is this the only meritorious case in the Army or in the Navy?

Mr. HAY. It is the only case now before Congress for action, and I don't know of any other case like it on the Calendar.

Mr. HANBURY. If we grant this one, will you guarantee that you will stop here?

Mr. HAY. I can not guarantee what Congress will do. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Military Affairs has voted down a general bill of this character.

Mr. CLARK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. No Surgeon-General has ever been made a major-general.

Mr. HAY. No Surgeon-General of the Army, but General Van Reypen of the Navy has been retired on a rank similar to that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HULL. I yield the gentleman from Virginia two minutes more.

Mr. CLARK. If this bill is passed, does not it follow that every retiring Surgeon-General hereafter will come in and apply to be retired as a major-general?

Mr. HAY. Not at all; it does not follow by any means.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Was this General Sternberg the surgeon who had charge of Camp George H. Thomas, at Chickamauga, during the war with Spain?

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I understood that he was.

Mr. HAY. This officer is the Surgeon-General of the Army, and did not have charge of any particular camp.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. But he had charge of the man who did have charge of that camp.

Mr. HAY. He had general supervision of that camp and of others, but he had no immediate charge of it.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. It seems to me he had his headquarters down there.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. He ought to know that the Surgeon-General of the Army is stationed here at the War Department and has his headquarters here.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. We heard a good deal about him down there.

Mr. HAY. You are thinking of your friend from Pennsylvania, General Huidekoper. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As I understand, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] states that his committee has refused to report a general bill of this kind.

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why?

Mr. HAY. Because we did not think that such legislation would be wise or proper. This is a bill that stands by itself—stands on its own merits—stands on the merits of the man concerned.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Could not the other bill stand on its merits?

Mr. HAY. It had to do that; but we did not think it had sufficient merit to justify us in reporting it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then you think this is an isolated case?

Mr. HAY. I think so. I think that this gentleman has rendered such service as to make it so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has any other bill of this kind been reported from your committee?

Mr. HAY. Not that I know of.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is there not one for Haywood?

Mr. HAY. That is a bill which, if reported at all, must have come from the Committee on Naval Affairs, not from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has expired.

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Adamson.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was on the floor I asked him a question with the purpose of ascertaining the situation of this matter before the Committee on Military Affairs and why no member of that committee on this side took charge of this debate rather than gentlemen who are not members of that committee. The gentleman from Alabama being unable to answer my question, I procured a copy of the report, and I find that it is unanimous.

Now, this House does its business mainly, almost entirely, through committees. I find that in the Committee on Military Affairs each side of the House is represented by able gentlemen. When that is the case, members of the committee on both sides joining in a report, I generally accept that report, unless some unusual and overpowering reason appears for adopting the contrary course. If the question involved is a partisan question, and if any member of the committee dissents, it is generally safe to go with the man who is farthest away from the Republicans, for he is generally, according to my notion, found to be nearer right.

But on this question, as I understand, Mr. Speaker, there is not any politics; and on questions connected with the Army and Navy of the United States there ought never to be any politics. A distinguished admiral of our Navy was laughed at a few years ago when he said he did not know whether he was a Democrat or a Republican. But, sir, in Army and Navy matters—in appointments and promotions of officers of the Army or the Navy—there ought not to be any indication of any knowledge of the politics of the persons concerned or any political motives moving to action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there is a unanimous report of the members of this committee, and as no gentleman on the committee rises to oppose this bill, and inasmuch as a perusal of the report shows that the members of that committee were not derelict in duty in the investigation of this bill, but took all measures for reaching a correct conclusion, and did, in my judgment, reach a correct conclusion, I intend to vote for the bill.

Mr. HULL. I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to occupy now the remainder of his time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has four minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that General Sternberg receives as a brigadier-general $5,500 a year. In addition to that he receives, I understand, longevity pay amounting to 40 per cent of his regular salary.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; he does not get any "fogy" pay, as it is called.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood he did.

Mr. HULL. No, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, Well, then, as a brigadier-general he would retire on three-fourths of his salary of $5,500. As a major-general he will retire on three-fourths of $7,500.

Now, here is the whole proposition presented to us. The Government of the United States is not supposed to pay officers in any branch of its service unless they render value received. In other words, this Government is not supposed to grant to its citizens annuities, bounties, gratuities. It is not in conformity with our ideas of a republican form of government. Of course I know that there are other governments which do this. The English Government does that. It is talking now about granting a great gratuity to General Kitchener when he returns to England for defeating the Boers in their effort to maintain their liberty. Those things are done by other governments, but it is not supposed to be done by our Government.

Now, no matter what the services of General Sternberg are, how valuable they have been, this bill, as my friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY] says—and I am not disposed to lecture anybody, but I can not agree with some of my friends here who think that a member of this House ought to shut his brains and his mind when a committee comes in here and brings in a report, whether they agree with him or not, and if I am on a committee and make a report to this House I am perfectly willing for every other member of the House to disagree with it, and I claim only that privilege to myself——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I did not claim that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am referring to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]. All I say is this: General Sternberg has been promoted in the service to the highest rank of his corps; he has received all the honors that this Government has ever bestowed on any man occupying his position, and there are great men who have filled the place.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. VANDIVER. How long has this valuable service of General Sternberg's continued that it should merit such great promotion?

Mr. CAPRON. Forty-one years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman has been in the Army for forty-one years. I do not know how long he has been serving as Surgeon-General, but from all the reports I say he has been an able and efficient officer.

Mr. CLAYTON. He has been Surgeon-General nine years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not question that, but I do say that when you go out of your way to grant him this gratuity, to make him a major-general simply because there is a sentiment worked up in the United States for that purpose, a manufactured sentiment, then you simply open the door to have the brigadier-general who is the head of the Commissary Department of the Army, and the brigadier-general who is the head of the Quartermaster-General's Department, and every other brigadier-general who heads a great department in the Army of the United States, to come here with his friends to tell you what efficient services he has rendered to the Army and to the Government of the United States and ask you to give him for the balance of his life $2,000 additional pay to that which he contracted to receive when he entered the service, and which the Government of the United States contracted to pay him. There is no reason on earth why this man should be given this gratuity, except that you say you give it to him because he is a good fellow, and has friends among the physicans of this country, scattered between two great oceans.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman slightly misunderstood my question. I mean how long has he been in the service in his present rank?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. About nine years.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT].

Mr. JETT. Mr. Speaker, I think that most every member of this House has known my position upon the question of the retirement of Army officers. I did on one occasion express myself very freely in relation to this subject, but in this particular case I am in favor of extending this honor to the Surgeon-General of the Army, General Sternberg. It is not because of the fact that I desire to give him more money, but it is because of the fact that I think he is entitled to this recognition for the great aid and assistance which he has rendered to humanity, and if any gentleman who is opposing this bill will undertake to and make that character of investigation that this committee has made, I feel sure that he will reach the same conclusion that the members of the committee have reached.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say one word in conclusion, and especially in reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] as to the amount of pay. It is the advancement of one grade for General Sternberg if this bill shall pass the House; it is an increase of pay of $1,500 a year, three-quarters of the difference between a major-general and a brigadier-general, and I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that the total pay on the retired list, if this bill shall pass the House, as I figure it, would be $5,625 a year. And if you will take into consideration the distinguished ability of this man, his long service, his contributions to the cause of science, no man in this House will believe for a moment that in private life he could not have made seven or eight times as much as his salary as an Army officer.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, why did he not get out and go at it?

Mr. HULL. The point as to the pay, in my judgment, has nothing to do with this question. It is a question of recognizing the Surgeon-General of the Army in a small way.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HULL. No.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. HULL. Not for the present. I will in a minute. The question before this House is whether a man of forty-one years' service—nine years as Surgeon-General of the Army, with distinguished service in the cause of science—shall receive a recognition at the time of his retirement that will place him on an equality with his brother officer of the Navy. That is the main question here. I think he has earned it, and I do not believe this House is establishing a dangerous precedent when it grants it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand the gentlemen who have participated in this debate to say that this is a new case; that this has never been done before with regard to any officer of this grade in this branch of the service.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that since I have been on the committee I do not remember any case where a bill has passed Congress providing that a man on retirement should be advanced a grade—that is, an individual bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then it is a reward for some peculiarly distinguished service. It is our method of decorating an officer because of something remarkable that he has done in his service. Now, will the gentleman kindly point out to the House what this particular officer has done in the way of great contributions to science; not in general terms, but what he has done? That is what I want to know.

Mr. HULL. Well, I will say, for one thing, that the administration of the Army, after the organization was completed, not in the first stage, when we multiplied our Army ten times, but after the system had been devised, has been such that the percentage of sickness in the Philippines has been less than in any other army that we have ever had.

Mr. CAPRON. Will my friend yield for a moment?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. CAPRON. I should like to state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], in answer to his inquiry as to what the Surgeon-General has done that was remarkable in advancing the cause of science, that if he had only done the one thing of discovering, by his examination and careful investigation, a method of destroying yellow fever in the island of Cuba by destroying the mosquito which carried the yellow-fever germ, that would have been sufficient to decorate him as a man entitled to the highest place in medical science in the whole world.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the medical profession give this gentleman the credit of that discovery?

Mr. CAPRON. I understand that it is generally accredited to General Sternberg by the entire medical profession.

Mr. HEPBURN. I never heard of it before.

Mr. CAPRON. There are a great many things the gentleman never heard of before.

Mr. HULL. It does seem to me that the importance of this bill is not of that overpowering nature that men should be afraid of making a precedent of it. So far as I am concerned, since Congress passed the Navy personnel bill, by which every man who served in the Navy during the civil war and was in the Navy at the time of the passage of the bill was entitled to promotion one grade on retirement, I have been in favor of giving the Army equal credit and equal honor.

The Committee on Military Affairs have practically decided against that, and, through the action of the minority largely, have decided in favor of letting each individual stand upon his own merits; and with that idea in view this bill is brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. The time for debate on both sides has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill which is under consideration and pass the same.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HULL demanded a division.

Mr. UNDERWOOD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 69, nays 102, answered "present" 11, not voting 109; as follows:

YEAS—69.

Adamson,	Eddy,	Mondell,	Steele,
Alexander,	Esch,	Moody, N. C.	Stewart, N. J.
Allen, Me.	Evans,	Moody, Oreg.	Storm,
Bates,	Fletcher,	Mudd,	Sulloway,
Brick,	Graham,	Overstreet,	Tawney,
Bromwell,	Greene, Mass.	Parker,	Taylor, Ohio
Brown,	Grosvenor,	Patterson, Pa.	Taylor, Ala.
Brownlow,	Hamilton,	Payne,	Tompkins, Ohio
Burton,	Haskins,	Prince,	Van Voorhis.
Capron,	Hay,	Ray, N. Y.	Vreeland,
Connell,	Hull.	Reeves,	Wadsworth,
Coombs,	Jenkins,	Rumple,	Wanger,
Corliss,	Jett,	Shafroth,	Warnock,
Cousins,	Ketcham,	Showalter,	Watson,
Cushman,	Lessler,	Sibley,	Woods.
Dalzell,	Littlefield,	Smith, Iowa
Deemer,	Livingston,	Southwick,
Draper,	McLachlan,	Sperry,

NAYS—102.

Ball, Tex.	Bowie,	Burnett,	Cochran,
Barney,	Breazeale,	Candler,	Cooney,
Bartlett,	Brundidge,	Cannon,	Cowherd,
Ball,	Burgess,	Cassingham,	Cromer,
Bellamy,	Burkett,	Clark,	Crumpacker,
Bowersock,	Burleson,	Clayton,	Davis, Fla.

De Armond,	Kehoe,	Moss,	Smith, Ky.
Edwards,	Kern,	Needham,	Smith, H. C.
Finley,	Kitchin, Claude	Neville,	Spight,
Fitzgerald,	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Nevin,	Stark,
Gaines, W. Va.	Kleberg,	Perkins,	Stephens, Tex.
Gibson,	Lamb,	Pierce,	Sulzer,
Glenn,	Landis,	Powers, Mass.	Sutherland,
Green, Pa.	Lanham,	Randell, Tex.	Thayer,
Hanbury,	Latimer,	Ransdell, La.	Thomas, Iowa
Haugen,	Lawrence,	Reeder,	Tirrell,
Henry, Conn.	Little,	Reid,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Henry, Miss.	Lloyd,	Rhea,	Underwood,
Hepburn,	McCall,	Richardson, Tenn.	Vandiver,
Hitt,	McCulloch,	Rixey,	Wachter,
Hooker,	McLain,	Robinson, Nebr.	Warner,
Howard,	McRae,	Ryan,	Williams, Ill.
Irwin,	Maddox,	Shallenberger,	Williams, Miss.
Johnson,	Mercer,	Sims,	Wooten.
Jones, Va.	Minor,	Slayden,
Jones, Wash.	Morgan,	Small,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—11.

Gilbert,	Knapp,	Naphen,	Wheeler,
Griggs,	Lacey,	Rucker,	Wright.
Grow,	McClellan,	Thompson,

NOT VOTING—169.

Acheson,	Dick,	Joy,	Powers, Me.
Adams,	Dinsmore,	Kahn,	Pugsley,
Allen, Ky.	Dougherty,	Klutts,	Richardson, Ala.
Aplin,	Douglas,	Knox,	Robb,
Babcock,	Dovener,	Kyle,	Roberts,
Ball, Del.	Driscoll,	Lassiter,	Robertson, La.
Bankhead,	Elliott,	Lester,	Robinson, Ind.
Bartholdt,	Emerson,	Lever,	Ruppert,
Beidler,	Feely,	Lewis, Ga.	Russell,
Belmont,	Fleming,	Lewis, Pa.	Scarborough,
Benton,	Flood,	Lindsay,	Schirm,
Bingham,	Foerderer,	Littauer,	Scott,
Bishop,	Fordney,	Long,	Selby,
Blackburn,	Foss,	Loud,	Shackleford,
Blakeney,	Foster, Ill.	Loudenslager,	Shattuc,
Boreing,	Foster, Vt.	Lovering,	Shelden,
Boutell,	Fowler,	McAndrews,	Sheppard,
Brantley,	Fox,	McCleary,	Sherman,
Bristow,	Gaines, Tenn.	McDermott,	Skiles,
Broussard,	Gardner, Mich.	Mahon,	Smith, Ill.
Bull,	Gardner, N. J.	Mahoney,	Smith, S. W.
Burk, Pa.	Gill,	Mann,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Burke, S. Dak.	Gillet, N. Y.	Marshall,	Snodgrass,
Burleigh,	Gillett, Mass.	Martin,	Snook,
Butler, Mo.	Goldfogle,	Maynard,	Southard,
Butler, Pa.	Gooch,	Metcalf,	Sparkman,
Calderhead,	Gordon,	Meyer, La.	Stevens, Minn.
Caldwell,	Graff,	Mickey,	Stewart, N. Y.
Cassel,	Griffith,	Miers, Ind.	Swanson,
Conner,	Hall,	Miller,	Talbert,
Conry,	Heatwole,	Moon,	Tate,
Cooper, Tex.	Hedge,	Morrell,	Thomas, N. C.
Cooper, Wis.	Hemenway,	Morris,	Tongue,
Creamer,	Henry, Tex.	Mutchler,	Trimble,
Crowley,	Hildebrant,	Newlands,	Weeks,
Currier,	Hill,	Norton,	White,
Curtis,	Holliday,	Olmsted,	Wiley,
Dahle,	Hopkins,	Otjen,	Wilson,
Darragh,	Howell,	Padgett,	Young,
Davey, La.	Hughes,	Palmer,	Zenor.
Davidson,	Jack,	Patterson, Tenn.
Dayton.	Jackson, Kans.	Pearre,
De Graffenreid,	Jackson, Md.	Pou,

So the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was rejected, two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BISHOP with Mr. LESTER, for this day.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RUPPERT.

Mr. JOY with Mr. LEVER.

On this vote:

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. WILEY.

Mr. LACEY with Mr. SNODGRASS.

Mr. DAHLE with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. GILL with Mr. FEELY.

Mr. HEMENWAY with Mr. MAHONEY.

Mr. MANN with Mr. MICKEY.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I was listening for my name, and it was not called. I wish to vote.

The name of Mr. RANDELL of Texas was called, and he voted "nay."

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL]. I am informed that he is not present, and I therefore desire to change my vote from "nay" to "present."

The name of Mr. GRIGGS was called, and he voted "present."

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote?

Mr. McCLEARY. I did not.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening to his name, when his name was called?

Mr. McCLEARY. I was temporarily out of the Hall, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no more right to be recorded "present" than to vote. The condition to enable him to vote is that he must be able to say that he was in his place and listening when his name was called, and if he was unable to hear it he would have been entitled to vote.

Mr. McCLEARY. I was in during a part of the roll, but not when my name was called.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On May 31, 1902:

H. R. 8466. An act granting a pension to Lucinda A. Sirwell;

H. R. 9226. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth I. Ogden;

H. R. 9249. An act granting a pension to Amos Allport;

H. R. 9928. An act granting pension to Benjamin E. Styles;

H. R. 11343. An act granting a pension to Mary Louise Lowry;

H. R. 12685. An act granting a pension to Hiram J. Springfield;

H. R. 13350. An act granting a pension to Presley P. Medlin;

H. R. 13807. An act granting a pension to Jeremiah Horam;

H. R. 14099. An act granting a pension to Samantha B. Van Brocklin;

H. R. 8921. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse C. Rhodabeck;

H. R. 9437. An act granting an increase of pension to Elias A. Calkins;

H. R. 9569. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert Beits;

H. R. 9926. An act granting an increase of pension to James F. Patton;

H. R. 10165. An act granting an increase of pension to Delia E. Slocum;

H. R. 10201. An act granting an increase of pension to Otis R. Freeman;

H. R. 10731. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel P. Milburn;

H. R. 11285. An act granting an increase of pension to William Sheldon;

H. R. 11644. An act granting an increase of pension to Edgar A. Hamilton;

H. R. 11921. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. De Graw;

H. R. 12012. An act granting an increase of pension to Walter C. Tuttle;

H. R. 13753. An act granting a pension to Hannah T. Knowles;

H. R. 12778. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward R. Blair;

H. R. 12458. An act granting an increase of pension to William M. Barstow;

H. R. 12562. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Temple;

H. R. 12780. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Wheeler;

H. R. 13132. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie Cotter;

H. R. 13162. An act granting an increase of pension to Augustin M. Adams;

H. R. 13249. An act granting an increase of pension to Ada Trowbridge;

H. R. 13265. An act granting an increase of pension to John Whalen;

H. R. 13266. An act granting an increase of pension to Elbert N. Remson; and

H. R. 13503. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Haltenhof.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN FOREST RESERVES TO THE CONTROL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order immediately upon the adoption of this resolution to take up and consider in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole, the bill (H. R. 11536) entitled "A bill to transfer certain forest reserves to the control of the Department of Agriculture, to authorize game and fish protection in forest reserves, and for other purpose," and consider the same until disposed of by the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee are recognized.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been on the Calendar since last March, but instead of moving to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments it was thought best that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, because there might be some additional amendments suggested, and some question as to some amendments. I will say briefly in outlining this bill that it is a measure that was introduced to carry out the suggestion of the President in his message to Congress last December. The details of the bill, briefly, are these: There are certain reservations that have been fully surveyed, their boundaries definitely established, and their permanency agreed upon. There are certain other forest reserves whose boundaries are yet in process of alignment.

This proposition is to permit the President to issue an Executive order and transfer to the Department of Agriculture such of the reservations only as have been finally and fully established as to their boundary lines. It also provides, second, that with the consent or at the request of the governor of any State in which a forest reserve is located the whole or a part of such reservation may be set apart as a game preserve. Now, practically these are the two features of this bill. At the present we have two bureaus of forestry, one under the Department of the Interior and the other under the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture is better adapted for the permanent care and permanent protection of such of the reserves as have been fully and finally established as to their boundaries. On the other hand, as to those reservations whose boundaries are still in process of delimitation, the Department of the Interior is now the better to control the same.

In a general way this bill provides for these two matters. As to creating forest reserves or transferring them or portions of them into game preserves, it was thought best not to attempt to do that in any State without the consent of the State. That would result, first, in having a concerted action on the part of the State and a mutuality of action which would lead to harmony and prevent the establishment of such reserves where they are not wanted.

On the other hand, it would enable the Executive, with the consent of the governor of the State, to set apart one of these reserves in each State or a part thereof, or even more if the governor of the State should so agree, as a haven of refuge in which the wild animals and birds could breed and from that point spread out over the State. This would not interfere with the other uses of the forest reserve. In other words, it would set apart a breeding ground where desired by States for that purpose. This is practically all there is in this bill, and with this explanation I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question with reference to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LACEY. I will yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does this change the law with reference to mining upon the reserves?

Mr. LACEY. It does not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that at present the forest reserves are subject to the mining laws.

Mr. LACEY. They are.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And this makes no change?

Mr. LACEY. No change of any existing law except it transfers the control and administration to the Department of Agriculture, and as to allowing the whole or a part of such reserve as the State may desire to be set apart as a game reserve. I would suggest, in answer to my friend from Texas, that this bill under this resolution will be read in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and give full opportunity to look at all the details of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will not the gentleman from Iowa modify his motion to suspend the rules and let the bill be considered in the Committee of the Whole House?

Mr. LACEY. Instead of in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; for this reason: For the first time I have read it—not thoroughly, but only glanced at it—and it seems to me that there ought to be some general debate on it. It seems to me there ought to be that freedom of amendment and discussion that would come in the Committee of the Whole House. This legislation goes a long way, as my friend knows. It may be that it is wise, but it creates a forestry bureau in the Agricultural Department——

Mr. LACEY. Oh, my friend is mistaken about that.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it transfers it——

Mr. LACEY. That bureau has been in existence for years.

Mr. CANNON. It transfers the forest reserves of a certain kind to the Agricultural Department and it keeps the forest reserves of another kind in the Department of the Interior. In addition to that it comes with a wonderful sweeping provision in some of its criminal features; by regulation of the Department the regulation becomes law with a penalty, and it provides further, among other things, in the broadest possible way, that reserves may be set aside for the protection of game and preservation of animals that are about to disappear. It provides in the broadest possible way for keepers and all that kind of thing, and section 8 does what I have never known to be done it my recollection; it says that all costs and expenses arising in cases under this act and properly chargeable to the United States shall be certified, approved, and paid as like costs and expenses in the courts of the United States are certified and approved of under the laws of the United States.

Mr. LACEY. I will say to my friend from Illinois, in answer to that suggestion, that section 8 is existing law, and it was put in there out of caution so as to make it certain that no different method of accounting would be required from that under existing law.

Mr. CANNON. And yet section 8 is broad enough and has that wonderful power that is meant, as I understand it, to do anything and everything; it provides for agents and regulations, preservations, and having costs certified and paid. I do not speak of that as an argument against the bill. It may be that it is absolutely proper; I am not prepared to say in two minutes that it is not; but I make the remark to see if the gentleman is not willing to modify his motion and let us consider the matter in Committee of the Whole. I would be glad if the gentleman could see his way to modify his motion and let this very important matter be considered as it should be in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if this goes into Committee of the Whole, it may not be passed by a majority vote?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, this is a motion to suspend the rules to consider, and it takes two-thirds to do that. It would take two-thirds to send it to the Committee of the Whole. Of course it takes two-thirds to suspend the rules. I am not antagonizing, so far as I am concerned, the consideration of the measure; I am willing that it be considered; but I believe it is of so much importance that I will again ask my friend [Mr. LACEY] if he will not modify his motion.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, personally, of course, I would be quite as willing to have the bill considered in Committee of the Whole as considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I see substantially no difference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that it will require unanimous consent for the gentleman to modify his motion now.

Mr. LACEY. I will then ask unanimous consent to make the modification.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] asks unanimous consent to modify his motion so as to move that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole instead of being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and that modification is made.

Mr. LACEY. Now, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. If the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa in its present form be adopted the bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, not in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Iowa reserves his time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If I understand, the question as now presented to us in parliamentary form is about this: Those who are opposed to the passage of this measure should vote against the adoption of the resolution as it now comes before us—that is, should vote against considering the bill in the Committee of the Whole—because if this resolution be defeated the bill can not be considered at all to-day except by unanimous consent, which, I take it, can not be obtained. A vote of two-thirds, therefore, against the adoption of this rule will defeat the bill. If, however, the proposed rule should be adopted and the House should consider the bill in Committee of the Whole, then, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], a majority of the House can, if they see fit, pass the bill in the Committee of the Whole and also in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LACEY. And it would be subject to amendment in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Of course, as are all other bills. But the point I wish to emphasize is that if it is desired to defeat the measure those who wish to defeat it would do so most effectually by voting against the adoption of this rule, which, as has been stated, will require a two-thirds vote.

I am not familiar enough with the provisions of the bill to discuss it fully on its merits; but it seems to me it is a bill of too much importance to be considered any other way than in Committee of the Whole House. The bill increases the number of officers; it transfers various matters pertaining to the forest reserves now belonging to the Interior Department to the Agricultural Department; but it does not transfer the whole subject-matter. The result, it seems to me, would be that we should have a part of this forest-reserve business administered in the Agricultural Department and another part in the Interior Department, and, as stated in the views of the minority, which I have glanced at hastily, this arrangement must result in great confusion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It seems also to contemplate that the State or Territorial laws shall have jurisdiction over certain offenses committed in these reserves, while the Federal courts shall have jurisdiction of certain other offenses.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I noticed that also. It seems to me the bill will make such confusion as to render it almost impossible to administer affairs properly in the two departments.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, we in the West are opposed generally to any change in this respect. I can certainly say that such is the sentiment of my own district. We have had up the question of these timber reserves for the last eight or nine years. It has been a constant trouble to everybody. We have, with great patience and endurance, found out what the theory of the Secretary of the Interior is. We have now come to a point where we can deal with him. But it is proposed now to divide the authority—to give the Secretary of the Interior one part of the administration and to confer jurisdiction for another portion upon the Agricultural Department. We are to learn and conform to another chief's ideas of running these reserves and be a shuttlecock between the two departments.

There are 46,000,000 acres of public domain in these reservations. This tract includes practically every stick of timber in certain counties, so that there is no chance to get a load of wood except off of one of these reservations. It takes all the grazing ground of a number of counties. When these great reserves were set apart we were told they would only be used as conservators of the water and our rights to graze would not be disturbed. That policy has been changed several times, and now this bill purposes converting it into game preserves, buffalo farms, etc. For years a company has been pleading with Congress for a lease of a million acres of Government ground for a buffalo pasture and many members favored giving it to them. This bill provides for such a scheme. We want none of it in Colorado.

Now, we have reached some kind of a conclusion with the Secretary of the Interior, with great trouble and after long delay. As a result of the delay and the troubled condition the settlers generally are now so prejudiced against these reservations in Colorado that they are, as it were, up in arms for the repeal of every reservation in the State. These reservations are the subject of enmity on the part of the people. You establish a lot of English game preserves for the sporting elements of the country and no uncertain sound will come from the deluded settlers that you led into such a trap. Now, if I have time, I would like to have read at the Clerk's desk what the secretary of the Live Stock Association says about these reservations. We had this question up before the Committee on the Public Lands three or four days ago upon a leasing bill.

I hope I may have time to have read this letter, which gives the ideas of the Live Stock Association whose stock grazes on these lands that are included in these reservations. These are the persons who were enticed into, in a manner, acquiescing in the reservations on the repeated assurance that the Government would make no use of ground, but would protect the timber as a conservator of the water supply and permit the usual grazing privileges on the public domain. This letter gives the local opinions as to this policy and how it has developed. I suppose now the fish, game, and buffalo preserve must take the place of the cow, horse, and sheep, that the necessities of the poor shall be subverted for the amusement of those with much leisure to pleasantly dispose of.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION,
Denver, Colo., May 29, 1902.

Hon. JOHN C. BELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I desire to sincerely thank you for your statement made before the House Committee on Public Lands yesterday in reference to the matter of forest reserves.

You were perfectly correct in your statement that the Western people are opposed to any extension of these reserves, and also bitterly opposed to the mistaken proposition of the Government in excluding live stock from the reserves already set aside.

I have traveled all over the Western States and Territories during the past four years in connection with the work of this association, and there is not a live stock organization in the West that has not and would again pass resolutions opposing these two propositions. In the first place, these reserves are usually set aside upon the petition of the National Forestry Association, with headquarters in some codfish district in Massachusetts or Maine, the members of which know no more about the Western conditions and Western reservations than a Filipino does about Latin. These petitions are backed up by secretaries of perfunctory chambers of commerce and commercial organizations, who generally bring about the order of the Government, which is not opposed by stockmen for the reason that they are too busy with their duties on the ranges and ranches.

In Utah you are aware that there recently has been 2,000,000 acres of land withdrawn from the Uinta Mountains. This is the only tract of land in the mountains of Utah that has not already been set aside as a reserve. If this territory is set aside as a reserve, there will be no land in the State of Utah in which stock can graze in the summer time, it being impossible for them to live in the deserts. This will be a severe blow to the live-stock industry of Utah. In the sand hills of western Nebraska they have withdrawn vast tracts of sand hills for the purpose of a reservation. There is not a tree on hundreds of miles of this land, and never will be. It is only fit for grazing purposes, and never will be fit for anything else.

These reservations generally include tracts of agricultural and grazing lands, and the exclusion of stock from the use of these grasses is a hardship upon the stockmen at this time when grazing land and grasses are so scarce.

There is only one section in the West that I know of where the people seem to be in favor of the extension of reservations, and that is in a portion of Wyoming.

Yours, very truly, C. F. MARTIN, Secretary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one of very great importance, and the questions involved in it should be carefully considered before action is taken. The committee was not unanimous in its opinion relative to this matter. A minority report was made and signed by four of the members of the committee. We believe that it involves, as has been already stated, an unnecessary multiplication of offices, and it seems to me that the proposition involved in this bill is like taking the mountain to Mahomet instead of Mahomet to the mountain.

In the Department of the Interior we have different bureaus and divisions, with the officers looking after the public lands today, not only the public lands within the forest reserves, but the public lands outside of the forest reserves. In the Department of Agriculture there is one bureau looking after forestry, especially in its scientific aspect. Now, the proposition of this bill is not to take the one bureau or one division in the Department of Agriculture and put it in the Department of the Interior, where they have the officers already adapted to looking after the public domain, but it is to take the business of the Interior Department over to the Department of Agriculture, where they have but the one bureau. Then we will have two rival jurisdictions, you might say; in other words, they do not take from the Department of the Interior the questions relating to the adjudication and care of public lands and forests outside of the forest reserves, but they do take from it the care of the lands and forests in the reserves.

The Bureau of Forestry of the Department of Agriculture under this bill would simply have charge of the lands within the forest reserves, and the forests outside of the reserves would be still left to the Department of the Interior. Now, it seems to me that if we are going to make any change in this matter at all it were better to leave the forests as they are now, already in charge of the Interior Department, where they have all the officers and all the machinery necessary to care for it, and transfer the Bureau of Forestry of the Agricultural Department to the Interior Department. If they need more help, if they need another bureau, put it in the Department of the Interior. If any transfer ought to be made, it seems to me that the Bureau of Forestry ought to be taken from the Agricultural Department, with its officers, and placed under the Department of the Interior.

The Interior Department has its rangers, forest superintendents, and all its officers to look after the putting out of fires. They can go outside of the forest reserves onto the public lands generally, and it seems to me if we make this change we will still have to keep these officers to look after the forests of the public lands outside of the reserves. In other words, we would have a duplication of officers and a duplication of expenses that we have now. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, there are two parts of this bill which treat of entirely separate subjects. If this were simply the establishment in forest reserves of game reserves, I would have no objection to the bill, but the provision which is contained in the first section of this bill is that there shall be transferred from the Interior Department the administration of the forest reserves of this Government, namely, 46,000,000 acres of forests. We have now a complete corps of officers to attend, not only to the forest reserves, but also to the entire forest public lands, and they consist of 531 employees, most of them called rangers.

For the Government now to transfer to the Agricultural Department the care of the forest reserves would of necessity require the creation of a new force. In other words, the Agricultural Department would have control of a certain part of the public domain and still the rangers in the Interior Department would be retained in order to take care of and prevent forest fires on the public lands that are not within the forest reserves. Consequently, it creates rival jurisdictions and rival bureaus. Here is a line which marks the space between the forest reserve and the public forest timber not in the forest reserves.

The Agricultural Department would have jurisdiction of all trespasses, of all offenses committed on one side of that line, and on the other side of that line the Interior Department would have jurisdiction. The result would be that you would have to nearly double your force in order to get a proper and efficient administration of both the public land and the forest reserves. Besides that, there are certain legal questions always arising, questions as to whether a man has complied with the terms of the homestead law or the terms of any other law under which he has attempted to gain title to the land, or whether or not he has committed a trespass upon either the public lands or upon the forest reserves, and consequently you will have conflicting policies and conflicting jurisdiction arise.

It is true that there is in the Agricultural Department what is called a Forestry Bureau, and a very excellent one of its kind; but that bureau was not inaugurated for the purpose of attending to these large tracts of land. Its duties relate more to the issuing of scientific works on how properly to plant and rear forests, and at what stage timber ought to be cut. Its work is more in the nature of scientific work than the personal supervision of these reserves. When legal questions arise as to whether a person is entitled to land under a certain law of the United States, whether it is in these reservations or upon the public domain, that question goes to the Interior Department for settlement. In other words, they have a complete machinery there now, not only for the purpose of administering the laws, but also for policing the forest reserves and the other public lands covered with forests. It seems to me that to divide this, to say that 46,000,000 acres in tracts scattered over the country should be transferred to the Agricultural Department, would result in nothing but confusion.

If an officer of the United States found that somebody was doing something wrong on a forest reserve, he would not go to the Agricultural Department, because the legal machinery is not there; and in any other case where it was necessary to put the legal machinery of the Government into operation it would be necessary to go to the other Department. These officers would be answerable to the Agricultural Department, when the final determination of the matter would be in the Interior Department. So, it seems to me, it would result in nothing but confusion. It will result in bureaucracy. It will result in almost doubling the number of men who will be necessary properly to patrol these two different classes of public lands. For those reasons, it seems to me, the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado one minute in which to answer the question of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has four minutes remaining.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman if this law is not intended further to protect the existing forests and to secure to coming generations the advantages incident to the preservation of those forests, and if the opposition to this bill in many parts of the West—I do not say in the gentleman's case—is not largely due to selfish business reasons?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; not in my judgment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am asking for information.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not opposing this upon the ground of any opposition to forest reserves. I am opposing it upon the ground that it is a multiplication of officers, and that you are dividing between two departments the questions that will arise instead of keeping them all under one central head.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will not the enactment of this law tend to preserve the forests?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it has no provisions relating to preservation. It is only a question as to which of two departments shall control.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has three minutes remaining.

Mr. LACEY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM].

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Public Lands I am heartily in favor of this bill. It is here because of a specific recommendation of the President of the United States. I will ask the Clerk to read in my time that portion of the President's message dealing specifically with this subject.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At present the protection of the forest reserves rests with the General Land Office, the mapping and description of their timber with the United States Geological Survey, and the preparation of plans for their conservative use with the Bureau of Forestry, which is also charged with the general advancement of practical forestry in the United States.

These various functions should be united in the Bureau of Forestry, to which they properly belong. The present diffusion of responsibility is bad from every standpoint. It prevents that effective cooperation between the Government and the men who utilize the resources of the reserves, without which the interests of both must suffer. The scientific bureaus generally should be put under the Department of Agriculture. The President should have by law the power of transferring lands for use as forest reserves to the Department of Agriculture. He already has such power in the case of lands needed by the Departments of War and the Navy.

The wise administration of the forest reserves will be not less helpful to the interests which depend on water than to those which depend on wood and grass. The water supply itself depends upon the forest. In the arid region it is water, not land, which measures production. The western half of the United States would sustain a population greater than that of our whole country to-day if the waters that now run to waste were saved and used for irrigation. The forest and water problems are perhaps the most vital internal questions of the United States.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill simply authorizes the President by proclamation to transfer certain of the forest reserves of the country, which have been finally marked, to the Department of Agriculture to be administered by that Department. It does not transfer the question of titles or of legal administration, but simply the control and protection of the forests to the Agricultural Department; and, in my judgment, it will be a long step in advance in the cause of forestry protection. I believe the President was right when he recommended this specific legislation. This bill is before the House in accordance with the recommendation of the President, and I sincerely hope that it may become a law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why can not every advantage to be gained by this bill be gained by administering this in the Interior Department?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Because the Forestry Bureau is a scientific bureau, which studies the subject from a scientific standpoint, and the care of our forests properly belongs to this scientific bureau of the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why would it not be better to transfer that scientific bureau to the Interior Department, which has the actual administration of the forests?

Mr. NEEDHAM. I think the answer is given in the President's message, because the scientific part certainly properly belongs to the Agricultural Bureau. I hope the bill will pass.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, without committing myself to all the provisions of this bill, I am unqualifiedly in favor of that provision which transfers the forestry division of the Interior Department to that of Agriculture. There is nothing whatever in the suggestion that this bill, if passed, will multiply offices. The Agricultural Department can administer and care for the forest reserves just as economically as the Interior Department, and I believe will get better results.

It ought to be transferred, because forestry is akin to agriculture; and if there is anything in the question of forestry, it should be taught by those interested in it. The people ought to be educated to the importance of forestry as a business. They ought to be made to understand that our trees are one of our greatest sources of wealth that now exists, and should be preserved, cultivated, and utilized in the most economical way. A proper administration of the national reserves will be an object lesson for all the people, and the department which will give the most attention to that feature of it is the one that ought to have the control of them.

The President is right in asking this transfer, and the public will sustain him in maintaining the reserves in a business-like way. We are wasting—we are wasting, I repeat—rapidly one of the great items of wealth by permitting our timber to be destroyed. In fifty years we will realize our mistake. This bill provides that no enlargement of a forest reserve nor a new one shall be made without the consent of the governor of the State, which does not exist in the present law, and in that respect defers to local sentiment more than the existing law.

Mr. RODEY. Why not have that right extended to the Territories?

Mr. McRAE. I am perfectly willing to do that. I presume, however, it was not done because the governor of a Territory is the creature of the President, while the governor of a State is not. What I want to emphasize more than anything else is this: We have started to establish and maintain forest reserves. Public sentiment justifies it, not only in the communities in which they exist, with few exceptions, but throughout the length and breadth of our common country; and when the Interior Department has surveyed the boundaries and fixed the title, I think it should then turn the reserve over to the Agricultural Department to administer.

The work of one ceases where the other begins. When established we want men to handle it who can teach the agriculturists about the different kinds of timber, and the value of it, and how to utilize it, when to cut the trees, when it is ripe—how to utilize it so as to get the most out of it. In order to accomplish this result I am willing, if necessary, to array myself against those who want free grazing furnished by the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we ought not to hesitate to take up and consider this bill. If there is anything in it that gentlemen want to strike out, that can be done. There are some amendments that ought to be made, I know. I have one myself, but the administration should be in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Colorado, and then the gentleman from Iowa can conclude.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, the objection to the position of the gentleman from Arkansas is this: There is no objection to the transfer of the supervision of all public forest lands, including the forest reserves, to the Agricultural Department, if you will do it, or retain it in the Interior Department. Either is all right; but what I object to is cutting the lands in two, giving one-half of it to the Agricultural Department and half of it to the Interior Department. How can there be good administration of these forest reserves or the public land if you are going to have the administration of part of it in one department and part of it in another department.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are not all the forest reserves here set apart to be reserved as forest reserves transferred to this Bureau in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And the only forests that are kept under the Interior Department are those that have not been made forest reserves and are still part of the public domain?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are still a part of the public domain.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And subject to entry?

Mr. SHAFROTH. And subject to entry.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And subject to be cleared for agricultural purposes?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, not being forests, no part of the forestry question is concerned?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; there are purely forestry questions concerning them, because you will find that a large part of the land called the public domain is like the forest reserves and never will be taken up, because not fit for agricultural purposes. When forest fires get in there they create as much havoc and destruction as when they get into the forest reserve. They are so similar you can not tell where the forest reserves end and the public forests begin, and consequently will have men patrolling one side of an imaginary line on the public land and yet in the forest reserves have another force. Conflicting administration and conflicting jurisdiction will surely result.

Mr. McRAE. Will the gentleman refer me to the statute appointing rangers except on forest reserves?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know as I can call the gentleman's attention to where it is, but they do supervise and do put out forest fires on all public lands, and my impression is there are forest rangers, not only for forest reserves, but for the public domain.

Mr. McRAE. I think the gentleman from Colorado is mistaken.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You will find them going onto the public domain and attempting to put out the fires there. They have a general supervision of all the timber of the country, and I know the Interior Department has a number of inspectors that go all over the country examining into cases of trespass and as to violation of the law as to leaving camp fires and as to forest fires, irrespective as to whether they were in the forest reservations or on the public domain.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is referring to the inspectors of fraudulent titles.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, in the minute remaining I wish to say to the House that in the Committee of the Whole any question about the propriety of this bill that may come up, and any amendment that ought to be made can be presented. The only question now before the House is whether this measure, which was suggested by the President of the United States in his annual message, shall have the consideration of this House.

As to the character of that consideration, and the propriety of passing the bill that matter can be fully considered when we get into Committee of the Whole. I hope we will have a unanimous vote to consider this bill. As to what finally to do with it will be a question the House, when it comes into committee, can consider, and in its wisdom will do what is right. The proposition to take care of the forest reserves is of vital importance and worthy of the highest consideration for the Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and adopting the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHAFROTH) there were—93 ayes and 15 noes.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 9976) to encourage salmon culture in Alaska, and for the protection of persons engaged in the production thereof.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person or persons who heretofore or hereafter may establish and maintain a hatchery for the artificial production of salmon in the district of Alaska shall be entitled to the exclusive right of all fish that such hatchery may produce in excess of the normal product of such stream for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of the stream upon which such hatchery may be located.

SEC. 2. That when the average normal product of any stream on which a hatchery may be maintained shall have been taken within 1 mile of the mouth of said stream in any one year by any party or parties, then the remaining fish produced by said hatchery shall be the property of the owner or owners of said hatchery for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of said hatchery stream, and for a further distance of 4 miles in all directions in tide water it shall be unlawful for any party or parties to take fish of the kind propagated by the hatchery for whose protection this law is enacted.

SEC. 3. That in case other streams producing salmon of the same kind as those produced by the hatchery so protected shall intervene within a distance of 5 miles, then the normal product of such intervening stream shall be included in and added to the normal product of such hatchery stream, subject to the same conditions as are provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That the provisions and immunities of this act shall apply to barren steams and lakes that shall have been stocked with fish from artificial hatcheries.

SEC. 5. That in case two or more persons shall maintain hatcheries on the same stream or stockbarren lakes or streams, such persons shall be entitled to their proportionate number of adult fish so produced, and each party shall file a sworn statement of his or their output of young fry with the nearest United States commissioner each year.

SEC. 6. That native Indians may at all times take sufficient fish for food or for drying for winter use as food for themselves or families, and fishing with the rod shall be open and free for all persons.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to grant leases in accordance with the foregoing sections of this act, for a period not to exceed twenty years from the time the product of their hatcheries shall return, to all persons producing satisfactory proof of having maintained hatcheries on any of the streams of Alaska not producing, in a normal state, more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated by said hatchery; such lease subject to renewal at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That before any such lease shall be granted the party or parties making application therefor shall accompany such application with proof sufficient to establish the normal product of such stream; and no person shall be entitled to more than one hatchery lease or the privilege of stocking more than three barren lakes or streams and being protected in the product thereof.

Corporations owning and operating canneries shall be entitled to one hatchery franchise for each cannery so operated, and no more. All hatcheries that may have been started and maintained on streams producing more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated prior to the passage of this act shall be entitled to all immunities of hatcheries established on streams producing not more than 10,000, as provided in this section.

SEC. 8. That all rights and privileges granted by this bill are subject to the supervision and regulation and repeal by Congress.

During the reading of the bill the following took place:

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill is not lawfully before the House, coming from the Committee on Territories. This is a bill relating to fish and fish culture, and is a general bill, and therefore I have the right to make the point of order at this time that it has no status here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But a motion to suspend the rules would suspend those rules.

Mr. SULZER. No doubt about that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio knows that on individual suspension day a bill may be brought up that never has been before any committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But this bill has been sent to a committee, and the wrong committee.

Mr. SULZER. I differ with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. That does not disqualify it. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois will control the time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the House on two different occasions, and on both occasions has been printed in full in the RECORD. The bill was discussed last week in the House.

Let me now reiterate that this bill was prepared with much care, scrupulously considered by the Committee on the Territories, and after a painstaking hearing unanimously reported to the House. No one who understands the question will honestly oppose this bill. The people of Alaska—those most interested—want this bill to pass. The Commissioner of Fisheries is in favor of the bill, the Treasury Department favors it, and so far as I am aware there is no opposition to it.

All that the bill does is to give the Secretary of the Treasury the right to grant a lease for a period of twenty years to those people who, at their own expense, establish in Alaska fish hatcheries for the artificial propagation of salmon. The bill leaves the whole matter in the hands of Congress to repeal, change, or amend the law at any time, and gives the discretionary power of granting these leases to the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill especially provides that no individual, company, or corporation shall have more than one lease. It does not interfere with line or fly fishing. It gives the natives the right to take all the salmon they want for food, summer or winter. It does not take a dollar from the public Treasury, gives no monopoly, and grants no special privilege.

It simply says if a man establishes a fish hatchery for the purpose of increasing by artificial propagation the normal supply of salmon at his own expense, that the Government, in its discretion, can grant him a lease, so that he will know that he will be protected in a small way and get some return for his energy, his expenditure, and his industry.

The salmon industry is one of the great industries in Alaska. A great many canneries have been established there, are being established there, and will continue to be established. At the present time millions of dollars are invested. The product of these canneries is one of the most valuable products of the district and one of the great products of this country. It foots up every year into millions and millions of dollars. Besides the monetary question involved in this matter as an industry of the United States, the great point that I wish to make is this: I am in favor of protecting the fish and game of America, and I have always, since I have been a legislator, in my State and here in Washington, done all that I could to accomplish that purpose. It is a sad commentary on our civilization that by reason of our lack of judgment and foresight we have allowed the most valuable fish of the Atlantic to be exterminated, and we have allowed the larger wild animals of our country to become practically extinct.

I have absolutely no personal interest in the matter other than as a believer in the theory, which is growing every day, that it is the duty of one generation to protect the natural food products for the next generation. I believe it is incumbent on us to protect the fish and game of our country for future generations. I believe we will be derelict in our duty to posterity if we fail to do this. Another thing, I am a disciple of Sir Izaak Walton and a true friend of the wild fish and game. I protest against their wanton slaughter. While in Alaska I visited several of the big canneries, and I am familiar with their operation. I have seen the way the fish are caught, prepared, and canned. I have also visited several of the hatcheries there and witnessed the way the salmon can be propagated, so that if the Government in some way will protect the people who are propagating salmon the fish will never become exterminated, and the supply, instead of diminishing, will undoubtedly be increased.

Of course, we know that canned salmon is one of the staple diets of the world, and I believe nine-tenths of the supply of the world is produced by the canneries of Alaska. I believe the statistics will show that for the last ten years the value of the supply of canned salmon that comes from Alaska will amount to several million dollars a year, and it will probably average a great deal more in the years to come, because new canneries are being established all the time.

This bill is intended to give a little protection to the men who are willing to invest their money in salmon fish hatcheries in Alaska for the purpose of propagating the salmon and increasing the supply, giving these men the privilege of catching part of the salmon that will come back.

Unless something is done to increase the normal supply, it will be only a few years when the salmon of Alaska will be exterminated. There was a time when salmon were just as plentiful on the Atlantic coast as they are to-day in the streams of Alaska. But to-day there are only two streams in this country on the Atlantic Ocean where salmon go. Those two streams are in Maine. And so, sir, if the ruthless destruction of salmon on the Pacific coast, especially in Alaska, goes on a few years more at the rate it is going on now, these valuable fish will ere long be as scarce on the Pacific as they now are on the Atlantic.

Mr. Speaker, I know about this matter. I am familiar with this subject. I have visited Alaska, and I have carefully looked into this question. I have studied it. Every commercial body in Alaska, the people generally of Alaska, and the men who have established fish hatcheries there, all favor the passage of this bill. It is right, it is fair, it is just, it is honest, it is meritorious; and there ought to be absolutely no objection to it.

A peculiarity of the red salmon is that they will not frequent a stream unless it has a lake that they can reach, where they may lay and ripen before ascending to spawn in the small steams that put into the lake. Fully one-half of the small steams that produce a large percentage of the salmon of southeastern Alaska have no lakes on them, and fully three-fifths of those that have lakes are barred by falls between the lake and tidewater, over which fish can not pass; hence the scarcity of this valuable species of fish. The cohoe, dog, and humpback salmon, all inferior fish, take any stream on which there are spawning grounds. As a consequence they are very numerous and the valuable red salmon correspondingly scarce.

These valuable red salmon are fast becoming extinct, and, unless the Government institutes an extensive system of hatcheries and private parties are protected in the output of their hatcheries, the red salmon will in the near future be numbered with the buffalo. No private party, unless protected in the results of his industry, can withstand the enormous pressure of the great combine—the canning trust.

The proposed law simply gives to parties a legal right to property they create from the wastes of nature without taking anything of value from the public domain. If they produce ten where nature has produced but one, they surely should have the right to the increase. They also enrich the waters outside the protected zone by thousands of fish that will be public property.

Now, the propagator will not get all the fish—probably not more than one-half of the fish—outside of this protected zone. Others are there to take the fish, and everyone is free to take them, and inside the protected zone the normal quota of the stream is free to everybody until that amount is taken. When the salmon commence to run, under the provision of this law, the public would have free access to catch those salmon up to the normal quota of the stream, and that quota must be established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, by proof that can not be disputed, before he will grant a lease.

There are thousands of streams and lakes in Alaska that are barren because of falls near tide water which no fish can pass on the upward passage. By stocking these streams with young fry you reclaim a desert, yet this can be accomplished, and the commercial results would be enormous. To accomplish this, however, entails considerable expense. No policy will advance the settlement of Alaska as much as that provided for in this bill. Every industrious fisherman can and many will embark in salmon culture, and in connection with his hatchery will develop what there may be of agricultural resources that will never be utilized except in connection with some auxiliary industry.

Mr. Kutchin, the agent in Alaska for the Treasury Department, appeared before the committee in favor of this bill. He is very familiar with this subject. It is his duty to be. He said:

> I do not believe a regiment of men, under the existing law, can preserve the fisheries, for the reason that the machinery employed by the persons engaged in taking the fish is so stupendous that they will violate the spirit while preserving the letter of the law.
>
> I have cudgeled my brain a long time for some remedy, and have reached the conclusion that it rests on abundant artificial propagation. We know the success in the propagation of shad and other fishes. The habits of the salmon are unknown and it is experimental, but nothing can be accomplished unless it is initiated, and presuming that what is believed to be the fact in regard to other fish is true of salmon, they should be propagated and should return to the parent stream. I think that is the only remedy.
>
> Years ago the salmon rivers of Scotland were so teeming with salmon that the laboring men bargained that they should not be required to eat it more than three times a week. Now fresh salmon is a luxury for the rich, just as the whitefish on the lakes has become. They used to be packed in every little cove and port on Lakes Michigan and Superior, and now there are very few whitefish, and the packing of whitefish is almost gone.
>
> History agrees in all particulars that inland fishing is subject to extermination, and I believe that this will be true as to the salmon in Alaska to-day, that they are doomed within a reasonable period—within the life of any person here present.
>
> This bill, which we are here to discuss, is fair and equitable. I think that any man who is disposed to put in his time and money and effort should be protected, and I think this bill does it fairly and well, and that it does not encroach upon the rights of anybody. It does not give anybody the exclusive rights of streams.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just a few words more. The Committee on Territories carefully considered this bill and unanimously reported it. That committee made a report on this question of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, and any man who will read that report will find it both interesting and instructive. In my opinion it is the best and most exhaustive report that has ever been made on this great question—one of the greatest industries to-day in Alaska. Any man who will read this report and ascertain the facts will, I believe, favor this bill, unless he has some special interests to look after or wants to give the monopoly to the canning trust.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather remarkable piece of legislation. It is a radical change in the policy of this Government in the matter of fisheries. It is a proposition to establish a fish monopoly on the coast of Alaska. It is a proposition to transfer from the control of all the people the fisheries of that magnificent coast and put them under the control of a few canning companies.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] says he has been in Alaska. I have also had the pleasure of making an Alaskan trip, at the time that the gentleman from New York was there. At the time I was in Alaska a measure of this kind was being discussed by the canners. I was spoken to in regard to legislation of this character and the suggestion was made that it would be a good thing. I agree that it would be an excellent thing—for the companies which own canneries, for the men who annually outfit ships in California and Oregon, load them with Chinese, and proceed to the Northern seas to devastate the fisheries of that coast, the gentlemen who, contrary to the law, in defiance of the law, and in defiance of the rules and regulations established under the law, are depleting the fisheries of Alaska. This is a proposition to give them further opportunity to monopolize the fisheries of that coast. It is true that this bill——

Mr. SULZER rose.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman would not yield to me, and I must decline to yield. I have only five minutes.

Mr. SULZER. I only wanted to know whether the gentleman had read the report. If he had done so, I do not think he could make the speech he is making.

Mr. MONDELL. It is true that this bill purports only to create a monopoly as to fish in excess of the "normal run." But who is going to decide what the "normal run" of the salmon in any of the streams of Alaska is? Who but the men who now are established there in the canning business and who will be the only parties interested in determining what the "normal run" is?

They having depleted the streams so that the run is small—much less than formerly—we are to allow these gentlemen to come in and prove the "normal run," and then by establishing a cannery at the mouth of a stream they are to have a monopoly of the stream for all time to come.

The gentleman from New York says that this monopoly will be only for twenty years; the bill says for twenty years from the time when the product of the hatcheries return. Who is going to decide when the product of these hatcheries are to return? Who is there on earth who is going to be able to determine when the spawn from these hatcheries, having gone to the deep sea, shall all have returned to the streams where they were hatched?

This bill establishes practically for all time a monopoly of the fisheries of that magnificent coast—not only the fisheries of the small streams, but the fisheries of the enormous streams like the Karluk, which now runs 2,000,000 per annum, it is said. Who is to determine what the "normal run" of that stream is? And the Karluk canneries having established a hatchery at the mouth of that stream, who is going to determine when the "normal run" of that stream is caught? Who is going to determine when the product of those hatcheries have all returned?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have we not a governor up there who can make such a report?

Mr. MONDELL. We have a governor there, but I hardly think that the governor, though he is a very intelligent gentleman, will be able to tag all the small fry as they run into the sea and then determine when the last one has finally returned. I know and honor the governor, but he is finite; none but infinite wisdom could determine those facts.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why can not the governor make a report? We have increased his salary to $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. We have never had a report from the governor or anybody else advocating this sort of measure. The gentleman says that the agent of the Interior Department up there is favorable to it. The agent says that he does not believe that this is the way to settle the question of the depletion of the fisheries in Alaska. He says the proper method to pursue there, and I agree with him, is for the Government to establish hatcheries, for the Government to increase the number of fish on that coast, and I think the Government should do it by imposing a tax upon the canneries along the coast.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They certainly can get a report from the governor, and that is what the gentleman was inquiring about.

Mr. MONDELL. I have made no such inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I crave the attention of the House just for a few moments. This is like a great many other propositions that come on suspension day that you have got to catch on the fly. Sometimes it ought not to be caught. Other times it ought to be caught. I think this is one of the times that the catcher ought to have on his gloves. Now, what does this bill do? First, how much country does it cover? In reply to that question, it covers the whole Alaskan coast, every stream that empties into the ocean—the whole shooting match—thousands and thousands of miles. Those waters are said to teem with salmon. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] if he knows how many cannery establishments are up there now?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. How many?

Mr. SULZER. There are 59 canneries in this country.

Mr. CANNON. Fifty-nine cannery establishments in Alaska, and it is alleged—I don't know whether it is true or not—that they are so improvident in the taking of the salmon that extermination is threatened. In other words, 59 people or 59 corporations, with their great canning establishments, are there on the ground and selfishly are about to destroy the very industry upon which they feed. Now, that is the allegation. How much truth there is in it I do not know. Now, what does this bill propose to do?

Mr. SULZER. And another thing that the gentleman from Illinois does not know is, he does not know anything about this bill or the report. The gentleman agreed to read the report when the bill was up in the House last week, and he has not read the report.

Mr. CANNON. I do not have to read the report to read, when I see the bill, what I believe to be improvident.

Mr. SULZER. Well, the gentleman ought to know what he is talking about.

Mr. CANNON. I think I do know what I am talking about.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish the gentleman from Illinois would point out, if he can, right in connection with what he is saying, what right the Government would have left to propagate fish up there after these rights were given to these canneries?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, what does the bill do? I quote from the language of the bill:

That any person or persons who heretofore or hereafter—

You catch them coming and going—may establish and maintain a hatchery for the artificial production of salmon in Alaska, etc.

How big a hatchery? One-and-a-half-bushel box? One in a hogshead; one that will cost 30 cents; one that will cost $10,000? The bill does not say. I say here for the expenditure of $10 you can establish a hatchery. The bill is silent as to which kind of a hatchery. Now, what else?

Shall be entitled to the exclusive rights of all fish that such hatchery may produce in excess of the normal product of such stream for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of the stream upon which such hatchery may be located.

Now, where do they put their hatcheries? Down at the mouth of the stream, do they not?

Mr. SULZER. No.

Mr. CANNON. Well, near there.

Mr. SULZER. No.

Mr. CANNON. Near tide water.

Mr. SULZER. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there is where they get these salmon.

Mr. SULZER. No; they do not get the salmon there, either. The gentleman is not familiar with this subject.

Mr. CANNON. The doctors seem to disagree about it.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is not familiar with this subject.

Mr. CANNON. I am familiar enough to criticise this bill, and I am entitled to the right to do it, if it ought to be criticised.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman criticises everything.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly; I criticise every bill that in my judgment ought to be criticised, and there are a great number of them that do not get the criticism they might well have. [Applause.]

Shall be entitled to the exclusive right of all fish that such hatchery may produce in excess of the normal product of such stream for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tidewater from the mouth of the stream upon which such hatchery may be located.

And yet my friend says they do not fish there. If they do not fish there, then it is a barren right, because the way of a fish in the sea is one thing that could not be found out in ancient times, as well as that of a serpent on a rock and a bird in the air.

Now, what next?

SEC. 3—

Now, listen:

SEC. 3. That in case other streams producing salmon of the same kind as those produced by the hatchery so protected shall intervene within a distance of 5 miles, then the normal product of such intervening stream shall be included in and added to the normal product of such hatchery stream, subject to the same conditions as are provided in section 2 of this act.

That is, you can put your hatchery on one stream, and if there is another within 5 miles you are entitled to the fish there, because, I suppose, the fish might get mixed. Well, now, what next? Just listen:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to grant leases in accordance with the foregoing sections of this act, for a period not to exceed twenty years from the time the product of their hatcheries shall return, to all persons producing satisfactory proof of having maintained hatcheries on any of the streams of Alaska not producing, in a normal state, more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated by said hatchery; such lease subject to renewal at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, here we are, four, or five, or six thousand miles away—the Lord knows how far, I do not. Who is to execute this law? The Treasury Department. How? Through its agents sent up there. Now, I have had some experience, and I do not have to read the report that the gentleman refers to. I have had experience and observation touching the Treasury Department in Alaskan waters.

Mr. OTJEN. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. I have been helping make appropriations year in and year out touching the seal industry under the Treasury Department, and now I am not singling out any agent; but in that great industry I am here to say that in my opinion the heart of neglect, not to use a stronger term, has been found in that service about the Treasury agent. Why, he did not have to be greased to enable the parties in interest in catching seals to swallow him. [Laughter.] Now, you are going to establish these salmon fisheries and hatcheries and give this lease for twenty years, renewable for twenty years, to be placed under the Treasury Department, 2,000 miles from nowhere, and the agent of the Treasury Department becomes a means of oppression. You clothe these people with the right by this act to say, "We are here at the mouths of these streams and we are protected under the law and under our twenty years' lease," and the poor devil who wants to go there and make war against this monopoly will be in a pretty uncomfortable condition.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman notice that the report states that the salmon are supposed to return in about ten or eleven years to the place where they were hatched? Nobody knows just when, but that is the suggestion, and therefore, at the very least, the lease would be for thirty years, because the report gives ten years as the time when the first salmon would return.

Mr. CANNON. On this $200 hatchery that is to be established, if it cost that much, I suppose they would be in the hatching business every year, and I suppose it would be practically in perpetuity.

Mr. MONDELL. And according to their own report they would have at least thirty years under the first lease, because the first fish do not return for ten years.

Mr. CANNON. In the meantime the people on the ground are in possession, running these 59 canneries for profit, and threatening to exterminate this industry by their greed. Now, you do not enforce the law against them, nay, nay; but you say in addition to that, "You may make your hatchery upon the stream and we will legalize your possession for twenty years by this lease."

Mr. OTJEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. OTJEN. In order to select these fish that have been produced by the hatchery, ought not this bill to provide some means by which the fish could be branded?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, after all I want to treat the bill fairly. It attempts to do that. They say "above the normal catch." Who gets the normal catch? Why, the corporation that is in possession gets the normal catch, does it not? The fellow who goes in and undertakes to get the normal catch against the man who has the right to be there under this lease to take all above the normal catch would have a pretty hard time of it, would he not?

Why, he would get h—— up in that cold country. [Laughter.] Now, here is the whole thing. I want to speak respectfully of everybody. I am only stating how this appears to me. Oh, but the gentleman says I have not read the report. I have glanced at it. I am not industrious enough to read all the reports, and I have to take many things by reading the bill. It would take an angel of light, it would take a regiment of angels of light, with trumpets and shoutings and sweet music to convince me that this was a proper bill to pass after I have read it. [Laughter.] I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. SULZER. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has sixteen minutes.

Mr. SULZER. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, the title of this measure is "A bill to encourage salmon culture in Alaska, and for the protection of the persons engaged in the production thereof." Throughout my entire lifetime I have frequently experienced difficulty in attempting to talk upon subjects with which I was not familiar. I am laboring somewhat under that embarrassment upon this occasion. But having been requested to say a few words regarding this bill I will do so within the very narrow scope of my information upon the subject.

This bill, and the general consideration of the subject, came up before the Committee on Territories, of which committee I am a member. I have no interest in this bill nor the subject-matter to which it relates, more than the common patriotic interest possessed by every legislator here. Therefore I have no ambition and no desire to push through this House the legislation contained in this bill, if in the judgment of a majority here the bill ought not to pass.

We had before the Committee on Territories when we were considering this bill men who were familiar with the salmon fisheries in Alaska—men who were certainly competent and presumably honest. It was the judgment of these men that some legislation must be enacted, and enacted very soon, to encourage salmon culture in Alaska, or that very productive industry of that region will cease by reason of the total destruction of the salmon.

Now, it was the judgment of these men, as shown by their testimony, which in the form of a printed report is now before this House for consideration, that the provisions of this bill now before the House were both wise and fair, and if carried into legislation would greatly encourage the culture of salmon in Alaska.

It is a matter of common knowledge to every man on the Pacific coast that unless something is done to encourage the building of salmon hatcheries on that coast that that very valuable product of that region will soon become exhausted.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand, there are salmon fisheries in the gentleman's State and in the adjoining State. I want to ask the gentleman, if it is a fair question, if he would favor a bill of this character applied to his own State?

Mr. CUSHMAN. From my knowledge of the situation I certainly would. I certainly am not now engaged in trying to enact obnoxious legislation for other communities that I would object to if applied to my own.

Mr. MONDELL. You would be willing to have this provision extend to the State of Washington?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes, sir; I would. A number of men on this floor seem to oppose this bill because they seem to think it would, if enacted into law, tend to produce a monopoly in the salmon-fishing industry of Alaska. I believe that the men who oppose this bill on that ground are honest and sincere in their opposition, although I can not see the ground for their fears. Viewing this phase of the matter, it becomes important to know what constitutes a monopoly.

As to the establishment of future hatcheries, no man is named and no company is designated in this bill. The bill says whoever shall establish and maintain a hatchery shall have certain privileges. That language gives to every man on this floor the same right to establish a salmon hatchery in Alaska if he sees fit that is conferred on any other man. That certainly does not smack of monopoly. A bill that tends to create a monopoly is a bill that gives exclusive privileges to some people to the exclusion of all others. I believe that a man who puts his labor, his brains, and his money into a productive proposition has a right to have certain advantages in reaping the rewards of that enterprise that other people who hazarded nothing in the venture do not have.

Now, that is all there is in this bill. The man who spends his money in planting a salmon hatchery where there was none before under the terms of this bill is given a right to secure a part of the fish that his industry helps to create. No man would contend that a man who sowed a field in the spring in order that he might reap the harvest thereof in autumn was creating a monopoly. He is simply creating wealth by his individual industry, and the law, written and unwritten, gives such a man a first mortgage on the fruits of his own industry.

There is little or no difference, in my judgment, between that proposition and the one we are now considering. The same logic can readily be applied to both propositions. One man sows grain on barren land and reaps the harvest. The other man sows fish in a barren stream and asks that he be permitted not to reap the entire results thereof, but only a part. That don't seem to me to bear any resemblance to a monopoly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Take the first section of this bill, which provides—

That in case other streams producing salmon of the same kind as those produced by the hatchery so protected shall intervene within a distance of 5 miles, then the normal product of such intervening stream shall be included in and added to the normal product of such hatchery stream.

Suppose a stream in Alaska—and I assume that there are a great many of them that have never had any salmon produced on them—and the hatchery starts up there and puts in its small fry, and then proposes that for twenty years under this bill it shall have the normal product—that is, all above the normal product. Well, now, there is no normal product. And how is the Government to plant that stream in small fry and produce salmon if somebody is to come in and be entitled to all above the normal product? Does not that exclude the Government from planting fish in that stream?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Perhaps it does; but if that stream has existed a barren stream through all these years up to the present time, and the Government has taken no steps to plant a hatchery there and some one else now desires to do so, are we to say to the man who is ready to begin the work of hatching salmon now that he must stand aside and wait, because, forsooth, at some time in the dim, uncertain future the Government might be willing to build a hatchery there? Gentlemen have stated on this floor that if we do not pass this bill there can not be any monopoly in this business.

I guess there is no doubt about that, for if something is not done to encourage the hatchery of salmon in that region very soon, there will not be any product to monopolize. Again I say, Is there anything wrong in permitting the man who puts his money and his energy into the creating or the enlargement of a staple food product—is there anything wrong in permitting him to gather a portion of the results of his own labor and investment?

Mr. MONDELL. Has that policy been pursued anywhere else in the United States up to this time?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I undertake to say that the same or similar conditions do not exist anywhere else in the United States. Now, here is my eloquent young friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who is earnestly declaring that the Government at its own expense should put water on the unfruitful lands of this country in order to make them fruitful (in which I agree with him). But now, when it comes to the proposition of permitting a man to plant a fish hatchery on a barren stream in order to make the stream fruitful, he does not believe in that policy.

Mr. MONDELL. We propose no monopoly. We only propose that the Government dispose of these lands, and that does not make a monopoly.

Mr. CUSHMAN. But you propose that the man who sows on 160 acres in the spring shall reap what that land produces, and to the exclusion of other people, do you not?

Mr. MONDELL. If he pays for it, which these people do not do.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; for the good and sufficient reason that you can not sell a stream with a warranty deed. As I have already said, I have no especial interest in this bill. I regret that this matter might not have been the subject of discussion on this floor earlier in the session, in order that the people of Alaska might have had an opportunity to express themselves upon the subject. My only reason for advocating the passage of this bill is that it seems to me that it would tend to build up and replenish one of their great industries.

No man has a just right to suppose that I would intentionally advocate on this floor legislation that would be to the injury of the people of Alaska, or any of their material interests. By reason of the close commercial union between Alaska and the State of Washington, the interests of Alaska are the interests of the State of Washington. One word more and I will close my few remarks on this matter. This debate has again emphasized the need for a Delegate on this floor representing the people of Alaska.

The Committee on Territories has labored under disadvantages regarding every piece of legislation proposed for Alaska. There is no one on this floor authorized to speak for them. They should have a Delegate here who would be responsible to us on the one hand and responsible to his people at home on the other. Then upon occasions of this kind we would not labor under many of these embarrassments. I have a bill now on the Calendar of this House which has for its object the giving to the people of Alaska a Delegate in Congress, and before this session closes I hope to get it considered and passed. That is all I have to say upon this matter. I believed in the beginning that this was a good bill, and I believe so now.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the very purpose he has in view in opposing this bill is the same that gentlemen have in view who have been favoring it; in other words, to prevent a monopoly there, and also to prevent the waste of one of the most remarkable products with which nature has endowed this country.

We have seen our salmon disappear from the Kennebec, from the Penobscot, and from the Connecticut rivers, or almost utterly disappear from the waters of those streams, and we have the same danger confronting us in Alaska. Instead of the bill giving some special rights to the people who are fishing there, it provides that whoever will put in hatcheries there will have privileges in proportion to the hatcheries they put in and that they shall be permitted to reap as they may sow.

But, it has been said, Why not let the Government go on and appropriate money and put in the hatcheries? Why not compel these people who are fishing the streams to put in the hatcheries? Why not give them the privilege of taking the fish which they put in?

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose the gentleman from Iowa knows that under the present law the canners are obliged to put in hatcheries, but they have violated the law in that particular, and if they had not violated the law there would be no suggestion of decimation of the fisheries.

Mr. LACEY. Why, because they can take all the fish that come without putting in hatcheries. Here is a proposition that says to the canners "You may put in hatcheries and you may fish in proportion to the amount of fish you plant." It is a well-known fact, as well established as any fact in regard to salmon, that the fish come back to the same streams in which they are spawned, just as the bird comes back to the same nest or in the same locality where it was hatched. These fish come back to the same streams. They have been marked, experimentally, for several years in order to establish that fact.

If a hatchery is established and a stream is planted with a million fish, there is a reasonable certainty that a portion of them will return. Of course, there must be millions planted in order that thousands may return, because from the time the eggs are spawned they become the prey of everything that swims in the water. The fish eat the eggs and then the little salmon eat the still smaller salmon, and then he in his turn is eaten by a salmon a little larger; and so there must be a tremendous amount of surplus provided for. This bill encourages the location of hatcheries in Alaska and increases the product, and places the burden of it, not upon the Government, but upon the individuals who fish in those streams, and the monopolies referred to have only the right to take in those streams the increased amount of fish above the normal product, provided the hatcheries are established there. It encourages the increase of the fish and delays their extermination.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill provides, among other things, for stocking certain lakes now barren. I want to ask if that is not a departure in legislation—if, in fact, this whole thing is not a departure in legislation—and if the gentleman in his State of Iowa would favor anything of this sort.

Mr. LACEY. The quicker we depart from some of our past ways the better. I have pointed out the Kennebec, the Penobscot, and the Connecticut as examples of what we have allowed to be done in the past, and the gentleman says we are "departing from the sacred precedents of the past." I say the quicker we depart from those precedents which left the streams barren the wiser will be the people of this day and generation. If we do not learn something from the destruction of our natural resources in the past, we are unworthy to benefit by the future.

This is not a proposition for a monopoly; it is a proposition to encourage the planting of additional fish in Alaska, where they are now plentiful, and keep up the splendid supply that has made Alaska the richest fishery in the world. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there ought to be no objection to this bill. I am sure my friend from Illinois would not object to it if he understood it to be merely a question of increasing the supply rather than of creating a monopoly.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Territories, which considered this bill, I state that we gave full and thorough investigation to this subject. We heard a number of persons from Alaska, and the uniform testimony of all of them was that this bill was calculated to increase the output of salmon and increase the propagation of fish rather than to decrease it.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman if the committee heard anybody from Alaska except a gentleman who has a hatchery there and the agent of the Interior Department, and who is opposed to this bill, by the way. There is no other evidence in the report.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was also another gentleman, whose name I have forgotten. But I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming that I was up in Alaska myself last year and visited this locality. I am not interested in any cannery up there, nor in any company, nor in any hatchery. This gentleman who appeared before us stated that he had spent $10,000 of his own cash in establishing a hatchery in Alaska.

Mr. MONDELL. Did he have the monopoly of 1,600 miles of coast?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, sir; we do not propose to give any such monopoly in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. If they organize enough companies you will grant a monopoly of that extent.

Mr. GRAHAM. The bill simply provides that if one of these companies puts in $20,000, they can take back—how much? Simply the amount above the normal product of that stream to-day; that is, all above what is now taken out of the stream.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think that it is going to be an easy thing to decide what the "normal product" is?

Mr. GRAHAM. The question is simply this: The man who undertakes this business has to increase the product, because the canneries are to-day, without establishing any hatcheries, taking out all they can catch.

Mr. HULL. Can not the parties engaged in the salmon-catching business go out to sea and take these fish, it may be, miles away from shore? Or do they have to wait till the fish go into the streams or into a hatchery before they catch them?

Mr. GRAHAM. The fish have to come back to the place where they are born to spawn. All the evidence shows that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. I hope I may have one minute more.

Mr. SULZER. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. GRAHAM. The evidence produced before the committee shows that if you propagate a certain kind of young salmon they have a certain peculiarity. The evidence shows that that same stream will produce the same kind of fish. They will come back to the same place in which they were spawned without anything like "tagging." The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks how you can "tag" these fish. There is no necessity for "tagging" them. If you plant a certain kind of spawn—say the long-bodied salmon—in a certain stream, then the fish you afterwards catch in that stream are of the same kind—the long-bodied salmon.

Mr. MONDELL. Will not the gentleman qualify his statement by saying that that is the theory, but that both of the gentlemen who were before the committee stated specifically that they did not know as to its truth, that it was simply a theory, that no man had ever demonstrated it, and they did not know what was the fact?

Mr. CUSHMAN. That is exactly similar to that beautiful theory that exists in Wyoming—where my friend comes from—and Montana. The theory is that if a man puts his brand on a calf in the spring that he will get that animal back when it gets to be a cow. From experience of mine in the land of the "maverick" and the "rustler" I am prepared to testify that that is also simply a theory. It is a beautiful theory, but it does not always work out. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. It does in Wyoming; it may not in Montana or Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Allow me to state that ex-Governor POWERS, of Maine, who was a member of the subcommittee on this bill, claims to be an expert in regard to salmon fishery in his State, and he favors this measure.

Mr. MONDELL. Was there any suggestion to apply the measure to the Kennebec and the Penobscot?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not in this bill, but if anybody will establish hatcheries there I would favor giving them the benefit of this legislation.

Mr. SULZER. I now ask the gentleman from Illinois to use the balance of his time.

Mr. CANNON. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. And how much has the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield my two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think that if members of the House will take up section 4 of this bill they will find that it will throw some light on the subject. Under this section if parties deposit hatched salmon in a lake or a barren stream (as they may call it), then whether those fish or some others happen to come back there, the fact that they have been taken there establishes for the benefit of the parties depositing the spawn or young in that stream or lake an absolute monopoly of the salmon found in the waters.

It seems to me that the law which would be proper and wise on this subject would be a law providing that the men who are taking the salmon from the streams owned and controlled by the United States should be obliged to put young back again in sufficient numbers to replenish the waters from which they have taken the fish. If a bill saying that were proposed, I would cheerfully vote for it; but this bill has for its purpose the giving to some men rights belonging to the people of the United States for nothing.

The result will be the establishment of salmon-fishing monopolies in Alaska; and as soon as these salmon-fishing monopolies are established they will be consolidated, and you will have in this country, so far as salmon are concerned, just exactly what you have to-day in beef—a trust regulating the supply and the price. This is the start, and I hope there is not a Democrat here who will lend his assistance to the passage of a measure of this character. I hope, perhaps vainly, that there are very few Republicans who will.

Mr. SULZER. That is a good argument.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have studied the habits of fish for a good many years, and when anybody makes the statement that any one man is able to tell what the normal yield of a river is this year, and to tell to what extent it has been increased or diminished next year or the year after, I think he is drawing absolutely on his imagination. Then let us not forget the fact that such legislation will produce no end of litigation, by which those who have money and disposition to fight only will be benefited.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] to offer an amendment, which I will accept.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment as an additional section to the bill:

The SPEAKER. That can not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. COWHERD. Then I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the motion to suspend the rules be so modified as to include the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That any person, company, or corporation that has established or shall hereafter establish a cannery for canning salmon in the district of Alaska shall also establish and maintain a hatchery and shall return to the streams from which any salmon are taken at least ten times as many salmon each year as are taken from said stream for the use of said cannery; and any person violating this law shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $100 for each and every day a cannery is operated without maintaining a hatchery and returning salmon to the streams as herein provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the amendment plainly enough to understand exactly what it is.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I would like to explain it, he reserving the right to object. The proposition is simply to compel anyone establishing a cannery to maintain a hatchery at the same place and to return to the same stream at least ten times as many fish as are taken from it. I understand there is no law that governs that at present. It is simply a regulation of the Department, and that regulation they are not able to enforce. I do not pretend to be posted on this, but that is what I have been told.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall object, because I do not—well, I have no time to state my reasons, but I think I have good reasons for objecting and therefore do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, how many minutes have I left?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in the two minutes I have remaining I desire to state to the House that a philosopher has said that the man who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a benefactor of mankind. This bill is framed on that theory. If it becomes a law, it will surely increase a hundredfold the normal product of salmon. It will do so without taxing the people a cent or taking one dollar from the public Treasury. It will benefit the people of Alaska, the people of the Republic, and the people of all the world. I am surprised at the opposition to this bill.

The subtle tactics of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the covert manipulations of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] are beyond my comprehension. They can only be reconciled on the hypothesis of ignorance. We know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], after he gets through all his big appropriations—many of them as uncalled for as they are unjust—becomes in a spirit of repentance the "watchdog of the Treasury" and objects to every other measure that is brought up in the House.

But, sir, I repeat, this bill does not take a dollar from the Treasury. This bill does not create a monopoly. It does not grant any special privileges. It does not discriminate, it treats all the same, and is for the benefit of the many. I am as much opposed to monopoly as is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN], and if this bill created a monopoly, if it gave any man rights that any other man was not entitled to, I would be opposed to it, and I never would have introduced it.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN] glibly prates about monopoly. If he knows what he is talking about, he is talking for the greatest monopoly in Alaska—the canning trust—and if he does not know that, then he is ignorant of the facts in this case. I suggest that he read the report.

This bill is opposed to monopolies. It will destroy a monopoly. I know something of the canning trust. Whatever opposition this bill has comes from that monopolistic source. I say that the man who toils, who invests his own money, and creates artificially a thousand fish where nature creates only one, that he ought to have, to say the least, the right by law to a part of the increase his industry, his toil, and the sweat of his brow make possible, and that is all that this bill does. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 56, noes 56.

So, two-thirds not having voted for the bill, the motion to suspend the rules and passage was rejected.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request for the return of bills to the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 31, 1902.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1920) for the relief of Albert C. Brown.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 31, 1902.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 567) for the relief of H. B. Matteosian.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 31, 1902.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 19) for the relief of George A. Orr.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these several requests will be granted.

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I make a privileged report, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up a privileged report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House No. 235, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report the same with the recommendation that it be agreed to with the following amendments:

Lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "said motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for."

Line 9, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "measure."

Line 10, strike out the words "the act and amendments shall have been."

Add at the end of the resolution, "but this order shall not interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or conference reports."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let us have the resolution reported as amended.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The report is all right.

Mr. DALZELL. If the Clerk will report the resolution as it was introduced into the House, as changed by the interlined words in pencil, he can read the resolution as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate act (S. 3653) and the amendments thereto entitled "An act for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes;" and the consideration of the said measure shall continue privileged until disposed of; but this order shall not interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to inquire if this is the resolution as amended?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the amended resolution, as provided for in the report of the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. I think there is no objection to its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

VIEWS OF MINORITY ON FUR-SEAL BILL.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] this morning reported back the bill H. R. 13387 from the Committee on Ways and Means. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] desired me to ask that he have leave of the House to file the views of the minority some time during the present week, and I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] have leave to file the views of the minority on the bill H. R. 13387——

Mr. PAYNE. During the present week.

The SPEAKER. During the present week. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let the title of the bill be reported. Several gentlemen have asked for it.

Mr. PAYNE. It is the fur-seal bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 172. A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the Morgan Memorial Association, of Winchester, Va., certain Revolutionary trophies at Allegheny Arsenal, Pittsburg, Pa.;

H. J. Res. 113. A joint resolution authorizing the use and improvement of Governors Island, Boston Harbor;

H. R. 989. An act to authorize the Light-House Board to pay to Chamblin, Delaney & Scott the sum of $1,704.46;

H. R. 13614. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. White;

H. R. 13037. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis W. Anderton;

H. R. 12983. An act granting an increase of pension to Eleanor Emerson;

H. R. 12779. An act granting an increase of pension to George Chamberlin;

H. R. 12428. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth G. Getty;

H. R. 12422. An act granting an increase of pension to David Topper;

H. R. 11288. An act granting an increase of pension to William E. Ball;

H. R. 11124. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Scott;

H. R. 9833. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret McCuen;

H. R. 9695. An act granting an increase of pension to Evaline Jenkins;

H. R. 8487. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. Crist;

H. R. 8134. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Dunn;

H. R. 7560. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Butler;

H. R. 6718. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew R. Jones;

H. R. 6625. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary S. Downing;

H. R. 6330. An act granting an increase of pension to William D. Tanner;

H. R. 6037. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Holcomb;

H. R. 5551. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Edwarde Price Lance, alias Edward Price;

H. R. 5475. An act granting an increase of pension to August Schill, alias August Silville;

H. R. 2857. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances C. Haughton;

H. R. 2623. An act granting an increase of pension to John Smith;

H. R. 2289. An act granting an increase of pension to Pitsar Ingram;

H. R. 2286. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Etna Poole;

H. R. 13395. An act granting a pension to Arthur J. Bushnell;

H. R. 13211. An act granting a pension to Melissa Burton;

H. R. 12418. An act granting a pension to Matilda C. Clarke;

H. R. 10782. An act granting a pension to Ole Steensland;

H. R. 9794. An act granting a pension to Zebulon A. Shipman;

H. R. 9606. An act granting a pension to Charles Blitz;

H. R. 7397. An act granting a pension to Louisa White;

H. R. 5248. An act granting a pension to Frances A. Tillotson;

H. R. 4542. An act granting a pension to Eliza J. West;

H. R. 10144. An act to donate to the State of Alabama the spars of the captured battle ships Don Juan d'Austria and Almirante Oquendo;

H. R. 10995. An act to regulate the introduction of eggs of game birds for propagation;

H. R. 13168. An act to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts;

H. R. 13895. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

H. R. 14189. An act to permit the occupancy of the public-printing building by the Grand Army of the Republic; and

H. R. 14589. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7319. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Anthony;

H. R. 13359. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8752. An act authorizing the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz County, Ariz., to issue bonds for the erection of a court-house and jail for said county;

H. R. 2901. An act to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams; and

H. R. 14018. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5505. An act adjusting certain conflicts respecting State school-indemnity selections in lieu of school sections in abandoned military reservations—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4616. An act to grant title to the town of Juneau, Alaska, of lands occupied for school purposes, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. R. 107. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of the proceedings at the unveiling of the statue of the Count de Rochambeau—to the Committee on Printing.

H. R. 12648. An act establishing a regular term of United States district court in Roanoke City, with Senate amendments—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2764. An act for the relief of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 5213. An act providing for the selection and retirement of medical officers in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 2276. To fix the time of holding the circuit and district courts for the southern district of West Virginia;

S. 2510. An act extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Oacoma, S. Dak.; and

S. R. 91. Joint resolution providing for the publication of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BISHOP, for five days, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. BOUTELL, indefinitely, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the public civil revenues and expenditures in the Philippine Archipelago—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of communications relating to the Gasparilla Island Military Reservation—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a supplemental report on the transport service at San Francisco—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copies of the journals and minutes of the first legislative assembly of Porto Rico—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an additional appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting an estimate of appropriation for electrical devices in vaults in certain public buildings—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TAWNEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13387) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2303); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11742) granting certain lots in Gnadenhutten, Ohio, to Gnadenhutten special school district, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2305); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. PRINCE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2497) to correct the military record of John P. Evans, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2306); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6405) removing the charge of desertion from the record of William Harig, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2307); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5079) for the relief of George P. White, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2308); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 14798) to establish a laboratory for the study of the criminal, pauper, and defective classes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 14799) to incorporate the International Bureau of Information—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 14800) amending an act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," approved March 3, 1899, and an act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BELLAMY: A bill (H. R. 14801) to make Wilmington, N. C., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14802) for the purchase of real estate, for revenue and customs purposes, at Wilmington, N. C.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 14803) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell or exchange the site for the United States post-office and court-house at Cumberland, Md.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 14804) to prevent the use of houses, rooms, or tenements for immoral purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: A resolution (H. Res. 284) directing the Secretary of War to inform the House of the number of promotions made in the Army since April 1, 1898, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BISHOP: A bill (H. R. 14805) granting a pension to Sarah A. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROUSSARD: A bill (H. R. 14806) granting an increase of pension to Mary Clayton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14807) granting an increase of pension to Josephine White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14808) granting an increase of pension to Emile Breaux—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14809) granting an increase of pension to Marie A. Daigle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14810) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Broussard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CASSINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 14811) granting a pension to Mrs. Almedia J. Robinson—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 14812) for the relief of Matilda Elizabeth West—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DAHLE: A bill (H. R. 14813) granting a pension to William Mennecke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 14814) granting a pension to Herman J. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 14815) granting a pension to M. Weiser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A bill (H. R. 14816) granting a pension to U. L. Daniels—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14817) for the relief of Edward W. Sprague, Jasper Sprague, and James B. Hovey—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KERN: A bill (H. R. 14818) granting an increase of pension to Christopher C. McCord—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14819) granting an increase of pension to William H. Rupert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14820) for the relief of Conrad Zaehringer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 14821) granting an increase of pension to Ananias Cameron—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LESTER: A bill (H. R. 14822) granting a pension to James H. Smith—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LITTAUER: A bill (H. R. 14823) granting an increase of pension to William Hawley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOSS: A bill (H. R. 14824) granting a pension to Sarah T. Hendrick, widow of Pleasant F. Hendrick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14825) to correct the military record of Conrad Bailey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14826) to correct the military record of Thomas Fowler—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 14827) granting a pension to William B. Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 14828) granting an increase of pension to William H. Mize—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 14829) for the relief of the heirs of John Walston—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 14830) for the relief of the estate of Peter H. Knight—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 14831) granting an increase of pension to Robert Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14832) granting an increase of pension to Andrew P. Gilman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THAYER: A bill (H. R. 14833) to advance one grade Chief Engineer David Smith, United States Navy, retired—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 14834) granting an increase of pension to James P. Freeman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOWIE: A bill (H. R. 14835) for the relief of George O. Baker—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RODEY: A bill (H. R. 14836) granting a pension to Rebecca L. Chambers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14837) granting a pension to John H. Roberts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN of Maine: Petition of American shipmasters, urging the passage of House bill 163, to pension employees and dependents of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BELL: Resolutions of United Mine Workers' Unions of Williamsburg and Bluffside, Colo., favoring the passage of the Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BOWERSOCK: Resolutions of the joint convention of Bankers' Associations of Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma and Indian Territories, opposing the branch banking bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CAPRON: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Warren, R. I., for the passage of a bill to forbid Government liquor selling in Soldiers' Homes and immigrant stations—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. CASSINGHAM: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Mrs. Almedia J. Robinson—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALZELL: Resolution of North American Gymnastic Union of Pittsburg, Pa., in regard to House bill 12199—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. DRAPER: Resolutions of Electrical Workers' Association No. 3, of New York, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolution of Fully Disabled Veterans' Association, Brooklyn, N. Y., indorsing Senate bill 4850, with the exception of the amendment to section 2, as adopted by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EMERSON: Petitions of citizens of Chesterfield, Elizabethtown, Essex, and other towns in the State of New York, for the passage of House bill 7674, providing for the purchase of Fort Ticonderoga, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Resolutions of Branch 34, Boston Postal District National Association of Letter Carriers, on the death of the late Hon. Amos J. Cummings—to the Committee on the Library.

Also, resolutions of the Ladies' East Side Anti-Trust Association of the sixteenth assembly district of New York City, for the repeal of the tariff on meats—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Purcell Commercial Club, Purcell, Ind. T., opposing the passage of the Flynn bill or the Moon bill—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Petition of citizens of Syracuse, N. Y., and numerous citizens of Washington, Kansas, and Michigan, favoring the passage of House bill 6565, known as the Grosvenor pure-fiber bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOWELL: Resolutions of McKinley Club of Elizabeth, N. J., and Edward G. Brown Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Hoboken, N. J., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HULL: Resolutions of United Mine Workers' Union No. 1197, Des Moines, Iowa, favoring the passage of the Hoar-Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of North American Gymnastic Union of Des Moines, Iowa, in relation to House bill 12199—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. IRWIN: Papers to accompany House bill 5039, granting a pension to Marium Barton—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JACKSON of Kansas: Resolution of the Bankers' Association of Kansas, Indian Territory, and Oklahoma Territory, in opposition to the so-called branch banking bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, resolutions of United Mine Workers' Union No. 735, Pittsburg, Kans., and No. 647, of Mineral, Kans., favoring the restriction of the immigration of cheap labor from the south and east of Europe—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KERN: Petition of Thomas Knoebel, of East St. Louis, Ill., in support of House bill 123, for the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, resolutions of Zealous Lodge, No. 217, Locomotive Firemen, of East St. Louis, Ill., favoring the passage of the Hoar-Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of pharmacists of St. Clair County, Ill., for amendments to House bill 7189, to increase the efficiency of the Marine-Hospital Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Bricklayers and Masons' International Union No. 2, of Belleville, Ill., in relation to the employment of union bricklayers and masons in the erection of the naval dry dock at New Orleans, La.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of C. S. Thomas, of East St. Louis, Ill., favoring Senate bill 2172, for the payment of certain medical expenses of sick officers and enlisted men—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of St. Clair Lodge, No. 353, Machinists' Union, of Belleville, Ill., favoring appropriation for naval deficiency—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Mexican war veterans, favoring pension for all survivors of the Mexican war—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, resolutions of Retail Merchants' Association of Belleville, Ill., favoring House bill 9352—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Chicago Federation of Labor, favoring appropriation for hydrographic survey and the amended immigration bill—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, resolutions of Master Plumbers' Associations of East St. Louis, Ill., and Belleville, Ill., favoring contracts for Government buildings to be let directly to plumbers and not to a general contractor—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Resolutions of Electrical Workers' Brotherhood No. 3, of New York City, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LITTAUER: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to William Hawley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: Resolution of the Board of Trade of Bangor, Me., and Board of Trade of Thomaston, Me., urging the passage of House bill 163, to pension employees and dependents of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McCALL: Petition of citizens of Massachusetts protesting against the taking of the lands of the Sioux Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the board of aldermen and common council of Medford, and aldermen of the city of Somerville, Mass., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of Provincetown Maritime Exchange, in favor of a law to pension men of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. NAPHEN: Resolutions of the common council of Medford, Mass., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of the Provincetown Maritime Exchange, in favor of a law to pension men of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. NEVILLE: Petition of Sylvester St. John, John Hoge, and others of Kearney, Nebr., in favor of House bill 7475, for additional homesteads—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. NORTON: Paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Moss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNE: Papers to accompany House bill 8663, for the removal of the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Woodford—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAY of New York: Paper to accompany House bill 4082, granting a pension to Jacob Hull—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill 14162, granting a pension to Charity A. Seibell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama: Petition of John H. Martin and Henry B. Lindsay, heirs at law of John Walston, of Florence, Ala., for reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to James P. Freeman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RYAN: Resolutions of Brotherhood of Electrical Workers No. 3, of New York, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: Petition of Simon Kenton Lodge, No. 345, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, of Covington, Ky., favoring the passage of the Hoar-Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SULZER: Resolutions of Brotherhood of Electrical Workers No. 3, of New York, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. TIRRELL: Resolutions of Provincetown Maritime Exchange, urging the passage of House bill 163, to pension employees and dependents of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS of Iowa: Petition of Wallar Post, No. 223, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, favoring House bill 13986, to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 3, 1902.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, certain information relative to quarters rented by the State Department, giving the location, area of floor space occupied, and annual rental thereof; which, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented a petition of Puget Sound Harbor, No. 16, American Association of Masters and Pilots, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men in the Life-Saving Service, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Okanogan Protective Stock Association, of Conconully, Wash., remonstrating against the leasing of the public domain in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ELKINS presented a petition of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Parkersburg, W. Va., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Bluestone Lodge, No. 446, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Bluefield; of Local Division No. 511, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Kenova; of Local Division No. 408, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Kanawha, and of Local Division No. 140, Order of Railway Conductors, of New River, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen No. 544, of Point Pleasant; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1227, of Montgomery; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1882, of Cedar Grove; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1729, of Central; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1788, of Maybeury; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1808, of Switchback; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1888, of Caperton; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1905, of Mount Hope; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1907, of Coaldale; of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1910, of Elverton, and of United Mine Workers of America, Union No. 1945, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14046) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and to submit a report thereon. I wish to give notice that I shall call the bill up for consideration at as early a day as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a joint resolution (S. R. 110) empowering the State of Minnesota to file selections of indemnity school lands upon public lands in Minnesota, otherwise undisposed of, after the survey thereof in the field, and prior to the approval and filing of the plat of survey thereof; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 106) empowering the State of Minnesota to file its selections for indemnity school lands upon public lands in Minnesota, otherwise undisposed of in townships, immediately upon the survey thereof in the field and prior to the approval and filing of the plat and survey thereof, reported adversely thereon; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5146) granting an increase of pension to Florian V. Sims; and

A bill (H. R. 8476) granting an increase of pension to Moses S. Curtis.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14380) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Waccamaw River at Conway, in the State of South Carolina, by Conway and Seashore Railroad Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2615) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Miller, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3180) granting a pension to Emma L. Ferrier, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5657) to prevent discrimination in grazing permits on the Uintah Forest Reservation, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12796) providing for free homesteads in the Ute Indian Reservation, in Colorado, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1473) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

WOODSMAN'S HANDBOOK.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a joint resolution limiting the gratuitous distribution of the Woodsman's Handbook to the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the Department of Agriculture, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 111) limiting the gratuitous distribution of the Woodsman's Handbook to the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the Department of Agriculture was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the proprietors of certain copyrighted log scales and other copyrighted matter have consented to the use of such copyrighted matter in the Woodsman's Handbook, a publication prepared in the Bureau of Forestry of the United States Department of Agriculture, under the restriction that no copies whatsoever be sold by any Government office, and, furthermore, that no copies be furnished to any dealer for the purpose of sale; and

Whereas sufficient authority to publish and pay for the printing of said Woodsman's Handbook is given in the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture:

Resolved, etc., That in consideration of such consent given by said proprietors, no copies of said Woodsman's Handbook shall be printed or distributed otherwise than by the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the United States Department of Agriculture, and none shall be sold or distributed by the superintendent of documents, or furnished to others for sale, anything in the act of January 12, 1895, entitled "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That said copyrighted matter, wherever it appears in said Woodsman's Handbook, shall be plainly marked as copyrighted matter, and shall be as fully protected under the copyright laws as though published by the proprietors themselves; and the permission for the use of said matter shall be deemed to be limited to the purposes of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

LAW OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT of Connecticut on the 31st ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the Reports on the Law of Civil Government under Military Occupation, submitted to the Secretary of War by Charles E. Magoon, law officer Division of Insular Affairs, War Department, of which 1,400 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,800 for the House of Representatives, and 800 for the War Department.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 6042) providing for the purchase of additional land for the Gettysburg National Park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 6043) for the relief of James F. Secor, surviving partner of Secor & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6044) to incorporate the International Bureau of Information; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 6045) granting an increase of pension to Charles Sprague; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (S. 6046) granting an increase of pension to Holoway W. Kinney; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KITTREDGE introduced a bill (S. 6047) granting an increase of pension to Robert C. Hawkins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6048) granting a pension to Lillian G. Elkins;

A bill (S. 6049) granting an increase of pension to A. L. Kneeland (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6050) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Barnes (with accompanying papers).

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 6051) for the relief of Amos L. Allen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DIETRICH introduced a bill (S. 6052) to amend paragraph 209 (Schedule E) of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, and to provide reciprocal trade relations with Cuba; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DIETRICH. In connection with the bill, I present a statement relative to providing revenue for and granting reciprocity to Cuba. I move that the statement be printed as a document, so that Senators can have it on their desks in the morning, and that the bill and accompanying statement be referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 6053) granting a pension to Aurelia A. Everhart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 6054) for the relief of Joseph Loudermilk; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6055) to continue the publication of the American Archives; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 6056) to pay Hewlette A. Hall balance due for services in connection with the Paris Exposition; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi introduced a bill (S. 6057) for the relief of the heirs of Nathan A. Davis, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM CROZIER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of War and also one from Brig. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance. The letters relate to the nomination of General Crozier now pending before the Senate, and they ought to be printed for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it a matter to be considered in executive or legislative session?

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, in legislative session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that certain letters addressed to him be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO SUBJECT OF LYNCHING.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is a resolution on the table offered by me some time ago, and I desire to make a request that it lie on the table subject to my call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that Senate resolution 239, heretofore submitted by him, may lie on the table subject to his call. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, yesterday a concurrent resolution adopted by the House expressing the thanks of Congress to Mr. Hay upon the delivery of the memorial address in honor of President McKinley was messaged here, and I understand that it is lying on the table. It came during my absence. I ask that it be taken up and now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. John Hay for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of William McKinley.

late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1902, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of William McKinley be requested to communicate to Mr. Hay the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] who was appointed one of the conferees on the part of the Senate in regard to the message from the House on the Army appropriation bill is also one of the Visitors to West Point, and he requested me to ask that he be relieved on that account from service on the conference committee. I ask that he be relieved and that a Senator be appointed by the Chair in his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made through the Senator from Vermont by the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in place of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 2295.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, it may be well enough to state the different positions of the two parties on the Philippine matter. After the treaty of peace was proclaimed, April 11, 1899, it became a question, What shall be done with the archipelago? The Democratic party said: "Those people were fighting for independence and for the establishment of a republic before we ever entered their islands, and had driven the Spaniards into Manila and a few small towns, where they were besieging the Spaniards, and with a knowledge on our part that they were fighting for their independence and to establish a republic we furnished them with arms and cooperated with them against a common foe; that therefore we could not honorably hold them as subject provinces." This being so, it was contended by the Democratic party that the honorable thing to do, and the best thing for the United States, was to let them have their independent government, interfering only far enough to see that the Paris treaty should be kept. The Republican party said that we must keep the islands as subject provinces; that there was money in their retention as imperial provinces. They ignored all regard for the honor of the United States in dealing with the archipelago and looked alone to the matter of spoils. I do not charge all Republicans thus, but that this was the attitude of the leaders of the party no man can conscientiously deny.

The Democrats maintained that by frankly telling the Filipinos that we intended to set them upon a firm foundation of republican government we would have no clash nor friction with them, but that they would faithfully perform all the stipulations our Government had made in the Spanish treaty, and we would have their gratitude and friendship and readily and easily acquire their trade. The Republican party, being in power, refused to listen to any suggestion of conciliation, and sought any pretext for a war of subjugation of those pitiable and miserable people. The Democrats appealed to the Republican party that if the honor, honesty, justice, and good faith of the case were to be discarded in the discussion as a question of material gain to the United States it was best to let the Philippine Islands go to themselves, and to content ourselves with such commerce with them as their friendship and gratitude and our superior goods and mercantile advantages should gain.

It was pointed out that the Republican course would provoke war; that our soldiers would be killed, and far more of them would sicken and die in that unfriendly climate; that it would cost us hundreds of millions of dollars, and that there could never be any adequate return. A few of the Philippine soldiers and a few of the American soldiers became embroiled in a fight. The Republicans greedily seized it as a pretext for war. They said they would not permit a puny little people to offer us an indignity. What an idea for greatness! England took a valuable slice of Alaska from us, and the Republican party, being in control of the Government, permitted the indignity. But let the least semblance of indignity be offered by a puny republic, and it will be instantly resented, if the Republicans should be in control.

When this Government was in its infancy a Democratic Administration served notice on all the powers of Europe that "thus far shalt thou go and no farther," and it was sufficient. Less than ten years ago, when England was fixing to clutch Venezuela, a Democratic Administration firmly said "hands off," and it was enough. It has never been thought, by a Democratic Administration, necessary to send special ambassadors to represent this country, kneeling at the throne of a British King, in order to enjoy the friendship of Great Britain. Democratic Administrations have challenged the friendship of Great Britain, as of every other country, by just intercourse and honest dealings, and have commanded their respect through the manhood of the United States.

The Republican party, being in control of the Government, adopted the policy of empire. No man can deny this. It provoked war with an inferior people and race. No man can deny this. An assurance to those people that we did not covet nor intend to take their country would have avoided war and bloodshed. It would not have been humiliating, any more than it would be humiliating for a giant to speak gently to a pigmy.

For more than three years we have had war, the product of the Republican imperialistic policy, which the Democratic party so much deprecated, and now we are gathering the fruit. What is the fruit? It is the treacherous killing of American soldiers by some of the Filipinos, the torturing of American soldiers by some of the Filipinos, the killing and torturing of Filipinos by some of the American officers, the burning of towns and villages and laying waste of islands, the sacrifice of the lives of more than 10,000 of our soldiers and the wreckage of the health of myriads more, the torturing to death of our own soldiers by some of our own officers; widowhood, orphanage, scalding tears, and furrowed cheeks. These are some of the fruits of the imperialistic policy.

A Republican Senate directs its committee to investigate affairs in the Philippines, a committee a majority of whom are Republicans. Witnesses who are returned soldiers come before the committee and testify to atrocious outrages and give the names of the officers who perpetrated them. General Wheaton, one of our brigadier-generals, says that the troops of Macabebes, whom we have enlisted in our Army, are savages—more of the fruit of the imperialistic policy. Major McKenna, a major in our Army, says that these Macabebe savages, who wear and disgrace our uniforms, have committed brutal outrages upon friendly Filipinos who have rendered excellent service to the United States. A district attorney of this Republican Administration reports to an Attorney-General of the Administration that a captain, whom he names, stood up men whom he suspected, with their hands tied to their sides so they could not use them to break the fall, and knocked their feet from under them, throwing their heads against a wooden floor, and then stood them on their heads in a bucket of water, to make them confess. And this was done repeatedly.

These witnesses are brought before a committee, ordered by a Republican Senate, to investigate this matter. These documents I have mentioned, detailing cruelties and charging our Government with taking heartless savages into its service, come from the War Department, which is Republican, and no Democrat had anything to do with making them. These documents calling Macabebes savages, and charging that these Macabebe savages, wearing and disgracing our uniform, ravished 12-year-old girls, pregnant women, and mothers with 4-months-old babes, and charging that American officers cruelly tortured unoffending natives, are not Democratic documents. They do not emanate from any Democratic source. They are Republican documents. They emanate from Republican sources.

But when the investigation charged by a Republican Senate to be made before the committee, and these Republican documents develop a state of affairs in the Philippines that horrifies the people because of cruelties perpetrated by Filipinos upon our soldiers, and by certain of our officers and the Macabebe savages upon the Filipinos, and we point to these things as the fruit of an imperialistic policy that ought never to have been adopted, and we ask if it is not enough, and insist that we desist from a policy productive of such horrible results, we are charged with slandering the Army. If these facts slander the Army, the Republican party has slandered the Army, for the Republican party has developed these facts. The Republican party is not only responsible for developing these facts, but is responsible for their existence. They are the legitimate fruit of its policy.

Republican Senators arrogate to themselves the defense of the Army, by which they mean the superior officers in the Army, for they do not deign to give any consideration to the private soldier. Beautiful eulogies are pronounced upon the officers, but no Republican Senator has uttered a word of condemnation of two generals—Funston and Otis—who made sweeping denunciations of the private soldiers. How many battles would be won and how many wars would succeed without private soldiers?

But the Army does not need the self-appointed defense of Republican Senators. The best service that can be done the Army is to weed out all those who are not worthy of its uniform. If the worthy and worthless are all clothed in the same uniform then the uniform does not stand for anything. It would be impossible from the uniform to tell the good from the bad. But if the unworthy are not permitted to wear it you know when you see a man clothed in the American uniform that he is a brave, chivalrous, worthy gentleman.

Strip the American uniform from the merciless savage Macabebe, and take his commission from every unworthy officer without respect to persons. By so doing you will defend the Army. You will protect it against imposters.

High-salaried generals denounce the soldiers indiscriminately as liars, and not a word of condemnation or protest escapes the lips of a Republican Senator. The senior Senator from Vermont ignores the private soldier and speaks of the Army as though it were composed exclusively of officers. He says the officers "will not lie or steal." By the well-recognized legal maxim that the naming of one is the exclusion of all others, it must be inferred that the Senator did not feel able to say as much for the private soldiers. Generals and other officers have testified before the committee, and they have been covered by Senators with extravagant enconium. But the testimony of a private soldier, although not a Democratic witness, did not carry euphony to the ears of Republican Senators, and he was arraigned and mercilessly excoriated by the senior Senator from Wisconsin. And they call this defending the Army against Democratic slander.

I say that the officers of our Army do not lie or steal. I say, further, that the soldiers of our Army do not lie or steal. But the records made up by this Republican War Department show that some of the officers and some of the soldiers do steal; these records show that some of the officers now holding commissions in the Army stand convicted of stealing. But it is proper to say that the American people do not steal, notwithstanding some of them have been convicted of larceny. So it is proper to say that the Army does not steal, though some of its members have been convicted of theft. The exceptions do not characterize the country nor the Army. The crimes and criminals in either ought to be suppressed.

Republican Senators charge us with being cowards, running away from a useless war with an inferior people and race. If it be cowardice to try to stop a war and to oppose a policy fraught with such horrors as the War Department has shown us, and if it be cowardly to try to save the lives and health of our soldiers from needless exposure, then you may put me down as a coward. But there is one thing we have not done; we have not fawned and skulked behind the epaulets of Army officers to escape facing a policy that can not be defended. Senators say we do not comment on the fact that generally the conduct has not been cruel. That goes without saying, yet it has been repeatedly asserted by Democratic Senators. Senators have insisted that all the orders of the officers were commanding humane treatment, I suppose to imply that all the cruelties were perpetrated by private soldiers against the orders of the officers. The records given out by the War Department and the evidence show that generally the tortures and cruelties were by officers and by Macabebe savages disgracing our uniform.

The Senator from Wisconsin laid great stress on petitions from the Philippines for the retention of our armies. The dispatch from the Secretary of War, found on page 2486 of Affairs in the Philippines, may throw some light on this, which I will read:

UNITED STATES SIGNAL CORPS,
Iloilo, February 11.

COMMANDING OFFICER, Pototan:

Following telegram has been received and should be circulated among all officers:

"MANILA, February 10.

"COMMANDING GENERAL FIFTH SEPARATE BRIGADE, Iloilo:

"Following cablegram received from Washington: To refute statements of misconduct of troops toward natives in Philippine Islands, Secretary of War Root directs petition of retention of commanders of various organizations and any information within the knowledge of any officer on these islands will be wired here. Any applications that have not been forwarded will be forwarded at once."

By order of Colonel Snyder:

NOBLE,
Adjutant-General's Office.

A true copy.

GEORGE J. ODEN,
First Lieutenant, Tenth United States Cavalry.

We must presume that this was not intended to have evidence cooked for the case; but if any were to suspect as much, I am not prepared to deny the provocation.

I wish I had time to discuss the moral and legal aspect of the controversy. When war was declared against Spain it was distinctly avowed that it was not for the acquisition of territory. So when we went to the Philippines it must be agreed that it was not to conquer or acquire the islands. This being true, we had no claim to them up to April 11, 1899, and their political attitude up to that day was a matter between them and Spain. Spain at that time had absolutely no power in the archipelago and could sell nothing there except a right to conquer.

To show that the Philippines claimed to be a republic, and that our Government knew it and knew that they were fighting for independence, I will read on page 333 of A Treaty of Peace Between the United States and Spain:

Mr. Wildman to Mr. Day.

No. 19.] HONGKONG, November 3, 1897.

SIR: Since my arrival in Hongkong I have been called upon several times by Mr. F. Agoncillo, foreign agent and high commissioner, etc., of the new republic of the Philippines.

Mr. Agoncillo holds a commission, signed by the president, members of cabinet, and general in chief of the republic of Philippines, empowering him absolutely with power to conclude treaties with foreign governments.

Mr. Agoncillo offers on behalf of his government alliance offensive and defensive with the United States when the United States declares war on Spain, which, in Mr. Agoncillo's judgment, will be very soon. In the meantime he wishes the United States to send to some port in the Philippines 20,000 stand of arms and 200,000 rounds of ammunition for the use of his government, to be paid for on the recognition of his government by the United States. He pledges as security two provinces and the custom-house at Manila.

He is not particular about the price—is willing the United States should make 25 per cent or 30 per cent profit.

He is a very earnest and attentive diplomat and a great admirer of the United States.

On his last visit he surprised me with the information that he had written his government that he had hopes of inducing the United States to supply the much-needed guns, etc.

In case Señor Agoncillo's dispatch should fall into the hands of an unfriendly power and find its way into the newspapers, I have thought it wise to apprise the State Department of the nature of the high commissioner's proposals.

Señor Agoncillo informs me by late mail that he will proceed at once to Washington to conclude the proposed treaty, if I advise.

I shall not advise said step until so instructed by the State Department.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ROUNSEVILLE WILDMAN, Consul.

To show that we did not cooperate with the Filipinos with a knowledge of their purpose before us I will read from the same book, on pages 316–317, the reply of our State Department to the request of Spain to release Spanish prisoners to enable Spain to resist the sieges by the Filipinos of the few small places then (September 5, 1898) held by the Spaniards in the archipelago:

Mr. Moore to Mr. Thiébaut.

[Personal.]

FRENCH EMBASSY, WASHINGTON, September 5, 1898.

DEAR MR. THIÉBAUT: Since the receipt of your informal note of the 29th ultimo and your personal letter of the 3d instant consideration has been given to the matters therein referred to, and pertinent advices have been received from our military and naval commanders in the Philippines.

As the result of our investigations it appears that some of the reports which you have brought to our attention in behalf of the Government at Madrid have no solid foundation, while others relate to matters that occurred before the signing of the protocol of August 12.

The rumor that the authorities of this Government are carrying on negotiations for the purpose of chartering at Hongkong ships for the transportation to Spain of the Spanish troops that surrender at Manila appears to be wholly groundless. No such negotiations have to our knowledge been undertaken. None have been authorized.

In our conversation of the 3d instant you disclaimed any intention on the part of the Spanish Government to impute to the commanders of the American forces at Manila connivance with any recent hostile proceedings of the insurgents. I am now able to say that they have no knowledge of the incidents referred to as having lately taken place at Manila.

As to the rumor that a ship with 700 insurgents on board has lately left Manila with a view to attack some of the islands in the Philippines, we are advised that no insurgent vessel having troops on board has recently left either Manila or Manila Bay. It is stated, however, that about August 10, before the protocol was signed, two vessels with from one to two hundred troops left Manila Bay, destination unknown.

The report that similar expeditions are preparing in Luzon with a hostile purpose against other islands appears also to be inexact. Our advices are to the effect that the insurgents have three or four small vessels, only two of which have guns, and that the largest of these vessels will not carry more than 250 men.

In your informal note of the 29th ultimo it is stated that the Spanish Government suggests that, for the purpose of checking insurgent hostilities, the Spanish troops now held as prisoners of war by the American forces may be placed at the disposal of Spain, to be used against the insurgents; or, if this be objected to, that the Spanish Government may be allowed to send troops from the Peninsula to the Philippines. It can scarcely be expected that this Government would even consider the question of adopting the first alternative, in view of the fact that for some time before the surrender of Manila the Spanish forces in that city were besieged by the insurgents by land while the port was blockaded by the forces of the United States by sea.

As to the second alternative, it will be a matter for regret if it should be adopted on the strength of rumors, some of which have been shown to be groundless, while others yet are unconfirmed. The Government of the United States will, through its military and naval commanders in the Philippines, exert its influence for the purpose of restraining insurgent hostilities pending the suspension of hostilities between the United States and Spain.

It would be unfortunate if any act should be done by either Government which might, in certain aspects, be inconsistent with the suspension of hostilities between the two nations, and which might necessitate the adoption of corresponding measures of precaution by the other Government.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. B. MOORE.

Knowing the Filipinos claimed to be a republic and were fighting for independence, we aided them and cooperated with them. When we and they whipped the common foe we bought from the common foe the right to conquer our allies—a right that the common foe, without our interference in any way, did not have the power to exercise. To conquer these allies costs tens of thousands of lives and hundreds of millions of dollars, for which there can never be any adequate return. The imperialistic policy ought to be abandoned.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to renew my request for unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the rest of the matter that I was reading yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the remainder of the paper which he was reading yesterday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The paper referred to is as follows:

The statement that "Agoncillo, Lopez, and others were, while in Washington, forewarned of the outbreak of hostilities on the 4th of February, 1899, and that they or some of them slipped out of the country in order to get beyond the jurisdiction of the United States," is untrue. I was secretary of the Filipino commission to Washington of which Señor Agoncillo was the president. I saw every communication that was received and sent by the commission, and no such forewarning ever came. It was also stated at the time that Agoncillo sent a cable to Aguinaldo or the Hongkong junta, urging an attack upon the American forces. This, too, is entirely untrue.

It is true that we knew of the serious unrest that was being created by the terms of the treaty of Paris and by the attitude of the American military authorities in demanding that our forces should yield positions to which they were justly entitled by the success of their arms. We knew also that when two armed forces were in striking distance of each other there was grave danger that "the impetuous action of a Filipino or the overzeal of an American soldier might create a condition resulting in grievous loss of life." And for this reason we did everything in our power, as the accompanying letters will amply prove, to obtain from the authorities at Washington an assurance that an attack on the Philippine government was not contemplated by America, notwithstanding the fact that reenforcements of American troops were then being sent to Manila.

It is true, also, that Señor Agoncillo, on account of the attack that was being made upon him in the American press and of the statements that he was liable to be arrested, felt that it would be undignified for him to remain longer in Washington, and was on the eve of departure when the news appeared in the American press that hostilities had occurred at Manila. Contrary to my desire, Agoncillo still persisted in leaving the country, not because of a desire to escape jurisdiction, but because he felt that his mission as an ambassador was at an end. Dr. Losada and I remained in Washington for five weeks after the outbreak of hostilities and the ratification of the treaty. It is true that Dr. Losada was suffering from muscular rheumatism in the arm.

I believe that if America had granted our very reasonable request that the troops being sent to Manila were not intended as a menace to our government or our people—and it was as much America's duty as ours to endeavor to maintain peace—the conflict would not have occurred.

SIXTO LOPEZ.

THE ARLINGTON, Washington, D. C., January 5, 1899.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I have the honor to request, on behalf of Señor Don Felipe Agoncillo, accredited as the envoy of the Philippine republic to this country, that he may be accorded the privilege of an audience with you to arrange for the presentation of his letters of credential to the President of the United States, and to state that he would be pleased to know the time most agreeable to you for him to call and pay his respects and ascertain when it would meet the President's convenience to receive him.

I have the honor to inclose herewith, by direction of Señor Don Felipe Agoncillo, a memorandum relative to the government of the Philippine Islands.

I am further instructed by him, in view of the recent circumstances, to urge upon your consideration the advisability of an understanding between the American Government and the representative of the Philippine people as to the relation between the respective nations; such understanding to be reached either at Washington, through joint representatives of the governments, or in the Philippine Islands in a like manner.

Señor Don Felipe Agoncillo further instructs me to express his earnest desire that the friendly relations which have heretofore existed between the two people may ever be maintained.

I have the honor to be, with the most distinguished consideration,

Your obedient servant,

SIXTO LOPEZ.

Memorandum to accompany letter from Señor Don Sixto Lopez, secretary of Señor Don Felipe Agoncillo, to the honorable the Secretary of State.

JANUARY 5, 1899.

The Philippine republic was promulgated on June 18, 1898, by a congress of representative Filipinos, accredited from and being residents of the various islands of the Philippine group, and assembled at Bakoor, province of Cavite, island of Luzon. Its existence was formally announced to foreign powers on August 1, 1898.

The representatives referred to created a provincial government and determined the manner in which the government of the various islands, provinces, and subdivisions should be constituted. Pursuant to the action of said congress a detailed system of government has been provided for and is actually maintained in all portions of the Philippine Islands, except so much of the provinces of Manila and Cavite as is now in the actual possession of the American Army, such excepted part containing only about 3 per cent of the population of the entire islands and an infinitely smaller proportion of their area.

From the foregoing it will appear that the Philippine government is now, as it has been practically ever since the 16th of June, 1898, in substantially full possession of the territory of the people it represents.

Furthermore, pursuant to the action promulgated at Cavite, the people of the Philippine Islands have an executive head in the person of Don Emilio Aguinaldo, who is assisted by a cabinet embracing ministers of foreign affairs, war and public works, justice and finance, all appointed pursuant to the constitution of June 18, 1898. The government in question has, since the time named, exercised all the functions pertaining to a government anywhere, in that it has raised and sustained large armies, expelling the Spaniards, who, without authority or sanction of the people, claimed control of the country, and has collected revenues, maintained post-offices, administered justice, cared for public instruction, and performed all the other functions incident to civilized control. This government has preserved civil and religious liberty and protected private property, and is so far intrenched in the affections of the people, and has with such humanity exercised its offices that the Filipinos feel that, as their representative, it should be welcomed to the family of independent nations.

SIXTO LOPEZ.

THE ARLINGTON, Washington, D. C., January 7, 1899.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: On yesterday I had the honor to deliver, on behalf of Señor Don Felipe Agoncillo, at the State Department to one of its officials, and addressed to you, a letter and memorandum, a duplicate original of which is inclosed.

I am directed by Señor Don Felipe Agoncillo, in view of the fact that certain newspaper publications have been made referring to it and containing purported details of the delivery of the letter and memorandum in question to the State Department, to deliver to you the inclosed, to the end that it may receive your early and favorable consideration.

I have the honor to be, with the most distinguished consideration, your obedient servant,

SIXTO LOPEZ.

THE ARLINGTON, Washington, D. C., January 11, 1899.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: On Friday, January 6, 1899, I had the honor, through my secretary, Señor Lopez, to submit to you the request that I be accorded the privilege of an audience with you to arrange for the presentation of my letters of credential to the President, and to state to you that I, as envoy from the Philippine republic to the President of the United States, would be pleased to know the most agreeable time for me to call and pay my respects and ascertain when it would meet the President's convenience to receive me. Accompanying this letter was a memorandum referring to the condition of the government of the Philippine republic, which I have the honor to represent.

Permit me to express my sincere regret that up to the present time I have not been favored with a reply to or an acknowledgment of the letter submitted, as stated. This regret is the greater because of the present unhappy relations existing between the Philippine government and the representatives of the American Government now in the Philippine Islands, appreciating, as I do thoroughly, the material injurious consequences to result from any conflict which might arise between the two governments, as well as the moral damage which would be inflicted by the severance of the relations of trust and confidence which have heretofore existed. This feeling must be my apology for venturing to address you, urging respectfully the importance of a speedy answer to the communication in question.

I venture to submit to you herewith some considerations bearing upon the right of my country to recognition as an independent sovereignty, as well as upon the benefits to be derived to the parties most immediately concerned from the granting of such recognition.

In view of the present status of affairs in the Philippine Islands, and the fact that, in the present strained position, the impetuous action of a Filipino or the overzeal of an American soldier, acts based upon the impulse of a moment may create a condition resulting in grievous loss of life, as well as a memory that both nations might carry with them for years, I again urge upon you the necessity of an early and frank communication between the representatives of the countries in question.

Permit me to subscribe myself, with the expression of the highest consideration for you, your most obedient servant,

FELIPE AGONCILLO.

THE ARLINGTON, Washington, D. C., January 24, 1899.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I had the honor on January 11, 1899, to address a letter to you touching the question of my recognition as the envoy of the Philippine republic, accompanying the same with a memorandum demonstrating that according to all American precedents the Philippine republic was entitled through its representative to receive the recognition sought for. In concluding the letter in question, I ventured to call your attention to the fact that, in the present strained position at Manila, the impetuous action of a Filipino or the overzeal of an American soldier might create a condition resulting in grievous loss of life, and for this reason I particularly urged upon you the necessity of early and frank communication between the representatives of the two countries. Since the delivery of the letter referred to we have been made aware, through the newspapers, of the fact that the very circumstances adverted to as possible have nearly caused the actual existence of a state of war between the two nations, and the language used by me was so far prophetic that the subsequent facts have amply justified its employment.

The conditions have not essentially changed since the writing of my former letter except in certain respects affecting the matters to be hereinafter more fully set forth, and the urgency then pointed out, I respectfully submit, still exists even in an accentuated degree.

As the Washington representative of the Philippine republic, permit me respectfully to call your attention to a certain condition surrounding the relations of the two countries, which, in my opinion, calls for an immediate alleviation.

There are at the present time, as we are informed, approximately 20,000 armed and disciplined American troops in the city of Manila and vicinity, controlling a population of about 300,000. A number of war vessels are stationed in the harbor, and many other American men-of-war and transports are to be found within the limits of the Philippine Archipelago, although the actual possession of the American troops extends over not to exceed 143 out of more than 200,000 square miles of territory.

Despite the existence of these enormous forces within an extremely circumscribed area, we are informed through the public prints that other vessels of war have been ordered from distant parts of the globe to reenforce those now among the islands in question, while but a few days ago a transport sailed from New York City carrying about 2,000 soldiers and having Manila as its destination, and, as we are further informed, regiments of troops are under orders to proceed by way of San Francisco to the Philippines. The public prints inform us that an attack upon the Philippine Islands is contemplated; that the islands are to be taken in detail, the smaller ones first, the larger ones blockaded, so that they may not assist those first attacked.

It is naturally the impression of my government and people that these war-like preparations indicate existing or immediate military operations in the Orient, and they readily conceive that it must be contemplated that such operations are to be levied at the existing government of the Philippine Islands.

As the representative of the Philippine government, I hesitate to give adhesion to this idea, for I can not believe that there is any present or threatened future difficulty between the American and the Philippine governments justifying warlike activities; and, as a believer in the humanity of the American people, refuse to acquiesce in the idea that America designed war upon the Philippine Islands.

But lately the United States and the government I have the honor to represent have been associated in the conflict against a common enemy. The purpose for which the United States entered upon such a struggle has been accomplished by the expulsion of Spain from her West Indian possessions. The desire of the Filipino republic has been practically obtained by the almost complete expulsion of the Spanish Government in the Philippine Islands, the Philippine government now holding as prisoners of war between nine and ten thousand soldiers lately in arms under the Spanish flag, and Spain possessing only a few small garrisons in isolated points of minor importance and not worth enumerating.

In view of the foregoing, I can not, as I have said, conceive any reason why the armies and navies of the United States lately employed against her common enemy should now be turned against America's recent associate.

The United States has no active enemy in the Orient, having proclaimed an armistice with its late antagonist. It is true that such antagonist has undertaken to convey to the United States its alleged claim against the Philippine Islands, a claim which Spain was not capable of enforcing and which never found its origin in the consent of the people of those islands. Are my government and the people to be led to suppose that it is because of some desire on the part of the American Government to enforce against its late associate this exploded claim that the United States is massing its forces at the late capital of the Philippine Islands?

The Philippine Islands are in a state of public order. They possess a government satisfactory to their inhabitants and are without an enemy within their borders offering any resistance to its just operations, and they find themselves to be at peace with all the world.

I am sure you will appreciate, in view of the circumstances I have detailed, the quieting and reassuring effect upon the minds of my countrymen to result from a disclaimer upon the part of the American Government of any intention to attack their liberties and independence.

Notwithstanding the serious difficulty under which I labor in not having been formally received by the American Government as representative of the Filipino nation, I feel it my imperative duty to call your attention to the disturbing facts before enumerated to the end that they may receive from you such assurances as will satisfy my countrymen that it is not the intention of America to make war upon the new republic of Asia, and which will explain to it the reason why large armies and navies should be dispatched to the Philippine Islands, and which will relieve my countrymen of the fear that now possesses them that their liberties are endangered at the hands of a republic whose name they have always believed was associated with freedom and to which they have come first applying for recognition among the nations of the earth.

I desire again to express the gratitude of my nation to America for services rendered by her in furthering Filipino independence, and to express the hope that friendly relations may ever continue.

In view of the present alarming situation, may I respectfully urge the importance of an immediate answer?

I have the honor to be, with the assurance of my highest regard, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FELIPE AGONCILLO.

[Mr. BEVERIDGE addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak at all on the pending bill, as I have spoken several times upon the subject heretofore. I should not speak now but that on Saturday last the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] referred to the fact that but few Senators on the floor who had been soldiers in the Southern army had taken part in the debate. He also charged that Senators upon this side of the Chamber had assailed the Army of the United States, and he said that there were certain other Senators here whom he did not believe would concur in such charges.

Mr. President, if the premises were true, if it were true that Senators upon this side of the Chamber had attacked the entire Army of the United States for the acts of a few individuals belonging to that Army, then I would not agree with them; but I state here to-day—and I have, I think, either heard or read every speech that has been made on this subject on this side of the Chamber—that I do not believe it can be truthfully said that any Senator on this side or on this floor has attacked the Army of the United States, or charged that the entire Army was responsible for the misconduct of a few individuals. If any Senator on the other side can point out and name such a Senator upon this side or quote such language from him to sustain that charge, I shall be glad if he will do so.

Mr. President, I for one would be the last man to attack the Army. I have always had for any soldier who was actuated by patriotism and desired to do his duty, who was willing to incur the dangers and undergo the hardships of a soldier's life, the highest respect and the highest regard. I care not for what cause he fought or under what flag he marched, if he was honest and conscientious in the discharge of his duty. The hardships which the soldiers have to endure are sufficient. No words will ever come from me which will assail the great body of the Army of the United States. No man in the entire country was more proud or more rejoiced over the magnificent conduct of our soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy in the war with Spain than was I. There was a grand wave of patriotism that then went all over this land, and there has never been a time in the history of this country when there was such unanimity of feeling and such cordial relations existing in every State of the Union as on the day of the close of the war with Spain.

But, I repeat, it is unfair and it is a false issue to charge that Senators here have attacked the Army of the United States. It is true that they have denounced in unmeasured language the acts of General Smith, of Major Waller, and of Captain Glenn. Where is the Senator who will rise in his place and defend the acts of these three officers? They can not be defended. These men have, as the testimony shows, linked their names with infamy that will stay with them for all time to come. But that is not the case with the great body of the Army.

I never did believe in attacking a whole State because of the lawlessness of some few of its citizens. I never believed that it was fair to hold even a county or an entire community responsible for the lawless and cruel and unjustifiable act of a few people, I care not whether the act was committed in Kansas or in Mississippi or in any other State. The individuals who commit such acts are themselves responsible, and they deserve to be held up to the scorn of all people. But surely it is unfair to say that when those people who are actually guilty of outrages are censured for them that that is an attack upon the Army.

Mr. President, the Army of the United States is not responsible for what has happened in the Philippines. The responsibility for all that has taken place there belongs here; it belongs to that class of our citizens who, many of them, actuated by greed, many of them actuated by wild dreams of commercial prosperity and expansion of territory and for having this nation become a world power, have forgotten the traditions of the Republic and brought about and engaged in an unjust and unholy war. The responsibility rests with those who had the choice between peace and war.

When the Spanish war was closed the issue was fairly presented. It was known that if this Administration or this Congress had said that those people should have fair and just treatment and be given the right to organize a government of their own choice there would have been no war; but, I repeat, actuated, many of them, by the motives which I have stated, they have pursued a different course, and they are responsible for all which has followed.

The Senator from Wisconsin said the other day that no Senator had been moved or actuated to vote for the treaty by commercial hopes or mercenary considerations of any kind for our country. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] reminded the Senator from Wisconsin that the former Senator from Montana, Mr. Carter, had upon this floor made a statement that such was the purpose.

Mr. President, there was an interview printed by one of the most distinguished Republican Senators who ever sat upon the other side of the Chamber, in which he said that the time was near at hand when there would be a great contest for the trade of the Orient, and that it was necessary for the United States to occupy a position near the ground in order that we might have an even chance in the contest for the trade of China. I repeat, furthermore, that the Secretary of the Treasury, standing by the side of President McKinley, at Savannah, Ga., said that in this war philanthropy and 5 per cent would go hand in hand.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] who has just taken his seat made a speech upon this floor, in which he pictured the wealth of that archipelago and referred to the glories of commerce which would come to us; and the Republican papers from one end of this country to the other have pictured that when the Nicaragua Canal shall be finished our possession of the Philippines would be especially beneficial to the people of the South, as it would give them an additional market throughout that country for the cotton which they raise. All over this country Republican Senators and Representatives and newspapers have openly advocated the advantages that would come from taking and keeping possession of the Philippine Islands. It is with them that the responsibility rests.

You have deliberately brought it about. I know that some men on the other side have said to me that they had made a mistake. I think many of you, when you contemplate what has occurred in those far-off islands, and the tears and the sorrows and the injuries that have come to so many of our own people on account of the loss of our soldiers, and the infinite horrors which have come to that far-off people, feel to-day that it would have been better to have dealt with the Philippines as we have dealt with Cuba.

There is no man in the United States to-day who, I think, does not feel proud of our action in Cuba. We are entitled to the glory of having freed that people and of having given them a government of their own. That glory is, however, somewhat obscured when we remember that there is another people equally entitled to our protection, equally entitled to liberty and independence, upon whom we have made war that has cost the lives of thousands of their citizens. We have reduced them to sullen submission, because they have not the power to resist, and we have put into their hearts undying hatred for our people and our country, when, if we had treated them as we treated the Cubans, there would have been love and admiration and gratitude.

So I have placed the responsibility upon those who have brought about this condition of things, and there, I believe, the impartial historian will in the future place it.

I do not stand here to-day to stir up any feeling of strife. I honor the American Army; I am proud of its glories, and I would not, under any circumstances, utter a word to detract from its well-earned fame. I regret that the chairman of the committee has selected from the testimony taken before the committee, and printed in the RECORD, some of the most brutal acts that were committed during our civil war. I think, Mr. President, that those acts were such that we should all be glad to forget them; and yet the Senator from Massachusetts has placed in the RECORD the record of General McNeil, a Union general in Missouri, who brutally, and without a shadow of excuse, took out 10 prisoners and deliberately shot and murdered them. I think the Senator ought not to have published such a record as that. I think we had better have forgotten it. But would it be fair for me to say that because he did print that, I think the Senator intended to cast opprobrium upon the Union soldiers in the late war? I do not think he intended that. I do not think that he would stand here and defend such an act as that. Then why did he do it, Mr. President? Why bring that forward unless the Senator thinks it will in some way excuse or justify General Smith in the order which he issued in the Philippines?

I repeat again that this debate here and elsewhere has assumed a shape that may tend again to revive sectionalism. I regret that the President of the United States, the President of all the people and all the States of this Union, on Memorial Day, on a day when he was surrounded by the graves of those who fell in the civil war, on a day when the old soldiers and young soldiers, and when men and women assembled together to place flowers upon the graves of those who had died in defense of the Union, I regret that on that day, which should appeal to the warmest emotions of every man's heart, on that day when a man feels most kindly toward the living and most grateful to the dead who have died in defense of principles in which they believed, I regret that on that day the President saw proper to make what I think was a bitter partisan speech. He saw proper to go back forty years and undertake, as I think, to rekindle the fires that burned with such bitter passion in so many hearts during that civil war. He not only did that, but he referred to the acts of wild and infuriated mobs, I presume, in order to justify the cruel and deliberate act of General Smith in issuing an order to kill all male Filipinos over 10 years of age.

When you talk about what we do for party purposes, I ask what other purpose could the President have had, and what other reason could he have had, except that he hoped to excite the people of this country and make them believe that those of us who oppose this Philippine policy are attacking the Army of the United States? Such a statement is unfair to us. It is not correct and it does not represent the sentiment on this side of the Chamber.

I for one from the beginning have been opposed to this Philippine policy and am to-day, but I place the responsibility for what has occurred upon those who in an awful hour forgot the traditions of our fathers, and, excited by a wild dream of conquest, overrode and broke down every principle that has made our country glorious in the past.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, this has been a great debate. It has developed marked ability on both sides. Sometimes it has been vitriolic, sometimes irrelevant, but always able. The pending measure deals with mighty problems of the living present, but much of the discussion has involved facts and issues that have passed into history and are beyond recall.

There is nothing in this world more unprofitable than to quarrel with a fact.

We are confronted by this great stubborn fact: We are in the Philippines. We own the islands by an unimpeachable title. We have assumed responsibilities which we can not escape or delegate, no matter how heavily they press upon us. They are bottomed on international law and national honor. Chief among these is the duty to insure peace and good government to the islands. To this end we have given hostages to the civilized world, as well as to the native people. This bill is framed to carry out that pledge and to discharge that paramount duty. The American people will tolerate no shuffling, and will be satisfied only when we meet the situation in a straightforward manly way, which is the American way.

No questions were ever presented to an American Congress more complex or difficult; none ever called for greater wisdom or higher statesmanship. The situation is novel and we are without precedents. In this emergency the nation was fairly entitled to the best thought and combined wisdom of all the Senators in this Chamber.

It is a sad pity that at this supreme moment the minority were willing to bring this debate down to the lower level of party politics, where this important measure might be warped by the heat and obscured by the smoke of party strife. The upheaval in Martinique has been typical of what has happened here on a smaller scale. We have had the loud detonations, the flashes of fire, the hot mud, and the air has been obscured by volcanic dust. We must make allowances for political exigencies. Even a volcano could not dislodge a dead crater as old and inveterate as the Chicago platform and establish a new blowhole without great noise and disturbance.

It has occurred to me as we have listened to this grand orchestral prelude in which the sweet singers of many States participated while weird strains of their sad melody have vibrated through this Chamber and awakened a melancholy thrill throughout the country, whether after all the grand recital were not intended to show how much music the Democratic party could create even without the soft tones of the silver bugle.

Instead of lending their great abilities to help the Administration solve these all-absorbing questions they organize a preliminary campaign of calamity, the objective being to stamp the mark of Cain upon the Administration for the murder of the Little Brown Brother.

A chamber of horrors must be opened. The battlefield of the Philippine Islands must be scanned for cruelties and outrages with which to conjure in the next campaign and make the people sick of sovereignty spotted with blood.

The propaganda of despair is pushed forward. They fill the Orient with their pathetic eloquence and intoxicate the imagination of the susceptible native. They quench the last spark of gratitude that glows in his bosom for his new friends. They create a shudder of horror at home and widespread distrust abroad.

Their oratory is not employed to commemorate the long-suffering patience, the splendid courage of our men, who so often "marched to death as to a festival." They have no praise for the matchless courage displayed in jungle and mountain wastes, nor for the tenderness and care bestowed upon the wounded native; but they seek out isolated cases where water torture has been applied and other outrages committed, such as inevitably follow war, however we may deplore the fact. They picture our brave soldiers as

> Slaves for pillage fighting,
> Obdurate vassals fell exploits effecting,
> In bloody deaths and ravishments delighting,
> Nor children's tears nor mothers' groans respecting.

They have framed indictments under the Declaration of Independence and under the Decalogue and under the rules of war. They have injected into the investigation a wholesale court-martial of brave officers who are 7,000 miles away, unable to meet their accusers or confront the witnesses. Their names have been associated with crimes to be accused of which is a blight upon their reputation. Rumors and newspaper clippings have been exploited, doing their deadly work, although not accorded the dignity of evidence. Such an ex parte inquisition is as cruel as the grave.

It was reserved, however, for the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to reach the very climax of despair, and I beg to call attention to a most remarkable sentiment uttered by him in this debate, found on page 5151 of the RECORD:

> Ah, Mr. President, what an awful thing this is! I commend it to the conscience and to the considerations of humanity, if such thing may happen to lurk still in the breast of the American people.

What a distressing doubt is there suggested, whether any vestige of conscience still lingers with the American people. Perhaps this pessimistic view may explain why certain noble specimens of manhood commissioned to represent the conscience of the nation in this body have been so eager to bind the nation by an express pledge to the Philippine people, because, forsooth, the American people left to themselves would fail to appreciate the equity and justice of the case because of a torpid conscience or lack of humane considerations. Let not the distinguished Senator despair of his country. The conscience of the great American people never sleeps. Its intellect never grows dull. Its humane sensibilities are ever quick and active, as the distinguished Senator will have reason to discover when the verdict is rendered, as surely it will be, that the American people have greater confidence in their magnificent Army than they have in the Democratic party as at present constituted.

During this debate certain aphorisms of the minority have crystallized into shape, which it may be well to collate for future reference:

The torture of the little brown brother is atrocious.

The torture of the brother with the black skin is defensible and sometimes necessary.

We demand that any government in the Philippines shall reset upon the consent of the governed.

We insist upon the same principle in America, and enforce consent at the muzzle of the shotgun.

The Declaration of Independence is inflexible in the archipelago, but it is optional and elastic in Hawaii and Porto Rico.

Under the heat and stress of debate it has been charged that this measure is one of exploitation (I wish I could give the true Georgia accent and inflection to that word—ex-ploi-ta-tion); that it is so framed as to offer an asylum for spoilsmen and carpetbaggers, an opportunity for thieves and promoters; that under its provisions it is proposed to turn loose in the Philippine Islands an army of camp followers to consume everything of substance that has escaped the devastation of war; to sanction an era of corruption and spoliage. If this be true, why spend time over cases of the water cure? Here is something a thousand times more infamous. I can find no words to express the turpitude involved in the suggestion. It would make every decent man hide his face in shame if this great, powerful Government were by force of arms to hold those scattered tribes while slick scoundrels robbed and despoiled them. Why are there no specifications filed? Why have not the minority pointed out any line or paragraph of the pending bill that gives color to such a damnable suggestion, and why have they not held it up to the scorn and contempt of a just people? Why have no efforts been made to amend so atrocious a measure?

It may be unreasonable to expect that an orator will descend to vulgar details. Let us, therefore, for a few moments, take up this bill, which in this debate seems to have been lost sight of during the discussion of the theories of the Philippine policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with his gavel.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to have unanimous consent to proceed for five or ten minutes to look into the features of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed with his speech. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I will try not to weary the Senate, but this bill, the very living embodiment of our best statesmanship, has been almost ignored in this debate. If the committee has left in the bill a hiding place for scalawags and scoundrels, we ought before 4 o'clock this afternoon to find them out in their lurking places and drag them out with whips.

The statement has been made here, Mr. President, that the governors of the Philippine Islands under this measure have more unlimited authority than any satrap ever sent to govern a province. Mr. President, the fact is that the governors of the Philippine Islands under this bill have no power to sell an acre of timber land or an acre of mineral land or an acre of agricultural land. Now, of what obtuse men the committee must consist, if they are trying to provide for these scalawags and these political adventurers, that they have not lodged in this government the power to peddle out their lands. And still the fact remains.

Now, by section 12 you will find that the rules and regulations for the disposition of any of this land have to be submitted to Congress; they have to be approved by the President; and what will become of your promoters and your scallawags while those regulations are being seasoned and perfected in Congress and in the White House? What a singular omission there on the part of the committee if they are trying to make a place for these slick scoundrels!

Not one acre can go except under those regulations, sanctioned by Congress and by the executive power.

What can they do in the meantime? Under section 14 of this bill they have the power, prior to the time when the regulations are perfected, to lease land for a period not exceeding five years. Suppose some of the scallawags and promoters take out leases. I wish to call attention to the fact that under section 15 they can not dispose of a single lease if they take it. Section 15 provides that—

No lease or contract of letting made by virtue of this act shall be sold, assigned, or otherwise disposed of.

Then what object could there be for those scallawags to go and get a lease? They are not there to work on the land. They are there to exploit the title if they can get it. They are absolutely fenced out by section 16.

By the same section and everywhere through the bill where any disposition is to be made of lands preference is given, as it ought to be, to the natives who are in possession of the land. No tree can be cut on any of this land, under section 16, without special permission.

Sections 17 and 18 preclude the sale of any timber or mineral land; and I want to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to section 32. Here is a provision in regard to the mining laws, which is even more stringent than the provision on the continent here:

That no holder shall be entitled to hold in his own name or in the name of any other person more than one mineral claim on the same vein or lode.

There is a restriction, Senators, which is put upon the holder of that title which does not exist under our laws at the present time.

Now, in regard to vacant coal lands, I wish to call attention to the fact that by section 56 a person entering any one of those claims is absolutely restricted, as is any association of persons, to a single claim. It is impossible for them to gather up these claims and use them for purposes of speculation. Only one entry is permissible by an association or by an individual.

Now, Senators, let me call your attention for a moment to section 78, which relates to franchises, and that is the place where the promoters and speculators would be very likely to take their stand. It is provided here in regard to franchises that—no such franchise, privilege, or concession shall be granted to any corporation except under the conditions that it shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal by the Congress of the United States.

There is a most wholesome provision, which absolutely prevents any outrageous exploitation.

Furthermore, there can be no watered stock. Every dollar of stock issued by a corporation there must be in consideration of so much cash or its equivalent in actual value.

It is provided in section 79 that no corporation shall be engaged in the business of buying or selling real estate, and that is a most important provision to be kept in mind. There is no danger that the dead hand will paralyze the industries of the islands, because the powers of corporations to hold lands are so hedged about that it is impossible for them to get a foothold under this bill. It is even provided that where they have to take a piece of land upon a foreclosure of a mortgage they may not hold it for more than five years after receiving the title.

Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate longer, although a careful inspection of the bill would be a most profitable thing to any doubting soul as to the wholesomeness of the entire measure.

Mr. President, before the final vote is taken it remains to be said that the thanks of Congress and the gratitude of the people are due to the Committee on the Philippines of the Senate. They have framed this bill so as to fence out every boodler and promoter, and whatever else may happen in those distant islands, they are in no danger from exploitation in the evil sense of the word. The islands and their resources will be developed, but there will be no looting, no plundering, and our Government duties will be discharged under all the safeguards that legislation can afford and under the solemn sanction of a sacred trust.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, on the 22d of May I introduced a resolution directing the Secretary of War to send to the Senate copies of the charges that had been preferred by Private Andrew K. Weir, of the Fourth Cavalry, against Lieutenant Arnold and Sergeant Edwards, of that regiment. The resolution went over from day to day for three or four days on objections made by the Senators from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], they stating that they desired to make inquiry as to whether or not a court-martial had been ordered.

During that period I asked the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who stated that a court-martial had been ordered, when the court-martial had been ordered. He answered that he was unable to state, because he did not know, and I suggested that I had no objection to the resolution going over if the information as to when the court-martial was ordered would be given the next day in a communication from the Secretary of War; and so it went over.

Subsequently, Mr. President, on the 27th of May, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presented to the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War stating, without giving the date of the order, that a court-martial had been ordered in the case of Sergeant Edwards, but none in the case of Lieutenant Arnold, the charges as to that officer being still, as I understood it, under investigation. The resolution was then referred by vote to the Committee on the Philippines.

I do not charge, Mr. President, that there is any disposition on the part of the Secretary of War or the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines to withhold permanently this information, but there are some matters connected with it which suggest that there is a disposition somewhere to withhold at this time the information contained in these charges, and, in my judgment, there is enough in the record to suggest at least that a court-martial was ordered in this case since the resolution was presented to the Senate.

In view of all the circumstances as they have come into my possession since the resolution was introduced, I desire to have read by the Secretary a copy of the charges made by Private Andrew K. Weir and a copy of the report of Capt. P. W. West thereon. The first paper I will ask to have read is a copy of the charges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the papers? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator what those extracts are from?

Mr. CULBERSON. They are not extracts. They are full copies of the charges made by Private Andrew K. Weir and the report of Capt. P. W. West on those charges.

Mr. LODGE. They have never before been printed?

Mr. CULBERSON. Never before, so far as I know.

Mr. LODGE. They come from the archives of the War Department, I suppose?

Mr. CULBERSON. I made no such statement.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that question—whether they come from the archives? I want to find out whether they are official.

Mr. CULBERSON. They are correct copies, Mr. President, I am reliably informed.

Mr. LODGE. Copies of what? That is all I want to know.

Mr. CULBERSON. Copies of the charges made by Private Andrew K. Weir, and the report of Capt. P. W. West upon those charges.

Mr. LODGE. Those exist in the War Department?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BALAYAN, BATANGAS PROVINCE, LUZON, P. I., April 10, 1901.

MY DEAR UNCLE: You are a free American citizen, and as such you are entitled to know how our government is carried on. I have something to inform you about. It is the terrible cruelty practiced upon Filipino prisoners by American soldiers in these islands. First, I want to know if the Constitution of the United States and international law does not prohibit torture.

We soldiers are representatives of a civilized nation sent out to these islands to "civilize" a so-called lot of savages. These people are not nearly so uncivilized as is supposed. You probably have read about some of our men being put to death by horrible torture, but what can you expect when we do equally as bad to our prisoners?

Has any court the right to force any prisoner to confess, no matter how many crimes the prisoner is supposed to have committed? When I say force I mean to force by torture. The Army of the United States in the Philippines is representing the law of the United States. But whether or not it is proper to torture a man it is done anyway, and under the orders of commissioned officers.

I have heard men of other regiments make their boasts of how they have made captured insurgents tell where their arms were, but never witnessed the torture but once.

The instance that I have reference to occurred about two months ago. I told the officer that he had to stop it or I would report him to higher authority. He said he would not practice it any more, so I never informed on him; but now I have information about him doing the same, and even worse, nearly every day.

While I was one of a detachment of 24 men doing garrison duty in the town of Pasay, 3 miles from Manila, a native man about 21 years of age was arrested and accused of being a murderer, highway robber, and accused of rape. Now, whether the man was guilty or not I do not know, but anyway Lieut. F. T. Arnold, for he was the officer in command, gave orders to Sergeant Edwards, both of Troop H, Fourth Cavalry, to take the man to the basement of our quarters and get what information he could out of the man.

So Edwards took the man and asked him if he had any information to give. The man had none. Edwards said to the rest of the soldiers who had congregated to witness the "fun" that he would have to commence operations. The prisoner was stripped naked and laid on his back on the bare floor. He was then given the "water cure." A rough stick about 8 inches long and a half inch in diameter was put between the man's jaws. A soldier held the man's head down by pressing on the ends of the stick. Another sat on the man's stomach, and still another sat on the man's legs. Edwards had a bucket of water at hand. Water was poured down the man until it was vomited up. It was then repeated.

This water cure must be a terrible torture alone. The man heaved and begged for mercy, but to no avail. While down he was whipped and beaten unmercifully. He was then stood up and asked to confess. He did not. He was then beaten and clubbed again. I do not think that a square inch of the man's body was left untouched. He was kicked. A rope was then thrown across a beam. The man was strung up by the thumbs. Another rope was tied to his ankles and his feet jerked from under him. While up he was beaten.

All this time I was a looker on. I hoped that the punishment would stop. I dared not interfere. But when the man was strung up by the neck I could stand it no longer, so I went to the lieutenant. Before I went to him I did not know that he had given orders to Edwards to torture the man if he did not confess. I told Arnold that I was an American and that there was something going on at the quarters that I could not stand. He jumped all over me and asked if I was not making myself very busy. I said I was not; that such carryings on were against all law.

He said, in a very sarcastic manner, that I knew such a lot about law. He said that a lot of men in the Army, especially volunteers, think that they know how to run an army, but they do not. He said: "Now, when I give a man to Sergeant Edwards, I want information. I do not know how he gets it, but he gets the information anyway." He said that these people have no feelings other than physical and should not be treated as human beings. I told Arnold that I did not come to get anyone in trouble, but merely to have the torture stopped, that if it were not stopped I would report the matter to higher authority.

I was then threatened with court-martial for insubordination. About this time Edwards came in and said that he had succeeded in making the man tell where the money was. Arnold told Edwards to take the man with him and get the money.

I told Arnold that as the torture was finished I would not report the matter if it were not repeated. He promised not to do it again. I then left him.

The prisoner did not show where the money was. He had only said that he would show the hiding place to have the torture stopped. Three weeks later the prisoner was released. Now, that was criminal of Arnold. If the man was guilty he should not be released. If guilty he should not be tortured anyway.

The rest of the time that I was with the detachment under Arnold no torture was committed that I know of.

Now, Arnold has a detachment of 20 men at Calaca, 7 miles from here. Men that are under him now have told me that Arnold is having men tortured the same as before and other ways besides. This is one of his new ways: A strip of flesh is cut just above the ankle of the prisoner; it is then attached to a stick; the stick is coiled with the strip of flesh. Imagine the torture the poor man must endure! I am told that when Arnold is out looking for some criminal or suspected insurgent he will grab, or have his men grab, any native and ask for information.

If the man gives no information, he is put to all kinds of torture. I saw the man that was cut at the ankle. I was over at Calaca the other day. He had his leg all bound up and was out in the road with other prisoners working.

Last week a part of this troop, a part of the Calaca detachment, and some of the soldiers from Taal were out in the mountains. I was not along, but have been told by several men that Arnold had his men take an old man to a stream and keep him under water until the man was unconscious. This was because the old man did not give certain information that he was supposed to possess.

Men of H Troop have told me that they have known Arnold to have a man tied to a saddled horse. A few feet of slack was allowed. A man was then mounted on the horse and told to gallop down the road for a mile and then back. If the prisoner could run as fast as the horse it was all well, but if he could not he had to drag. Arnold has had this done several times, and more than once the prisoner was dragged.

Now, I have witnesses for all that I have written about, and should there ever be an investigation of this I will be perfectly willing to be put upon the stand. I know other men that would be willing to do the same.

I believe that most of the officers and enlisted men in the Army are humane, but those that practice what Arnold has should be brought to justice.

It would do me no good to report this matter through Army channels, as it would only be hushed up and then I would get the worst of it.

Now, I am writing this letter to you; you are a close relation of mine, and for that reason I believe I can write anything. I think that you should bring this before the proper persons.

Lieut. Frederick T. Arnold was appointed to West Point from Iowa in 1893. He graduated from West Point in 1897 and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Sixth Cavalry. He is now second lieutenant of Troop H, Fourth Cavalry.

I hope that the proper people of the United States will take hold of this case and have all torture in these islands stopped.

Well, my dear uncle, as I have already written so much on this subject, I will not write about other subjects. I am in fine health, and hope that you are the same. Give my love to all.

I remain, your loving nephew,

ANDREW K. WEIR, JR.,
Troop C, Fourth United States Cavalry, Balayan, P. I.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Texas permit a question?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I observe that this appears to be a letter, and it very properly says that it should be presented to the proper authorities. I wish to ask the Senator from Texas if these facts have been presented to the War Department?

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand they have, and I desire to have read now the report of the officer of the inspector-general's office, Department of Northern Luzon, on those charges.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Who presented them to the War Department?

Mr. CULBERSON. I am not advised as to who presented them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did the Senator get them from the War Department or from any officer in the War Department?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator did not get them from the War Department.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or from any officer in the War Department?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have stated that I did not get these papers from the War Department.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am asking the Senator if he got them from any officer of the War Department. The letter very properly says it should be presented to the proper authorities, and I am asking if the Senator got these papers from any officer of the War Department.

Mr. CULBERSON. The report shows that these charges were presented to the authorities. They were inquired into by an officer in the inspector-general's office, and a report was made on the 21st of August, 1901. I desire now to have read the report of that officer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator kindly answer my question, whether he got these papers from any officer of the War Department?

Mr. CULBERSON. The information, wherever I may have gotten it, is authentic; and I now ask that the report may be read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, I do not want to interrupt the Senator if the Senator does not desire to answer my question.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator has answered that the information is entirely authentic.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did the Senator get the papers from any officer of the War Department?

Mr. CULBERSON. The question, the Senator will allow me to say, might properly be characterized as impertinent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, the Senator can apply whatever epithet he wants. If he does not want to answer the question he need not, of course, but I should be very glad, if the Senator does want to answer the question, if he will inform the Senate whether he got them from any officer of the War Department, and if so, from what officer? It is important to know whether an officer of the War Department has had this information in his possession. Did the Senator get it from an officer of the War Department or does he not want to answer the question? I should like the Senator either to refuse to answer the question or to answer it.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator has repeated the question, and I have suggested to him that it is impertinent. I decline to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator decline to answer the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the same thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired, but unanimous consent was asked that these papers might be read. The Chair is inclined to hold that that would include the time that is necessary to read them. So the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL,
DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN LUZON,
Manila, P. I., August 27, 1901.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN LUZON.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the investigation made by me into the complaint of Private Andrew K. Weir, Troop C, Fourth Cavalry, against Lieut. F. T. Arnold, Fourth Cavalry, in regard to the cruelties practiced by Lieutenant Arnold upon native prisoners at Pasay and Calaca, Luzon:

Sergt. George Schurman, Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, stated that he had witnessed the punishment of the prisoner at Pasay and that the facts were correctly stated in Private Weir's letter to his uncle, The prisoner was choked, beaten, hung up by the thumbs, and then by the neck, and given the water cure, and was whipped with rattans, this whipping being so severe as to bring blood on the prisoners legs. That this punishment was all inflicted by Sergeant Edwards and three native policemen.

Private George Bowers, Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, stated that he had only heard of the punishment of the prisoner at Pasay. I believe this man knows more about the cruel treatment of prisoners at Pasay and Calaca than he stated, but the departure of his troop for the United States prevented me from examining him thoroughly.

Private James B. Barry, Third Cavalry, formerly of Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, stated that he witnessed the treatment of the prisoner at Pasay and that it was brutal. He corroborated the statement of Private Weir in regard to this prisoner's treatment.

He stated that Sergeant Edwards often talked of the way he had beaten native prisoners. He stated that while corporal of the guard near Taal he had charge of about 50 native prisoners and that he had orders to turn them over to Sergeant Edwards whenever he wanted them, and that Lieutenant Arnold told Sergeant Edwards in his (Barry's) presence that he could take them out whenever he wanted to and to get what information he could out of them, and that Sergeant Edwards and the native scouts frequently took out one or two prisoners and would keep them out from half an hour to an hour. He did not know whether or not they were badly treated while out with Sergeant Edwards.

Corpl. George E. West, Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, stated that while corporal of the guard at Calaca he had seen native prisoners brought to the guardhouse whose shins looked like they had been rubbed with a stick, but he did not know how they got in this condition.

Corpl. S. J. Peterson, Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, stated that he did not know personally that native prisoners had been cruelly treated, but the general impression among the men at Calaca was that Sergeant Edwards was torturing these prisoners, and had Lieutenant Arnold's permission to do so.

Corpl. Charles Austin, Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, stated that he was stationed with the detachment at Calaca under command of Lieutenant Arnold, and that his (Austin's) quarters were very near where the scouts under command of Sergeant Edwards lived; that he had seen Sergeant Edwards take native prisoners from the guardhouse to the scouts' quarters and shortly thereafter heard cries and groans coming from these quarters; that he saw them take one prisoner from the guardhouse to the scouts' quarters, and when he was returned to the guardhouse his shins looked as though they had been scraped with a stick. He did not know whether or not Lieutenant Arnold knew that prisoners were being badly treated, but the impression was that he knew all about it.

Private John Tuck, Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, states that while stationed at Calaca he had seen, through the windows of the scouts' quarters, prisoners being whipped with rattans by Sergeant Edwards and the scouts; that while on detached service near Calaca with Sergeant Edwards and the scouts he saw them abuse and beat an old man and made them stop it; that Sergeant Edwards took the prisoner off into the brush after this, and he (Tuck) heard two shots, and then Sergeant Edwards came back without the prisoner and stated that he had had a fight with the prisoner and showed where he had been bitten on the arm and said "He will be down there a long time." Private Tuck did not know if the prisoner had been killed nor whether Lieutenant Arnold knew about the prisoners being badly treated.

Private James M. Whitney, Troop B, Fourth Cavalry, stated that he was a member of the detachment at Calaca under command of Lieutenant Arnold, and that while in the scouts' quarters one day he saw a native prisoner on the floor, and that the prisoner was bucked and the scouts, in the presence of Sergeant Edwards, were rubbing the prisoner's legs with a broomstick, and that this treatment was brutal; that while on detached service with Sergeant Edwards and the scouts near Calaca he saw them beat a native in a brutal manner; that Sergeant Edwards told him that Lieutenant Arnold knew all about the way the natives were being treated. Private Whitney stated that Privates Reeves and Graham, of Troop C, Fourth Cavalry, could tell all about the inhuman treatment of prisoners at Calaca.

I was informed that Privates Fielding, St. Clair, and Taylor, of "B" Troop, Fourth Cavalry, could also give testimony on this subject, but the departure of the troop for the United States prevented me from finishing this investigation.

I believe that a thorough investigation into this matter will substantiate the charges made by Private Weir, that prisoners were treated in a cruel and harsh manner and that Lieutenant Arnold winked at this treatment.

Very respectfully,

P. W. WEST,
Captain, Fifth Cavalry, Inspector-General Department of Northern Luzon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, is the Senator from Texas through?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The time of the Senator from Texas has expired. The Senator from Indiana will be recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This purports to be, though I have not read it over, a report upon this case or some portion of it by proper authority. It is, therefore, a part of the public record. I hope the Senator will be kind enough to inform the Senate where he got this portion of the public record.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I indicated to the Senator—and I have, I trust, indicated with sufficient emphasis that he will not inquire about it further—that I have nothing to add to what I have said about the source of my information.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to ask the Senator the frank question whether or not, directly or indirectly, these two papers were received by the Senator from General Miles? [A pause.] That is all.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I have been present in the last six or eight weeks most of the time during the discussion of the bill under consideration for the government of the Philippine Islands. I have listened with some interest to the minority Senators in their efforts to traduce and villify the American Army, its officers, and the private soldiers. Having once served in a war in this country as a private soldier, I rise in my place to say one word for the humble privates who are serving in the Philippine Islands to-day.

I am sure that enlisted men who are serving to-day in the Army of the United States in the Philippine Islands will compare favorably with those upon this floor who have traduced them, and I predict that there are men to-day serving in the ranks in the Army of the United States in the Philippines who at some future time may fill a position upon the floor of the Senate.

I had the honor to carry a knapsack in the unpleasantness that took place between the two sections of this country, and I know there are many things which tempt a private soldier to resent an injury from the enemy. I know that there are cruelties perpetrated not only upon the enemy but sometimes upon our own men. I have seen a private soldier in my own regiment tied up by the thumbs, with his toes simply touching the ground, and after having been kept in that position for an hour, when he was let down, it was impossible for him to remain in other than in an incumbent position. If our friends upon the other side should be informed that something of that kind had been perpetrated upon the Filipinos they would regard it as a great outrage.

Mr. President, our friends upon the other side claim that they are the friends of the Filipinos and that they want to relieve them from the horrible military despotism or the rule of militarism in the islands. I think their arguments have been the strongest which have been made upon this floor in support of the bill that we shall vote upon at 4 o'clock, because if what they have said is true then I say this bill is the very thing to correct the injustice that they are claiming is being perpetrated upon the Filipinos, because it gives to the Filipinos a civil government in which they will largely share.

Mr. President, in view of the arguments they have made and of all the debaucheries and all the cruelties which it has been charged have been perpetrated by the Army, by the violation of all that is honorable on the part of the officers of the United States, I hope our friends on the other side will conclude, when 4 o'clock comes, to make the vote upon this bill to give the islands a civil government unanimous.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Texas, who seems to have copies of papers from the War Department respecting a certain matter, if he has any information which extends beyond the report he had read at the Clerk's desk?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in answer to the very courteous question of the Senator from Iowa, I will state that I have no other information than that given in the letter of the Secretary of War to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and printed in the RECORD of May 27, which states in effect that a court-martial has been ordered in the case of Sergeant Edwards, and in the case of Lieutenant Arnold there was not sufficient evidence, in his opinion, to order a court-martial so far, but that the matter was under further inquiry.

Mr. ALLISON. These charges made by a private soldier against two officers of the Army, a commissioned officer and a noncommissioned officer, seem to have been made largely upon hearsay, and the statement of the inspector, Captain West, is largely hearsay.

I do not know whether this matter has been pursued beyond the report of Captain West. I observe that Lieutenant Arnold is a resident of my State. I know nothing of him or about him, except I have a general idea that a young man reared in Iowa and educated at West Point is not very likely to be guilty of the brutality that is charged here.

I wish to express the hope that the Senator from Texas will pursue his inquiry so far as to give Lieutenant Arnold an opportunity of defending his honor and his character somewhere, and that these charges, put in the RECORD against him while he is in the service of his country in a distant region, will not injure him, in the opinion, at least, of those who are his near friends and relatives without an opportunity being given somewhere for an investigation. I have no doubt that the Secretary of War is making such an investigation. I do not discuss the propriety of spreading upon the RECORD this fragment against an officer of the Army. I can only say that as a Senator on this floor if this presentation had been made to me I would not have given it the publicity which the Senator from Texas has given it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I stated in an introductory statement which I made to this correspondence that the Secretary of War had on the 27th of May reported to the Senate through a communication to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that so far as Lieutenant Arnold was concerned the facts failed, in his opinion, to justify the trial of that officer by court-martial. The statement is here, and will go for what it is worth.

In reply to what the Senator from Iowa has seen proper to say, I ought to state further what I probably did not state with sufficient emphasis before, that in my judgment, all the facts connected with this matter being considered, there seemed to be a purpose on the part of the Secretary of War to keep the charges made in this communication from the public, at least for the present. They were made in April, 1901. They were investigated in August, 1901, by a captain in the Army, who reported that he believed the charges against the sergeant could be substantiated and that Lieutenant Arnold had winked at these harsh and cruel practices in the Philippines.

Those, Mr. President, are the facts, and whether the distinguished Senator from Iowa would under similar circumstances have presented them to the Senate and to the country may be stating the distinction which that Senator and myself draw as to our duty not only to a proper discipline of the United States Army and the honor of the United States Army, but to our duty toward the defenseless people of the Philippines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I take the opportunity at this moment to make a verbal correction of a misprint in the bill. On page 57, line 20, before the word "possessions," I move to strike out "aforesaid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to another verbal correction, which I think is necessary. On page 3, line 19, the word "right" should be "writ;" so as to read "the writ of habeas corpus."

Mr. LODGE. That is true. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 19, before the words "of habeas corpus," it is proposed to strike out "right" and insert "writ;" so as to read:

That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, except in cases of rebellion, insurrection, or invasion the public safety may require it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. LODGE. Has the Senator from Colorado moved that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moved the amendment yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. I did not know that he had yet done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator was absent from the Chamber at the time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Of course I could not possibly have given this matter so much study as members of the committee have done, and so I venture to make an inquiry. I do not know whether the Senator's attention has been directed to this matter or not. These commissioners are clothed with very great power, and practically they are the government of the Philippine Islands. They have the legislative power, the appointment of the judges, etc. The limitations upon their power are extremely small. They have the making of the regulations with reference to the disposition of lands, and so forth.

The inquiry I wish to make of the honorable Senator is this: Whether, conceding to these commissioners the utmost honesty and integrity, which I do—I do not wish to be understood as reflecting upon them in any manner whatever by the inquiry or suggesting the possibility of any improper conduct on their part—but I wish to ask whether, in view of the large power, the absolute control, which these commissioners have of all the functions of government, legislative, executive, and practically judicial, in the fact that they control the judiciary, there ought not to be a provision in this bill which would prohibit any commissioner from being engaged in any private enterprise or being a stockholder in any corporation engaged in any business enterprise in these islands?

Mr. LODGE. My first impression is that that would be a very reasonable proviso.

Mr. BACON. I do not offer an amendment, but I make the inquiry in the utmost good faith. I hope the Senator, if on reflection he approves of it, will move to incorporate such a provision in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] suggests that it would be well to provide that no member of the Philippine Commission should be interested in any way in any corporation.

Mr. BACON. Either as a stockholder in any corporation or individually in any business enterprise in the islands.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that if the commissioners would engage in anything of that sort it would certainly be a very wise provision to insert; but I do not believe that they would. I would as soon think of putting a proviso to an act appointing a judge of a district court that he should not be engaged in connection with any matter upon which he was called to make a decision.

Mr. BACON. That would not be a parallel case.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps not.

Mr. BACON. Because, under the law, he could not exercise any function of his office in a case in which he was so interested.

Mr. ALLISON. I would not object to such a proviso as the Senator from Georgia suggests except that it seems to me it might be regarded as a reflection upon the commissioners.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, I should not wish to put in a line that would reflect upon any member of that Commission.

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. LODGE. I am bound to say that I think a man as to whom such a proviso would be necessary would probably be one who would break it.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator that the committee seem to recognize that the members of this Commission are human from the fact that there is a prohibition against their appointing relatives to certain offices. There is a recognition of the possibility of fallibility on their part.

Mr. LODGE. A prohibition in this bill?

Mr. BACON. I understood that there was in the bill a limitation upon the appointment of clerks, or something of that sort.

Mr. LODGE. Not in this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. That is as to United States judges.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

Mr. BAILEY. And not always observed by them.

Mr. BACON. Somebody suggested that he thought something of the kind was in the bill. The Senator from Iowa having likened it to the case of a judge, I will say that there is a general statute which prohibits a judge of a United States court from appointing relatives to certain offices.

Mr. President, I again desire to repeat the disclaimer, in the utmost sincerity, of any purpose in any manner to reflect upon any one of these commissioners, or to suggest that any one of them would be engaged in any business, though I am frank to say that I think the statement that it would be in itself such an impropriety that no such official would engage in business is going a little too far.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to suggest to the chairman of the committee that it is not a whit more improbable that these commissioners might engage in business in the Philippine Islands than it is that ambassadors of the United States should engage in business in the countries to which they are accredited; and that has occurred within a very recent time in the case of an ambassador to a neighboring country, who is not only engaged in business, but is a director in a mining corporation chartered under the laws of the country to which he is accredited. I have the official record of the mining company, as recorded in the transaction with a citizen of Texas, and this ambassador of the United States is recited in that record to be one of the directors of that mining company. If an ambassador can engage in business, I see no reason why the Commissioners to the Philippine Islands might not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Colorado wishes to insert in the citizenship clause the word "government" before the words "Philippine Islands," which I think a very vital and fundamental change. I do not care at this stage to enter into the long controversy which I can foresee that would provoke, but I am entirely opposed to it, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. There are some other things in that amendment of mine which transform the original section as proposed by the committee, and I think my amendment reads a little better. If that is the only objection of the Senator from Massachusetts, I might strike out the word "government."

Mr. LODGE. I will look at the amendment. I thought it was the same as that heretofore offered. I have not compared them word for word.

Mr. TELLER. I think the phraseology is better in my amendment than the original text. I suggest to the Senator that he let it pass for the present so that he can examine it. I shall be glad to see it substituted for the language of the committee, even if the word "government" be stricken out, because I have provided that the Filipinos shall have the benefit of the bill of rights as declared in the second section, which I think is rather an important thing.

Mr. LODGE. I did not notice the other addition as to the privilege of the bill of rights. I take it that the act covers it.

Mr. TELLER. I thought it might be more agreeable to the Filipinos to say that they should have the benefit of the bill of rights. I think the Senator is right that the bill does confer that, undoubtedly; but it is a mere declaration to them, and it seems to me it might be useful.

Mr. LODGE. The rest of the amendment is identical, barring the word "government" before the word "Philippines," though it is differently arranged.

Mr. TELLER. The same words are in it. The only addition is the word "government" before the words "of the Philippine Islands" and the words at the end of the section.

Mr. LODGE. The word "government" seems to me a very essential one.

Mr. TELLER. I think it is. I think the language of the committee that those people are citizens of the Philippine Islands does not mean anything. I believe it would be an improvement on that if the word "government" was inserted there.

Mr. COCKRELL. To which one of his amendments does the Senator from Colorado refer—the one of May 31, 1902?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the one of May 31.

Mr. TELLER. The one which is a substitute for section 5 of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, there is no Senator who seems ready to proceed——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me one moment to offer an amendment, I will then yield to him. I desire to offer an amendment in section 3, to change somewhat the arrangement there, so as to define a little better the supreme court. After the words "supreme court," in line 21, page 4, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 21, after the words "supreme court," it is proposed to insert:

Shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided and such additional jurisdiction as shall hereafter be prescribed by the Commission, subject to the power of the Commission to change the practice and method of procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the language be read as it will stand if amended.

Mr. LODGE. Then I propose to begin by inserting before the word "courts" the word "The," beginning a new sentence, and I retain the same provision that is in the bill about the courts of first instance and the municipal courts. The purpose of the amendment is to provide that the Commission shall not diminish the existing jurisdiction of the supreme court; and I intend to propose another amendment in regard to the salaries of the judges, so as to protect them still further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language as proposed to be amended will be read.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended the section will read:

That the supreme court shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided and such additional jurisdiction as shall hereafter be prescribed by the Commission, subject to the power of the Commission to change the practice and method of procedure. The courts of first instance, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then a period is inserted before the word "courts" and a new sentence begins?

Mr. LODGE. We start a new sentence with the word "The" before the word "courts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 5, line 4, after the word "Senate," I move to insert:

And shall receive the compensation heretofore prescribed by the Commission until otherwise provided by Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I recognize the propriety of putting the salary of these judges beyond the immediate power of the Philippine Commission. I think that is entirely proper; but will the chairman of the committee inform the Senate what is the present salary received by those judges?

Mr. LODGE. I understand the present salary—I am speaking from memory—is $7,000 a year as to the justices. The chief justice may perhaps have a little more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I have no further amendments to offer, Mr. President.

RECESS.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I rose a moment ago to move that the Senate take a recess. I was about to make that motion because I was under the impression from the appearance of things here, that nobody had anything to say at this time; and as under our agreement we can not transact any business until we vote upon the pending bill, I thought we might take a recess for half an hour, but it is suggested to me that the Senate should take a recess for an hour. So I move that the Senate take a recess until half past 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., at which time it reassembled.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 2d instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 3208) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain license taxes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 87) to permit steam railroads in the District of Columbia to occupy additional parts of streets in order to accommodate the traveling public attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in October, 1902.

RENTAL OF BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, certain information concerning the quarters rented by the Interior Department, giving the location, area of floor space occupied, and the annual rental thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE STOKES.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, the 14th of June, at 4 o'clock p. m., I shall submit resolutions commemorative of the life and character of Hon. WILLIAM J. STOKES, late a Representative from South Carolina, and I shall ask the Senate at that time to suspend its business in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

RECESS.

Mr. KEAN. If no one desires to go on upon the Philippine government bill, I suggest that we might take a further recess until half past 3 o'clock.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator had better say 3.

Mr. KEAN. Very well, I will make it 3 o'clock, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate take a recess until 3 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 3 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reassembled.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I wish to read a short extract from an article published in the Washington Star of May 30. This is an article from the Star's own correspondent in the Philippine Islands, and is dated at Guinan, Samar, P. I., March 15, 1902. The Star, as everybody knows, is a Republican paper, an Administration paper. This correspondent gives the result of his own observations in the Philippines, especially in the province of Samar. He says:

[Special correspondence of the Evening Star.]

GUINAN, SAMAR, P. I., March 15, 1902.

We have just received the good news of the capture of Lucban, the insurgent leader on this rebellious island. He was captured on the other side of the island by native scouts. I understand a Filipino sergeant is given all the credit for this important capture.

An American lieutenant was in charge of the party, and I have heard that, if he is intelligent enough, he will be given a lieutenancy in the regular service.

This capture will give the native troops a boost, and probably increase their number and influence, but the officers who directly control them have very little confidence in their dusky warriors. Some of them have nerve and backbone, but they are always ready to run in a pinch, unless there are American soldiers present to make them stand their ground. They are easy to discipline when no danger is near, and the native noncommissioned officers are very strict with the privates.

NEW COURSE OF CAMPAIGNING.

The authorities have decided on a new course of campaigning in this section of Samar. They have tried the rough tactics by destroying and killing everything in sight, and now they are trying the kind and gentle tactics, and I believe the latter will prove the winner. No rifles or ammunition will be left lying around loose to induce treachery, as the men always take their rifles to meals.

The rough tactics were necessary to avenge the Balangiga massacre, and it was thought that they would soon give in, but after the towns and houses in the country were all destroyed the people took to the mountains, where they have been in hiding ever since last October, living principally on herbs and roots.

A native scout told me the other day that he ran across in the mountains a young woman whom he formerly knew. He said she was in rags and acted like a wild being. He said she was the daughter of the former presidente of the pueblo of Salcedro, which is or was 15 miles from here. It is now a mass of ruins. She was educated in a college at Manila, and was a very accomplished young woman.

PACIFICATION BY KINDNESS.

Major Hickey, with two troops of the Eleventh Cavalry, is now at Salcedro with instructions to try and pacify the natives by kindness. He has sent notices out to the natives to come in and build up their town again, offering them protection and rations until they are able to provide for themselves.

The people quickly availed themselves of the offer, and there are now a hundred families busily erecting houses over the ruins. Salcedro was a beautiful town, I am told, before its destruction, and it is hoped that the white dove of peace will rest long enough in that section to see it built up again.

The Eleventh Cavalry was being recruited and drilled at Fort Myer, Va., while this company was at Washington Barracks. It is odd that they should follow us up so close and that they should again be our military neighbors. A river divides us here, but it is not so peaceful or as dirty as the Potomac.

There are several officers visiting the post this week, and the prominent natives are doing their utmost to entertain them. Several trips to nearby places of interest have been made, and to-day a pedestrian trip was made to a small town about 3 miles distant.

Speaking further of the conditions in Samar, he says:

This island of Samar, which has been so turbulent during the past year, bids fair at present writing to be within the next six months a peaceful isle. We can not expect it to be peaceful for more than a year at a time, as the blood is always warm down here in the Tropics and the native always has it in his mind that there is a chance for an insurrection.

The American soldier will never amalgamate with these people. They fear him, but they will never like him. The soldiers, as a rule, treat them with contempt and ridicule all their customs. He compares them with ours and does not pause to think that these people know no better and have seen no other to imitate.

He knows also that his stay on these islands is limited, and as a rule they say that no amount of money would tempt them to remain after their term of service expires. A few of them are taking their discharge here for various reasons. Some will be school teachers, others will go into the hemp business, while many elect to be discharged here, thinking possibly that Congress will pass a law this session restoring the old travel pay on land and sea. They will pay their way back to America, and if the bill becomes a law will then present their claims.

Here is a statement of this correspondent of a stanch Republican newspaper here in Washington, a supporter of the Administration, which bears out the charge which has been made that the order issued by General Smith has been practically acted upon; that Samar has been made a howling wilderness, and that the rough tactics, as he describes it, employed in that province of Samar, which was that of destroying and killing everything in sight, burning the houses, and destroying the means of livelihood of those people until they were driven into the mountains, where they were compelled to live on herbs and roots. An illustration is given of a case of an accomplished and educated young woman, the daughter of a native presidente, who was in rags and starving, who had become almost a wild woman through the sufferings she had been compelled to endure.

The correspondent notes further in this article that the policy of kindness now being adopted has been much more effective in pacifying the people than the policy of killing and destroying everything in sight; that the people have responded to the policy of kindness, and that this policy has been effective, showing that there never was any necessity for adopting any such practices as those laid down in General Smith's order of making the island a howling wilderness and destroying all the people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Tha PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes; for a brief interruption.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For a question, Mr. President.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield for a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand the Senator approves of the policy of kindness?

Mr. CARMACK. Do I approve of the policy of kindness?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. Why, Mr. President, that is a strange question to put to me. I always approve of kindness. Does the Senator not approve of the policy of kindness?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. Then, Mr. President, I understand the Senator to say now that that policy exists there at the present time from what he has read.

Mr. CARMACK. Yes; after everybody has been driven out of the country and the country has been burned up, according to the statement of this correspondent of this Republican newspaper, they have changed their tactics, having admitted that the policy of destroying everybody and burning up the whole country has been a failure, and since that time they have adopted a policy of kindness, which has been much more effective.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, then I understand the Senator——

Mr. CARMACK. I will yield to the Senator for just one more question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand the Senator to say that he approves of the present policy?

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir; for a question.

Mr. DIETRICH. I should like to read a few words from the testimony of one of the American soldiers who was a survivor of the Balangiga massacre, giving a description of what the natives did in that massacre.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator can do that in his own time. I can not permit him to do it in my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee declines to yield.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, so far as the Balangiga massacre is concerned, it is mentioned in here as an excuse for this outrage. I have dwelt on that heretofore. It was an atrocious massacre, but it occurred simply in one town and it was an act of vengeance on the part of the people who had been persecuted by the officers there in command—persecuted in the most outrageous manner—and they took vengeance upon the American soldiers in a most atrocious manner. That was absolutely no excuse whatever for this order of General Smith to make the whole of Samar a howling wilderness and to kill everybody in the island capable of bearing arms, whether they were bearing arms or not, from 10 years of age up.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] criticised me the other day because I said in debate that the controlling purpose in the policy of this Government in seizing and holding the Philippine Islands was a selfish purpose, that it was a commercial purpose, and that the idea of benefiting the people of the Philippine Islands had little or no part in deciding the question whether or not we should seize the Philippine Islands. I have referred to the telegram sent from the Navy Department to Admiral Dewey asking him about the islands purely from a naval and commercial point of view—which was the best island for us to take—showing that the original purpose was to take the very best island that could be found and to leave all the others to the bloody rule and vengeance of Spain, and the only question asked him with respect to these islands had reference to the value of the islands from a strategic and from a commercial point of view.

One of the President's peace commissioners, the distinguished gentleman who presides over this body [Mr. FRYE], made a speech shortly after his return in which he dwelt at length upon the vast benefit that the Philippine Islands would be to us in extending our commerce in the Orient. That seemed to be the ruling and controlling argument.

One of the members of the President's first Commission, Mr. Denby, in an article in a magazine setting forth reasons why we should hold the islands, said that the only question was whether they would benefit us as a nation. "If it will not, turn them loose and let them cut each other's throats." That was his expression; and he said if we did not seize the Philippine Islands, then we ought to go over and by force and violence take part of China. I am very glad that that gentleman has seen another and a better light. That shows the purpose and the spirit which controlled at that time. It was purely a commercial consideration, without any regard whatever to the welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has referred to an expression of Mr. Gage, former Secretary of the Treasury, when he said it was a question of 5 per cent and philanthropy also.

Mr. President, there may be mixed motives, of course, in every transaction, but I do not believe that the motives were ever mixed in the same bosom. I do not believe that any one man ever did any one act from a noble motive and from a base motive at the same time. I do not believe that two such motives ever cooperated to influence any one man; and I say that the ruling, controlling motive which caused us to seize the Philippine Islands was the motive of greed and selfishness.

The present Secretary of the Treasury in a recent speech declared that selfishness had a great deal to do with our policy in taking the Philippines.

Mr. President, I wish to read briefly what another distinguished man, who was a great leader in the Republican party in his time, who was a member of President McKinley's Cabinet—his Secretary of State—who had some opinions of his own with respect to this question, and who had opinions, I believe, based on knowledge as to what was the controlling motive that drove this Government into such a policy, says upon this subject.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Who is it from?

Mr. CARMACK. It is from John Sherman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with his gavel.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 3, 1899.

W. A. CROFFUT, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I have received your invitation to attend a public meeting to be held in opposition to the measures recently taken by this Government against the Philippines, and would heartily do so if my health would permit. From the beginning I think the President has fallen into an error in assuming that the Philippines had given cause to our Government to commence war for the acquisition of far distant territory. There has not been on the part of the islands a single act that would justify war, and the only pretext for war on our part is the opportunity to acquire territory from a feeble country in a region far removed from ours. The United States has from the close of the Revolution gradually expanded its limits, but each new Territory except Alaska has been in due time admitted as a State in the Union. If we engage in war with the Philippines it will not be for any act of theirs, but a mere pretense to rob a friendly power of its possessions. I do not hesitate to say that an attack upon a friendly power such as the Philippines are would be an act of oppression without good reason or excuse, and it is especially indefensible if made by the United States. Our country has expanded by honorable and peaceful negotiation. Its accession of territory has been by purchase and not by war. It now holds in union the greater and better part of a continent. We ought to be content with this and leave all far distant countries independent of our power, but made friendly to us by negotiation.

Very truly, yours, JOHN SHERMAN.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, earlier in the session of the Senate to-day, for reasons which were obvious at the time, I made no answer to an inquiry addressed to me by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. Since then I have secured the stenographic copy of that inquiry as it will appear in the RECORD, and I desire to read it:

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to ask the Senator the frank question whether or not, directly or indirectly, these two papers were received by the Senator from General Miles? [A pause.] That is all.

If that inquiry addressed to me, Mr. President, shall remain in the RECORD unanswered, upon reflection it occurs to me that an injustice may be done, and I therefore desire to say that those two copies, a copy of the charges made by Private Weir and a copy of the report made by Captain West, were received by me from a gentleman absolutely and wholly disconnected with the Army or the War Department, and were given to me without any suggestion on my part. They did not, of course, come to me directly, and, so far as I know, not indirectly, from General Miles.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I should like to read an extract from Secretary Shaw's speech, to which I referred a while ago and which I did not then have in my possession, and have it go into the RECORD. Speaking of the result of our war with Spain he said:

Why did we not do this one hundred years before? The corpuscles of American blood were always red and the Anglo-Saxons and their Teutonic kinfolk were always humane. Our altruism had been appealed to again and again, but it had been appealed to in vain. Disguise it as we will, deny it as we may, the element of self-interest was a factor in the equation in 1898. We were masters of our own markets and were reaching out for new ones. Yes, commercialism, if you please, had touched us; and so it was that our self-interest, as well as our unselfishness, was appealed to. Then we gave notice to the world that we proposed to police the street on which we lived, and we challenged him who doubted our right to step into the open.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President, I simply wish to make a statement as to what occurred and what was said in an interview I had with Aguinaldo about one year ago. I asked Aguinaldo the question if, at the Malolos convention, there were any representatives selected by the people from any of the southern islands or from any of the provinces of the island of Luzon other than where the Tagalogs lived. I refer to the Malolos convention or congress which adopted the so-called constitution. And he said there were not.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DIETRICH. I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire merely to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether, in view of the fact that he is a member of the Committee on the Philippines and has unfalteringly opposed the calling of Aguinaldo as a witness, he feels justified, with that gentleman 8,000 miles away, to repeat a private conversation or any conversation between himself and Aguinaldo touching the matters that are in dispute here?

Mr. DIETRICH. Would that in any way interfere with or prevent my stating the absolute facts and the truth as to what did occur?

Mr. PATTERSON. It seems to me that if a conversation which occurred between Aguinaldo and the Senator from Nebraska bears any reference to matters in which Aguinaldo has heretofore taken and doubtless now takes an absorbing interest, and the Senator, as a member of the Committee on the Philippines, has declined to vote to call him as a witness, he should not undertake to repeat conversations between himself and that gentleman, whether true or not.

Mr. DIETRICH. I wish further to state that I carefully made inquiries over in the islands and also from those who have lived there for a number of years, and I ascertained that there was not a single man of any prominence who took part in the Malolos congress or convention who was not a member of what is known as the Katipunan Society.

I simply make this statement so that those who wish may draw a comparison between those men and the men who were elected and selected, and who gathered at Philadelphia and adopted the Declaration of Independence, and let them judge whether or not the people of the Philippine Islands were as well represented at Malolos as were the people of the thirteen States of the United States in the convention which adopted the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I was not at all surprised when witnesses before the Committee on the Philippines made statements calculated to impeach both the honor and the humanity of the late Filipino general who is now and has been for a long time a prisoner of the United States, notwithstanding it is said that shortly after his capture he took the oath of allegiance to the United States. But I am frank to say that I am very much astonished, indeed, that a Senator who has refused, whenever the question was before the committee, to vote to permit Aguinaldo to come here to tell his own story, to speak for his own people, to speak for his own country, and to defend himself from aspersions cast upon him, whether true or false, should repeat the offense committed by gentlemen in the Army and out of the Army when they were before the committee for the purpose of giving testimony.

Mr. DIETRICH. When the matter first came before the committee, I stated that I was opposed to bringing those prisoners here, but that I was favorable to taking their testimony there.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish the Senator from Colorado had not taken his seat, because I should like to ask him a question. It is whether he questions the truthfulness of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska. If the truthfulness of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska is questioned, then, of course, there would be some pertinency in the suggestion that it should not be made without Aguinaldo being here, but if its truthfulness is admitted, then I submit there is no point to the objection of the Senator from Colorado to the statement, the very pertinent statement, very properly made by the Senator from Nebraska.

Before the committee General MacArthur also testified that Aguinaldo had told him that in case he had succeeded the whole islands would have been riven and torn by civil war. The truthfulness of that was not questioned. Before the truthfulness of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska is questioned it is hardly proper for the Senator from Colorado to say that Aguinaldo himself should be called. We are familiar with the policy of the opposition which puts Aguinaldo or anybody else in rebellion against the American Government upon an equality, not only with an American Senator, but with George Washington himself. But until the truthfulness of the statement given is questioned, it is not pertinent to say that it is not proper to give it unless Aguinaldo is here.

Mr. PATTERSON. How do I know whether what any gentleman says is true or is not true?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do you accept the truthfulness of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator from Indiana would just contain himself long enough for a Senator to make a two-minute reply to the numerous questions he propounds——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Colorado has never confined himself to a two-minute, hardly to a two-day reply. I ask the Senator the question whether he accepts the truthfulness of the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will state his point of order.

Mr. CARMACK. The point of order is that when a Senator wishes to interrupt another Senator, he should address the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado permit me a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator whether he admits the truthfulness of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will ask the Senator from Indiana whether he is through?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am through asking that question.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, if the Senator from Indiana will take his seat I will answer the question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will oblige the Senator in any possible way if he will answer my question, which is, Do you admit the truthfulness of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska? Yes or no.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, that the Senator from Indiana has taken his seat, and with the fervent hope that he will be able to retain it for thirty seconds, I will proceed to answer his question.

I do not know whether or not the statement is true. I do not call in question the veracity of the Senator from Nebraska, because I know nothing about it. The presumption is that what the Senator from Nebraska says is true, because we have the right to presume that no Senator would assert that which he believed to be untrue or had reason to doubt. But that is not the question of morals or the question of the propriety of conduct involved in this very little controversy. Every man has a right to be confronted with his accusers, however truthful the accusation may be. It has been recognized as being bad law and bad morals to make any statement affecting matters in which others are involved in the absence of the persons who are interested upon the opposite side; and whether the statement is true or false, I have no hesitation in repeating that I think it is altogether improper, altogether unwarranted, altogether unjustifiable for any person in this public place to relate conversations between himself and another that may be important in this controversy when that other is confined eight or ten thousand miles away and when the gentleman who makes the statement had the opportunity to vote to bring the other party here, that all of these matters might be presented to him, and voted that he should not come.

RECESS.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate take a further recess for fifteen minutes. It appears that there are no more newspaper extracts to be published.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess for fifteen minutes, at the expiration of which time the Senate reassembled.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I want to take only a minute. As I came into the Chamber before the last recess I heard the statement of the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. He implored that men who were far away should be spoken of lightly and not condemned when they could not be here and heard in their own behalf. Just this morning I heard the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] justly characterize an incident affecting a young lieutenant, against whom a private soldier had made a charge which the Department of War said seemed not worthy to investigate. The charge was spread here before the whole people, and he out yonder fighting under the flag and not here to be heard. The charge was read and produced in the open Senate which the War Department had shown upon judgment was not worthy of any circulation and needed no response.

In the examination the Senator from Colorado will well remember that there was a Corporal O'Brien, who there made grave and inhuman charges against a half dozen gallant officers out there, and it soon developed that this Corporal O'Brien was full of malice and steeped in perjury, until the members of the minority of the committee would have been glad to get rid of him and his untrue statements, when the fact was developed that he who said these things was forty or fifty miles away from the place where the alleged imagined base accusations against these gallant soldiers occurred; and yet this matter is here printed in the RECORD and put before the Senate.

When the lament is made that Aguinaldo is not here, I have a line from the diary of Villa, who was a medical officer on Aguinaldo's staff, who accompanied him on his flight, and became, finally, his chief of staff. Along with other papers this diary fell into the hands of the American authorities when Aguinaldo was captured at Palanan by Funston, March 23, 1901. The diary is a semiofficial record kept by Villa, with the knowledge and consent of Aguinaldo, if, indeed, not under his special direction.

There are apparent in every page of this diary of Villa, his chief of staff, thus connected with the wandering and the flight of Aguinaldo, his thoughts and reflections; and if it be said that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH] has here repeated conversations that seem unlikely to be absolutely well remembered, the Senator from Colorado disclaims it, and well he may. Here is the statement of Aguinaldo himself by his chief of staff in the diary kept of the daily wanderings under his direction, wherein he says, after speaking of certain aspirations for victory and independence, as he viewed it:

The honorable president—

That means Aguinaldo—

Added he [Aguinaldo] fears there will be a civil war afterwards.

That is the statement of Aguinaldo's near friend and companion in flight, that Aguinaldo says he fears there will be a civil war afterwards. It does not need Aguinaldo, when you have his chief of staff and his companion in flight saying that Aguinaldo himself, after all this matter, feared civil war would follow if there were any success of his scheme.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President, the reason why I did not say anything more in answer to the Senator from Colorado was that his reputation is so well established in this country for only seeking that which is detrimental to the American Army and the American flag in the Philippines that any insinuation which he casts against me would not in the slightest degree affect me before the people of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas will state the question of order.

Mr. BAILEY. It is that that kind of reflection upon a Senator is an offense against the rules of the Senate. We saw the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] called to order by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] for language not more offensive than that. If the rules of the Senate are to be enforced, let us enforce them against both sides. I ask that the words of the Senator from Nebraska be taken down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be taken down and read to the Senate.

Mr. BATE. I wish to make an additional suggestion, sir. I wish to say that it is out of place for anybody to use such language now, when he knows it is within a minute or two of the time when we are going to vote and there is no opportunity for a proper defense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words will be read.

The Reporter read as follows:

Mr. President, the reason why I did not say anything more in answer to the Senator from Colorado was that his reputation is so well established in this country for only seeking that which is detrimental to the American Army and to the American flag in the Philippines that any insinuation which he casts against me would not in the slightest degree affect me before the people of the United States.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President, if that is a violation of the rules of the Senate, I withdraw the words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words are withdrawn. In the opinion of the Chair, they were not in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived. By the order of the Senate, the vote will be taken upon proposed amendments and upon the bill. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. LODGE. On page 50, line 20, after the word "persons," I move to insert "claimed or alleged to be;" and after the word "in" to strike out the words "slavery or;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under this act, or for any person, company, or corporation receiving any grant, franchise, or concession from the government of the Philippine Islands, to use, employ, or contract for the labor of persons claimed or alleged to be held in involuntary servitude, etc.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to know the effect of the amendment. I have not the bill before me.

Mr. LODGE. It is to strike out after the word "in" the words "slavery or" and to make the clause read:

Persons claimed or alleged to be held in involuntary servitude.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. The committee has no further amendments to offer, and I hope all other amendments will be voted down.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill, on page 9, line 18, after the word "productiveness," to insert "and."

Mr. LODGE. I see that that is necessary. I accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that has already been done.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has not been so printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was a mistake of the printer.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to strike out the word "such," in line 19, page 49, before the word "franchise."

Mr. LODGE. I haved no objection to that amendment. It, I think, perfects the text.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I move to add at the end of section 4 the following proviso:

Provided, That the duties imposed and collected upon imports from the Philippine Islands shall in no case exceed 50 per cent of the amount of the duties imposed and collected upon similar imports from foreign countries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "imports" the words "the products of the Philippine Islands."

Mr. QUAY. How will that make the amendment read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proviso will be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. After "imports" insert the words "the products of the Philippine Islands;" so as to read:

Provided, That the duties imposed and collected upon imports, the products of the Philippine Islands, from the Philippine Islands shall in no case exceed 50 per cent, etc.

Mr. QUAY. I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is accepted, the Chair understands. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. We are to vote on the main amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the main amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MARTIN (when Mr. DANIEL'S name was called). I desire to announce the pair of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. On this and all other votes upon the bill the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. KEAN (when Mr. DRYDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. DRYDEN] is necessarily absent. He is paired, on this vote and on the bill, with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. Otherwise, I should vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], who is absent. My pair has been transferred to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I will vote on this and on all amendments to the bill. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], but a transfer has been arranged so that the junior Senator from New York is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. As I have the privilege of voting, I vote "nay."

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I have no pair, but I withhold my vote upon this and upon all questions of substitutes and amendments, retaining simply the determination I have to vote "nay" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOAR (when Mr. PETTUS'S name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], who is absent, but he desired me, in regard to the amendments which have been anticipated, to vote as I should see fit. I think there is an arrangement for pairing him with another Senator on the final passage of the bill; but in regard to this particular question, which is not connected with the general merits and comes very suddenly, I prefer to let my pair stand and not to vote.

Mr. LODGE. The pair of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN] has already been announced.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I understand that arrangements have been made pairing that Senator with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If I am correct in that, I wish the pair to stand upon all the votes this afternoon, and I will not announce it again. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the negative). Understanding after I voted that the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was assented to, I desire to vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 56, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bacon,	Clapp,	Gallinger,	Morgan,
Bailey,	Clay,	Gibson,	Nelson,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Quay,
Berry,	Dubois,	Martin,	Tillman.
Blackburn,	Foraker,	Mitchell,

NAYS—56.

Allison,	Carmack,	Dietrich,	Foster, Wash.
Bard,	Clark, Mont.	Dillingham,	Frye,
Beveridge,	Clark, Wyo.	Dolliver,	Gamble,
Burnham,	Culberson,	Elkins,	Hanna,
Burrows,	Cullom,	Fairbanks,	Harris,
Burton,	Deboe,	Foster, La.	Hawley,
Jones, Nev.	McLaurin, Miss.	Platt, Conn.	Spooner,
Kean,	McLaurin, S. C.	Platt, N. Y.	Stewart,
Kearns,	McMillan,	Pritchard,	Taliaferro,
Kittredge,	Mallory,	Proctor,	Teller,
Lodge,	Millard,	Quarles,	Vest.
McComas,	Money,	Scott,	Warren.
McCumber,	Patterson,	Simmons,	Wellington,
McEnery,	Perkins,	Simon,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—13.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Mason,	Turner.
Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Penrose,
Depew,	Hoar,	Pettus,
Dryden,	Jones, Ark.	Rawlins,

So Mr. QUAY'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment as a substitute for section 5 of the bill, but on the appeal of the chairman of the committee that all amendments be voted down I desire to withdraw that amendment and to say that certain amendments of which I have given notice I shall not offer.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire of the Senator if he does not propose to offer the amendment declaring the intention of the Government of the United States toward the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TELLER. That is not the amendment to which I was referring. The amendment to which I was referring was one making a change in the phraseology of section 5. It is not, however, very material one way or the other.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will offer the other amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to add to the bill a provision of the bill of rights.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 4, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

The trial of all crimes except in cases of impeachment shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the province where the said crime shall have been committed.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WETMORE. I desire to announce, once for all, that my colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], is paired on this amendment, on all other amendments, and on the bill with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. My colleague, if present, would on the passage of the bill vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bacon,	Clay,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,
Bailey,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Simmons,
Bate,	Culberson,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Dubois,	McLaurin, Miss.	Teller,
Blackburn,	Foster, La.	Mallory,	Tillman,
Carmack,	Gibson,	Martin,	Vest,
Clark, Mont.	Harris,	Money,	Wellington.

NAYS—47.

Allison,	Dolliver,	Kittredge,	Platt, Conn.
Bard,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Pritchard,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McLaurin, S. C.	Quarles,
Burton,	Frye,	McMillan,	Quay,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Millard,	Simon,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Warren,
Dietrich,	Kean,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Perkins,

NOT VOTING—13.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Mason,	Turner.
Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Pettus,
Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Rawlins,
Dryden,	Jones, Nev.	Scott,

So Mr. PATTERSON'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I send to the desk an amendment, which I desire to offer, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. —. It is not the intention of the Government of the United States to harass or oppress the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, or to deprive them of their liberty, but, on the contrary, to assist them to establish a government of their own that shall secure to them all privileges, advantages, and blessings enjoyed by a free people, and ultimate independence under the protection of the United States against foreign powers and domestic violence. And to secure these ends as speedily as possible, the Government of the United States invites and urges the people of said islands to aid the United States authorities now exercising power in the islands to secure peace and order.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague (Mr. JONES of Arkansas), if present, would vote "yea" on this amendment.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 30, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Simmons,
Bailey,	Culberson,	Jones, Nev.	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Dubois,	McEnery,	Teller,
Berry,	Foster, La.	McLaurin, Miss.	Tillman,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mallory,	Vest,
Carmack,	Hale,	Martin,	Wellington.
Clark, Mont.	Harris,	Money,
Clay,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,

NAYS—47.

Allison,	Dolliver,	Kittredge,	Platt, Conn.
Bard,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Pritchard,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McLaurin, S. C.	Quarles,
Burton,	Frye,	McMillan,	Quay,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Millard,	Simon.
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Warren,
Dietrich,	Kean,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Perkins,

NOT VOTING—11.

Aldrich,	Dryden,	Mason,	Scott,
Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Pettus,	Turner.
Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Rawlins,

So Mr. TELLER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, at the end of section 76, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under this act, or for any person, company, or corporation receiving any grant, franchise, or concession from the government of the Philippine Islands, to hold persons in slavery or involuntary servitude, or to use, employ, or contract for the labor of persons so held in slavery or involuntary servitude; and any person, company, or corporation so violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit all charters, grants, franchises, and concessions for doing business in the said Philippine Islands, and in addition shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I wish to say——

Mr. GALLINGER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CARMACK. I only wish to say that I am informed that practically that amendment has already been incorporated in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. It has been.

Mr. CARMACK. That was not the amendment that I intended to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw the amendment?

Mr. CARMACK. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the United States regard with extreme disfavor any movement having for its object the early or ultimate admission of the Philippine Islands as a State or States of the Union; and any action on the part of persons holding office under the authority of the United States that gives sanction or encouragement to such movement is hereby condemned.

That to confer the rights and privileges of citizens upon the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands would tend to destroy the integrity of the citizenship and to degrade the character of the Government of the United States.

That to maintain the relation of sovereign and subject between the Government of the United States and a people under its dominion would be repugnant to the principles of the Constitution.

Mr. CARMACK. On agreeing to the amendment, I ask for the ayes and nays.

The ayes and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for a division. There are three propositions embraced in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where does the Senator from Missouri demand the division?

Mr. COCKRELL. On the first six lines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is clearly divisible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the first proposition be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be taken on the first proposition, which will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the United States regard with extreme disfavor any movement having for its object the early or ultimate admission of the Philippine Islands as a State or States of the Union; and any action on the part of persons holding office under the authority of the United States that gives sanction or encouragement to such movement is hereby condemned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to so much of the amendment as has been read; on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bacon,	Clay,	Harris,	Patterson,
Bailey,	Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Simmons,
Bate,	Culberson,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Dubois,	McLaurin, Miss.	Teller,
Blackburn,	Foster, La.	Mallory,	Tillman,
Carmack,	Gibson,	Martin,	Vest,
Clark, Mont.	Hale,	Money,	Wellington.

NAYS—46.

Allison,	Dolliver,	Kittredge,	Platt, N. Y.
Bard,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Proctor,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Quarles,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McLaurin, S. C.	Scott,
Burton,	Frye,	McMillan,	Simon,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Millard,	Spooner,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Warren,
Deboe,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Wetmore.
Dietrich,	Kean,	Penrose,
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Perkins,

NOT VOTING—14.

Aldrich,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Rawlins,
Daniel,	Hawley,	Pettus,	Turner.
Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.
Dryden,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,

So the first branch of Mr. CARMACK's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator demand a double division—a division on the other two clauses of the amendment?

Mr. CARMACK. No, sir; I will not demand a division, nor will I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that they have been ordered on the entire amendment. They will be taken, however, on the last two clauses together.

Mr. CARMACK. Have I a right to withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not, without unanimous consent.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that order for the yeas and nays on the last two clauses be rescinded.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the last two clauses of the amendment.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 49; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bacon,	Clark, Mont.	Hoar,	Simmons,
Bailey,	Cockrell,	McEnery,	Teller,
Bate,	Dubois,	McLaurin, Miss.	Tillman,
Berry,	Foster, La.	Mallory,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Martin,	Wellington.
Carmack,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,

NAYS—49.

Allison,	Dolliver,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Bard,	Elkins,	McComas,	Proctor,
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	McCumber,	Quarles,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McLaurin, S. C.	Quay,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McMillan,	Scott,
Burton,	Frye,	Millard,	Simon,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Clay,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Warren,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Deboe,	Kean,	Perkins,
Dietrich,	Kearns,	Platt, Conn.
Dillingham,	Kittredge,	Platt, N. Y.

NOT VOTING—16.

Aldrich,	Dryden,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,
Culberson,	Hale,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,
Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Depew,	Harris,	Money,	Turner.

So the last two clauses of Mr. CARMACK's amendment were rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. In the absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], I desire to offer, on the part of the minority of the Committee on the Philippines, an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the pending bill. It is the amendment which was submitted yesterday by request and printed, and is on the table. It was put on the desks of Senators this morning. It is agreed to by the minority members of the Committee on the Philippines and the minority members of the House Committee on Insular Affairs. Before formally offering it I desire to perfect it by suggesting several verbal amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas, on behalf of the minority members of the Committee on the Philippines, offers an amendment as a substitute for the pending bill. The Senator has a right to perfect it himself.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have prepared the substitute as amended. I can send it to the desk and have it read or I can state the changes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can send the substitute to the desk and it will be read as amended.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas, on behalf of the minority of the committee, offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the pending bill. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 2. That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a government in accordance with the provisions of this act, with sufficient guaranties for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain and for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under the authority thereof, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That upon the cessation of organized armed opposition to the temporary sovereignty of the United States Government the President of the United States shall proclaim the fact, and within ninety days after the issuance of such proclamation the United States Philippine Commission shall make and promulgate rules and regulations for the holding of an election in the various provinces of said Philippine Archipelago for members of a house of representatives and a senate, to constitute a temporary congress, which shall be vested with full legislative power and also with the power of appointing such judges as may to them seem proper and necessary. The said Philippine congress shall prescribe rules and regulations for the election or appointment of all other officers, provincial or municipal, as may to them seem proper or necessary. The members of the said senate and house shall hold their offices for the term of four years from and after their election and qualification, unless said terms of office are sooner terminated by the inauguration of the permanent government created by the constitutional convention hereinafter provided for, and all other officers shall hold office for such terms as may be prescribed by such congress. Senators and representatives in congress are to receive compensation at the rate of —— dollars per annum and other officers shall receive such compensation as may be prescribed by the congress.

EXECUTIVE.

The chief executive shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and shall be vested with a veto power over all acts of the Philippine congress having relation to their foreign affairs, but shall have no veto power with respect to other legislation, nor shall he be empowered to appoint any officer unless authorized to do so by the Philippine congress. He shall exercise such other executive powers as shall be vested in him by the Philippine congress, and shall hold his office for a term of four years unless the temporary government shall within that time be superseded by the inauguration of the permanent government herein provided for, and said president shall receive a compensation of $10,000 per annum, to be paid out of the Philippine treasury. There shall be such other executive officers receiving such compensation and performing such duties as may be prescribed by the Philippine congress, and they shall be appointed or elected in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

During the period of the existence of the temporary government herein provided for, which shall in no event extend beyond four years from and after the date of its inauguration, the United States guarantee to the people of said Philippine Archipelago their independence and a republican form of government, and shall protect them against invasion and, upon application by the congress thereof, against domestic violence.

That all male inhabitants of said archipelago 21 years of age and over who can speak and write either the English or Spanish language, or any of the native languages of the said archipelago, and who shall have resided therein for one year, shall be qualified to vote for members of congress and other elective officers, and any person so qualified as an elector shall be qualified to become a member of said congress or to hold any elective office.

The house of representatives shall be composed of 100 members and the senate of 30 members, and shall be apportioned by the United States Philippine Commission among the several provinces of said archipelago, so that the distribution of membership in the house of representatives shall be in proportion to their population, as near as may be, and so that the membership of the senate shall be as nearly representative of separate provinces as may be; and when said apportionment has been determined upon, the said Commission shall by proclamation order an election of the members of said congress to be held throughout the said archipelago, at such time as shall be fixed by the said Commission, which election shall be held not more than one hundred and twenty days from the date of the proclamation by the President of the United States hereinbefore provided for, and ample time shall be given before said election to circulate said proclamation throughout the archipelago and arrange for the holding of said election.

SEC. 4. That the members of the congress thus elected shall meet at the city of Manila on a day to be fixed by the United States Philippine Commission, not more than ninety days subsequent to the day of election, the time for which meeting shall be stated in the proclamation aforesaid, and after organization the said congress and president, constituting the temporary government herein provided for, shall proceed to the performance of their duties as the temporary government of the Philippine Archipelago: Provided, That said congress shall provide by legislation and treaty, irrevocable without the consent of the United States—

First. That there shall belong to the United States, and continue to be the property thereof, such lands and waters as the President of the United States shall designate to the Philippine government, and shall be agreed to by it, for naval, military, and coaling stations, and terminal facilities for submarine cables, the same to continue under the control and sovereignty of the United States.

Second. To carry into effect the treaty obligations of the United States with the Kingdom of Spain and for the maintenance and protection of all rights and property acquired under the authority of the United States.

Third. That no inhabitant of said archipelago shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her adherence to the United States.

SEC. 5. That when the election herein provided for shall have taken place and the congress thereby elected shall have convened, in compliance with the provisions of the act, the said United States Philippine Commission shall certify the fact to the President of the United States, whereupon it shall be the duty of the President to issue his proclamation declaring the independence of the people of said archipelago and that they constitute an independent state and nation: subject, however, to the control and regulation by the United States of their intercourse with foreign nations during the period of the existence of the temporary government herein provided for.

SEC. 6. That immediately after the President shall have proclaimed that all organized armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago, he is requested to proclaim full amnesty to all inhabitants thereof for and on account of political offenses and the bearing of arms against the United States, and all Filipinos or inhabitants of said archipelago who have been deported shall be returned to the place whence they were so deported: Provided, That such amnesty shall not apply to any who have violated the rules of civilized warfare or who have been guilty of murder or torture; that the latter, if any, shall be afforded a speedy trial for their offenses in the civil courts of said archipelago and be punished or acquitted, as the facts and law may warrant.

SEC. 7. That within sixty days from the election of officers under the temporary government to be formed by the people of the Philippine Archipelago, in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the inauguration of said officers, the President shall cause the armed forces of the United States to be withdrawn from said archipelago as speedily as may be, except such forces as may be maintained in such parts thereof as have been retained by the United States for naval, military, and coaling stations and terminal facilities for cables, and the President of the United States and the Secretary of War shall make all needful regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this section.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Philippine congress herein provided for to prescribe rules and regulations and qualifications for electors for the election and holding of a constitutional convention which shall be charged with the duty of framing a permanent government for the people of the Philippine Archipelago. Said constitutional convention shall be called to meet at such place and at such time, not later than the first Monday of January, 1905, as may be prescribed by said Philippine congress. Upon the completion of the labors of said convention and the inauguration of the government consequent thereupon, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation declaring the absolute and unqualified independence of the people of the Philippine Archipelago and that they constitute an independent state and nation, and upon the issuance of said proclamation the United States Government and the Philippine government shall become and be as fully separate and independent as any other separate and independent nations are: Provided, however, That if the Philippine government request it, the United States Government hereby agrees to assume a protectorate over the Philippine Archipelago for a period additional to the period of the temporary government herein provided for, said additional period of protectorate not to exceed, however, the period of sixteen years: Provided further, That the said Philippine government agree during the said period of additional protectorate to surrender to the keeping of the United State Government the regulation and control of the foreign affairs of the Philippine Archipelago.

SEC. 9. That all terms of office of legislative, executive and judicial officers of the temporary government hereinbefore provided for, including the term of office of the president, and the terms of office of the senators and representatives in congress hereinbefore prescribed, shall terminate with the existence of the temporary government herein provided for, and said temporary government shall ipso facto cease to exist upon the inauguration of the permanent government to be called into existence by the constitutional convention herein provided for; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the congress of the Philippine Archipelago from calling the said constitutional convention at a date earlier than the date herein fixed.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 14, page 3, section 3, I suggest to the Senator from Texas instead of its reading "said president" it should read "said chief executive." The officer is not styled "president" in the amendment. He is styled "chief executive" in the first part of the amendment, and I suggest that it would be better to make that change.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified in that respect.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 21, page 8, I move to strike out "President" and insert "Chief Executive" so as to make it correspond.

Mr. CULBERSON. I accept the amendment to the amendment, and upon the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. On this amendment he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bacon,	Clay,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,
Bailey,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Simmons,
Bate,	Culberson,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Dubois,	McLaurin, Miss.	Teller,
Blackburn,	Foster, La.	Mallory,	Tillman,
Carmack,	Gibson,	Martin,	Vest,
Clark, Mont.	Harris,	Money,	Wellington.

NAYS—48.

Allison,	Dolliver,	Kittredge,	Platt, Conn.
Bard,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Pritchard,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McLaurin, S. C.	Quarles,
Burton,	Frye,	McMillan,	Quay,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Millard,	Scott,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Mitchell,	Simon,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Dietrich,	Kean,	Penrose,	Warren,
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Perkins,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—12.

Aldrich,	Dryden,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,
Daniel,	Hale,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,
Depew,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Turner.

So Mr. CULBERSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. On page 59, after section 98, I move to insert:

It is the policy of the Government to preserve the agricultural public lands in the archipelago for homes for the people of the archipelago, and no part of said agricultural lands shall be sold under this act except for such homes, nor to any except a natural person, a citizen of said archipelago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and having been taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bacon,	Clay,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,
Bailey,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Simmons,
Bate,	Culberson,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Dubois,	McLaurin, Miss.	Teller,
Blackburn,	Foster, La.	Mallory,	Tillman,
Carmack,	Gibson,	Martin,	Vest,
Clark, Mont.	Harris,	Money,	Wellington.

NAYS—47.

Allison,	Dolliver,	Kittredge,	Platt, Conn.
Bard,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Pritchard,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McLaurin, S. C.	Quarles,
Burton,	Frye,	McMillan,	Scott,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Millard,	Simon,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Warren,
Dietrich,	Kean,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Perkins,

NOT VOTING—13.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Mason,	Turner.
Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Pettus,
Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Dryden,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,

So the amendment of Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to taking the vote on concurring in the amendments in gross? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BERRY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KEAN (when Mr. DRYDEN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DRYDEN] is paired on this vote with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired on the final passage of the bill with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. He would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when Mr. PETTUS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PETTUS] is absent on public duty. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN].

Mr. HEITFELD (when Mr. TURNER's name was called). The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If the Senator from Washington were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—48.

Allison,	Dolliver,	Kearns,	Platt, Conn.
Bard,	Elkins,	Kittredge,	Platt, N. Y.
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McComas,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McCumber,	Quarles,
Burton,	Frye,	McLaurin, S. C.	Quay,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Scott,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Millard,	Simon,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Dietrich,	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,	Warren.
Dillingham,	Kean,	Perkins,	Wetmore.

NAYS—30.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	McEnery,	Simmons,
Bailey,	Culberson,	McLaurin, Miss.	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Dubois,	Mallory,	Teller,
Berry,	Foster, La.	Martin,	Tillman,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mason,	Vest,
Carmack,	Harris,	Money,	Wellington.
Clark, Mont.	Heitfeld,	Morgan,
Clay,	Hoar,	Patterson,

NOT VOTING—10.

Aldrich,	Dryden,	Jones, Ark.	Turner.
Daniel,	Hale,	Pettus,
Depew,	Hansbrough,	Rawlins,

So the bill was passed.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

JOHN R. SANDSBURY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I am obliged to leave the city to-morrow, I ask the favor of the unanimous consent of the Senate to temporarily lay aside the pending bill in order to proceed with the consideration of a small pension bill, being the bill (S. 5491) granting a pension to John R. Sandsbury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John R. Sandsbury, late of the U. S. S. Ohio and Montgomery, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John R. Sandsbury."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 4, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 3, 1902.

INDIAN AGENT.

Blanchard B. Weber, of Salamanca, N. Y., to be agent for the Indians of the New York Agency, in New York, vice Augustine W. Ferrin, deceased.

POSTMASTERS.

Alexander L. Hord, to be postmaster at Greenville, in the county of Bond and State of Illinois, in place of Alexander L. Hord. Incumbent's commission expired March 22, 1902.

Jacob Friendlich, to be postmaster at Mount Sterling, in the county of Brown and State of Illinois, in place of George W. Curry. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1902.

John A. Bingham, to be postmaster at Vandalia, in the county of Fayette and State of Illinois, in place of John A. Bingham. Incumbent's commission expired March 17, 1902.

Newton R. Spencer, to be postmaster at Greenfield, in the county of Hancock and State of Indiana, in place of Walter S. Montgomery. Incumbent's commission expired January 10, 1902.

Daniel Surface, to be postmaster at Richmond, in the county of Wayne and State of Indiana, in place of Perry J. Freeman. Incumbent's commission expired January 10, 1902.

James E. Stevens, to be postmaster at Goodland, in the county of Sherman and State of Kansas, in place of Ernest J. Scott. Incumbent's commission expired May 10, 1902.

William Case, to be postmaster at Mauston, in the county of Juneau and State of Wisconsin, in place of William Case. Incumbent's commission expired March 31, 1902.

George G. Cook, to be postmaster at Milford, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in place of George G. Cook. Incumbent's commission expired May 2, 1902.

Stephen B. Lovejoy, to be postmaster at Minneapolis, in the county of Hennepin and State of Minnesota, in place of Stephen B. Lovejoy. Incumbent's commission expired May 16, 1902.

Louis J. Piernas, to be postmaster at Bay St. Louis, in she county of Hancock and State of Mississippi, in place of Louis J. Piernas. Incumbent's commission expired May 27, 1902.

Maurice Mann, to be postmaster at Slater, in the county of Saline and State of Missouri, in place of Maurice Mann. Incumbent's commission expires June 13, 1902.

Simeon M. Estes, to be postmaster at Meredith, in the county of Belknap and State of New Hampshire, in place of Simeon M. Estes. Incumbent's commission expires June 9, 1902.

Elisha H. Carr, to be postmaster at Newport, in the county of Sullivan and State of New Hampshire, in place of Elisha H. Carr. Incumbent's commission expires June 9, 1902.

Eugene Lane, to be postmaster at Suncook, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, in place of Eugene Lane. Incumbent's commission expires June 9, 1902.

Charles A. Snyder, to postmaster at Middleburg, in the county of Schoharie and State of New York, in place of Charles A. Snyder. Incumbent's commission expired June 2, 1902.

Joseph A. Leggett, to be postmaster at Troy, in the county of Rensselaer and State of New York, in place of Joseph A. Leggett. Incumbent's commission expires June 6, 1902.

Edward G. Edgerton, to be postmaster at Yankton, in the county of Yankton and State of South Dakota, in place of David E. Lloyd. Incumbent's commission expired May 5, 1902.

Isaac A. Hill, to be postmaster at Harriman, in the county of Roane and State of Tennessee, in place of Isaac A. Hill. Incumbent's commission expired May 10, 1902.

Thomas W. Morefield, to be postmaster at Elkhorn, in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin, in place of Thomas W. Morefield. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1902.

Eleanora Andrews, to be postmaster at Evansville, in the county of Rock and State of Wisconsin, in place of Eleanora Andrews. Incumbent's commission expired April 29, 1902.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn June 3, 1902.

W. L. Harris, to be postmaster at Charleston, in the State of South Carolina.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 3, 1902.

CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Alfred C. Coxe, of New York, to be United States circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Charles C. Haupt, of Minnesota, to be United States attorney for the district of Minnesota.

PROMOTION IN THE MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Asst. Surg. John McMullen, of Maryland, to be a passed assistant surgeon, to rank as such from May 17, 1902, in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

POSTMASTERS.

James J. Scarborough, to be postmaster at Poplarville, in the county of Pearl River and State of Mississippi.

John P. Bennett, to be postmaster at Yazoo City, in the county of Yazoo and State of Mississippi.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 3, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up a privileged report.

Mr. BURTON. The river and harbor bill. I can state, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of the House managers was published in the RECORD for yesterday, and the conference report in the Senate proceedings for Wednesday, May 28. These two statements, which are quite voluminous, express the action and desire of the Senate in the way of amendments, and the agreement reached by the conference committee. As the bill reached the House——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the report and the statement both read?

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of both be dispensed with. I do not wish to press that request if anyone desires to have them read, but they are rather voluminous. I think they are well understood by the House.

Mr. SULZER. Pending that request, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio what provision is now contained in the bill regarding the continued improvement of Buttermilk Channel, in New York Harbor?

Mr. BURTON. Ninety thousand dollars.

Mr. SULZER. That is not sufficient, but I suppose it is the best we can now get.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent, they having been printed in the RECORD, to dispense with the reading of the report and statement. Is there objection to this?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the statement ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made as to the statement. The statement will be read.

The statement was read at length.

(See proceedings of Monday for statement.)

Mr. HEPBURN (during reading). On amendment numbered 73, "Anacostia River, District of Columbia: Appropriation of $150,000; House concurs with an amendment limiting the scope of the improvement."

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the statement first be read through before any questions are asked.

Mr. BURTON. I shall be pleased to answer the gentleman as soon as the reading is concluded.

The Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the statement.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, it will be noticed that the bill as it passed the House carried appropriations for the next fiscal year aggregating, approximately, $24,000,000, and authorizations for later years of $36,700,000. All the appropriations in the House bill except two were left untouched by the Senate—Plymouth, Mass., where a reduction of $5,700 was made, and Duluth, Superior River, Minnesota, where a reduction of $75,000 was made, and the provision for a dredge omitted. The Senate added appropriations and authorizations aggregating $9,554,000. Of these the House concurred in $4,500,000, and the balance, $5,054,000, were nonconcurred in, leaving the aggregate amount of appropriations and authorizations as agreed upon in the conference report, $65,107,602, of which the amount of $26,521,442 is made up of appropriations for the ensuing year, and $38,586,160 of authorizations or amounts to be expended after July 1, 1903.

If there is any question any member desires to ask I shall be glad to answer it. The gentleman from Iowa had a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to amendment No. 73:

Anacostia River, District of Columbia: Appropriation, $150,000; House concurs with an amendment limiting the scope of improvement.

Now I want to know the character of the improvement, so that the House can understand.

Mr. BURTON. The provision as contained in the Senate amendment was as follows: Improving Anacostia River in the vicinity of Washington with reference to the improvement of navigation, the establishment of harbor lines and the raising of the flats under the direction of the Secretary of War and in accordance with the reports submitted, etc., $150,000.

The House conferees thought that provision gave an intimation, at least, of a committal to an extensive plan forthe reclamation of the flats. The engineer officer of the District was called in, and this phraseology was adopted:

Improving Anacostia River, District of Columbia: With a view to the interests of commerce and navigation, in accordance with such parts of the report submitted in House Document 87, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, as relates to section 1 of said river, being the portion below the Navy-Yard Bridge, $150,000.

An effort was made in this latter provision to carefully limit the improvement to the purposes of commerce and navigation. I would state that the disposal of the spoil or dredged material from the channel is of course another matter there, an important one.

The engineer stated that with the amount named he could dredge the channel from the mouth of the Anacostia River 300 feet in width up to the navy-yard, there widen out the channel in front of the navy-yard to 400 feet, making the channel 300 feet up to the navy-yard and in front of the navy-yard 400 feet and 20 feet in depth, and that the spoil or dredged material would be deposited on the flats opposite the insane asylum, at St. Elizabeth's. He also estimated that the deposit of the dredged material would bring 120 acres of the flats near St. Elizabeth's to a level of 1 foot above high tide.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I would like to know if it was the purpose of the House conferees to limit that improvement or to refuse on the part of the House to consent to the completion of that work of the reclamation of that river that is a constant menace to the health of the city?

Mr. BURTON. We did not regard it as a committal to the carrying out of the project of the reclamation of the flats, which is more a sanitary measure than a commercial measure.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not the same character of problem that was solved in the case of the flats on the Potomac River?

Mr. BURTON. Very similar, I think, but with one difference, I should state. In that case the Potomac Park belonged exclusively to the United States, and whatever soil was deposited there became the land of the United States. It is true it is dedicated for a park, but it was Government property.

Mr. HEPBURN. With a disputed title.

Mr. BURTON. I did not understand that there was any dispute about the title.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will yield to me——

Mr. BURTON. Certainly; how much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HEPBURN. Two minutes.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa two minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I called particular attention of the gentleman to this amendment No. 73, because I found three or four others of a similar vagueness that did not, it seemed to me, comport with the requirements of Rule XXIX, which provides (the latter part of it):

And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

I do not want to criticise this report. It is very lengthy, and I can see why there might be a desire for an abridgment and saving of time, but it does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is right to call the attention of the House and the committees especially, in view of the change in our rule, to this Rule XXIX and the necessity of having the report so explicit that the House may understand without reference to verbal explanation just what is intended by the conferees. I do not want to raise any question about it. I do not know as I could at this time, as debate has occurred, but I did think it was wise to call attention to that rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Ohio if the report shows what this amendment is?

Mr. BURTON. Briefly. I will say the argument of inconvenience has great force in law and in parliamentary procedure as well. To give a detailed description about the effect of every one of these 207 amendments would require printed matter of at least 100 pages. The aim of this statement was to give briefly an explanation of the action of the conference committee upon each.

I will say that this is one of the most extended statements I have seen given in connection with a river and harbor bill in a conference report. In many instances it has been a mere general reference to what is done. In this case referred to by the gentleman from Iowa it would involve pages to go into a full and connected statement of the engineering and sanitary questions connected with it. It seemed best to bring in this brief statement, and in case the report was not altogether clear to answer inquiries as far as possible.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As this bill passed the House it carried $25,000 for the harbor at Whatcom, and the Senate increased it to $40,000. For Puget Sound and the tributary waters it carried $15,000, which the Senate increased to $20,000. I see in the conference report that the Senate recedes from the $40,000 and it goes back to $25,000 for Whatcom, and as for Puget Sound it has raised the $20,000 to $35,000. Now, does the chairman have in mind why these changes were made?

Mr. BURTON. I will state to the gentleman that the appropriation for Puget Sound and the tributary waters contained a proviso that $10,000 might be applied for taking out a so-called log jam in the Nooksack River. When this bill was sent to the engineer in the State of Washington he sent back word that if so much diversion should be made for the Nooksack there would not be sufficient left for the other waters and advised that the $15,000 additional for the new Whatcom Harbor should be transferred to Puget Sound and tributary waters. I think the opinion of the conferees was that such was the best thing to do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The gentleman will remember that the expenditure for Puget Sound has been $14,000, and there is $18,000 or $20,000 on hand now, and that is the reason we did not make the increase in the House. I regret very much that this change was made and the amount for Whatcom reduced.

Mr. BELLAMY. As I understand, in the case of the improvement of the upper Cape Fear River, North Carolina, for which the Senate inserted an appropriation of $150,000, the committee of conference reduced the appropriation to $50,000, to be used for the purpose of boring for foundations for locks and dams; and in this amendment of the Senate it is proposed that the House now concur.

Mr. BURTON. This $50,000 is for the purpose of acquiring sites for foundations for locks and dams.

Mr. BELLAMY. Do I understand it, then, to be an appropriation for the inauguration of the scheme for an improvement by locks and dams?

Mr. BURTON. It is, of course, a recognition of the project—an inauguration of the work. So far as regards an absolute committal to the finishing of the work, nothing can accomplish that except an appropriation of the whole amount necessary for the improvement. But this is a recognition.

Mr. MUDD. I have not had an opportunity to read the statement of the conferees, and therefore I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether there is any provision made in this report for the improvement of the Anacostia River—any authorization beyond the appropriation made?

Mr. BURTON. Nothing except $150,000 cash appropriation for the purpose of obtaining a navigable channel up to the navy-yard and below the navy-yard bridge.

Mr. MUDD. Is the appropriation limited to the work of improvement below the navy-yard bridge?

Mr. BURTON. It is expressly so limited.

Mr. MUDD. If the gentleman will yield, I should like to occupy about two minutes.

Mr. BURTON. Reserving the rest of my time, I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MUDD. I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that there is a bill now pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia, introduced by myself, and for which I hope to get favorable action in the near future, authorizing a contract for the improvement of Anacostia River, with special reference to the reclamation of the flats above the Pennsylvania avenue bridge. In my judgment, navigation for commercial purposes can properly be said to extend up to that point. I am frank to say that, although I have always favored and still favor the most liberal appropriations for the District of Columbia, I do not think the General Government ought to be called upon to make appropriations for purely sanitary purposes—appropriations which can not be reasonably justified on the ground of commercial needs. The bill to which I now refer provides for an appropriation ultimately of $1,800,000 for such improvement, that being about the amount estimated for this purpose by the War Department several years ago, and about the amount, or a little in excess of the amount, which the Park Commission, appointed by order of the Senate about a year ago, estimated to be necessary for the contemplated work down to a point a little above the Navy-Yard Bridge.

I merely want to call attention to that matter now. I hope some day to obtain a favorable report on that bill. In my judgment the Committee on Rivers and Harbors acted wisely and properly in adopting a limitation in connection with the present appropriation upon the length of distance up the river the General Government ought to go in improvements for commercial purposes. I rather thought that the improvement ought to extend as far as the Pennsylvania avenue bridge; but certainly the navy-yard bridge can not be very wide of the mark. It is proper that the District government should contribute its one-half of the appropriation for works undertaken for the health of the people of the city and all work above the adopted line of commerce. I believe the people of the District are at last willing to make that contribution. The Commissioners of the District have made a favorable report upon the bill to which I have referred. The work is one of great importance, of urgent need to the District of Columbia, and I shall press the measure looking to its authorization at the earliest practicable opportunity.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] yield to me two minutes?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the efforts of these two committees to perfect this work upon the Anacostia River. Yet between the two committees nothing apparently has been done. I remember seeing a newspaper statement three or four years ago that there were at that time 500 cases of typhoid fever in the city of Washington. I remember that a few years ago—before the improvement of what was known as the Kidwell flats was begun—one section of this city was almost depopulated because of the prevalence of disease there in the fall of the year.

I know—every man knows who has ever given any thought to the subject—that this Anacostia River, which is a menace to the health of this city and to the health of everyone compelled to sojourn here during the fall months, ought to receive the attention of some committee.

There ought to be an improvement accomplished rather than one discussed merely, as it has been for twenty years. We now know, by what has been done with reference to the reclamation of the land bordering on the Potomac River, that reclamation is possible and that the restoration of health conditions is possible. Here is the same condition now in the Anacostia River; and yet, from year to year, this House, through the failure of committees, permits this condition to continue. I do hope that the gentleman from Ohio will see to it that his committee, which is charged in some degree with the public health of Washington and our health, shall do something in regard to this important matter; or if it be not a proper work for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, it ought to be promptly attended to by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURTON. Reserving the rest of my time, I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REEVES].

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, I do not want five minutes—not more than two. I wish only to say to the House that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors brought in the best bill we could frame, taking all things into consideration, a bill appropriating and authorizing expenditures amounting to a little over $60,000,000. The Senate let our bill practically alone, but added a little over $9,500,000 in the way of appropriations and authorizations. After nearly six weeks of conference the Senate receded to the extent of a little more than $5,000,000 of its appropriation, and the House concurred to the extent of about four millions and a half.

I want to say to the House, Mr. Speaker, that in my judgment this bill is not as good a bill as it was when it left the House. I do not mean by that that the Senate appropriations are worthless or entirely improper, but, taking into account the immediate necessities of commerce and appropriating the money to the extent that we did recommend its appropriation, I believe the bill as it left the House was a better bill than it is to-day. However, having a decent regard for the opinion of the Senate and of the Senate conferees, after the most prolonged and earnest discussion we have come to you recommending this bill carrying in all about $65,000,000. My judgment is that it is the best bill that in the nature of things can be agreed upon between the two Houses; hence it is that your conferees recommend to the House the adoption of this report.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving further the balance of my time, I desire to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. SMALL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio. The conference report in providing for a survey of the inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet limits the cost to $5,000. I desire to know if the committee or the conferees had any official information authorizing that limitation; in other words, upon what data they based the cost of this survey limiting it to that amount.

Mr. BURTON. I would state that the engineering force has been examining and surveying that inland waterway ever since 1823. There is a report of 46 pages made in the year 1880, and there was also a survey of the major portion of it in accordance with an order in the act of June, 1890. With all the data obtained, it seemed to us that $5,000 would be sufficient to make such further investigations as are necessary.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer further, if the gentleman will permit me, that as one of the conferees I reported to the other conferees that the gentleman from North Carolina himself [Mr. SMALL] told me that $5,000 was ample, and we relied upon that as trustworthy.

Mr. SMALL. I think the amount is sufficient, but I desire to know if the conferees have further information on that point. I am not complaining, because my information is that the amount will cover the cost.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question for a little information.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. VANDIVER. I would like to be informed as to what is the total amount now carried in the bill for the rivers and harbors of the Lower Mississippi, between Cairo and the Gulf?

Mr. BURTON. Two million two hundred thousand dollars for the first year.

Mr. VANDIVER. I mean for the harbors only?

Mr. BURTON. Two hundred thousand dollars, to be expended during the period of two years at New Orleans and other places on the lower river, and $110,000, to be expended during a period of four years, farther up the river; in all, $310,000.

Mr. VANDIVER. Now, I would like to ask further how that total was reached? Was it by adding together the recommendations of the engineers for the separate harbors or was it arbitrary?

Mr. BURTON. To a certain extent it was arbitrary, but the amount expended on those respective harbors in the past were taken into account; $50,000 for Greenville, Miss.; $20,000 for Helena, $20,000 each for Caruthersville and New Madrid were the amounts to be expended in four years.

Mr. VANDIVER. Thirty-five thousand dollars, I think, if the gentleman will remember, was the amount in the last bill for Caruthersville and $20,000 for New Madrid.

Mr. BURTON. Twenty thousand dollars was regarded as the proper amount.

Reserving further the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague on the committee, Mr. BALL of Texas, for ten minutes.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to occupy the time of the House in the discussion of this conference report. In presenting the original river and harbor bill as passed by the House, I took occasion then to give some comparisons and figures showing the relative expenditures on behalf of rivers and harbors of this country as compared with the other departments of the Government, and to assert then, as the bill was reported and passed the House, that, taking into consideration the interests involved and the benefit to our agriculture and commerce, the expenditure for rivers and harbors, instead of being classed, as it is too frequently classed by the unthinking public, as a "pork" bill, it is the most economical of any of the great appropriation bills that come before this House.

I agree with my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REEVES], that the bill as it passed the House was perhaps a better bill than the bill now reported; but, Mr. Speaker, it is due to the House conferees, who for six weeks have labored with great fidelity and zeal to perfect this bill so that it should be entirely defensible when it became a law, to say that they are entitled to the thanks of this House in having brought in a report which has so modified the bill as it passed the Senate that, while perhaps it may be subject to some criticism, as all bills carrying this amount of public money are, it is the best bill, it is the most scientifically adjusted, it is the best considered, and the most defensible measure carrying such an amount of money for rivers and harbors that has ever been passed by Congress heretofore. No reflection is intended in what I say upon the Senate conferees, who have sought to retain upon the bill the amendments placed thereon by the Senate. For them I have the highest respect. But, Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that there is no disposition upon the part of any member of the House committee to dictate to or deny the equal right of the Senate to incorporate in the bill any legitimate and proper provisions.

Now, there was a sentiment at the other end of the Capitol that because this House, after it had appropriated $60,000,000, which they had left in the bill untouched, and the Senate increases thereon amounted to only $10,000,000, that the House conferees ought readily to agree to all the Senate amendments and allow the bill to become a law. There was a sentiment upon this side of the House and upon that side of the House, among the members of this body, that perhaps the conferees ought not to insist upon a recession upon the part of the Senate from the amendments placed by that body upon the House bill.

Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors had exhaustive hearings for weeks, when opportunity was given to the members of the House, to members of the Senate, and to the commercial interests of the country to be heard, and then reported a bill which was passed by the House, carrying all the public money that the committee thought ought to be appropriated for rivers and harbors at this session of Congress.

Under such conditions it became the duty of our conferees to resist by all proper arguments any substantial increase in the bill as it passed the House. We are relegated to one of two positions: The House should either frame a complete bill, having due regard to commerce and localities, carrying about the full amounts proper to be expended upon rivers and harbors, or resort to the framing of a bill carrying only, say, two-thirds or three-fourths of the appropriation that ought legitimately to be made. If the latter system be followed, no scientifically adjusted and properly considered bill can be framed, and necessarily the members of this House having projects omitted in their districts would suffer thereby. We can not presume that Senators have no interest in the measure which passes this House, because, as the representatives of the sovereign States from which they come, they are just as much interested in the bill as framed by the House committee as are the members of the House themselves; and unless our conferees are sustained in their action in attempting to prevent the insertion of improper or extravagant amendments, then we will be confronted with the necessity in the future, in framing river and harbor bills, of leaving out a great number of appropriations urged by members of the House in order that room may be left for Senators who desire to increase the appropriations for rivers and harbors.

I think that the rivers and harbors conferees upon the part of the House, in securing a concession of more than one-half in amounts appropriated by the Senate amendments, notwithstanding the fact that they have been compelled to allow items to remain with which they are not thoroughly in accord, have done a splendid work and are entitled to the appreciation and commendation of their colleagues upon the committee and the membership of the House.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to, and upon that motion I ask the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BURTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT AND THE SUPPRESSION OF CRIME AGAINST GOVERNMENT.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the rule adopted yesterday I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill S. 3653; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the time on this side be controlled by myself and on the other side by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3653, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that the time on this side be controlled by himself and on the other side by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I make another request for unanimous consent, and that is that those gentleman who speak on the bill may have consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. For what length of time?

Mr. RAY of New York. For five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who speak on the pending bill may have five days within which to extend their remarks.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to couple with that the request that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], a member of the Judiciary Committee, may have the privilege of printing his remarks in the RECORD in the event that he shall not be here during the discussion. He has been called away, and being desirous to express himself upon this bill I ask this leave for him. He has indicated his opposition to certain features of this bill, and favors some amendments which I expect to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas couples with the request of the gentleman from New York the further request that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], a member of the committee, who is necessarily absent, may be permitted to print remarks in the RECORD upon this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the five days ought to be counted from the date of the disposition of the bill, not from to-day.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is proper.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, amends his request so that the time within which remarks may be extended shall be five days from the date of the disposition of the bill. Is there objection to these requests?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to go into Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3653, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. John Hay for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of William McKinley, late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1902, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of William McKinley be requested to communicate to Mr. Hay the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 48.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the Reports on the Law of Civil Government under Military Occupation, submitted to the Secretary of War by Charles E. Magoon, law officer, Division of Insular Affairs, War Department, of which 1,400 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,800 for the House of Representatives, and 800 for the War Department.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. TELLER a member, on the part of the Senate, of the conference committee upon the matter of the message of the House of Representatives upon the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, in place of Mr. PETTUS, excused.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 22) for the relief of Ezra S. Havens.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 21) for the relief of John S. Neet, jr.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 20) for the relief of Joseph W. Carmack.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT, ETC.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, in reporting to this House and pressing upon its attention and urging the enactment into law the bill now presented for consideration, the Committee on the Judiciary is not to be understood as claiming or intimating that it doubts the present ability or willingness of each and every State to promptly punish those who shall within the respective State jurisdictions criminally assault, injure, or kill the President of the United States, the Vice-President, or those officers entitled by law to succeed to the high office of Chief Executive of the United States. This bill has a double purpose.

First, it seeks to protect the President of the United States, and those in the immediate line of succession, and, second, to prevent certain crimes of increasing frequency against government. Every government possesses the inherent power to protect itself and its agencies, and as in our Government the officers of the United States are held to be agents of that Government we have the implied constitutional power to protect each and every one of them in the discharge of their official duties, and protect them from assaults or injury because of official acts. Indeed, had we not that power, were we compelled to look to the several States for the protection of the officers of the General Government when assaulted within a State, it might become impossible to carry on our Government or preserve it without constant resort to martial law and military force. (See Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S., 262, 263; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheaton, 304.)

This condition would arise should a State be unwilling to punish offenses against them, or, for the time being, be unable, for any reason, to enforce its laws, or find itself without appropriate laws. Such a condition once arose in this country. While we hope and expect that no such condition will again exist in any part of the land, there is no certainty, and hence there is ample reason on this ground alone for the enactment of this proposed law.

Again, it is incompatible with the dignity of a nation to find itself without ample law for self-protection under all possible or at least all probable conditions.

A third reason for the enactment of this bill into law is the nonuniformity and in some instances the inefficiency of the laws of the several States providing for the punishment of manslaughter and murder. In one State at least deliberate and premeditated murder is punishable with life imprisonment only. Under the laws of the United States such murder may be punished with death or by life imprisonment, as the jury recommends. The definition of murder differs in different States, and a killing that is murder and punishable with death in one State may be only manslaughter punishable by imprisonment for a term of years, longer or shorter, in other States.

So an unjustifiable and unsuccessful attempt to kill in one State may be punished by a short term of imprisonment, while punished by a long term in another State when the act was committed under precisely the same conditions and under precisely the same circumstances of enormity. This condition of things arises from our dual form of government and the retention by the several States of the power to punish all breaches of the peace of the State committed within their borders, respectively, and from the nonaction of the Government of the United States in providing by law for the punishment of offenses against the peace of the United States as an independent and, within its constitutional sphere, paramount sovereignty.

There is a peace of the State and a peace of the United States, each clearly defined and distinguishable from the other, and while the same act may, when committed within a State, constitute a breach of the peace and an offense against both sovereignties, punishable by both, so that the offender may be twice punished for the commission of the same act, not for the same crime, once by the United States and once by the State, still the grounds of jurisdiction are entirely different, as are the elements of the offense.

The Government of the United States has no jurisdiction of the crime of murder or of assault, merely as such, when committed within a State. These are violations of the peace of the State, and the power to define and punish them was reserved to the States respectively, and never surrendered to or conferred upon the General or Federal Government. But if the person killed or assaulted is an officer of the Federal Government, and he is killed or assaulted when engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of some official act or omission, then the peace of the United States has been violated, for its sovereignty has been infringed, resisted, defied. Whenever the lawful authority of the United States is infringed, resisted, or attacked, the peace or sovereignty of the United States is violated.

Here is the foundation of Federal criminal jurisdiction as to offenses committed within a State; its beginning and its ending. This jurisdiction has been clearly defined by the Supreme Court of the United States, and its boundaries fixed. This has been the teaching of our fathers from the very foundation of the Government, in all discussions and in all legislation written upon the statute books, and in all the decisions of the courts of the States and of the courts of the United States. The following cases are in point and cited and quoted from that there may be no contention or blind groping in the consideration of this feature of the proposed law:

United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542; In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S., 657; United States v. Fox, 95 U. S., 670; United States v. Coombs, 12 Peters (U. S.), 78; United States v. Hall, 98 U. S., 343.

Possibly the opinion of Chief Justice Waite, in giving the decision of the court in United States v. Cruikshank, supra, is the most clear enunciation of the law found in the books. He said (pp. 550, 551):

> The government thus established and defined is to some extent a government of the States in their political capacity. It is also, for certain purposes, a government of the people. Its powers are limited in number, but not in degree. Within the scope of its powers, as enumerated and defined, it is supreme and above the States, but beyond it has no existence. It was erected for special purposes and endowed with all the powers necessary for its own preservation and the accomplishment of the ends its people had in view. It can neither grant nor secure to its citizens any right or privilege not expressly or by implication placed under its jurisdiction.
>
> The people of the United States resident within any State are subject to two governments, one State and the other national, but there need be no conflict between the two. The powers which one possesses the other does not. They are established for different purposes and have separate jurisdictions. Together they make one whole, and furnish the people of the United States with a complete Government, ample for the protection of all their rights at home and abroad.
>
> True, it may sometimes happen that a person is amenable to both jurisdictions for one and the same act. Thus, if a marshal of the United States is unlawfully resisted while executing the process of the courts within a State, and the resistance is accompanied by an assault on the officer, the sovereignty of the United States is violated by the resistance and that of the State by the breach of the peace in the assault. So, too, if one passes counterfeit coin of the United States within a State, it may be an offense against the United States and the State; the United States because it discredits the coin, and the State because of the fraud upon him to whom it is passed. This does not, however, necessarily imply that the two governments possess powers in common or bring them into conflict with each other. It is the natural consequence of a citizenship which owes allegiance to two sovereignties and claims protection from both. The citizen can not complain, because he has voluntarily submitted himself to such a form of government. He owes allegiance to the two departments, so to speak, and within their respective spheres must pay the penalties which each exacts for disobedience to its laws. In return he can demand protection from each within its own jurisdiction.

And at pages 553, 554:

> The very highest duty of the States when they entered into the Union under the Constitution was to protect all persons within their boundaries in the enjoyment of these "unalienable rights with which they were endowed by their Creator." Sovereignty for this purpose rests alone with the States. It is no more the duty or within the power of the United States to punish for a conspiracy to falsely imprison or murder within a State than it would be to punish for false imprisonment or murder itself.

Mark the express holding that in the case of an assault upon an officer of the United States, the sovereignty of the United States is violated because of the resistance to the officer in the execution of a duty imposed by a law of the United States.

The one who counterfeits a coin of the United States opposes the sovereignty of the nation because he discredits a coin of the nation, one it has exclusive power to emit, not because of the fraud on the citizen of a State.

Precisely the same principle is enunciated in United States v. Coombs, 12 Peters (U. S.), at page 78, the court, per Justice Story, one of the most learned judges of modern times, stating:

> It (the criminal jurisdiction of the United States) does not stop at the mere boundary line of a State, nor is it confined to acts done on the water or in the necessary course of the navigation thereof. It extends to such acts done on land which interfere with, obstruct, or prevent the due exercise of the power to regulate commerce and navigation with foreign nations and among the States. Any offense which thus interferes with, obstructs, or prevents such commerce and navigation, though done on land, may be punished by Congress under its general authority to make all laws necessary and proper to execute their delegated constitutional powers. No one can doubt that the various offenses enumerated in the ninth section of the act are all of a nature which tend essentially to obstruct, prevent, or destroy the due operations of commerce and navigation with foreign nations and among the several States.

This case was one arising under the act of March 3, 1825, punishing the act of feloniously stealing a quantity of merchandise belonging to the ship Bristol, in distress and cast away on the coast of New York. The goods were taken above high-water mark in Queens County.

To the same effect and founded on the same principle is the decision in United States v. Hall (98 U. S., 343). In that case Hall, the guardian of one Williamson, a minor, received the pension money granted the minor under the pension laws of the United States. He held the money in trust for the ward under and pursuant to the authority of the United States, and undertook and promised to deliver it to the ward or use it for his benefit. Hall converted it to his own use, and in so doing resisted and defied the authority or sovereignty of the United States as effectively as though he had held up the pension agent at the point of a gun and robbed him of the money while it was in course of transmission to the beneficiary, Williamson. The grounds of criminal jurisdiction in the United States in that case and similar cases are clearly stated at pages 357 and 358 of the case.

In United States v. Fox (95 U. S., 670), the court says:

> There is no doubt of the competency of Congress to provide, by suitable penalties, for the enforcement of all legislation necessary or proper to the execution of powers with which it is intrusted. And as it is authorized "to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States," it may embrace within its legislation whatever may be deemed important to complete any effective bankrupt system.
>
> Any act committed with a view of evading the legislation of Congress passed in the execution of any of its powers, or of fraudulently securing the benefit of such legislation, may properly be made an offense against the United States. But an act committed within a State, whether for a good or a bad purpose, or whether with an honest or a criminal intent, can not be made an offense against the United States, unless it have some relation to the execution of a power of Congress or to some matter within the jurisdiction of the United States. An act not having any such relation is one in respect to which the State can alone legislate.

The same principle is directly involved and enunciated in Tennessee v. Davis (100 U. S., 257).

In that case A was indicted in the State court of Tennessee for murder. He moved for a transfer of the case to the circuit court of the United States. The statutes of the United States provide in substance that criminal cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States may be thus removed. See act of February 4, 1815, 3 Statutes, 198; the act of March 2, 1833, 4 Statutes, 633, and the act of July 13, 1866, 14 Statutes, 171.

To secure such removal and show that the case was one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the defendant alleged and showed "that the killing was done by him in necessary self-defense to save his own life; that at the time the alleged act for which he was indicted was committed he was and still is an officer of the United States, to wit, a deputy collector of internal revenue; that the act for which he was indicted was performed in his own necessary self-defense while engaged in the discharge of his duties as deputy collector, and while acting by and under the authority of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, and that he was assaulted and resisted while actually engaged in the lawful performance of his duties as such officer of the United States."

In that case Justice Clifford says, at page 276:

> Courts of the United States derive no jurisdiction in criminal cases from the common law, nor can such tribunals take cognizance of any act of an individual as a public offense, or declare it punishable as such, until it has been defined as an offense by an act of Congress passed in pursuance of the Constitution. Argument to show that Congress has never defined the act of murder, at a place within the exclusive jurisdiction of a State, as an offense against the authority of the United States is certainly unnecessary, as no sane man will venture to advance such a proposition; nor will anyone who ever looked into the record of this case deny that the place where the homicide which is the subject of inquiry was committed is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the State whose laws were violated by the perpetrator of the felonious act. None of these matters can be denied consistent with the truth of the facts as judicially known to every member of the court.

For a practical application and declaration of these principles we turn to the case In re Neagle (135 U. S., 1). This is the leading and possibly the only case decided by the Supreme Court expressly and necessarily deciding what constitutes the peace of the United States and a violation thereof in the absence of an express statute. The case is therefore of especial value in determining the jurisdiction or power of Congress to enact laws for the protection of the officers of the Government of the United States. No one will pretend that such a law may be constitutionally enacted or enforced unless it be to prevent or punish acts affecting the sovereign powers of the United States.

May we constitutionally enact such a law, one to punish an assault committed on or the killing of an officer of the United States, based on the sole fact that the person assaulted or killed is an officer of the United States, regardless of whether or not he at the time of the commission of the act was engaged in the performance of his official duties, or was assaulted or killed because of his official character or because of some official act done or omitted? This proposition was answered in the negative by the Supreme Court. (In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1.)

In that case Mr. Justice Field, a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, was in California for the purpose of holding courts pursuant to law. He had held court at Los Angeles and was on his way to San Francisco for the purpose of holding court there. He was accompanied by Neagle, who was a deputy marshal of the United States, and who attended by direction of the Department of Justice to protect him from violence apprehended at the hands of one Terry, who had threatened personal violence because of certain judicial acts of Justice Field affecting Terry (punishment for contempt of court). The train stopped at a town on the way and Justice Field had alighted from the train and was taking his breakfast at a hotel when he was assaulted by Terry. Thereupon the deputy marshal of the United States, Neagle, in the necessary defense of Justice Field, shot and killed Terry. Neagle was indicted and imprisoned by the State courts of California for the murder of Terry. He was brought up by the United States court on habeas corpus and discharged on the ground that he was an officer of the United States engaged in the performance of an official duty, to wit, the defense of Justice Field, pursuant to a law of the United States—either a statute or the Constitution—and that Mr. Justice Field was at the time engaged in the performance of his official duties, or acting in his official capacity as a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Supreme Court held that in order to show that the peace of the United States was violated by Terry when he assaulted Justice Field that it was necessary to show that Justice Field was then acting in his official capacity as justice, and this was the point upon which the whole case turned. The court held that Justice Field was acting in his official capacity as justice, even when eating his breakfast at the hotel on his way to hold court in a distant city. That it was the right and duty of the United States to defend and protect him at such a time and under such circumstances. That it was an official duty of Neagle to so protect and defend him at the time, and that in so doing he acted officially under the laws and authority of the United States. That Terry was violating a law of the United States when he assaulted Justice Field. This attack was made because of a hatred engendered by an official act performed months before by Justice Field. Terry was not resisting Justice Field in performing an official act.

The court stated the questions involved, at page 54, thus:

> There exists no authority in the courts of the United States to discharge the prisoner while held in custody by the State authorities for this offense, unless there be found in aid of the defense of the prisoner some element of power and authority asserted under the Government of the United States.
>
> This element is said to be found in the facts that Mr. Justice Field when attacked was in the immediate discharge of his duty as judge of the circuit courts of the United States within California; that the assault upon him grew out of the animosity of Terry and wife, arising out of the previous discharge of his duty as circuit justice in the case for which they were committed for contempt of court; and that the deputy marshal of the United States, who killed Terry in defense of Field's life, was charged with a duty under the law of the United States to protect Field from the violence which Terry was inflicting, and which was intended to lead to Field's death.

And the court stated its conclusions, at pages 75 and 76, thus:

> The result at which we have arrived upon this examination is that in the protection of the person and the life of Mr. Justice Field, while in the discharge of his official duties, Neagle was authorized to resist the attack of Terry upon him; that Neagle was correct in the belief that without prompt action on his part the assault of Terry upon the judge would have ended in the death of the latter; that such being his well-founded belief, he was justified in taking the life of Terry as the only means of preventing the death of the man who was intended to be his victim; that in taking the life of Terry, under the circumstances, he was acting under the authority of the law of the United States, and was justified in so doing; and that he is not liable to answer in the courts of California on account of his part in that transaction.

It will be noted that in giving these conclusions no mention is made of the fact that Terry knew Field to be a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or of the fact that his attack was made to gratify malice engendered by the official acts of Justice Field, or that he knew Justice Field to be engaged in the discharge of his official duties. It was enough that Terry attacked Justice Field while the latter was "in the discharge of his official duties." It is equally clear from the case and opinions that this fact, or the fact that Terry attacked Field because of his prior official act, or the fact that he assaulted the judge because of his official character, was all sufficient to make the offense of Terry one against the authority of the United States, and therefore one which Neagle had the right to resist.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am somewhat familiar with that case, and my understanding is that the court was required to do that because Congress had never enacted a statute making it an offense to attack a Federal officeholder. They were compelled to justify under an executive authority the general power of the President to enforce the law, and the court inferentially held that the President was justified in protecting an officer of the Federal Government only while he was acting as such. But here the proposition is for Congress to pass a law declaring it to be a crime to take the life of the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want time, Mr. Chairman, in which to close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has control of the time himself. The Chair thought he would mention to the gentleman that the hour had expired.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to say that the gentleman's assumption is entirely incorrect, because the Congress of the United States has passed a law for the protection of every officer to a certain extent in the discharge of his duty, and the Congress has always said, following the courts of the early time, they have always limited the laws by saying "when in the performance of their duty."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Did Neagle justify under any statute in making his defense in that case? There was no statute covering that particular case, and he was justifying on principles of general jurisprudence.

Mr. RAY of New York. The court held in that case this: That in order to justify Neagle in doing what he did, it must be established that he was acting under some authority of the United States; some law, some constitutional authority, and in the protection of some officer who was within the protection of the United States, not of a statute, but who was within the protection of the United States and under the jurisdiction of the United States to protect, and the court held that an officer of the Government is under the protection of the United States and within its jurisdiction to protect when engaged in the performance of his official duties—then and then only. Not for the simple reason that he is such an officer.

It was said by the Supreme Court in Ex parte Yarbrough (110 U. S., 657-658):

> If this Government is anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated agents of other States and governments, each of which is superior to the General Government, it must have the power to protect the elections on which its existence depends from violence and corruption.

If it has not this power, it is left helpless before the two great natural and historical enemies of all republics—open violence and insidious corruption.

And again (p. 659):

It is said that the States can pass the necessary law on this subject, and no necessity exists for such action by Congress. But the existence of State laws punishing the counterfeiting of the coin of the United States has never been held to supersede the acts of Congress passed for that purpose or to justify the United States in failing to enforce its own laws to protect the circulation of the coin which it issues.

It is very true that while Congress at an early day passed criminal laws to punish piracy with death, and for punishing all ordinary offenses against person and property committed within the District of Columbia, and in forts, arsenals, and other places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, it was slow to pass laws protecting officers of the Government from personal injuries inflicted while in discharge of their official duties within the States. This was not for want of power, but because no occasion had arisen which required such legislation, the remedies of the State courts for personal violence having proved sufficient.

These decisions make it perfectly clear that the House bill substituted for that of the Senate goes as far as Congress constitutionally can go in punishing offenders against the person of the President of the United States, the Vice-President, or those officers in line of succession. That is, that we can not constitutionally enact a statute in general terms making it a crime to assault or kill within a State the officers mentioned. The provisions of the House substitute for the Senate bill relating to this branch of the proposed legislation are as follows:

That any person who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kills the President of the United States while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of any of his official acts or omissions, shall suffer death.

SEC. 2. That any person who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kills the Vice-President of the United States, or any officer of the United States entitled by law to succeed to the Presidency, while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of any of his official acts or omissions, shall suffer death.

SEC. 3. That any person who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kills any ambassador or minister of a foreign State or country accredited to the United States, and being therein, and while engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of any of his official acts or omissions, shall suffer death.

SEC. 4. That any person who attempts to commit either of the offenses defined in sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act shall be imprisoned not less than ten years.

SEC. 5. That any person who, while engaged in an unlawful attempt to inflict grievous bodily harm upon the President of the United States, or the Vice-President of the United States, or any officer entitled by law to succeed to the Presidency, while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character or because of any of his official acts or omissions, inflicts injuries on such President, Vice-President, or other officer which cause death, shall be imprisoned for life. If such injuries do not cause death, such offender shall be imprisoned not less than five years.

SEC. 6. That any person who aids, abets, incites, or conspires with another to commit either of the offenses mentioned in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this act shall be deemed a principal offender.

SEC. 7. That any person who knowingly harbors, conceals, or aids, with intent that he may avoid or escape from arrest, trial, conviction, or punishment, any person who has committed either of the offenses mentioned in the preceding sections of this act shall be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than twenty-five years.

SEC. 8. That any person who advocates, advises, or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful killing or assaulting of one or more of the officers (either of specific individuals or officers generally) of the Government of the United States, or of the government of any civilized nation, because of his or their official character, or who openly, willfully, and deliberately justifies such killing or assaulting, with intent to cause the commission of any of the offenses specified in the first nine sections of this act, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment not less than one nor more than twenty years, or both.

SEC. 9. That any person who conspires with any other person or persons, or requests, advises, or encourages any other person or persons to unlawfully assault or kill, within or without the United States, the chief executive or chief magistrate of any other civilized nation having an organized government, because of his official character, shall be punished as follows: If an attempt to commit such act is made and the death of any person results therefrom, such offender shall suffer death. If such attempt does not result in death, such offender shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or be imprisoned not less than five nor more than twenty-five years, or both. If such attempt is not made, such offender shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or be imprisoned not less than one nor more than five years, or both.

SEC. 10. That this act shall apply to all offenses hereinbefore specified when committed within any State or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 13. That in all prosecutions under the provisions of the first seven sections of this act it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the President of the United States, or the Vice-President of the United States, or other officer of the United States entitled by law to succeed to the Presidency, as the case may be, was, at the time of the commission of the alleged offense, engaged in the performance of his official duties. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission or declaration that there is a time when either of such officers, during the tenure of his office, is not engaged in the performance of his official duties.

The provisions of the Senate bill for which these are a substitute are as follows:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or who shall willfully and maliciously cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

SEC. 4. That any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy are not indicted or convicted.

SEC 5. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, by spoken words, or by written or printed words, uttered or published, threaten to kill or advise or counsel another to kill the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States may devolve under the Constitution and laws, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ten years.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape of any person guilty of either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing sections shall be deemed an accomplice after the fact, and shall be punished as if a principal, although the other party or parties to said offense shall not be indicted or convicted.

The question naturally arises, Why so carefully point out in the statute the times and the circumstances under which the act constituting the offense is committed? Many will say offhand and without examination or special consideration, that the courts of the United States would only assume jurisdiction of and punish those offenses within its jurisdiction even if the Senate bill embraces acts not within the Federal jurisdiction and is enacted into law. That the courts of the United States would not punish or undertake to punish a person who should assault or kill one of the officials named unless the offense were clearly within the jurisdiction of the United States to define and punish.

The insuperable difficulty with this proposition is, that where jurisdiction to enact a law is involved, any law is unconstitutional that in general terms is so broad that it covers acts both without and within the power or jurisdiction of the legislative body to define and punish as offenses. This rule is inflexible. It is clearly stated in the following cases:

United States v. Harris, 106 U. S., 629; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S., 214; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S., pp. 685–686.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held in at least three cases that a statute of the United States defining and punishing an offense against the United States in general terms, when the act is committed within a State, must be so framed as to show on its face that it can only apply to offenses of which the United States has jurisdiction. Hence the necessity for the words of limitation in the act relating to the President if it be true that there is a time when the President is not engaged in the discharge of his official duties.

In United States v. Harris (106 U. S., 629) it was held that section 5519, Revised Statutes of the United States, is unconstitutional.

That section reads as follows:

If two or more persons in any State or Terrritory conspire or go in disguise upon the highway or on the premises of another for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws or of equal privileges or immunities under the laws, or for the purpose of preventing or hindering the constituted authorities of any State or Territory from giving or securing to all persons within such State or Territory the equal protection of the laws, each of such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The court says (p. 637):

Section 5519, according to the theory of the prosecution and as appears by its terms, was framed to protect from invasion by private persons the equal privileges and immunities under the laws of all persons and classes of persons. It requires no argument to show that such a law can not be founded on a clause of the Constitution whose sole object is to protect from denial or abridgment, by the United States or States, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, the right of citizens of the United States to vote.

It is, however, strenuously insisted that the legislation under consideration finds its warrant in the first and fifth sections of the fourteenth amendment. The first section declares:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The fifth section declares "the Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this amendment."

The court further says (pp. 638–642):

When the case of the United States v. Cruikshank came to this court, the same view was taken here. The Chief Justice, delivering the opinion of the court in that case, said: "The fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or from denying to any person the equal protection of the laws; but this provision does not add anything to the rights of one citizen against another. It simply furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the State upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society. The duty of protecting all its citizens in the enjoyment of an equality of rights was originally assumed by the States, and it remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, and no more. The power of the National Government is limited to this guaranty." (92 U. S., 542.)

The language of the amendment does not leave this subject in doubt. When the State has been guilty of no violation of its provisions; when it has not made or enforced any law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; when no one of its departments has deprived any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or denied to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; when, on the contrary, the laws of the State, as enacted by its legislative, and construed by its judicial, and administered by its executive departments, recognize and protect the rights of all persons, the amendment imposes no duty and confers no power upon Congress.

Section 5519 of the Revised Statutes is not limited to take effect only in case the State shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person the equal protection of the laws. It applies, no matter how well the State may have performed its duty. Under it private persons are liable to punishment for conspiring to deprive anyone of the equal protection of the laws enacted by the State.

We are next to consider whether the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution furnishes authority for the enactment of the section. This amendment declares that "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

But the question with which we have to deal is, Does the thirteenth amendment warrant the enactment of section 5519 of the Revised Statutes? We are of opinion that it does not. Our conclusion is based on the fact that the provisions of that section are broader than the thirteenth amendment would justify. Under that section it would be an offense for two or more white persons to conspire, etc., for the purpose of depriving another white person of the equal protection of the laws. It would be an offense for two or more colored persons, enfranchised slaves, to conspire with the same person against a white citizen or against another colored citizen who has never been a slave. Even if the amendment is held to be directed against the action of private individuals, as well as against the action of the States and United States, the law under consideration covers cases both within and without the provisions of the amendment. It covers any conspiracy between two free white men against another white man to deprive him of any right accorded him by the laws of the State or of the United States. A law under which two or more free white private citizens could be punished for conspiring or going in disguise for the purpose of depriving another free white citizen of a right accorded by law of the State to all classes of persons—as, for instance, the right to make a contract, bring a suit, or give evidence—clearly can not be authorized by the amendment which simply prohibits slavery and involuntary servitude.

Those provisions of the law, which are broader than are warranted by the article of the Constitution by which they are supposed to be authorized, can not be sustained.

Upon this question United States v. Reese (92 U. S., 214) is in point. In that case this court had under consideration the constitutionality of the third and fourth sections of the act of May 31, 1870, chapter 114, now constituting sections 2007, 2008, and 5506 of the Revised Statutes. The third section of the act made it an offense for any judge, inspector, or other officer of election, whose duty it was, under the circumstances therein stated, to receive and count the vote of any citizen, to wrongfully refuse to receive and count the same; and the fourth section made it an offense for any person, by force, bribery, or other unlawful means, to hinder or delay any citizen from voting at any election, or from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote.

The indictment in the case charged two inspectors of a municipal election in the State of Kentucky with refusing to receive and count at such election the vote of William Garner, a citizen of the United States of African descent. It was contended by the defendants that it was not within the constitutional power of Congress to pass the section upon which the indictment was based. The attempt was made by the counsel for the United States to sustain the law as warranted by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; but this court held it not to be appropriate legislation under that amendment. The ground of the decision was that the sections referred to were broad enough not only to punish those who hindered and delayed the enfranchised colored citizen from voting, on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but also those who hindered or delayed the free white citizen. The court, speaking by the Chief Justice, said:

It would certainly be dangerous if the legislature could set a net large enough to catch all possible offenders and leave it to the courts to step inside and say who could be rightfully detained and who should be set at large. This would, to some extent, substitute the judicial for the legislative department of the government. The courts enforce the legislative will, when ascertained, if within the constitutional grant of power. But if Congress steps outside of its constitutional limitation and attempts that which is beyond its reach the courts are authorized to, and when called upon must, annul its encroachment upon the revered rights of the States and the people.

And the court declared that it could not limit the statute so as to bring it within the constitutional power of Congress, and concluded:

We must therefore decide that Congress has not yet provided by appropriate legislation for the punishment of the offenses charged in the indictment.

The long and short of these decisions is that an act of Congress making it an offense to kill the President of the United States (when the act is committed within a State) is unconstitutional, if in general terms, provided there is any time when the President is not engaged in the performance of his official duties. We can only make it an offense to kill the President when so engaged or when the act is committed because of his official character or because of some official act or omission, and hence it does no harm to so specify in the act. On the other hand, it will do harm and destroy the law to make it so broad in its terms that it may include an act not within the power of Congress to punish. If we spread our net so broad that it may catch all offenders within our jurisdiction and also some not subject to Federal authority we have acted unavailingly.

Such a net will not be recognized by the Supreme Court even when it has caught only an offender we would have the right to denounce and punish if immeshed by a constitutional instrumentality. The court by construction will not separate the good from the bad, for it has been repeatedly decided that the law to be constitutional must in terms be confined to matters within the constitutional power of Congress to control; that if broader than warranted such broader language must be by itself, so as to be expunged without destroying the valid provisions. As was said by the court in the above cases, it will not step inside such a net to see who should be detained and who set at large. This precise point was again passed on and emphasized in Baldwin v. Franks (120 U. S., pp. 685–686).

The court there said:

In United States v. Harris (106 U. S., 629) it was decided that this section was unconstitutional, as a provision for the punishment of conspiracies of the character therein mentioned, within a State. It is now said, however, that in that case the conspiracy charged was by persons in a State against a citizen of the United States and of the State to deprive him of the protection he was entitled to under the laws of that State, no special rights or privileges arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States being involved; and it is argued that, although the section be invalid so far as such an offense is concerned, it is good for the punishment of those who conspire to deprive aliens of the rights guaranteed to them in a State by the treaties of the United States. In support of this argument reliance is had on the well-settled rule that a statute may be in part constitutional and in part unconstitutional, and that under some circumstances the part which is constitutional will be enforced and only that which is unconstitutional rejected. To give effect to this rule, however, the parts—that which is constitutional and that which is unconstitutional—must be capable of separation, so that each may be read by itself.

This statute, considered as a statute punishing conspiracies in a State, is not of that character, for in that connection it has no parts within the meaning of the rule. Whether it is separable, so that it can be enforced in a Territory, though not in a State, is quite another question, and one we are not now called on to decide. It provides in general terms for the punishment of all who conspire for the purpose of depriving any person or any class of persons of the equal protection of the laws or of equal privileges or immunities under the laws. A single provision, which makes up the whole section, embraces those who conspire against citizens as well as those who conspire against aliens, those who conspire to deprive one of his rights under the laws of a State and those who conspire to deprive him of his rights under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States. The limitation which is sought must be made, if at all, by construction, not by separation. This, it has often been decided, is not enough.

Thus, in United States v. Reese (92 U. S., 214), the indictment was against two of the inspectors of a municipal election in Kentucky, under sections 3 and 4 of the act of May 31, 1870 (chapter 114, 16 Stat., 140), which provided in general terms for the punishment of inspectors who should wrongfully refuse to receive the vote of a citizen when presented under certain circumstances and for the punishment of those who by unlawful means hindered or delayed any citizen from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote or from voting at any election. There was nothing in either of the sections to limit their operation to a refusal or hindrance "on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude" of the voter, and it was held that they were unconstitutional, because, on their face, they were broad enough to cover wrongful acts without as well as within the constitutional power of Congress. An attempt was made there as here to limit the statute by construction, so as to make it operate only on that which Congress might rightfully prohibit and punish, but to this the court said (p. 221):

For this purpose we must take these sections as they are. We are not able to reject a part which is unconstitutional and retain the remainder, because it is not possible to separate that which is unconstitutional, if there be any such, from that which is not. The proposed effect is not to be attained by striking out or disregarding words that are in the section, but by inserting those that are not now there. Each of these sections must stand as a whole or fall all together. The language is plain. There is no room for construction, unless it be as to the effect of the Constitution. The question, then, to be determined is whether we can introduce words of limitation into a penal statute so as to make it specific when, as expressed, it is general only.

This was answered in the negative, the court remarking:

To limit this statute in the manner now asked for would be to make a new law, not to enforce an old one.

Applying the principle then laid down, it is self-evident that if there is a time when the President of the United States is not engaged in the discharge of his duties as such, either actively or constructively, and it be true that Congress may not define and punish murder when committed within a State (and this has been repeatedly held), and we are therefore constitutionally restricted to defining and punishing acts of personal violence against the officers of the Government of the United States, perpetrated within a State, when committed under circumstances which actually do or are intended by the perpetrator to obstruct, impede, impair, or infringe or resist the sovereignty of the United States, we must refrain from enacting a law in general terms making it a crime to unjustifiably kill the President of the United States when the act is committed within a State.

If the President on a fishing trip in the Adirondacks (in his home State) should engage in a personal quarrel with his guide (ignorant of his official character) and in the affray be unjustifiably killed, the only ground upon which Federal jurisdiction could be invoked is that the President was a Federal officer, clothed with Federal power, and constructively engaged in the discharge of the duties of his office when killed. No one would claim for an instant that the President was at such time performing an official act, for nothing could be further from the truth. Nor could it be claimed he was actively engaged in the discharge of his official duties. The law enacted by this Congress for the protection of the President should be surely constitutional and not experimental. If we make the act general in its terms, and the supposed case presents a time when the President is not engaged in the discharge of his official duties, the law would be unconstitutional, for it takes into the net those we may constitutionally punish and those of whom we have no jurisdiction. Under such a law the person who in a State should openly kill the President because he is President, and while he was engaged openly in discharging an official act, could not be punished.

Nor should we hesitate to insert these words of limitation and specification for fear that their insertion will impose a burden of proof on the Government it would otherwise not have to sustain, or that such words will raise a question of fact for the jury when otherwise there would be none.

In administering and enforcing the criminal laws of the United States the jury is not judge of the law and of the facts, but must take the law from the court and is sole judge of the facts.

As matter of law the President is or is not always engaged in the performance of his official duties. If he always is so engaged, the court would so charge the jury, and all the proof necessary on this point would be that the person killed was acting as such generally, either de facto or de jure.

If he is not always so engaged and it could not be shown he was killed because of his official character or because of his official acts or omissions, his slayer would not be punishable under this law or any the Congress of the United States can make when the act is committed in a State. The moment you concede it may become a question of fact for a jury to decide whether or not the President was at a given time engaged in the discharge of his official duties you concede that these words of limitation in the law are absolutely essential to its constitutionality. As repeatedly stated and decided by the Supreme Court, Federal jurisdiction attaches because he is so engaged, or when he is killed because of his official character or because of some official act or omission, when the killing takes place within a State.

In re Neagle (135 U. S., 1) there was no pretense that the Congress had passed any law defining "the peace of the United States" or forbidding or punishing the killing of a justice of the Supreme Court when such killing occurs within a State or a murderous assault on such officer when committed within a State. The Supreme Court proceeded to define what constitutes a breach of the peace of the United States under the Constitution of the United States irrespective of any statute when such breach of that peace is alleged to have occurred by reason of an assault on an officer of the United States. The court held that such peace of the United States in such cases is broken when the assault is made while the officer is engaged in the performance of his official duties, and the learned justice writing the opinion proceeded at length to prove that Justice Field was so engaged—a waste of time and of words had it been supposed by the court that the peace of the United States is or can be broken when he is not so engaged or when the attack is not because of the official character or because of some official act or omission.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the section just read make the question relate to the fact as to whether the President at the time of his alleged assassination was engaged in the discharge of his official duties?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly not. It is a fact. I say it can not be made a question of fact. This section makes it a presumption of fact that there is no such time; and then we provide further than that that it shall be presumed that he is always engaged in the performance of his official duty.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I know it is understood it shall be presumed that he is engaged in the performance of official duty until the contrary is proven. Therefore it casts the burden of fact upon the prosecution in that class of prosecutions.

Mr. RAY of New York. It casts the burden upon the defendant.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Casts the burden upon the defendant?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Upon that question of fact. It is not a presumption of law?

Mr. RAY of New York. We declare it to be a presumption of law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Prima facie.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is an absolute presumption unless he can prove to the contrary; that is, prove that the President was not engaged in the discharge of his official duties.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Why does the section provide that it shall be presumed until he proves to the contrary?

Mr. RAY of New York. Do you admit that there is a time when the President is not engaged in the performance of official duty?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the technical sense and meaning of that term, I say yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. That section of the bill says it is an absolute presumption of fact until the contrary is proved. From the other standpoint there is a time when the courts can not punish a man who slays the President if he slays him at the particular time when he is not so engaged, and not because of his official character or because of official acts or omissions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not agree with that statement. I think the assassination of the President is always a crime against the Federal Government.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because the President is the constitutional means of carrying on its operations, and the assassination of the President of the United States at any time, anywhere, or regardless of what he may be doing, deprives the Federal Government of the constitutional agency of carrying on and executing its laws. Therefore I think that we have abundant power to make it a crime without regard to limitation.

Mr. RAY of New York. That might be a convincing argument were it not opposed to six or eight decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. As an argument without any authority, every man would say offhand that the Government has the power to protect itself, must have the power necessarily to punish any man that kills one of its agencies, whether he resists or intends to resist the Government or not; but, unfortunately for the gentleman's position, the Supreme Court has repeatedly, over and over again, determined the law to be otherwise. The element of infringing the sovereignty of the United States must come in.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me just simply state that my interpretation of all these decisions is that they have never decided upon this proposition yet. No such statute has ever been sent up.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will tell you the reason for that, and I have already read that. I read from Justice Clifford's opinion given in one of the cases cited. He said, "No sane man." The reason why no such statute had ever been passed was that "no sane man had ever made such a contention, and no sane man ever would." That is the substance.

Now, right here I hold the case In re Neagle in my hand, where the court a dozen times and over, in defining the peace of the United States and the power of the Congress of the United States, says that that peace is offended against and the United States has jurisdiction when the officer is killed while engaged in the performance of his duty; and they go on here with two pages and a half of printed opinion to prove that Justice Field was, when eating his dinner on his way from holding one of his courts to hold another, engaged in the performance of his official duties, which fact would give the United States jurisdiction.

Now, do you suppose these seven or eight dignified and learned judges would have taken all that time and all that space to prove that Justice Field was engaged in the performance of his official duty and therefore the United States had jurisdiction if the simple and conceded fact that Justice Field was an officer of the United States, a constitutional officer, was all that was necessary to show such jurisdiction? I say clearly not. Now, here is what the judges say: It is that there is a peace of the United States, and that it is disturbed when a man assaults a judge of the United States while engaged in the discharge of his official duties, and that in such a case the marshal of the United States may interfere to protect the officer; and then the court repeats it over and over and again, that the fact stated is an essential element. The court based its jurisdiction on the fact that Justice Field, a constitutional officer, was engaged in the discharge of his official duties, not on the conceded fact that he was an officer.

Indeed, this principle I have stated is elementary. In England the statute 25 Edward III, chapter 2, defined treason. Under that statute it was treason—

> When a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the King, or our lady his Queen, or of their eldest son and heir.

Under this statute it was held no treason to kill the King when he was not in the possession of the Government or acting as King.

(2 Sharswood Blackstone's Commentaries, book 4, chapter 6, p. 379 (77).) The same statute made it treason—

If a man slay the chancellor, treasurer, or the King's justices of the one bench or the other, justices in eyre or justices of assize, and all other justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places and doing their offices.

To kill them under other circumstances was as the killing of any other subject. (Id., p. 385 (84).) So felonies against the King's council were defined to be (Stat. 9 Anne, c. 16, 2 Shar. Bl. Com., c. 7, book 4, p. 101): "To assault, strike, wound, or attempt to kill any privy counselor in the execution of his office."

These statutes came to be the common law of the colonies and of the States except as changed by statute, and hence by adoption the common law recognized by the courts of the United States in administering and construing the criminal laws, although it must not be supposed there is any common law of the United States, for it has been repeatedly held there is not, except as it has been adopted by statute.

In any event, the new section (section 13) removes all questions and puts the burden of proof where it belongs.

As to the President, I am very decidedly of the opinion that he is always constructively engaged in the performance of his official duties.

1. The executive power is vested in him.
2. He is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.
3. He has the pardoning power.
4. He, with the advice and consent of the Senate, makes treaties which, when ratified, have the force of law and are the supreme law of the land.
5. He fills vacancies in certain offices at certain times.
6. He is commanded to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." (Art. 2, secs. 1, 2, 3.)

Charged with these and other duties which call for unremitting and constant attention, how can it be said that the President is not always engaged in the performance—that is, in and about the discharge—of his official duties? True, he may do other things while so engaged, but we can not indulge in so much refinement as to say that the President, while partaking of his meals or walking or riding for recreation or amusing his children, is not at the same time engaged in the performance of his official duties. True, the acts mentioned are not official acts, but he does not cease to be officially acting even then. (In re Neagle, 135 U. S., 1, 55–56.)

So, should such a thing occur, if the President is engaged in a personal quarrel as to some private matter, while that act is not an official act, he is still in and about the performance of his official duties as President. As to the Vice-President and members of the Cabinet no such claim can be made. The Vice-President can not act until Congress meets. His constitutional duty is to preside over the Senate. Heads of Executive Departments, our Cabinet officers, are recognized by the Constitution, but they are created by laws of Congress.

The Vice-President has no legislative or judicial power. No part of the executive power is vested in him. That is vested in the President. He can do nothing officially and has no duty to perform when the Senate is not holding its sessions.

Therefore if the Vice-President is assaulted or killed at a time when the Senate is not holding sessions—that is, before Congress meets, or between the long and the short sessions—such assault or killing is not committed while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties; and if such offense is not committed because of his official character or because of some official act done or omitted, there is no element of resistance to the authority or sovereignty of the United States and no jurisdiction in the courts of the United States to punish the offense when committed within a State. Such an act would be a breach of the peace of the State and not of the United States.

The State has sole jurisdiction of such offense, a jurisdiction it has not surrendered to the Federal Government, and therefore one the Congress can not confer on the Federal courts.

Substantially the same reasoning applies in the case of Cabinet officers.

What we want is safe constitutional legislation—legislation that will stand the test of the courts should a case arise under the law placed on the statute books. We trust such a calamity as the murder of our President will never again befall this nation; we trust that no assault will be made upon him or upon the Vice-President or any officer in line of succession to the Presidency, but should occasion to invoke a Federal statute arise, may the one written on the statute books by this Congress be found constitutional, adequate to the emergency, and efficient.

This bill will meet these requirements. It is humane and conservative. It has been submitted to and has stood the test of newspaper criticism and of legal castigation. It commends itself to all thinking, sober-minded, patriotic people. It meets no opposition except from those who oppose the granting of power to Federal courts to punish offenses committed within a State. That these offenses should be defined and punished all admit. That the penalties are not too severe is conceded. We can not safely treat all these officials as on an equality under our Constitution, for their constitutional status and powers are widely different.

The bill provides for the punishment:

(1) Of those who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kill or attempt to kill the President or the Vice-President, or any officer of the United States entitled by law to succeed to the Presidency, or any ambassador or minister of a foreign government accredited to the United States and being therein, or who assaults either of these officers, except such foreign ambassadors and ministers, with intent to inflict great bodily harm, when he is engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of an official act or omission, when such crime is committed within any State or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. (Secs. 1–5).

(2) Of accessories to such crimes before and after the fact, and those who "openly, willfully, and deliberately justify" such killing or assaulting of either of such officers with intent to cause a repetition of the commission or the commission of either of such crimes. (Secs. 6–8.)

(3) Of those who advocate, advise, or teach, generally or specifically, the duty, necessity, or propriety of killing or assaulting one or more of the officers of the Government of the United States or of the government of any civilized nation because of his or their official character, or who conspire within the United States, or request, advise, or encourage another to assault or kill anywhere the chief ruler of any civilized nation having an organized government, because of his official character. (Secs. 8, 9.)

The enactment of the statute proposed will not prevent a State from punishing the offense of killing or assaulting the President or any of the officers referred to when the offense is committed within such State, unless the Federal authority sees fit to interpose. It is well settled that when an act offends against both the State and National sovereignty either, and sometimes both, may punish.

(United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542–550.)
(Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S., 131–139.)
(U. S. v. Marigold, 9 How., 560–569.)
(Fox v. Ohio, 5 How., 410–433.)
(Moore v. Illinois, 14 How., 13–19.)
(Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S., 371–390.)
(Brown on Jurisdiction, sec. 88, 89.)

In the Cross case (supra) the court said:

The argument in behalf of the plaintiffs in error fails to give effect to the established doctrine that the same act or series of acts may constitute an offense equally against the United States and the State, subjecting the guilty party to punishment under the laws of each government.

In United States v. Marigold (supra) the court said:

The same act might, as to its character and tendencies and the consequences it involved, constitute an offense against both the State and Federal governments, and might draw to its commission the penalties denounced by either, as appropriate to its character in reference to each.

Therefore the enactment of this bill into law will not deprive a State of the right to arrest and to punish under its laws any person who commits an offense specified in the first nine sections of the bill, provided such State has a law punishing the acts specified as crimes against the State.

The limitations are necessary to the constitutionality of the bill. The thirteenth section provides a rule of evidence placing the burden of proof on the criminal to show, if he can, that the officer assaulted or slain was not attacked under circumstances giving the Federal Government jurisdiction of the offense. That section also declares that nothing contained in the law shall be construed as an admission or declaration that there is a time when either of the officers named, during his tenure of office, is not engaged in the performance of his official duties.

That section is as follows:

SEC. 13. That in all prosecutions under the provisions of the first seven sections of this act it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the President of the United States, or the Vice-President of the United States, or other officer of the United States entitled by law to succeed to the Presidency, as the case may be, was, at the time of the commission of the alleged offense, engaged in the performance of his official duties. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission or declaration that there is a time when either of such officers, during the tenure of his office, is not engaged in the performance of his official duties.

Therefore all the Government will have to prove is that the accused killed or assaulted, as the case may be, one of the officers named. The presumption is that the assault was not justified or excusable; that the officer was engaged in the performance of his official duties; that there could be no time when he was not so engaged. Should it be proved or established that he was not so engaged—impossible in the case of the President—still should it appear that the attack was made on the officer because of his official character, or because of some official act done or omitted, the offender would be within the law and the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

By no possibility can one who offends the sovereignty of the United States escape its jurisdiction.

The provision of the Senate bill providing as follows, "or who shall willfully and maliciously cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country shall be punished with death," is clearly unconstitutional. Such offense of causing the death of a foreign ruler is not confined to acts committed in the United States or on the high seas.

Such an offense when not committed within the jurisdiction of the United States or its territory is beyond our criminal jurisdiction and solely an offense against the municipal law of the nation where committed, if committed within the domain of a foreign State, because not committed by a citizen of the United States against another citizen. (United States v. The Pirates, 5 Wheaton, 184, 192–197; speech of John Marshall in H. R., same book, appendix; International Public Law, Taylor, sec. 194; sec. 187, p. 233; Wheaton's International Law, chapters 1 and 2; also sec. 113.)

Such an offense as is specified in the Senate bill is not an offense against the law of nations. That provision includes such an offense if committed here, but not being so confined in terms it offends against the cases already cited.

Whether or not the Congress of the United States may pass laws punishing offenses against the persons of aliens residing here is a mooted question, but the following case is instructive and may be considered by some as decisive. It is the case of the forging of the notes of a foreign nation, the act being committed within the United States. (United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S., 479.)

THE LAW OF NATIONS.

I do not undertake to state here the law of nations in its entirety, but only so much as is applicable to the questions under discussion. In this regard the United States Supreme Court has held (United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S., 479–484):

> The law of nations requires every national government to use "due diligence" to prevent a wrong being done within its own dominion to another nation with which it is at peace, or to the people thereof.

The United States can not compel a State to enact laws punishing such offenses, and hence Congress should act. (United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S., 487.)

It is there said:

> A right secured by the law of nations to a nation, or its people, is one that the United States, as the representatives of this nation, are bound to protect. Consequently a law which is necessary and proper to afford this protection is one that Congress may enact, because it is one that is needed to carry into execution a power conferred by the Constitution on the Government of the United States exclusively. There is no authority in the United States to require the passage and enforcement of such a law by the States.
>
> Therefore the United States must have the power to pass it and enforce it themselves, or be unable to perform a duty which they owe to another nation, and which the law of nations has imposed on them as part of their international obligations. This, however, does not prevent a State from providing for the punishment of the same thing; for here, as in the case of counterfeiting the coin of the United States, the act may be an offense against the authority of a State as well as that of the United States.

Nor is it necessary that the law enacted by Congress in terms define the offense as one against the law of nations, or to so state or to declare it to be an offense against such laws. (United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S., 488.)

The court there held:

> It remains only to consider those questions which present the point whether, in enacting a statute to define and punish an offense against the law of nations, it is necessary, in order "to define" the offense, that it be declared in the statute itself to be "an offense against the law of nations." This statute defines the offense, and if the thing made punishable is one which the United States are required by their international obligations to use due diligence to prevent, it is an offense against the law of nations.
>
> Such being the case, there is no more need of declaring in the statutes that it is such an offense than there would be in any other criminal statue to declare that it was enacted to carry into execution any other particular power vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States. Whether the offense as defined is an offense against the law of nations depends on the thing done, not on any declaration to that effect by Congress. As has already been seen, it was incumbent on the United States as a nation to use due diligence to prevent any injury to another nation or its people by counterfeiting its money, or its public or quasi public securities. This statute was enacted as a means to that end, that is to say, as a means of performing a duty which had been cast on the United States by the law of nations, and it was clearly appropriate legislation for that purpose. Upon its face, therefore, it defines an offense against the law of nations as clearly as if Congress had in express terms so declared. Criminal statutes passed for enforcing and preserving the neutral relations of the United States with other nations were passed by Congress at a very early date (June 5, 1794, c. 50, 1 Stat. L., 381; June 14, 1797, c. 1, 1, Stat. L., 520; March 3, 1817, c. 58, 3 Stat. L., 370; April 20, 1818, c. 88, 3 Stat. L., 447); and those now in force are found in Title LXVII of the Revised Statutes.
>
> These all rest on the same power of Congress that is here invoked, and it has never been supposed they were invalid because they did not expressly declare that the offenses there defined were offenses against the law of nations.

It is perfectly clear that a foreigner who commits a crime against municipal government abroad and flees to the United States can not be tried or punished here for such offense either by a State or the United States. Says Taylor, International Public Law, page 233:

> When a State (nation) demands the right to punish a foreigner for a criminal act committed within the limits of another sovereignty before his arrival, it asserts a claim to concurrent jurisdiction, which, if valid, would overthrow the fundamental assumption upon which the present State system is founded.

See also Wheaton's International Law, section 113.

The mere assertion of such a jurisdiction by one nation against another would constitute a most offensive and unwarranted interference with her internal affairs and government.

What would we say to England, or Russia, or Germany, or France should she give refuge to the assassin of our President, the assassin being a citizen of the United States, try and condemn him for the offense, and imprison him for five or ten years? Concede such jurisdiction under the law of nations and one nation might set a premium on the murder of the ruler of another. Acquittal in the one jurisdiction would acquit in all. Punishment in the one, however slight, would be a bar to prosecution for the same offense in another because an offense against the law of nations. Not an offense against the law of one nation on one ground and the law of another on another ground. Piracy is a crime against the law of nations, because denounced by all Christian civilized nations. Pirates are outlawed of all nations; are not deemed citizens of any nation. (Wheaton's International Law, sec. 124.)

A crime committed on a ship belonging to a nation, wherever such ship lawfully may be, is cognizable by the nation to which she belongs for the reason that she is deemed a part of the territory of that nation. (United States v. Rodgers, 150 U. S., 249, 263, 264. This overrules People v. Tyler, 7 Mich., 161; Justice Brown and Justice Gray dissented. See also Ross v. McIntyre, 140 U. S., 453.)

In the last-named case, Ross, a subject of Great Britain, entered the mercantile marine of the United States and became one of the crew of a vessel bearing our flag. He committed the crime of murder on that vessel while it was in the harbor of Yokohama, Japan, and was tried and convicted in the United States consular court there. Held that the conviction was rightful. The law of nations is the usage of all civilized nations. (United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet., 691.)

All civilized nations do not punish offenses committed by the citizen of another nation in the territory of his residence. Few, if any, do. England once did. She does so no longer. France does not, nor does Germany or Russia.

The House substitute deals properly with this question. Under its provisions if one of our citizens goes abroad and commits a crime and returns, we will, in proper cases, surrender him to the offended sovereignty, or we will punish him here as we lawfully may. (Wheaton's International Law, sec. 113.)

Under section 9 if a person conspires in the United States or requests, advises, or encourages another to unlawfully assault or kill within or without the United States the chief executive or chief magistrate of any other civilized nation having an organized government because of his official character, and is found here, he is tried here, and if convicted, severely punished; punished with death if a murder is committed anywhere pursuant to the conspiracy. The offense made punishable is committed here, for it consists in the conspiracy or the request, advice, or encouragement to commit the crime. This provision fully serves the purpose desired and will tend to break up meetings here held to encourage the commission of crime abroad. There is no question as to the constitutionality of this provision.

Section 3 of the Senate bill provides that the criminal who aids and abets the killing of the officers named is to be imprisoned for a term not exceeeing twenty years. By section 2 the criminal who attempts to kill one of these officers and fails suffers death, but by section 3 the criminal who actually aids the actual killing of such an officer can only be imprisoned for twenty years. We see no propriety in such legislation. In our judgment the criminal who actually aids in accomplishing the actual death of the President is as guilty and deserves as severe a punishment as the one who attempts to commit the crime but fails. We think he is more guilty. In all the States and in all civilized countries the one who aids or abets the commission of a crime is made a principal offender. The proposed substitute does this.

Section 3 of the Senate bill provides that he who counsels the killing of the President is to be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years, and section 5 provides that he who counsels another to kill the President by spoken words or by written or printed words uttered or published shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ten years. We think it entirely immaterial, so far as the gravity of the offense and the punishment that should be inflicted are concerned, whether the counsel be given by spoken, written, or printed words uttered or published or otherwise. In whatever manner the counsel is given the offense is the same and the criminality is the same, and the punishment should be the same.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question for information. I read the Senate bill, and my impression was that under the first section the gentleman read the crime is in the counseling personally of some one to take the life of the President.

In another section it is made a crime, with a less penalty, if it is done by spoken or written word, and that means in a public speech.

Mr. RAY of New York. But it does not say so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That was the interpretation I gave it. It may not bear that interpretation.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will say to the gentleman that the trouble with his position is the bill does not say so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That was not my position, I read it with that in view, and I wanted to know if the gentleman thought the Senate had succeeded in making that distinction?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; the Senate has not made any such distinction. To say in one section if I advise a man to do a thing, and make my offense punishable by twenty years' imprisonment, and in another section say if I do the same thing by words written or printed, uttered or spoken, a different punishment shall follow, what distinction have I made except in the punishment? I have simply confused the human mind and made it impossible for that mind to tell what the legislature did mean.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is likely the text did not make the distinction that I thought it intended to.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What did the gentleman from Indiana think about spoken words that were uttered, and if they did not happen to be uttered what would happen? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is too utter for me. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY of New York. I have heard some of the uttered words and then I have here some of the printed words which later I will read, and I want to ask if you would make any distinction between the spoken words uttered in a speech and the printed words as I will present them. The speaking is no worse than the printing, and the printing and circulating is damnable.

Section 6 of the Senate bill makes it a crime to aid in the escape of a person guilty of killing the President or any of the other officers named. A person may knowingly harbor or conceal such offender with impunity. He is not guilty of an offense unless there is an escape. This is at war with the laws of all the States and with the laws of all civilized nations.

The proposed substitute makes it a crime to knowingly harbor, conceal, or aid such an offender with intent that he escape or avoid arrest, trial, conviction, or punishment. This is as it should be. No encouragement should be given to those who would harbor, conceal, or aid offenders against the law.

Your committee is also opposed to section 7 of the Senate bill. That section authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to detail from the Regular Army a sufficient number of officers and men to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States. The Secretary of War is to prescribe and regulate the dress of these soldiers. He is also to make special rules and regulations prescribing their duty, and he is only to publish such part thereof as he may deem proper. In other words, the Secretary of War may detail every man and officer in the Regular Army, under the pretense of protecting the President, dress them to suit his fancy, and send them abroad among the people to act under secret orders. When such laws begin to operate in this Republic liberty dies.

We are opposed to the proposition as unnecessary and as an encroachment upon the liberties of our people. Such a law will excite ridicule with some and anger with the many. It will excite and encourage anarchy. The President as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Secretary of War as his subordinate may detail as many soldiers as may be necessary to guard the President of the United States, and they may issue orders for their government and control while so acting. This is the law now, and we are opposed to the establishment of a secret service in the Regular Army further than is now authorized. We are not opposed to a proper addition to the secret-service force of the United States. That force should be composed of men trained and skilled in that line of duty, and should act under orders from the Secretary of the Treasury, as does the present secret-service force. Such a force will be much more efficient and effective in protecting the President.

I have no idea and make no suggestion that the present Secretary of War would in any way abuse the privilege granted by this bill. The President of the United States would sanction nothing of the kind.

But it ought not to be written upon the statute book; there is no necessity for it, no excuse for it, no wisdom in the proposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me call attention to the fact that these rules and regulations may be kept secret by the Secretary of War.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The bill allows him to make any kind of regulations that he pleases and to keep them locked in his own breast.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; it provides that they shall not be given out unless the Secretary of War chooses. So that there may be sent out twenty-five or fifty thousand men wearing black stockings—no other distinguishing mark—who may go to every house under secret instructions unknown even to the President which they are compelled to carry out, with orders perhaps to arrest you or me or any citizen. They may go into these galleries, and when we leave the House may take us into custody upon the theory that we have done something or said something tending to excite feeling against or endanger the President of the United States.

This is in exact line with what was done in France. It is in exact line with the establishment of the old Swiss guard. It is in exact line, and indeed is copied after the laws of Rome, when she established a Pretorian guard, which after some three hundred years she was compelled to disband, such was the indignation of the people against it. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

The House bill goes much further than the Senate act in providing for the punishment of that class of persons who seek to accomplish the death of the President of the United States. (See secs. 8, 9, 11, and 12.)

We punish those who advocate, advise, or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful killing or assaulting of the President or any officer entitled by law to succeed to that high office. We punish also those who conspire or who request, advise, or encourage others to assault or kill the chief executive of any other civilized nation having a organized government. This will tend at least to put an end to meetings in the United States held for the purpose of teaching murder.

We seek also to shut out those who seek to enter this country and who are opposed to organized government. We also forbid the naturalization of such persons. It may be difficult to enforce these provisions. Those who hold these beliefs will conceal them as far as possible from the general public. If they repress these beliefs entirely, no harm will come to anyone, but the moment they begin to teach their doctrines they will be discovered and may be apprehended, and if they have secured naturalization their certificates may be annulled.

The committee had some difficulty in selecting the proper words to describe the killing of the President or other officers named. It finally selected those found in the proposed bill, because easily understood and comprehensive. They were suggested by the Attorney-General of the United States. The killing must be unlawful; that is, not excusable or justifiable. The killing must be purposely and knowingly done; that is, the offender must know what he is doing and must purpose to kill.

These words are equivalent to a killing with malice aforethought, or to a killing with a deliberate and premeditated design to effect the death of the person slain. Members of this House might well differ as to the language that ought to be used in this connection as the laws of the various States differ in the use of language, but the language used in the bill is the same in effect as that of the various States. The Senate bill attempts to exclude the idea that a person may kill the President or one of the officers named in self-defense on the theory that the President is the king, and that the king can do no wrong. This proposition was presented to and argued before the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee, however, was substantially unanimous in the belief that the President of the United States is but human and that he can do wrong. The committee was substantially unanimous in the opinion that should the President of the United States so far forget himself as to unlawfully assault a citizen with the intent to commit grievous bodily harm, such citizen would be justified in defending himself by the use of all necessary force even to the taking of life.

It is not presumed or supposed that the President of the United States or one of the officers named will ever be guilty of such an assault, but there is no sound reason for making any distinction in the definition of the crime of killing the President from that used in defining the killing of any citizen. His criminal acts are on a par with the criminal acts of any other person and should be so treated in this Republic.

It has been suggested that the law ought to provide that a person who attempts to kill the President of the United States or either of the officers named and fails ought to suffer death. The committee did not sustain this contention, and I, for one, do not believe that such a law would be wise.

Crime is restrained by the certainty, rather than by the severity, of the punishment. There is a growing opposition to the infliction of the death penalty in any case. Conviction is more certain when the punishment is imprisonment for life than when it is death. There ought to be a distinction, and the bill makes a distinction, in the punishment where the assault results in the death of the person assaulted and where death does not result. The one criminal is as bad as the other, but society is protected in both cases and the deterring effect of life imprisonment is believed to be as great as the infliction of the death penalty. The bill as it is will find favor with all and invite criticism from but few.

In England two hundred and fifty years ago nearly 300 offenses were punishable with death. The highway robber suffered death, the murderer suffered death, the common thief suffered death. In some cases, as treason, the convicted felon suffered death, and then his body was drawn and quartered. These punishments, instead of deterring crime, brutalized the people. Crime ran riot. It was when the lawmakers, seeing the bad effect of cruel and unusual and excessive punishments, did away with the death penalty in most instances that crime began to diminish. All history teaches us that the bill as drawn is conservative, wise, and efficient.

There are those who believe honestly that the enactment of this bill into law will do more harm than good, so far as affording protection to the President and the other officers named is concerned. It is contended that it selects out the officers named as favorites for Federal legislation and Federal protection, and that this will invite criminals who seek distinction as such to strike at these particular officials.

There is some justification, in theory at least, for such a contention. We must remember, however, that since the foundation of the Government we have had Federal laws for the protection of many officials of the Federal Government while engaged in the performance of their official duties, and we do not know of a single well-authenticated case where the existence of these laws has invited or encouraged the commission of crime.

I now come to the discussion of those provisions in the bill which forbid entrance into the United States and the naturalization when found in the United States of those persons who disbelieve in or who are opposed to all organized government or who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to all organized government or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of the officers of any government because of their official character.

Such persons are found in foreign nations and such persons are coming year by year to the United States, and here unmolested in most instances they hold their meetings and teach their dangerous and pernicious doctrines. It is time to put a stop to their coming. It is time to write upon the statute book a provision that will prevent so far as possible the naturalization of persons of this class. We therefore authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make due inquiry and forbid entrance into the United States of all such persons; and we further provide that due inquiry shall be made of all persons seeking naturalization as to their beliefs and affiliations in the particulars mentioned. We make it a crime to knowingly aid or assist such a person to enter the United States. We compel all aliens to make oath when applying for naturalization that they are not of the class mentioned and do not entertain such beliefs. If it is demonstrated that they have sworn falsely, their certificates may be annulled and they may be punished for perjury.

It has been said in the public press that these provisions will become a dead letter upon the statute book; that they can not be enforced; that persons entertaining these beliefs will readily commit perjury. All criminal laws are difficult of enforcement. Usually it is difficult to discover and apprehend criminals. These facts, however, do not justify legislative bodies in nonaction. It is their duty to write appropriate and, so far as possible, effective laws upon the statute books, and it is then the duty of the executive officers of government to enforce them so far as possible. If persons of the class described evade the law and find entrance into the United States and remain silent, little harm will come to the Republic. But so soon as they shall begin their teachings they will be discovered and may then be apprehended and punished. We have not invaded the right of free speech as defined in the Constitution. Freedom of speech does not permit the teaching of the duty, the necessity, or the propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of officers of the Government.

Freedom of speech does not permit the advocacy of the commission of crime in any form, and when such teachings are aimed at the Government of the United States we have the constitutional right to define such acts as crimes against the United States, and punish them accordingly.

During the sessions of the last Congress, and before the murder of our loved and lamented President, I received through the mail the following printed doggerel:

"THE PHILIPPINES FOR JESUS!"

The heathen die on Luzon's sands,
Their blood for freedom streaming;
But on our soldiers' crimsoned hands
The Saviour's eyes are beaming.

The Filipinos must have light,
"The love of Christ" must fill them;
And hence we've bought from Spain the right
To tax them and to kill them.

"America," the Saviour calls,
"Achieve your sacred mission
With Bibles and the cannon balls
Of sanctified ambition."

So far we reach across the waves,
And for the Saviour grab them;
And, as they won't again be slaves,
For Christ we shoot and stab them.

What if their wives for vengeance cry,
Their hands in anguish wringing?
And starving orphans wail and die?
We're them "to Jesus bringing."

What if the bullets of the Cross
Thro' hearts of men are speeding?
And if its steel their bodies toss?
We're but "for Jesus pleading."

For liberty they basely die
With corpses gashed and gory,
But bravely are they butchered by
The bearers of "Old Glory."

They call the Empire's ensign bright
A brutal tyrant banner;
But Jesus sees our soldiers smite
Them in a Christian manner.

And, oh! the bliss, the bliss complete,
To think the whole world sees us,
When Dewey leads his valiant fleet
And gives the heathen Jesus!

They say we've Lexington forgot.
The saucy sinners! damn them!
But when to death their freedom's shot,
"With Christian love" we'll cram them.

Their proud hearts throb with sinful wrath,
But oft our shells have ripped them;
And Emperor McKinley hath
To Jesus partly whipped them.

And when "to Jesus' arms they fly,"
And humbly kneel and please us,
Of us they'll beer and bibles buy
And beef embalmed* for Jesus.

Their gold they'll sweetly let us take,
When they've of sin repented;
And God they'll beg themselves to make
"With poverty contented."

Then We and God will make a choice
For them of Lords and Bosses,
And we'll command them to rejoice
In Christian Labor's "crosses."

We'll make our Malay converts sweat
For U. S. corporations,
And load them with a crushing debt,
Like all the Christian nations.

We'll shackle him who freedom asks,
And capture him who flees us;
And millionaires shall give them tasks,
And make them jump for Jesus.

The red hands of McKinley will
The Malay orange squeeze us;
And we will suck, and suck, until
We've sucked it dry for Jesus.

And if we're called a canting set,
And other nations tease us,
In heaven golden crowns we'll get
For "suffering for Jesus."

*The correct diet for our Filipino converts is "embalmed beef"—"embalmed beef" like that upon which United States soldiers of "The Lamb" recently starved to death in Cuba. "Embalmed beef" will accelerate enormously their development into angels.

A MILITARY BURIAL.

A warrior brave who fought with zest
For Tyranny is dead;
A bullet through the butcher's breast
For Liberty hath sped.

'Mid loud hurrahs he marched to kill
For crimson carnage keen;
And did his heartless hirers' will,
A slaughtering machine.

A puppet in a cause of shame,
Upon the weak he warred;
And made his country's flag and name
By hearts humane abhorred.

But now thro' avenues of gloom,
To martial morning's drums,
Upon its journey to the tomb
The killer's carcass comes.

Saluting cannons grandly boom
A nation's last adieu,
And oratory casts its bloom
On him to murder true.

"On Fame's eternal camping ground"
His "silent tent" is "spread,"
"And Glory guards with solemn round"
Her savage butcher "dead."

The one entitled "A Military Burial" had a black border, and both are signed "S. H. Randall, Wyoming, Ohio." I do not know whether any such person as S. H. Randall resided at Wyoming, Ohio, but some person at some place composed these vile sentiments and they were printed at some place on some press and mailed, presumably broadcast, throughout the United States.

Is the printing of such sentiments freedom of speech or freedom of the press? Ought such vile, sacrilegious, and wicked words to be printed and circulated in this land?

It is impossible to know who received copies of this villainous stuff or the effect it had on certain minds. It is known that a few months thereafter the hand of an assassin struck down the President of this Republic.

I invite attention to another article, printed May 6, 1902, and widely circulated, in which it is stated:

> There are hundreds of thousands of American citizens who would advocate the killing of the Sultan of Turkey or the Czar of Russia because of their official character.

Is this true? If it be true is it not time to interfere by law with such teachings—the open advocacy of the commission of crime?

The same article says:

> For about every other white man will undertake, with emphasis, to justify running a negro postmaster out of town.

Is this statement true? If it be true is it not time to make a law that will prevent such lawlessness? That there may be no misapprehension, I insert the article entire. It is as follows:

[Virginian-Pilot.—By the Virginian and Pilot Publishing Company.—Tuesday, May 6, 1902.]

A BILL TO MONARCHIZE THE REPUBLIC.

The act for "the protection of the President of the United States, and other purposes"—chiefly other and quite ulterior purposes—has been reported back to the House of Representatives with some important changes. It is not in its present shape, however, less objectionable than the amazing measure passed by the Senate, and in some respects is even more drastic. Here is a sample section, to which we invite particular attention:

"SEC. 8. That any person who advocates, advises, or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful killing or assaulting of one or more of the officers (either of specific officers or of officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of the government of any civilized nation, because of his or their official character, or who openly, willfully, and deliberately justifies such killing or assaulting, with intent to cause the commission of any of the offenses specified in the first nine sections of this act, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned not less than one nor more than twenty years, or both."

Now, that is ostensibly aimed at anarchists, but we say that under it hundreds and probably thousands of good, native-born American citizens can be sent to the penitentiary for twenty years and fined $5,000 for a simple expression of opinion. The bill is the most astounding assault upon the rights of the citizen, the most brazen attempt to make the Federal courts the censors of public opinion that it is possible to imagine.

We say that under this act, had it been in force at the time of the Armenian massacres, hundreds of reverend gentlemen might have found themselves behind the bars for twenty years for things they said about the Sultan of Turkey and the prime ministers of England and Germany.

And this measure purports to be a bill for the protection of the President of the United States.

What business is it of this country to protect a monarch on his throne or the Czar of Russia in his own dominions? To be sure, we do not believe any citizen can be punished under the Constitution of the United States for any expression of opinion as to a foreign ruler, but what business is it of Congress to attempt it? Why pass this law to harass the citizen? There are hundreds of thousands of American citizens who would "advocate" the killing of the Sultan of Turkey or the Czar of Russia "because of their official character." Are these American citizens to be sent to the penitentiary for twenty years? What business of ours is it to protect monarchs and autocrats on their thrones? This country and its free institutions are a living protest against monarchical governments.

There is another view of this matter that we commend to Congressmen with Southern constituents. A negro postmaster is an "officer of the Government." Negro postmasters are "officers generally." Under any provocation to strike or assault a negro postmaster would be, under this proposed law, an offense deserving twenty years' imprisonment alike of the offender and of those who may "justify" the assault. Under this act about half the Southern population would be liable to find themselves in the penitentiary, for about every other white man will undertake with emphasis to "justify" running a negro postmaster out of town.

Section 9 of this bill, which should be entitled "An act to Russianize the United States," imposes the death penalty on any citizen who "encourages" another to kill the chief executive of another country if such executive is really killed. If death does not result, twenty years' imprisonment is considered sufficient. Now, consider that word "encourage." After McKinley was assassinated certain rabid newspapers openly charged other newspapers with having "encouraged" his assassination and even with being responsible for it.

Under this act any American citizen who should be quoted in an interview in the public press as saying that the Czar of Russia ought to be shot, because he is a tyrant, would be liable to the death penalty if an assassin should kill him and the fact could be established that the assassin had seen the interview in question. For, undoubtedly, that could be construed as encouragement.

What business is it of the American Government to protect foreign monarchs or monarchs anywhere? But it is useless to go into all the particulars of this monstrous measure. We do not believe that any statute making such an assault upon the rights and liberties of the citizen; any measure vesting such power in the central Government and the Federal judiciary has ever passed either House of Congress before since the civil war.

What are the Democrats in Congress thinking about, anyway, that they should have allowed this bill to get so far practically without opposition? Have they lost their nerve completely?

Are they cowed at the prospect of silly clamor that they favor anarchism, if they shall stand out against this infamous attack on the liberties of the American people?

Did they exhaust their usefulness to their country and their party when they repealed the sugar differential?

Are the Republicans to be permitted to monarchize the country without opposition and without protest?

Such would appear to be the Democratic Congressional programme.

When any newspaper states that citizens of the United States do teach the right to assault officers of the United States engaged in the execution of their duty, and that they have the right so to do, and that no law ought to be enacted that will infringe such alleged right, it is time to curb the tendency to lawlessness and crime and such encouragement of lawlessness and crime. Every American citizen has the right to criticise the law, to advocate the change or repeal, to express opinion on any subject at proper times, but no man, under the pretense of exercising his right of free speech or under the protection of alleged freedom of the press, has the right to advocate or approve the commission of crime, for this disturbs the public peace and tends to subvert government. This has been repeatedly decided. (Black's Constitutional Law, second edition, p. 541; 2 Story on the Constitution, third edition, sec. 1880.)

The first amendment to the Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

Some persons assume that this provision of the Constitution was intended to sanction and authorize perfect freedom to express any thoughts or teach any doctrines by words spoken or printed in public newspapers. This is a serious mistake. The amendment does not justify or protect slander or libel or the speaking or publishing of words that encourage crime of any degree. This was the law before the amendment of the Constitution was adopted, and that simply prohibits an abridgment of those rights as they then existed. It has been decided that Congress may prohibit the carrying in the mails of any printed matter it deems injurious to the public morals or the well-being of the people or that will, in its judgment, aid in the commission of crime. (In re Rapier (143 U. S., 110); see also People v. Croswell (3 Johns. Cases, 336, 365) as to freedom of speech and freedom of the press.)

It has been suggested that when Congress enacts a law for the protection of the President and of the officers in line of succession to that office it ought to embrace within the bill all officers of the Government—Senators, Representatives in Congress, justices of the Supreme Court, and others.

There is no necessity for this, at least no present necessity. The aim of those who are opposed to all government is the head of government; the head of national government because it represents government. The murder of President Lincoln was instigated by official acts done; that of President Garfield by an omission or refusal to perform an official act. President McKinley was assassinated because he represented government, not that he represented a bad or a tyrannical government, but government irrespective of its character. If we do our duty as legislators we will write this law upon the statute books and provide means for its enforcement by increasing the secret service force of the Government.

A mere provision in the immigration laws that alien anarchists shall not enter the United States and that they shall be deported when they do, while wise, is not sufficient. We must reach those who knowingly aid or assist such persons to enter this country or who conspire with others to procure their admission. We must prevent their naturalization so far as possible, and punish all who knowingly procure or aid in procuring the naturalization of such person. This will make witnesses in naturalization proceedings cautious in giving evidence. The affidavit required by the provisions of section 12 of the bill will be effective in preventing the naturalization of improper persons, and a thorough examination of the witnesses in such proceedings on this particular subject will aid the discovery of organizations that teach the destruction of government.

We owe a duty to all foreign nations with which we hold diplomatic relation to prevent the formation of conspiracies in the United States to encourage or perpetrate crime against government in foreign countries. A decent respect for the opinion of mankind demands this. If we would establish and maintain friendly relations with the powers of the world we must see to it that our domain is not used as a harbor of refuge for murderers and assassins or a safe place in which murder to be perpetrated abroad may be planned. We owe the same duty to foreign nations in this regard that a man owes to his neighbor. Our safety and honor as a nation among the nations is involved, and these considerations amply justify the provisions of the bill relating to that subject.

Your committee is conscious of imperfections, and we are hampered somewhat by want of constitutional power, but, on the whole, this bill will satisfy the public demand, repress crime, and add to the dignity and security of the nation of which every American is justly proud. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SIBLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On June 2, 1902:

H. R. 1346: An act granting a pension to Adelbert L. Orr; and

H. R. 14589: An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

On June 3, 1902:

H. R. 13985. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

H. R. 10995. An act to regulate the introduction of eggs of game birds for propagation;

H. R. 14189. An act to permit the occupancy of the public-printing building by the Grand Army of the Republic; and

H. R. 13168. An act to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT AND THE SUPPRESSION OF CRIME AGAINST GOVERNMENT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is no man in the United States who more profoundly deplored the death of President McKinley than I did. He was a man for whom I entertained the very highest regard. Having served with him for many years upon the floor of this House, I had an opportunity to know him well. We were personal friends. I believe I may truthfully say that he was the sweetest spirited public man that I ever knew. I think I might go further and say that in his life, character, and achievements he demonstrated as much of the possibilities of typical American manhood as any citizen our country has ever produced.

He went from private soldier in war to President in peace. He was a good man; a patriotic man. He was, more than all, a Christian. I believe that the greatest spiritual uplift that has been given to the cause of religion since the days of the ancient martyrs was his dying testimonial as to its divine reality. I believe that what he said when he declared "it is God's way; and His will, not ours, be done," exhibited a spirit of Christian resignation and was a tribute to the truth of religion surpassing anything that has ever been said in all the pulpits in the world.

Mr. Chairman, we ought not as lawgivers to allow either our feelings of personal tenderness or sense of indignation to control what we may do in making statutes. Now, if we could calmly segregate from this discussion and subtract from our recollection the lamentable assassination of our President, if we could for the time being dispassionately put away from reflection the horrible circumstances attending his untimely taking off, if we could subordinate sentimentality and the emotions of our hearts to the dominion of our intellects, there would be no disposition, in my judgment, to pass this bill in its entirety.

There are certain features of the bill that meet my approval; there are others that I can not support, and which, if retained, will cause me to vote against it. I know I am actuated by devotion to duty and convictions of principle in the opposition I shall make. When I find myself confronted with any proposition which brings me in conflict with the judgment of my brethren on the Judiciary Committee I always demand the countersign of that proposition, because I have so long associated with them and I have such cordial regard for them personally, such a high estimate of their ability as lawyers, and so much confidence in their patriotism, that when I am compelled to disagree with them it at once challenges my thoughtful concern, and I inquire, Is it possible for me to be right and these able gentlemen wrong?

This is not a partisan proposition. I do not intend to bring into what I may say anything foreign to the legitimate consideration of the bill, and I hope that no discussion of a partisan character will be introduced in this debate.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to anarchy in all its shapes and forms. I have an ineffable contempt for a man who has "a soul so dead" that he does not love our country and its institutions. I do not believe that it was ever intended that freedom of speech should degenerate into abominable licentiousness and afford any excuse or shelter for plotting and planning to destroy the Government of our country. I have no sort of toleration for any propaganda of anarchy, nor can I endure those who advocate it. Having said this much, I trust that those gentlemen who may do me the honor to listen to me may be prepared to appreciate at least the standpoint from which I speak, and I am sorry that I do not come to you with excellency of speech. I have bestowed no literary preparation upon the remarks I am about to deliver. I shall try to make up in earnestness what I lack in elegant diction. I do not know that I shall be able to say anything new, but I want to call attention to some things old.

I desire to invite some inquiry into the ancient landmarks and the primal foundation principles upon which our great dual system of government is constructed. I am one of those who hold that there ought to be no obscuration of the respective lines of State and Federal power. I believe that when the founders of this Government made it they drew around the States the sacred circle of autonomy and inhibited the planting of any foreign or aggressive footsteps within that reserved and consecrated domain. I believe there are certain great powers reserved to the States, respectively, and the people, that have never been surrendered, have never been delegated, but should forever abide with them.

There are different jurisdictions in our dual system. The fathers intended that there should be, and that the one should not wrongfully encroach upon the other. I wish to arouse your attention to the fact that we are now proposing a new departure, and to repeat what has already been suggested, that we are, perhaps unconsciously, affected in our action upon this innovation by the awful occurrence to which reference has been made. Human nature is a strange thing. We are influenced in various ways. We are not always impervious to the effects of our surroundings, and peculiar environment may control conduct that would otherwise be different. This new departure we are about to take is, in my judgment, inconsistent with our system of Government and at variance with the established criminal jurisprudence of this country, State and Federal.

If we go back into the eighteenth century, shortly after this wonderful and symmetrical fabric of republican government "in these ends of the earth" had been established, we will find that in 1790 the Congress of the United States passed a statute on murder, defining the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, where it might be asserted and exercised, and expressly excluding that jurisdiction from the limits of a State. Let me call your attention to that old statute. "Inquire for the old paths and walk ye in them." It is never a wise thing to wander from original doctrine. It is dangerous. "Truth is eternal." What was true when the fathers founded the Government, what was sound in principle then, is true now. What was true in the days of Cicero—and I shall quote from him directly—what was true before Christ, is true anno Domini—is true to-day.

If you will turn to section 5339 of the Revised Statutes, passed the 30th of April, 1790, under the caption "murder," you will find this definition:

> Every person who commits murder within any port, arsenal, dockyard, magazine, or in any other place or district or country under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.
>
> Second. Or upon the high seas, or in any arm of the sea, or in any river, haven, creek, basin, or bay within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States—

Listen, that I may accentuate this—> and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, * * * shall suffer death.

This old statute defines where the Federal jurisdiction obtains, and declares where it shall not enter—where it begins and where it shall end. In any place ceded by a State to the United States the Federal Government also has authority, and if a murder or any crime, malum in se or malum prohibitum, within that territory be committed, the Federal Government has jurisdiction; but if it be within the territorial limits of a State and against the peace and dignity of a State, obligated by every duty to itself and society and our dual system of government to maintain law and order, the Federal Government has no right to go within that State. "Thus far and no further," says the statute. The State has the right to try and punish all murder committed within its confines. Now, this is not only stated here, but it is emphasized elsewhere. I find under the chapter on crimes in the Revised Statutes, defining piracy and robbery and so on, section 5329, the following:

> Nothing in this title shall be held to take away or impair the jurisdiction of the courts of the several States under the laws thereof.

Furthermore, in section 5346 is the following:

> Every person who, upon the high seas, or in any arm of the sea, or any river, haven, creek, basin, or bay within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State * * * shall be punished, etc.

Here three distinct and different times is the idea brought out that there is an exclusive jurisdiction of its kind in the United States, and an exclusive jurisdiction of its kind in the States. Of course, nobody doubts that. As I said, I am calling your attention to things old. Every lawyer knows about it, and that we have upon the Federal statute books to-day a law against murder as well as laws denouncing various crimes—robbery, conspiracy, interference with mails, obstructing the collection of public revenues, and other offenses distinctively cognizable in the Federal courts.

This statute on murder has always been enforced, so far as I know. Under the generic term or nature of that offense, every man who commits a murder is liable to punishment, and whosoever be murdered, whether he be high or low, rich or poor, an infraction of the law is perpetrated. No matter whether it is a great and a distinguished person, or the obscurest man in the country who is slain, this statute will reach the criminal. It is enacted, and will be enforced in behalf of the President, the Vice-President, members of the Cabinet, foreign ambassadors, and everybody within the jurisdiction of the United States. It is sufficient anywhere within Federal boundaries, and no other statutory offense of the kind is needed. It was enough, when violated, to bring Guiteau to the gallows.

This very statute was brought under judicial consideration and its operations explained early in the history of our country—in 1818—and the great Daniel Webster appeared before the courts and argued for its enforcement. The offense was committed on board the United States ship of war Independence, lying at anchor in the main channel of Boston Harbor. The defendant was a marine, duly enlisted in the service of the United States. The deceased was a cook on board of said ship, and also enlisted in the same service. Up to and beyond the place where the killing occurred the civil and criminal process of Massachusetts had hitherto been constantly served and obeyed. The case was tried in the circuit (Federal) court for the district of Massachusetts. Upon conviction, the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on the question of jurisdiction. The case is found in 3 Wheaton, United States v. Bevans. Chief Justice Marshall delivered the opinion of the court, and he says this:

What, then, is the extent of the jurisdiction which a State possesses? We answer without hesitation, the jurisdiction of a State is coextensive with its territory, coextensive with its legislative power. The place described is unquestionably within the original territory of Massachusetts. It is then within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts unless that jurisdiction has been ceded to the United States.

And the great jurist, speaking for the court, held that the Federal courts had no jurisdiction over the offense, and, mark you, the persons concerned were in the service of the United States and on duty aboard its war ship. Of course that is not new, but it shows you the plan upon which we started out, and is in line with the course we have uniformly pursued for more than a century. Daniel Webster, as I have suggested, insisted that the Federal court had no jurisdiction of the offense, and his contention was fully sustained.

I desire to quote from some of the same authorities to which reference was made by our distinguished chairman [Mr. RAY of New York], who has just favored us with such a long and interesting speech, and I invite attention first to the case of the United States v. Cruikshank, in which the opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Waite.

The government thus established and defined—is to some extent a government of the States in their political capacity. It is also for certain purposes a government of the people. Its powers are limited in number but not in degree. Within the scope of its powers as enumerated and defined it is supreme and above the State, but beyond it has no existence. It was erected for certain purposes and endowed with all the powers necessary for its own preservation and the accomplishment of the ends which its people had in view. It can neither grant nor secure to its citizens any right or privilege not expressly or by implication placed under its jurisdiction. The people of the United States resident within a State are subject to two governments, one State and the other national, but there need be no conflict between the two. The powers which one possesses the other does not.

He says—

If your State or mine has the power to try and punish for murder when committed within its own territory, the Government of the United States does not have that power.

They are established for different purposes and have separate jurisdictions. Together they make one whole, and furnish the people of the United States with a complete government, ample for the protection of all their rights at home and abroad. Thus—

And the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] cites this in his report—

if a marshal of the United States is unlawfully resisted while executing the process of the courts within a State, and the resistance is accompanied by an assault on the officer, the sovereignty of the United States is violated—by the resistance, and that of the State by the breach of peace and the assault.

How?—

The sovereignty of the United States Government is infracted in the resistance to its authority; but if an assault and battery or a murder be committed, then the sovereignty of the State is violated. There are two distinct offenses, one Federal and the other State, and that is the effect of this decision from which the gentleman quoted.

Now, I believe that when any crime is committed within a State, not specially defined to be Federal under the clear authority of the National Government, the State has and ought to exercise the jurisdiction and the exclusive jurisdiction of it. You see the point. You can elaborate it in your own minds more clearly than I can do.

The same idea is contained in the case of Fox v. The United States, in which Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court.

Any act committed with a view of evading the legislation of Congress, passed in the execution of any of its powers, or of fraudently securing the benefit of such legislation, may properly be made an offense against the United States.

I do not doubt that. Nobody doubts it. I am inclined to think, let me say in passing, that this bill has been so carefully formulated and the whole subject has been so exhaustively considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, who are good lawyers, and the language has been so carefully framed to meet a suppositious case, that it may be considered by the courts to be constitutional, and that it would be so held in the main. I am not assailing the constitutionality of the bill especially, but there are other features of it which I think ought to be assailed.

But an act committed within a State—whether for a good or a bad purpose, or whether with an honest or a criminal intent, can not be made an offense against the United States unless it has some relation to the execution of a power of Congress or of some matter within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Listen again—

Now, gentlemen may contend that the last clause qualifies the meaning of the whole, and that a murder committed even in a State might come within the purview of Federal authority, but I believe the very essence of the matter is in keeping with my conclusion. A crime committed within a State can not be an offense against the United States when dissociated from necessary Federal jurisdiction. Then if any offense involving personal violence, rape, robbery, burglary, or anything of the sort is committed in the State, it must necessarily, under its obligations to society and to good order, try and punish such offenses, and it has done so in the past. The severity of penalty is also within the power of the State to determine. Whether imprisonment for life is milder or less to be dreaded than capital punishment is a question upon which there is much disagreement. Each State must decide that on its own judgment and in its own way.

I again invite attention to what was said by Justice Field in the Fox case (and, by the way, I will have occasion to refer to him, indirectly at least, in commenting upon another decision). The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] referred also to the case in re Neagle.

I have practiced law in a small way for many years. I have tried to study as best I could the constitution of my own State and the Constitution of the United States and the respective jurisdictions and demarkations of the two governments, and I, as a lawyer and as a citizen, am sorry this decision was ever rendered. I do not believe it is sound, while I respect the judgment of the courts. We have that to do. They control and we must abide by their interpretations; but from my estimate it has never received the approbation of the professional mind nor met the requirements of jurisdictional propriety, so far as the respective powers of State and Federal governments are concerned, and right here I wish to bring to your notice a portion of the argument of the attorney-general of California in the Neagle case. Sometimes I find—I do not know whether it is your experience as lawyers—that the briefs of counsel are more satisfactory and convincing in their logic than the opinion of the court. I have read many a brief that I thought was sounder and stronger in legal wisdom and the philosophy of jurisprudence than the reasoning of the court. Our judges are selected from the great body of the profession, and have been trained in the same way as their brethren at the bar, I want to give you what Mr. Attorney-General Johnson said here, and he quotes the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. He says:

Our position is fully covered by the case of ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S., 651, 659, where the court says:

"It is very true that while Congress at an early day passed criminal laws to punish piracy with death and for punishing all ordinary offenses against person and property committed within the District of Columbia, and in forts, arsenals, and other places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, it was slow to pass laws—

Now, this is the Supreme Court he is quoting—

"it was slow to pass laws protecting officers of the Government from personal injuries inflicted while in discharge of their official duties within the States. This was not for want of power, but because no occasion had arisen which required such legislation, the remedies in the State courts for personal violence having proved sufficient."

And that is true to-day. The powers and provisions of the States in relation to personal violence have proved sufficient up to this good moment. Then why depart from them? Why infringe them? What is the necessity for it? The great State of New York promptly punished the assassin of President McKinley.

Perhaps the earliest attempt of Congress to protect Government officers while in the exercise of their duties in a hostile community grew out of the nullification ordinance of South Carolina and is found in the act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports. * * * When, early in the late civil war, the enforcement of the acts of Congress for obtaining soldiers by draft brought the officers engaged in it into hostile neighborhoods, it was found necessary to pass laws for their protection.

Which is a very different thing from what we are now considering.

Accordingly, in 1863, an act was passed making it a criminal offense to assault or obstruct any officer while engaged in making the draft or in any service in relation thereto.

Bear in mind, this is what the attorney-general of California said, and it is an argument that has never been met, and I do not think it can be successfully controverted.

We can not close our argument in this case without bringing up the subject of the police power, which is an inherent power with the States which they can not surrender or abdicate and which can not be taken away, although Congress may establish police regulations also; but their operations must be confined to the subjects over which it is given control by the Constitution of the United States. The whole domain of the criminal law comes under this power; and the common-law maxim, "sic utere tuo ut non alienum lædas," seems to express in a few words its extensive application. Whatever concerns the public order, the public morals, the public health, the public security and safety, and the right of any and every person to enjoy these immunities, comes under the general police power of the State. The offenses which Congress has the right to define and punish are only offenses against the authority of the United States. It can not assume any supervision of the police regulations of the States. All this is elementary learning.

There is a police regulation of the State of California defining the crime of murder and affixing the punishment, when committed within the territory of the State.

This is a matter of mere internal regulation, which can be best looked after and provided for in local districts, and to make it an exclusively national question or a concurrent one with the States would lead to constant attrition, inharmony, conflicts, and embroilments between the States and the National Government, which it was the express design of the Constitution to prevent.

The Constitution was formed to make a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, and promote the general welfare. Hence the judicial power of the United States is confined to cases arising under the Constitution of the United States, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, and to some special cases and controversies which have no bearing on the pending question.

Now, here is a case that occurred in the State of California: A deputy marshal shot down a man who, it was alleged, intended to make an assault upon Judge Field, one of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, taking as authority for his act not a statute of the Federal Government, but some sort of direction from the Attorney-General of the United States.

Whether it was a murder, either in the first or second degree, manslaughter, or any sort of culpable homicide, I will not now stop to inquire, but it was done within the State of California, and the defendant could have interposed a defense that what he did was under the sanction of authority from the Federal Government. It was competent to introduce that under a plea of not guilty in the courts of California. Here he was indicted for the crime of murder in the State of California. What would have been the result had the question been tried before a jury of his peers no man can tell. He might have been acquitted of murder in the first degree. It may not have been done with malice prepense and instigated by the devil, but it may have involved some lesser degree of unlawful homicide. He may have been guilty of manslaughter or murder in the second degree; we can not tell about that, and it will never be ascertained.

He was never tried by a jury of good and lawful men in California. He was taken by a writ of habeas corpus from the custody of the State and absolutely discharged by the Supreme Court of the United States. And yet if he had committed a crime it should have been inquired into by the State of California; if he had committed a crime he ought to have been finally tried for it; he ought to have been acquitted by a jury of his countrymen if he was innocent, and convicted if guilty; and the Supreme Court of the United States took him out of the power of the State of California and discharged him on a writ of habeas corpus. The solemn indictment of California's grand jury was disregarded and consigned to the wastebasket of worthless refuse.

It is a regrettable decision, to say the least; it is out of tune with the institutions of the country and incongruous with sound principles and time-honored procedure.

Neagle was never tried. No verdict was ever rendered in his case. I do not justify Terry. It may be that he ought to have been killed. Of course it was a distinguished man upon whom the assault was supposed to be intended, a brother associate of the high tribunal, the Supreme Court of the United States, that discharged the defendant. We are all human, and "mutual dependence and influence," it is said, "is the law of the universe." Two of the justices dissented from that decision, and I want to quote briefly from what Justice Lamar and Chief Justice Fuller said. I say again, this decision, in my humble judgment, will never be affirmed before the great bar of juridic thought, and it is gratifying that it did not go unchallenged in the court where it was rendered. It will never escape adverse criticism by the great body of the legal profession.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; of course.

Mr. JENKINS. Does the gentleman from Texas desire those listening to him to think that that is an authority one way or the other on the constitutional power of Congress?

Mr. LANHAM. The effect of it was, at all events, that the court took the defendant away from the State government.

Mr. JENKINS. But the power of Congress was not involved in that decision.

Mr. LANHAM. No; but the point I am making is that this man was indicted by the grand jury in the State of California, and he was discharged under habeas corpus. I am criticising this decision.

Mr. JENKINS. But the gentleman will allow me to say that when that decision was made I announced publicly in my town the very same conclusion that the gentleman from Texas has just stated here.

Mr. LANHAM. That shows how great minds run parallel. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS. I am appealing to you now whether you consider it an authority on the question of the power of Congress——

Mr. LANHAM. I am hardly going so far as to say that it is.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas and myself are in harmony on the legal aspect of the case.

Mr. KLEBERG. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me a suggestion, his position is that that was a judicial encroachment on the prerogative of the State and this is a legislative encroachment on the prerogative of a State.

Mr. LANHAM. Precisely. I thank my colleague.

Now, this is what Justice Lamar says, and he quotes Chief Justice Waite, and Attorney-General Johnson, of the State of California, quoted the same thing:

It is elementary learning that, if a person is in the custody of a State court of competent jurisdiction, not illegally asserted, he can not be taken from that jurisdiction and discharged on habeas corpus issued by a court of the United States simply because he is not guilty of the offense for which he is held. All questions which may arise in the orderly course of the proceeding against him are to be determined by the court to whose jurisdiction he has been subjected, and no other court is authorized to interfere to prevent it. Here the right of the prisoner to a discharge depends alone on the sufficiency of his defense to the information under which he is held. Whether his defense is sufficient or not is for the court which tries him to determine.

Here is a man who committed at least a homicide, whether justifiable or inexcusable the world, as I have intimated, will never know, because all the facts were never brought out; but he was turned loose, if I may reiterate, under the powerful writ of habeas corpus issued by the Supreme Court of the United States, and never held to answer before a jury in California.

Chief Justice Fuller said:

The killing of Terry was not by the authority of the United States, no matter by whom done. The only authority relied on for vindication must be that of the States, and the slayer should be remanded to the State courts to be tried.

That is legal wisdom; that is good sense, and that is the course that ought to have been pursued.

The question then recurs, Would it have been a crime against the United States? There can be but one answer. Murder is not an offense against the United States, except when committed on the high seas or in some port or harbor without the jurisdiction of the State or in the District of Columbia or in the Territories, or at any other place where the National Government has exclusive jurisdiction. It is well settled that such crime must be defined by statute; and no statute has been pointed out.

This old statute of 1790 is the one we have to-day—the one we have had during all these years. And we are now proposing to make a new statute, in the face of the fact that the fundamental idea of the fathers and of the jurists in the long ago, was that the State had jurisdiction of offenses perpetrated within its borders, and the Federal authority jurisdiction when the offense was committed within certain prescribed places.

But I need not dwell further upon this aspect of the case. What I am saying aims to be more suggestive and stimulative to investigation than otherwise. Your own broad minds will elaborate these propositions, and you will inquire of yourselves whether it is wise to make this new departure. We have had trials ancient and trials modern. Now, it is proposed by this bill to peculiarize and single out certain people and make it a specific offense to kill them, as if they were not embraced within the generic definition of murder which I have already quoted from the United States statutes. It is proposed to say that it is a special offense to kill an official, although it is a general offense already; that he must be put on a higher plane than the rest of mankind; that he differs from the common herd.

Gentlemen, I said a while ago that truth is truth forevermore. I want to invite your attention, just for the interest of the incident and by way of illustration, to one of the orations of Cicero, delivered away back yonder—before Christ—the oration in defense of Milo, who slew Clodius on the Appian Way. The parties were prominent Romans, belonging to rival factions, and there was so much excitement at the time that Pompey ordered a new form of trial. Cicero refers to it in his speech. He calls it a nova forma; and the reason he so describes it is because Milo was not tried by the acting prætor, as was usual in criminal cases, but by a special commission or extraordinary tribunal. Cicero refers to the strong guard which Pompey brought to the trial in order to prevent any violence. There were present also, history says, the gladiators of Clodius.

Now, in the trial of that case Cicero appeared as counsel; and he said some things that are applicable in my mind to the matter now under consideration. He went on to refer to the fact that distinguished Romans had been murdered previously, and there had been no nova forma or new method of trial; all had been tried in the same way. We have had Presidents murdered heretofore, and the murderers have been tried under the same law, whether in State courts or in Federal courts. Cicero, by way of protest against this new form of trial because of the great distinction of the man who had been killed, said what I am about to read. I ask gentlemen to listen. The reading may be a little tedious, but I surmise this is about the last speech I will ever have occasion to deliver in this House, and you must pardon the infliction. What I am about to read is ancient lore, but there is a vast deal of good philosophy in it. I could (if you would pardon the apparent egotism) translate from the original tongue; but I, fortunately and for the sake of accuracy, have here a translation—a sort of interlinear, I believe it is called:

M. Drusus, a man of the highest quality, the defender, and in those times almost the patron, of the Senate, uncle to that brave man M. Cato, now upon the bench and tribune of the people, was killed in his own house; and yet the people were not consulted upon his death, nor was any commission for a trial granted by the Senate on account of it. What deep distress is said to have spread over the whole city when P. Africanus was assassinated in the nighttime as he lay on his own bed! What breast did not then sigh, what heart was not pierced with grief, that a person on whom the wishes of all men would have conferred immortality, could wishes have done it, should be cut off by so early a fate?

So some of us felt over the death of our beloved President.

Was no decree made then for an inquiry in Africanus' death? None. And why?

The Latin is:

Quid ita? Quia non alio facinore clari homines, alio obscuri necantur.

And why? Because the crime is the same, when eminent men or lowly ones are slain. Grant that there is a difference as to the dignity of their lives, yet their deaths, when they are the effect of villainy, are judged by the same laws and attended by the same punishments unless if it be a more heinous parricide for a man to kill his father, if he be of consular dignity than if he were in a private station, or the guilt of Clodius' death be aggravated by his being killed amongst the monuments of his ancestors.

Would it be any worse, would it be any more of a parricide, for a son of the President to so far forget himself in his filial affection and duty as to assassinate his own sire, would it be any worse for him to do that than for your son or my son to assassinate one of us? The crime is the same, whether the person murdered be illustrious or obscure. We have no distinction as to patrician or plebeian in the United States of America.

Was any law passed at that time? Was any extraordinary commission granted? And yet, if any circumstance, if any person at any juncture, ever merited such a distinction, it was certainly upon this occasion.

How often, my lords, have I myself escaped the threatening dagger and bloody hands of Clodius, from which, if neither my own good fortune nor that of the Republic had preserved me, who would ever have procured an extraordinary trial upon my death?

This magnificent heathen orator said these things before the Christian era.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Was not the argument of Cicero in the Milo case rather against ex post facto than that to which the gentleman has addressed himself?

Mr. LANHAM. It was in part against this new form of trial. They had had a custom of trying criminals before a certain tribunal for many years.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Was not his argument directed against new provisions in the ex post facto laws in the Milo case?

Mr. LANHAM. Possibly this part of it may have been, but there were extraordinary conditions surrounding this trial. The soldiers of Pompey, as stated, were there, as were the gladiators of Clodius, and it was different from the form and circumstance of trial previously observed in the Roman Government. But independent of all that, and I do not care how that may be, the point I wish to emphasize is whether a human life in one case is any better than a human life in another. I say in this country of ours the great basal principle upon which society is organized and government rests is equality before the law. One good man is as good as another.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. I wanted to draw this distinction: Would not the doctrines of Cicero apply very strongly to the legislature of a State, if they undertook to distinguish between any citizens of the State——

Mr. LANHAM. If it would apply to the legislature of a State, I do not see why it would not apply to the legislation of Congress.

Mr. JENKINS. We are talking about the exercise of power by Congress, and inasmuch as we are limited to certain individuals, we can not extend it to all of the people of the country; hence we are limited to certain persons named in the Constitution. We are not drawing any distinctive lines as far as personages are concerned.

Mr. LANHAM. We are making a specific offense, peculiarizing certain men who, if they should be murdered, the crime would already come within the prohibition of murder.

Mr. JENKINS. Simply because of the limitations on the power of Congress, is it not?

Mr. LANHAM. That is what the gentlemen argued who prepared this bill, and the reason they assign for authority to propose a measure of this sort.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman knows I did not assist in the preparation of that bill. Like the gentleman from Texas, I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. I am very glad to hear that, and I hope the gentleman will help me defeat certain sections of it. But let me repeat and tell you, Republicans and Democrats alike, this is not a partisan question. You ought to defeat part of this bill. There is part of it that ought to be passed, but some of it ought to be defeated. It is unnecessary, it is unwise legislation; it is out of tune with our institutions; it is un-American; it is un-Republican; it is un-Democratic.

Now, I want to run a little over some of the histories of these trials for assaults upon Presidents. I hold in my hands a sort of brochure, something the rest of you may not have seen. It is the report of a trial that occurred away back in 1835; the trial of a man named Lawrence, for an assault upon the life of President Andrew Jackson. I found it down in the Supreme Court library, and it is a very interesting little document. I will read the facts.

On Saturday, the 30th of January, both Houses of Congress were convened, not to fulfill any legislative duty, but to solemnize, in the customary manner, the obsequies of Hon. W. R. Davis, a member from South Carolina. The President of the United States and the heads of departments were, as is customary, present on the occasion. After a very impressive discourse had been delivered by the Chaplain of the House of Representatives, the funeral procession (in which was the President leaning upon the arm of Mr. Secretary Woodbury), left the Hall, and had mainly passed through the Rotunda on to the eastern portico of the Capitol, when Lawrence no sooner perceived the Chief Magistrate approach than he immediately attempted to take his life.

This happened right here beneath the Dome of this Capitol, in this building. That is the first assault on a President of the United States of which we have any record, except a mild assault made also on President Jackson by one Lieutenant Randolph. Well, Lawrence was brought up for trial, and for the prosecution there appeared F. S. Key, esq., district attorney. They had a jury of 12 men whose names are given here, and the prosecuting attorney in submitting the case went on to make this statement, which was good philosophy in 1835, just as it was in the days of Cicero, and just as it is to-day. He said:

The station or office of the object of this crime was to be left entirely out of the question, and it was to be considered in the same light as though committed on the most humble person in the country. The framers of our Constitution had not thought it necessary to surround the Chief Magistrate with any additional protection other than those laws which were deemed sufficient for the citizen holding the most obscure station or office. The love of order and of justice had heretofore been found, and he hoped would continue to be found sufficient for this purpose.

That is the way the prosecuting attorney talked. Lawrence was being tried for an assault upon the life of the President. Testimony was introduced. The jury finally retired and considered of their verdict, and in about five minutes they brought in this verdict: "We find him not guilty, he having been under the influence of insanity at the time he committed the act."

That was under Federal law. That was under the old statute; and this man was tried and was acquitted on the ground stated in the verdict. Gentlemen, you talk about laws such as you are proposing to enact here being a deterrent against the commission of such crimes! Do you suppose that any laws, general or particular, would have prevented that insane man, who imagined himself a king and who thought President Jackson was interfering with his rights—do you suppose any statute would have prevented him from making the assault on President Jackson? Or if there had been a regiment of infantry or a battery of artillery down here at the Sixth street depot, do you suppose that it would have prevented Guiteau from killing President Garfield?

If you had had all the statutes you could imagine, peculiarizing and selecting out particular individuals, Presidents and so on, do you suppose that would have interferred with the malicious purpose of Guiteau? Not for a moment, any more than it would in the case of Lawrence. Do you suppose that if we had had the royal retinue that is proposed in the Senate bill—and right here I want to say that if I had to support either one of these bills I would take the House bill in preference to the Senate bill—do you suppose that Guiteau would have refrained from assaulting President Garfield? In the House bill we have not provided the pretorian guard that they have created in the Senate bill. All these provisions might have been in force, and all the military, subject to the order of the Commander in Chief of the Army, might have been at Buffalo, N. Y., and it would not have stayed the hand of Czolgosz for one moment. You can not stop these wild workings of men of that sort, these fanatical impulses to kill a president or a king or a ruler, by the enactment of such legislation as is here proposed. You can not stop things of that kind merely by a statute or by peculiar statutes. Of course, if you could detect them in time you might prevent them, but the mere passing of criminal laws is not going to prevent it. You might have had as many statutesas you can imagine and it would not have prevented the attempt upon the life of President Jackson, nor would it have prevented the consummated and fatal assaults upon Presidents Garfield and McKinley.

So, then, this is a useless proposition, and whenever legislators do something that is unnecessary and useless they are doing something that is almost inevitably dangerous.

Booth was shot. That was right after the war. In all human probability he had a disordered brain. Vengeance cried out, and he was shot to death. Vengeance did not stop there, but I deliberately believe that under the finding of a military commission an innocent woman was executed for what she never did and that she was in no way responsible in the assassination of President Lincoln. No man will ever kill or attempt to kill the President of the United States, whether within a State or in territory under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, who will escape condign punishment. You need not feel a bit uneasy about that. Punishment is sure to follow. Retributive justice will be prompt, I do not care under what jurisdiction.

Hence I insist that this bill is an unnecessary departure from the settled order. It is not in accord with our institutions; it is against the generally accepted principles of criminal jurisprudence and clearly differentiated jurisdiction. It is unnecessary, it is unwise, and if passed I honestly believe that it will subject the President of the United States and others in whose behalf it is offered to greater dangers than he or they would incur if it were not passed. Why, these creatures of distempered minds, these cranks, these moral perverts, these people who want to pose as martyrs, like the idea of killing a king or a ruler; they think it brings them into notoriety. You remember how Czolgosz wanted to read the newspapers after he was put in prison. Surround our public officials with anything like royalty and you magnify the incentive of the anarchist to destroy them.

Another thing, gentlemen, if a man commits a crime you can not do anything more than to inflict the full penalty of the law. When they hanged Guiteau under Federal law they could not hang him any more. When they electrocuted Czolgosz under State law they could not electrocute him any more. They have met their fate, as will be the case anywhere, whenever such an offense is committed.

Now, so much in a general way, and I hope I may have been able to say something that will at least cause you to "stop and think before you further go." So far as I am concerned, if you would eliminate the criminal features of this bill down to section 10, and strike out section 13, I would be willing to support it. I am in favor of a law that will prevent the immigration to our country and the naturalization in our midst of these propagandists of anarchy. I do not want them here. They are not in sympathy with our country and its institutions. They are a noxious, foreign growth. We do not need them, whether they be classed as speculative or criminal. They are all undesirable. So much of the bill as proposes to do that I will support.

Mr. JENKINS. Is my friend speaking of the Senate bill or the House bill?

Mr. LANHAM. I am speaking of the House bill. But here is a paragraph in this bill, section 10, to which I wish to direct your special attention:

> That this act shall apply to all offenses hereinbefore specified when committed within any State or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

This accentuates the new departure I have described, the effect of which is to reverse the doctrine and settled policy of more than a century and go out into a new field. It is to invade, "to take away and impair" the jurisdiction of the States, and if you can do so in one instance, why not in another? This bill goes on to say:

> That any person who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kills any ambassador or minister of a foreign state or country accredited to the United States, and being therein, and while engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of any of his official acts or omissions, shall suffer death.

Why does it not go all along down the line? Why does it specify the President, the Vice-President, members of the Cabinet, and the ambassadors? Why not embrace the Speaker of the House of Representatives? I regard the Speaker of the House as a more important officer than the Vice-President of the United States. He has more to do with the legislation of the country than the Vice-President. He is a potential factor, let me tell you. He represents the sovereignty of the House. "He can open and no man can shut, and he can shut and no man can open," so far as legislative precedence and procedure are concerned in this House of Representatives, but an ambassador or foreign minister is of greater significance and better than the Speaker! I have been looking in a casual way over the list of these men from abroad coming to this country who are to be singled out, that are more important than our citizens, better than you and me. Suppose you, my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], should say something on the floor of this House that some crank in the gallery did not like, and you should be over in Maryland or somewhere else, and he found you and killed you. There would be no special offense; you are not peculiarized and preferred. Suppose that my friend from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], who does me the honor to hear me, and I am glad of it and thank him for it; he is a smart man and loves to hear a smart man talk. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The latter point I assent to.

Mr. LANHAM (continuing). Suppose some crank were to shoot you for something you uttered on the floor of this House. There are three hundred and fifty-odd of us, but we represent a portion of the legislative sovereignty of this Government; we are "to the manner born" and speak for our own people, and you are at least a segment of the aggregate body; and if we are to treat all alike, there ought to be some special provision, if occasion should arise, to punish your murderer as well as that of Señor Don Martín García Mérou, from the Argentine Republic; Mr. Ladislaus Hengelmüller von Hengervár, from Austria-Hungary, and others.

Now, I have no doubt these men are good men, but "of all our mother's children we love ourselves the best." I love my countrymen better than I love foreigners. Why single out Señor Don Fernando E. Guachalla, from Bolivia, and Mr. Chékib Bey, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from Turkey? It would be an unspeakable offense to kill Chékib Bey or any other foreign diplomat. But if a man were to kill him anywhere in this country he would be promptly punished, as the general statutes now made and provided require. We had a minister from Spain, whose name I do not now recollect, about the time when the Hispaño-American war broke out, who said something that was very derogatory to the President of the United States. What peculiar sanctity should have surrounded him? Now we have the Duke de Arcos, and I have no doubt he is a very good representative and very different from his predecessor. If somebody should kill him, it would be a special offense. You are discriminating in favor of these foreigners. They are all doubtless worthy men and suitable agents of their respective countries, but when we make them equal to ourselves under the protection of the law we have done all they should expect. You say that you are acting in keeping with the comity of nations and respecting the sovereignty of these foreign countries in the persons of their accredited representatives.

You do this in order to specially protect these men, but you do not propose particularly to protect my friends from Missouri or Maine, nor do you do anything extraordinary to protect the Supreme Court, the biggest tribunal in the world, a great coordinate department of the Government by whom our laws are construed. You and I may pass a bill here, the Senate may concur, the President approve, but when it goes before that august tribunal they can say it is not worth the parchment upon which it is written. The Supreme Court, collectively and individually, in their personal and general powers, can do important things, and yet you leave them out. Can you not make it a special offense to kill one of them? And why not go all the way up and down the line when you start on this unusual course?

Mr. BELLAMY. May I ask the gentleman from Texas a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. Have you investigated so as to know whether or not in the English, the French, or the Turkish law there is any distinction made between the case of the murder of an ambassador or any other citizens of those countries?

Mr. LANHAM. I have not. I do not imagine there is in the manner it is proposed to be done here.

Mr. JENKINS. My friend from Texas supported this bill in the committee when it was under consideration, did you not?

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, no. I supported so much of it as I have indicated. Why, do you not know that my minority views are printed with yours?

Mr. JENKINS. But on the ground that the gentleman from Texas has been discussing here this afternoon?

Mr. LANHAM. I said I opposed it on various grounds. I have just elaborated some of the reasons on which I opposed it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman is substantially elaborating the views that he has expressed at various times when the bill was under consideration in the committee. He did not go as much into detail, but his speech is an elaboration of the views he expressed in the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Why, my friend from Wisconsin must know about that.

Mr. JENKINS. I understood my friend from Texas was in favor of protecting everybody, whether they lived in the United States or outside.

Mr. LANHAM. Why, I contended that they are protected by the general statute against murder. So far as I spoke I said that I was opposed to any law of this kind, and still adhere to that opinion.

Now, gentlemen, if we are going to commence this matter, let us run the whole gamut. Let us include the judiciary of the United States and go on down. Let us designate others of our officiary and say they are better than the multitude. I want you to tell us why there should be any specialization of this kind in this Government. A man elected to an office is the agent of the people. The people are lord and he is servant, and "the servant can not be greater than his lord." May we always be delivered from arrogant officialism.

Mr. KLUTTZ. "He that is greatest among you, let him be the servant of all."

Mr. LANHAM. As the gentleman from North Carolina suggests, "He that is greatest among you, let him be the servant of all." I am much obliged to him for the thought. It is entirely in agreement with the views I entertain. Gentlemen, my fellow-members of Congress, I conjure you to be careful how you initiate, and reflect upon the consequences that must follow legislation of this kind. It is not wise; it will do no good; it will work evil. If I were President of the United States—and I never shall be, of course; I can not hope for that, but some of you whose lines have been cast in more auspicious places may—but if I were President of the United States to-day I would rather not have this sort of a statute on the books.

I should feel that it would be a standing invitation to some crank to slay me wherever he might find me, and I am inclined to think that the "strenuous man" you now have in the White House would be in greater danger if this bill should become a law than he now has the slightest occasion to apprehend. He is a man, but you in effect presume in this bill that he can do no wrong. You presume that nobody mentioned here can do any wrong. I do not believe in that doctrine in this American country. I believe that public officials can do wrong. I have the highest respect for an honest officer of this Government, I do not care under what Administration he may serve, but office will never exempt him from liability to do wrong. Even the President of the United States can do wrong, and I believe he is better than a king, who in monarchies is regarded as perfection personified. Away with the idea of immunity from doing wrong, even in the case of the President.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the gentleman will excuse me, is he quite sure that the bill is open to that inference?

Mr. LANHAM. I think it is, in some degree at least, because it says toward the last of it that he shall be presumed to be in the performance of his official duties all the time; and if that be so, it makes him absolutely right all the time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman's suggestion was that they could do no wrong. I thought he was drawing it a little mite strong.

Mr. LANHAM. The idea with me is that officers are human, with like passions as ourselves; they are liable to do wrong and "as prone to do evil as the sparks are to fly upward;" and when they "would do good, evil is continually before them," and even the President of the United States is, humanly and impersonally speaking, but "a worm of the dust." That is all. This idea of elevating one part of humanity and depreciating another part or all the rest in this popular Government I do not believe in, nor can I ever subscribe to it in any measure.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. I suppose the gentleman knows, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, that the people of Texas have appealed to the Judiciary Committee to protect the life of the next governor of Texas [laughter] and have asked the Judiciary Committee not to confine this to the President of the United States.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not know who is going to be the next governor of that great State, but I trust he may have a warm place in the hearts of his countrymen; and if that be the case, and he shall do his duty, he will have all the protection his predecessors have had and all that he will be entitled to receive. Whoever he may be he will never be a better man nor freer from guile than are multipled thousands of his people.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from Texas can not expect to be President until Mr. Roosevelt has served out two or three terms, and then we will take him up. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANHAM. I do not believe that because a man is President, or an officer of any rank, it makes him exempt from the common frailties of men. I believe he is liable to sin, and will be as long as he "is of the earth, earthy." We shall never "behold the perfect man nor mark the wholly upright." Now, I want to invite the attention of my friend from New York to the last section in this bill, which was added after the Senate bill came to the House:

SEC. 13. That in all prosecutions under the provisions of the first seven sections of this act it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the President of the United States, or Vice-President of the United States, or other officer of the United States entitled by law to succeed to the Presidency, as the case may be, was, at the time of the commission of the alleged offense, engaged in the performance of his official duties. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission or declaration that there is a time when either of such officers, during the tenure of his office, is not engaged in the performance of his official duties.

This I regard as a serious and dangerous innovation upon the rules of evidence and the presumptions indulged in criminal cases. The burden of proof has always been upon the prosecution to establish every material fact necessary to be proved, beyond a reasonable doubt.

So far as the Vice-President is concerned the presumption stated is certainly a violent one, and I believe it is so far as the others are concerned, and I think I can prove it by the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY]. He says, in the majority report:

So, should such a thing occur, if the President is engaged in a personal quarrel as to some private matter, while that act is not an official act, he is still in and about the performance of his official duties as President. As to the Vice-President and members of the Cabinet no such claim can be made. The Vice-President can not act until Congress meets. His constitutional duty is to preside over the Senate.

Again he says:

The General Government is always active, its laws are always in operation, and hence the President, who is charged with the duty of seeing that those laws are faithfully executed, is always on duty and always in and about the discharge of his official duties. In case of the Vice-President no such rule applies. His only official duties are to preside over the Senate, and hence he can not be engaged in the performance of his official duties until the Senate assembles pursuant to law. But should some person kill him because he is such officer, or because of some ruling made by him when acting as such presiding officer, the purpose would be to destroy an agency of the Government and prevent its acting, and hence the Government would be purposely as well as actually impeded or resisted.

I do hope that those who favor the bill will be at least willing to eliminate this last proposition from it. I do hope that this House may confine the bill to those purposes which are designed to prevent the immigration of anarchists to our country, and the dissemination of their pernicious doctrines here. If you do that you will do a wise thing; but, gentlemen, you will do, in my deliberate judgment, a thing that ought not to be done when you change the settled practice and statutes of more than a century, as you will do if you enact the first nine sections of this bill, as well as the thirteenth. Now, I have not said all that I would like to say, nor all that ought to be said in opposition to this bill. It is full of objections and dangers which, I trust, will be thoroughly advertised during the discussion.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. Suppose one of these selected few should make an assault upon some person in the discharge of his duty, and it became necessary to kill him. Say, for instance, some member of the House, in defending himself, should kill one of these gentlemen selected by this bill, to save his own life, what chance has he got?

Mr. LANHAM. A very poor one, I think. Under this bill an unlawful killing, even if it were manslaughter, would be punished as a capital offense.

Mr. NEVINS. It would not be unlawful killing if it were done in self-defense.

Mr. LANHAM. But it would be punishable by death, even if it were manslaughter and done without cool reflection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman will allow me to say that the very definition in the bill provides that the killing must be unlawful. That is one of the essentials of the offense.

Mr. LANHAM. Manslaughter is unlawful killing.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But if the killing is not unlawful no offense would be committed.

Mr. LANHAM. I concede that; but, according to the bill, the man who did the killing would be punishable by death in a case of manslaughter, notwithstanding the provocation.

Mr. Chairman, the bill is unfair in its operation; it is in violation of the fundamental tenets of criminal law, and in my judgment would, if finally adopted, be extremely dangerous to the country. I believe, as I have already stated, it is against the distinctive policies, principles, and genius of our institutions. I hope it may not pass.

Now, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen, you have listened to me most courteously and kindly. I thank you very much for your unflagging attention. I wish I had been prepared to deliver to you a more interesting speech. I have spoken without notes, and ask indulgence for the many imperfections I have exhibited. I hope I have made some suggestions that may awaken thought and research upon this question. I know that in my opposition to this bill I am actuated by conscientious motives, and not by any partisan feeling. Let me say in conclusion, with the utmost earnestness, that I love the rights of the States. I believe with Mr. Jefferson when he said:

> I am sensible of the inroads daily making by the Federal into the jurisdiction of its coordinate associates, the State governments. * * * The judiciary branch is that instrument, which, working like gravity, without intermission, is to press us at last into one consolidated mass. * * * If Congress fails to shield the States from dangers so palpable and so imminent, the States must shield themselves and meet the invader foot to foot.

He said further:

> The support of the State governments in all their rights is the surest bulwark against antirepublican tendencies.

Let us preserve all the jurisdiction and all the authority and all the autonomy that the fathers intended the States should retain forever. Let them continue to be the judges and the triers of offenses committed in violation of their laws within their own territory. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

Mr. JENKINS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and at the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on the first Monday in June in each year.

Be it enacted, etc., That the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States is hereby authorized and required to hold one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and is hereby authorized and required to hold one term of said court annually in the city of St. Paul and State of Minnesota on the first Monday in June of each year.

SEC. 2. That all appeals, writs of error, and other appellate proceedings which may be taken or prosecuted from the circuit or district courts of the United States in the States of Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming, and the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico, to the court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit shall be heard and disposed of by the said court of appeals at the term thereof hereinbefore provided for so to be held either at the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or at the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, except that any case arising from said States and Territory may, by consent of all the parties thereto, be heard and decided at a term of said court other than the one to be held in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not operate to prevent the said court from holding other terms in the aforesaid places or in such other places in the said eighth judicial circuit as said court may from time to time designate.

SEC. 4. That chapter 517 of 26 United States Statutes at Large is hereby amended in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out of the title the word "June" and insert in lieu thereof the word "May;" and Strike out the word "June" in line 10 on the first page of said bill and insert in lieu thereof the word "May;" so as to have the bill provide that the term of said court to be held in the city of St. Paul shall be held on the first Monday in May in each year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has the bill been reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. WARNER. It has. It is a Senate bill, which has been favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does it affect only the court of appeals of the one circuit named?

Mr. WARNER. That is all. It simply provides that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit shall be held in two additional places.

Mr. JENKINS. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The first amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment reported by the committee to the title will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. WARNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALAFIA, MANATEE AND GULF COAST RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1992) granting the right of way to the Alafia, Manatee and Gulf Coast Railway Company through the United States light-house and military reservations on Gasparilla Islands, in the State of Florida, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Alafia, Manatee and Gulf Coast Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Florida, is hereby granted the right of way, 100 feet in width, through the reservations lying on Gasparilla Island, in the State of Florida, known as the light-house and military reservations.

SEC. 2. That the line and location of the right of way to the said the Alafia, Manatee and Gulf Coast Railway Company through the light-house and military reservations lying on Gasparilla Island, in the State of Florida, shall be subject to the approval and under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury and Secretary of War: Provided, That the said railway company, on notification by the Secretaries of the Treasury and War, shall, within a reasonable time thereafter, construct, maintain, and operate, at its own expense, a spur, track, or tracks, to enter into and be located at such place or places within the present limits of the light-house inclosure on said reservation, and also on the military reservation, as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War, respectively: And provided further, That the Secretaries of the Treasury and War be, and are hereby, authorized to allow the use by the said company, in the accommodation of its general traffic and the maintenance of a coaling station and for terminal facilities, of so much of the land and water front of said reservation lying at a point on the eastern shore of Gasparilla Island, Charlotte Harbor, distant about 1,000 feet in a northeasterly direction from Gasparilla Island light and about 400 feet in a northerly direction from the State quarantine dock, as in their judgment will not be required for light-house or army purposes, and as will not be a hindrance to the public defense nor prejudicial to the health of those residing on the Government reservation, the value of the use of the land to be appraised by a board of officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the right of way and other privileges granted in this section shall be subject to the regulation and control of the said Secretaries, and shall be inoperative, null, and void unless the said railway company shall complete the construction of and have in use its tracks within five years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Secretaries of the Treasury and War, at any time they shall deem it necessary for the public good, may cause to be removed or destroyed all or any of the tracks, embankments, or other structures hereby permitted on the light-house and military reservations on Gasparilla Island, Fla., without liability for damages; and the said company shall not erect or allow the use of any residences on said reservation, nor shall it erect structures of any kind thereon except such as the Secretaries of the Treasury and War shall approve; and all approvals required in this act shall be in writing.

SEC. 4. That Congress expressly reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, in whole or in part, without any liability on the part of the United States for any damages or losses sustained by said company.

SEC. 5. That the right of trackage over said railway, with proper terminal facilities, is hereby given to any other railroad desiring to use the same, upon such terms for trackage and terminal facilities as may be agreed upon by the Alafia, Manatee and Gulf Coast Railway Company and such other company or companies as may desire to use the same; and if they can not agree, then such terms shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk has read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPARKMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FOG-SIGNAL STATION IN THE PATAPSCO RIVER.

Mr. WACHTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12085) providing for the completion of a light and fog-signal station in the Patapsco River, Maryland, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas an original appropriation of $60,000 was made by the Congress of the United States by the act of August 18, 1894, for the building of a light and fog-signal station in the Patapsco River, Maryland; and

Whereas owing to the muddy and sandy bottom in said river the cost of construction and building said light and fog-signal station is greatly increased, as per Light-House Report, fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, section 649, page 108: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the completion of a light and fog-signal station in the Patapsco River, Maryland, originally provided for by the act of Congress of August 18, 1894, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed: Provided, That the additional cost for its construction shall not exceed the sum of $60,000.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the preamble.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk has read. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, at a former day of this session this bill was presented and unanimous consent asked for its consideration. I then objected to its consideration. I did so because the bill carries an appropriation of about $60,000 for some local work over near Baltimore. I did not think that it was a bill for the passage of which unanimous consent should be given. I objected to its consideration. As I understand it, the bill now appropriates $60,000 for a work for which $60,000 has been heretofore appropriated, so that the whole cost will be $120,000. I say I objected at that time. I have since, upon examination, found that I can see no personal or real objection to this bill. It was only the method and manner of passing legislation of that kind. I therefore stated to the gentleman who introduced it that I would no longer object.

The responsibility for such bills is largely upon the majority on the other side of the House in any event. Therefore I have no objection to the measure, and I withdraw the objection that I formerly made. I think it is right and proper for me, however, to make this statement now to the House, so that any other gentleman can do anything in connection with it that he may desire.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WACHTER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DAM AND POWER STATION AT MUSCLE SHOALS, ALABAMA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14051) granting to N. F. Thompson and associates the right to erect a dam and construct power station at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, which I will ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to N. F. Thompson, J. W. Johnson, J. E. Thompson, and Scott Dibert, for themselves, associates, or assigns, to construct a dam or dams in the Tennessee River at such points as they may elect, between the western line of section 6, township 3, range 9, in Colbert County, Ala., and the mouth of Town Creek, in northeastern portion of said county and township, along the southern bank of said river, for the purpose of erecting and operating power stations, and to maintain inlet and outlet races or canals and to make such other improvements as may be necessary for the development of water power and transmission of the same: Provided, That the constructions hereby authorized do not in any way interfere with the Muscle Shoals Canal or with navigation of said river: Provided further, That until the plans and location of the work herein authorized, so far as they affect the interests of navigation, have been approved by the Secretary of War, the improvements shall not be commenced or built, and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to fix reasonable charges for use of said power.

SEC. 2. That unless the work herein authorized shall be commenced within one year and completed within three years from date hereof the privileges hereby granted shall cease and determine.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or to repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "in Colbert County, Ala."

In line 9 strike out the word "northeastern" and insert in lieu thereof the word "northern," and the word "said" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Lawrence."

In line 10 strike out the words "and township" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alabama."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to N. F. Thompson and associates to erect a dam and construct power station at Muscle Shoals, Alabama."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk has just read. Is there objection?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if this dam crosses the stream entirely?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Well, no; it does not interfere with the fisheries; the fisheries have nothing in the world to do with the bill. It is an electric power to be placed there to communicate with certain cities round about.

Mr. LACEY. At the present dam?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes. There is no objection to it; it does not interfere with the question of the fisheries.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to inquire if any arrangement has been made fixing the price the Government is to get for erecting the dam there for a private enterprise?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No, sir; no arrangement has been made about that, but there is an application now pending before the Secretary of War in a written communication that I have addressed to him upon the subject of just such a power as is there now, to arrange and fix a rate.

Mr. STEELE. I did not know what was proposed in the way of charges to be fixed, how they were to be fixed. Now, the Government has been at a great expense to erect a dam and no individual should monopolize that power. I do not know whether it is here in this bill or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. There is no one more interested in preventing them from doing that than I am myself, as to appropriations that the Government has made there in reference to Muscle Shoals and Talbot Shoals. This power that is now being granted does not interfere with that.

Mr. STEELE. Has there been any other right similar to this granted to any other corporation?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes; there is another one, and that is now pending, as I say, before the Secretary of War, as to what rental shall be required.

Mr. STEELE. But a rental may be fixed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Shall be fixed. It provides it shall be fixed.

We look upon that as being rather of a nominal character more than anything else; yet the Secretary of War is directed to state what amount of rental shall be required annually.

Mr. STEELE. Why should it be nominal?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Because the Government has got nothing there to sell.

Mr. STEELE. It has got that great dam that it has constructed there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no dam there at all. The Government has a canal around these falls, but there is no Government dam there.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. There is no dam, and it does not interfere in any way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the amendment to the title was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL AT SEMIAHMOO HARBOR, WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 259) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at Semiahmoo Harbor, Gulf of Georgia, Puget Sound, State of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house and fog-signal station be established in Semiahmoo Harbor, Gulf of Georgia, Puget Sound, State of Washington, together with suitable buildings, under the direction of the Light-House Board; and that the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated therefor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has this bill been considered by a committee of the House? I see it is a Senate bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes, it has been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The committee first reported the House bill, and then this bill was referred to the committee, and unanimously reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, the corresponding House bill (H. R. 224) was ordered to lie upon the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11535. An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER also, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

H. R. 357. An act for the relief of Levi Maxted;

H. R. 7319. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances H. Anthony;

H. R. 2901. An act to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams;

H. R. 8752. An act authorizing the board of supervisors of Santa Cruz County, Ariz., to issue bonds for the erection of a court-house and jail for said county;

H. R. 13359. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14018. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.

SENATE RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and Senate concurrent resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as follows:

S. R. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Senate concurrent resolution 48:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the Reports on the Law of Civil Government under Military Occupation, submitted to the Secretary of War by Charles E. Magoon, law officer, Division of Insular Affairs, War Department, of which 1,400 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,800 for the House of Representatives, and 800 for the War Department—to the Committee on Printing.

GRANT OF LANDS TO STATE OF IDAHO.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3800) to grant certain lands to the State of Idaho.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That lots 7 and 8 in section 21, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and lots 9 and 10 in section 22, all in township 9 south, range 38 east, base meridian, in the State of Idaho, are hereby ceded, granted, relinquished, and conveyed unto the said State of Idaho, to be held by said State for public use under such regulations as said State may prescribe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. Let us know what these lands are.

Mr. GLENN. This bill is simply to give the hot springs at Lava to the State of Idaho, to prevent them going into the hands of private parties. The reservation will be open to entry on the 17th of this month, and we want to reserve these springs to the State rather than have them go into the hands of private individuals.

Mr. STEELE. How many acres?

Mr. GLENN. One hundred and sixty acres, just the quarter section on which the springs are located.

Mr. STEELE. Is there any Government building there?

Mr. GLENN. No, sir; the State will have to build reservoirs or pools, and also buildings to accommodate the public.

Mr. STEELE. Is the bill unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. GLENN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLENN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RETURN OF BILLS TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House resolutions of the Senate requesting the return to the Senate of the bills (S. 22) for the relief of Ezra S. Havens, (S. 21) for the relief of John S. Neet, jr., and (S. 20) for the relief of Joseph W. Carmack.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these several requests will be complied with.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14781) providing for the payment of accrued and unused leave of absence of certain employees in the Census Bureau, and the same was referred to the Select Committee on the Census.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HEATWOLE obtained leave of absence for two weeks, on account of sickness.

THOMAS ALLEN.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. LESSLER, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Thomas Allen, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. JENKINS (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report on the adjustment of the Osage traders' claims—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14780) authorizing the Newport Bridge, Belt and Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across White River in Arkansas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2334); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DALZELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2848) for the establishment of a subport of entry at Naco, Ariz., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2341); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6968) for the relief of Cappie King, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2310); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9016) granting an increase of pension to Jane Brosnan, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2311); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14784) granting a pension to Johniken L. Mynatt, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2312); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14701) granting a pension to Mary A. Peters, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2313); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6970) for the relief of Monora Stimson, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2314); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4170) granting an increase of pension to Henry P. Macloon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2315); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14478) granting an increase of pension to Luman Fuller, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2316); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14416) granting an increase of pension to Albert H. Phillips, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2317); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13948) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Grainger, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2318); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13463) granting an increase of pension to Hiram A. Hober, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2319); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13367) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan A. Walbert, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2320); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13373) granting an increase of pension to Amos W. Marsh, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2321); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6656) granting a pension to Samantha Cox, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2322); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3982) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Carpenter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2323); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14377) granting a pension to Josephine Stewart, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2324); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9807) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Janes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2325); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6031) granting a pension to Adell Augusta Steward, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2326); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1132) granting an increase of pension to R. Sherman Langworthy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2327); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2375) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Ridinger, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2328); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2051) granting an increase of pension to Henry W. Tryon, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2329); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 7) granting an increase of pension to William H. Thomas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2330); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CROWLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2653) granting an increase of pension to Joshua Weaver, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2331); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5924) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Young, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2332); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1308) for the relief of Mrs. Julia L. Hall, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2333); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8663) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Woodford and grant him an honorable discharge, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2335); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11019) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to bestow medals upon First Lieut. David H. Jarvis, Second Lieut. Ellsworth P. Bertholf, and Samuel J. Call, surgeon, all of the Revenue-Cutter Service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2336); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CAPRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1115) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2339); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14770) for the relief of James S. Harber, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2340); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk, and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2899) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Martin Barley, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 2337); which said bill and report were ordered to lie on the table.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10751) for the relief of George Richardson, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 2338); which said bill and report were ordered to lie on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8944) for the relief of Daniel J. Ockerson—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 14806) granting an increase of pension to Mary Clayton—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10988) granting a pension to Howard M. Stiles—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14807) granting an increase of pension to Josephine White—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14808) granting an increase of pension to Emile Breaux—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14809) granting an increase of pension to Marie A. Dargle—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14810) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Broussard—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. CLARK: A bill (H. R. 14838) declaring a certain portion of the Maramec River to be an unnavigable stream—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WILEY: A bill (H. R. 14839) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on the first Monday in September in each year—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOODS: A bill (H. R. 14840) to amend sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, as the same is amended by an act approved March 3, 1887, as amended by an act approved August 13, 1888—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BALL of Texas: A bill (H. R. 14841) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the coming into, and to regulate the residence within, the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent," approved April 29, 1902—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 14893) to appropriate $2,500 to erect a soldiers' monument at Emuckfaw, Tallapoosa County, Ala.—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 14894) to provide a seal for United States commissioners—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14895) amending section 21 of an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, approved May 28, 1896—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 198) giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the Thirty-sixth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in the District of Columbia in the month of October, 1902, and for other purposes incident to said encampment—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HULL: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 199) authorizing the President of the United States to cause medals to be struck and presented to officers and soldiers and others who served in the Spanish war, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NAPHEN: A resolution (H. Res. 286) requesting the Secretary of State to furnish the House with a list of American citizens now detained as prisoners of war by the British authorities—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as, follows:

By Mr. ADAMSON: A bill (H. R. 14842) for the relief of the heirs of W. L. Gordon, of Spalding County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14843) to pay Hewlette A. Hall balance due for services in connection with the Paris Exposition—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BULL: A bill (H. R. 14844) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CASSINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 14845) granting a pension to Margaret Snyder—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. EDWARDS: A bill (H. R. 14846) granting an increase of pension to Homer Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FEELY: A bill (H. R. 14847) granting an increase of pension to James H. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOY: A bill (H. R. 14848) granting a pension to Jacob Goetz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14849) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Casey—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 14850) granting arrears of pension to Pauline M. Beach, widow of Henry S. Beach, deceased, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Michigan Infantry Volunteers, and First Regiment Michigan Heavy Artillery Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNAPP: A bill (H. R. 14851) granting an increase of pension to Abiah D. Williams, late of Company I, Fifth New York Heavy Artillery—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLE: A bill (H. R. 14852) granting an increase of pension to Melvina Dunlap—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: A bill (H. R. 14853) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Frank C. Whitney—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NEVIN: A bill (H. R. 14854) granting a pension to Anaeline Gross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14855) granting a pension to Lucretia Bartlett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14856) granting a pension to Hattie E. McLain—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14857) granting a pension to Eliza Sherman Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14858) granting a pension to Jennie Fishbaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14859) granting a pension to Margaret McSherry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14860) granting a pension to Harriett Zimmerman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14861) granting a pension to Margaret A. Morse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14862) granting a pension to Kate Vandegrift—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK: A bill (H. R. 14863) granting a pension to Charles E. Foley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEVIN: A bill (H. R. 14864) granting a pension to Robert D. Bailey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14865) granting a pension to Henry L. Kyler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14866) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Case—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14867) granting an increase of pension to Emanuel Trubee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14868) granting an increase of pension to George W. Purcell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14869) granting an increase of pension to T. C. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14870) granting an increase of pension to Thomas McHose—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14871) granting an increase of pension to William Van Gundy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14872) granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14873) granting an increase of pension to John M. Flynn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14874) granting an increase of pension to Obadiah Stines—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14875) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Bates—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14876) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Harrison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14877) granting an increase of pension to William Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14878) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. McPherson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14879) granting an increase of pension to Isaac W. Sebring—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14880) granting an increase of pension to William Scheall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14881) for the relief of Henry L. Hawkins—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14882) for the relief of K. G. Vaughan—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14883) granting an honorable discharge to Andrew J. Point—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 14884) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin E. Sweetland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 14885) for the relief of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of New Garden Camp Ground—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14886) for relief of Thomas W. White—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENRY C. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 14887) granting a pension to Charlotte Dubry, guardian of George Ansell, incompetent son of Henry J. Ansell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 14888) granting a pension to John T. Jerkins—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14889) granting a pension to James T. Lundy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14890) granting an increase of pension to Perry E. Bagwell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: A bill (H. R. 14891) granting an increase of pension to William Ross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14892) granting an increase of pension to George W. Brill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 14896) granting a pension to Mary A. Huffstetler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 14897) granting an increase of pension to Phillip Mooney—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A resolution (H. Res. 287) providing for the payment to Marcellus Butler of $100 as janitor to the Committee on Invalid Pensions—to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CASSINGHAM: Paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Margaret Snyder—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CONRY: Resolutions of the New England Shoe and Leather Association against the admission of Territories—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, resolutions of the same association, in favor of irrigation appropriations—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. EDWARDS: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to Homer Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Resolutions of the Purcell Commercial Club, Purcell, Ind. T., opposing the passage of the Flynn bill or the Moon bill—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, resolutions of Electrical Workers' Brotherhood No. 3, of New York City, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Resolutions of Allegheny Turners' Association and Troy Hill Turn Verein Society, Allegheny, Pa., North American Gymnastic Union, in regard to House bill 12199—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HENRY: Resolutions of the common council, Central Labor Union, and Retail Clerks' Association, of New Britain, Conn., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter-carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. IRWIN: Petition of numerous citizens of Louisville, Ky., urging the passage of House bills 178 and 179, proposing to reduce the tax on whisky—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LACEY: Resolutions of United Mine Workers' Union

No. 178, of Beacon, Iowa, and No. 1727, of Hilton, Iowa, favoring the passage of the Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: Petition of Henry W. Mayo and other citizens of Hampden, Me., urging the passage of the joint resolution for the erection of a monument to the memory of Dorothea Lynde Dix—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. MERCER: Papers to accompany House bill 14750, granting a pension to Thomas G. Kelsey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill 14749 granting an increase of pension to Margaret Heelan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NAPHEN: Resolutions of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, for the enactment of irrigation legislation—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. OTJEN: Petition of Wisconsin Sunday Rest Day Association, Milwaukee, Wis., for the restriction of Sunday work and traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts: Resolutions of the board of aldermen and common council of Medford, Mass., indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of Provincetown Maritime Exchange, in favor of a law to pension men of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of New Garden Camp Ground—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTS: Resolutions of the city governments of Medford and Everett, Mass., favoring the passage of House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of Provincetown Maritime Exchange, urging the passage of House bill 163, to pension employees and dependents of Life-Saving Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, against admitting Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma as States—to the Committee on Territories.

Also, resolutions of the same association, favoring certain investigations of irrigation by the United States Geological Survey—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. RUPPERT: Resolutions of Electrical Workers' Association No. 3, of New York, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SCOTT: Resolution of the joint convention of the Bankers' Associations of Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Indian Territories, protesting against the passage of the Fowler bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SHOWALTER: Petitions of citizens of Newcastle, Sharon, Greenville, and Beaver Falls, Pa., favoring further restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petitions of 300 citizens of Beaver Falls, 100 citizens of Volent, 200 citizens of College Hill, 50 citizens of Chicora, 125 citizens of Beaver County, 300 citizens of New Brighton, citizens of Jacksonville and Plain Grove, and 600 citizens of Butler County, Pa., favoring an amendment to the Constitution to prevent polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TIRRELL: Resolutions of the Fitchburg Woman's Club, favoring an educational qualification for immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, resolutions of Clinton Turn Verein, in opposition to House bill 12199, relating to immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: Petitions and papers of sundry citizens of Quaker City, Ohio, to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to George W. Brill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolutions of United Brotherhood of Leather Workers on Horse Goods, No. 55, of Marietta, Ohio, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WARNOCK: Petition of H. C. Scott Post, No. 111, of St. Paris, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, for the passage of a bill to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOTEN: Petition of the president of the Texas State Pharmaceutical Association, favoring the passage of the metric system bill—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. YOUNG: Petitions of C. A. Weidmann and others, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the passage of the metric system bill—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 4, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. HOAR, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

ACCOUNTS OF INDIAN TRADERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of the accounts of Indian traders with the Osage Indians at the Osage Agency, together with the sums due them from these Indians, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 259) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at Semiahmoo Harbor, Gulf of Georgia, Puget Sound, State of Washington; and

A bill (S. 3800) to grant certain lands to the State of Idaho.

The message also announced that the House had passed, with amendments, the bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1992) granting the right of way to the Alafia, Manatee and Gulf Coast Railway Company through the United States light-house and military reservations on Gasparilla Islands, in the State of Florida;

A bill (H. R. 12085) providing for the completion of a light and fog-signal station in the Patapsco River, Maryland; and

A bill (H. R. 14051) granting the consent of Congress to N. F. Thompson and associates to erect a dam and construct power station at Muscle Shoals, Alabama.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the following bills:

A bill (S. 19) for the relief of George A. Orr;
A bill (S. 20) for the relief of Joseph W. Carmack;
A bill (S. 21) for the relief of John S. Neet, jr.;
A bill (S. 22) for the relief of Ezra S. Havens;
A bill (S. 567) for the relief of H. B. Matteosian; and A bill (S. 1920) for the relief of Albert C. Brown.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Franklin W. Smith, of Boston, Mass., praying that an appropriation be made for the purchase of the Halls of the Ancients, in the city of Washington, D. C., to be used as a public educational institution; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of the Provincetown Maritime Exchange of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men in the Life-Saving Service, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of the common council of Medford, of the Central Labor Union of Brockton, and of the Central Labor Union of Fitchburg, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the compensation of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of Anthony Wayne Post, No. 271, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, of Fort Wayne, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and men in the Army and Navy when 50 years of age and over, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 1671 and Local Union No. 1335, United Mine Workers of America, of Clinton, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut presented a petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of Local Division No. 29, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kentucky, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPOONER presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Turn Verein Yahn, in Wisconsin, expressing sympathy for the people of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of J. Bauman & Co. and 63 other citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Local Division No. 249, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of South Kaukauna, and of Rock River Lodge, No. 210, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Janesville, in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. PERKINS presented petitions of Dewey Division, No. 398, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of San Bernardino; of Orange Grove Division, No. 392, Order of Railway Conductors, of San Bernardino; of Local Division No. 193, Order of Railway Conductors, of Sacramento; of Lodge No. 198, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, of San Francisco; of El Capitan Division, No. 115, Order of Railway Conductors, of San Francisco; of Lodge No. 278, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of San Bernardino, and of Golden Gate Division, No. 364, Order of Railway Conductors, of Oakland, all in the State of California, praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of the official board of the First United Brethren Church of Parkersburg, W. Va., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Forest Park, Pittsburg, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MASON presented a petition of the Liquor Dealers' Association of Moline, Ill., and of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue laws relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the board of supervisors of Adams County, Ill., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions of the Commercial Club of Omaha, Nebr., and of the fifth annual convention of the National Building Trades Council of America, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the irrigation of the arid lands of the country; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Kosciusko Society, of La Salle, and of the King Mieczyslawa Society, of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a statue to Count Pulaski; which were referred to the Committee on Library.

He also presented a petition of the board of directors of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Harmony Division, No. 417, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; of Woodlawn Lodge, No. 451, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Chicago; of Local Division No. 79, Order of Railway Conductors, of Peoria, and of Columbian Lodge, No. 479, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Federation of Labor of Springfield, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Old Bethel Reformed Presbyterian Church, of Houston, Ill., remonstrating against the reenactment of the so-called Chinese-exclusion law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Bricklayers' Local Union No. 20, of Springfield; of Boot and Shoe Workers' Local Union No. 265, of Dunn; of Bricklayers' Local Union No. 20, of Waukegan; of Locomotive Firemen's Local Union No. 217, of East St. Louis; of Typographical Union No. 29, of Peoria; of Engineers' Local unions No. 594 and 595, of Chicago; of Flour Mill Workers' Local Union No. 8036, of Murphysboro; of Locomotive Firemen's Local Union No. 275, of Chicago; of Locomotive Firemen's Local Union No. 536, of Mount Carmel; of Local Union No. 271, of Champaign; of Locomotive Firemen's Local Union No. 538, of Chicago; of Carriage and Wagon Workers' Local Union No. 4, of Chicago; of Bakers' Local Union No. 5, of East St. Louis; of Bricklayers' Local Union No. 24, of Canton, and of Locomotive Firemen's Local Union No. 49, of Decatur; all in the State of Illinois, praying for the reenactment of the Chinese-exclusion law; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Merchants' Exchange of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the unrestricted entrance into the United States of the mercantile class of Chinese; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Bangor, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men in the Life-Saving Service, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Handy Ballard and sundry other members of the Grand Army of the Republic of Louisiana and Mississippi, praying for the enactment of legislation to modify and simplify the pension laws of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6890) granting an increase of pension to Robert G. Scrogge, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 6040) granting an increase of pension to John W. Craine;

A bill (H. R. 14012) granting a pension to Fannie Reardon;

A bill (H. R. 10172) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Finegan; and

A bill (H. R. 14118) granting a pension to Mary C. Bickerstaff.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5724) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy; and

A bill (S. 5725) for the relief of Pay Clerk Charles Blake, United States Navy.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3975) to refund internal-revenue taxes paid by owners of private dies, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6023) for the relief of John Scott, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3084) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances and others on board said brig, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5550) for the relief of W. C. Taylor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $879.78, to pay James M. Steep, from the proceeds of the District of Columbia, for bonds issued under the act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, being the amount of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims against the District of Columbia in his favor, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2641) for the relief of Albion M. Christie, to report it without amendment, and submit a report thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Claims I report adversely 47 different bills, representing claims which have been cared for in other legislation. In order to take the bills from the files of the committee and that the papers in the several cases may be returned to the Secretary of the Senate, I report the bills back and ask that they be indefinitely postponed.

The bills were postponed indefinitely, as follows:

A bill (S. 3069) for the relief of O. F. Adams;

A bill (S. 349) for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan;

A bill (S. 244) for the relief of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass.;

A bill (S. 1601) for the relief of Arthur L. Fish;

A bill (S. 4005) for the relief of the Brooklyn Ferry Company, of New York;

A bill (S. 43) to permit Anna M. Colman, a widow, to prosecute a claim;

A bill (S. 90) for the relief of Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn.;

A bill (S. 454) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the mutual account between the United States and the State of Florida, heretofore examined and stated by said Secretary, under the authority of the Congress, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 635) to provide for the settlement of accounts between the United States and the State of South Carolina;

A bill (S. 644) to reimburse the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion;

A bill (S. 655) for the relief of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 855) for the relief of Mrs. Charlotte C. Leathers;

A bill (S. 1051) for the relief of the estate of James Campbell, deceased;

A bill (S. 1218) for the relief of the legal representatives of Merrick, Merrick & Cope;

A bill (S. 1310) for the relief Curtis & Tilden;

A bill (S. 1311) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob R. Davis;

A bill (S. 1449) for the relief of the beirs of the late Charles P. Culver;

A bill (S. 2340) for the relief of Charles H. Adams;

A bill (S. 3353) for the relief of the trustee of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va.;

A bill (S. 3747) providing for the adjustment and settlement of the claim of the State of Virginia against the United States for advances and expenditures made in the war of 1812 with Great Britain;

A bill (S. 3885) for the relief of the estate of Samuel T. Carrow, deceased;

A bill (S. 3920) to pay to the State of West Virginia money advanced to certain officers of the One hundred and thirty-third Regiment West Virginia Militia;

A bill (S. 3921) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Martinsburg, W. Va.;

A bill (S. 3934) for the relief of the owners and crew of the Hawaiian bark Arctic;

A bill (S. 3935) for the relief of Winslow Warren;

A bill (S. 2953) for the relief of the Cumberland Female College of McMinnville, Tenn.;

A bill (S. 40) for the relief of the Catholic Church at Macon City, Mo.;

A bill (S. 3938) to reimburse G. H. Kitson for money advanced to the Menominee tribe of Indians of Wisconsin;

A bill (S. 3932) for the payment of the claim of M. M. Defrees for the construction of a sewer adjacent to the lands of the United States known as the "Arsenal grounds," in the city of Indianapolis, Ind.;

A bill (S. 1869) for the relief of Rinaldo P. Smith;

A bill (S. 2121) for the relief of the legal representatives of John H. Jones and Thomas D. Harris;

A bill (S. 3919) for the relief of John W. Kennedy;

A bill (S. 3936) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the U. S. revenue cutter Gallatin off the coast of Massachusetts;

A bill (S. 3923) for the relief of George W. Weston;

A bill (S. 1357) for the relief of Emile M. Blum and James S. Seymour;

A bill (S. 4010) for the relief of the legal representatives of Gilman Sawtelle;

A bill (S. 923) for the relief of Avery D. Babcock and wife, of Oregon;

A bill (S. 279) for the relief of James C. Drake;

A bill (S. 658) for the relief of Twyman O. Abbott;

A bill (S. 3928) for the relief of the heirs of Lawrence D. Bailey;

A bill (S. 351) for the relief of Catherine Burns;

A bill (S. 1687) for the relief of Elias E. Barnes;

A bill (S. 2751) for the relief of Charles H. Adams;

A bill (S. 346) for the relief of the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company, of Baltimore, Md.;

A bill (S. 3223) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claim of the personal representatives of William Kiskadden, deceased;

A bill (S. 1612) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, and others; and

A bill (S. 94) for the relief of the estate of Andrew J. Duncan, deceased.

Mr. KITTREDGE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 917) for the relief of John H. McLaughlin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3374) to protect forest reserves and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLLIVER, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10299) authorizing the Santa Fe Pacific Railroad Company to sell or lease its railroad property and franchises, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4980) to incorporate the American Academy in Rome, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

READING MATTER FOR THE BLIND.

Mr. ELKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2644) to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind, to report it back with amendments, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the amendments be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendments will also be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "packages," insert:

And containing no advertising or other matter whatever.

Mr. ELKINS. There is one other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. I should like to have an opportunity to examine and ascertain whether there are any precedents for the Government to transport free through the mails matter in relation to any particular class of people in private institutions. If you start with the blind you must follow that with the mutes.

Mr. HOAR. And invalid soldiers.

Mr. HALE. And as the Senator at my right suggests, invalid soldiers. I fear it would be starting what might be a very serious innovation. It seems to me that these things go altogether too easy. Abrupt departures from what have been our laws and our practice are desired by somebody who has a special interest. I am subject to the same experience. That somebody writes to a Senator and asks him that the action of Congress, the remedy which is universal for everything that is wanted, shall be invoked.

I do not think we are careful enough, Mr. President, about reporting such innovations. I must object to the present consideration of the bill until I can have an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LEWIS CASS SMITH AND OTHERS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bills (S. 2067, S. 2348, and S. 4770) entitled, respectively, "A bill for the relief of Lewis Cass Smith and of the estates of Elisha G. Abbott, deceased, and Mrs. Zarelda E. Abbott, deceased," and "A bill for the relief of Edmond Sacra," and "A bill for the relief of John Lippincott and others," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

SERVICE ON RECEIVING SHIP.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 5949) entitled "A bill for the relief of certain naval officers and their legal representatives now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

LIEUT. JEROME E. MORSE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 720) for the relief of Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, to report it favorably without amendment. A similar bill has passed the Senate two or three times, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to transfer Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, of the retired list of the United States Navy, from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers, under section 1588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF SENIOR MAJOR-GENERAL.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (S. 5968) to authorize the promotion and retirement of the present senior major-general of the Army. It is a bill which was reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs and must go to the House at once if it is to have any efficacy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate for its information.

Mr. MONEY. Has the order been completed for the introduction of bills?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been completed.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to introduce a bill, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has not yet been reached. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President may, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the present senior major-general of the Army to the rank of Lieutenant-General and place that officer on the retired list with the rank and allowance of that grade.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BACON. I ask that some Senator inform me, simply for information, who is the major-general designated?

Mr. QUAY. Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the bill has passed, and therefore anything I say will not be considered as being in opposition to the passage of the bill, but I should like to have the attention of the Senate, and especially of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, for just a moment.

I think if we are going to do these things we had better make a permanent grade, so that there shall be promotions to it, and not go on appointing this officer and that officer to be lieutenant-general and then every time a person so appointed goes out have some one come in by legislation. If we are going to do it, we might as well have a permanent grade of lieutenant-general.

Mr. WARREN. I should like unanimous consent to say just a word following the remark by the Senator from Connecticut.

I agree with the Senator and go further. I think that the cases of all Army officers who served honorably and well through the civil war and through the Indian wars and the Spanish war ought to be taken up, and a bill should be prepared providing for their retirement at one grade higher than they are at time of retirement, excepting the cases where colonels or generals have been raised one grade just before retirement for this very purpose. I hope that such a bill will be at some time reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGER.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. FORAKER on the 3d of April, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided by law.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT CLERK.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. MCCUMBER February 15, 1902, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for by law.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGER.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was recommitted the resolution submitted by Mr. KEAN February 7, 1902, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Geological Survey be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise ordered.

EXTENSION OF FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. MASON. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I call the attention of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to it.

I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 909) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes," approved January 3, 1887, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration. I will state that the bill is presented upon the recommendation of the Post-Office Department, and it permits the establishment of free-delivery service in cities of 5,000 inhabitants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the bill ought to be explained a little.

Mr. MASON. The bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. It is exactly a copy of the present law, except that the limitation upon the number of inhabitants is reduced, so that the Postmaster-General may establish free delivery in cities of 5,000 if it is desirable. The bill is recommended by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Connecticut will have the kindness to give me his attention a moment I can explain in a few words the changes in existing law.

Under existing law free delivery can be given in towns that have a population of 8,000 or where the gross income of the office is $8,000. The only change this bill makes is to provide that in towns of 5,000 inhabitants or in towns where the gross income of the office is $5,000 free delivery may be established. The entire change in the existing law is the substitution of the word "five" in two places for the word "eight," making it 5,000 as to population and $5,000 as to income.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THIERMAN & FROST.

Mr. MASON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9597) for the relief of Thierman & Frost, to report it favorably without amendment. I desire to call the attention of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to this report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate for its information.

Mr. MASON. I may state to the Senate that it is a bill which has been heretofore recommended by the Senate Committee on Claims, and the Senate bill is now on the Calendar. A similar bill came from the House, and I now report it from the Committee on Claims. It gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction, I understand.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state, with the permission of the Senate, that this bill has passed the House upon a unanimous recommendation of its Committee on Claims. A similar bill has been unanimously reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Claims and is on the Calendar. The only point, as I take it, involved in the bill is that the Government waives its right to plead the statute of limitations. The bill refers to the Court of Claims the claim of these Kentucky citizens.

Mr. SPOONER. To hear and determine?

Mr. BLACKBURN. To hear and determine. It simply waives the Government's right to plead the statute of limitations, as both committees of the House and Senate think it ought to be waived, for the record shows no laches upon the part of the claimants. They have had their claim pending here for twenty years, and the bill has passed one House and has then passed the other House. They have been guilty of no laches at all. The bill simply carries their claim to the Court of Claims to hear and determine, the Government waiving its right to plead the statute of limitations.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby given the Court of Claims, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding, to hear, try, and determine the claim of Henry Thierman and White Frost, late partners doing business under the firm name and style of Thierman and Frost, by reason of the alleged unlawful seizure and sale by the revenue officers of the United States of the distillery property of the said Thierman and Frost in Concordia, in the State of Kentucky; and the said court shall have full power to determine whether said property was unlawfully seized and sold; and if the same were unlawfully seized or sold, then the said court shall try and determine whether, under the then existing laws of the United States, the said Thierman and Frost sustained any damages by reason thereof and whether the Government is or was liable under such laws for the damages sustained, limiting such damages to the reasonable value of the property seized and sold at the time of such seizure and sale; said case to be tried and determined under the laws, rules, and regulations governing proceedings in said court and upon such evidence as is legally admissible under the ordinary laws and rules of evidence as pursued in the practice of said court, hereby reserving to the Government the right to interpose any defense, whether legal or equitable, that it may have to said cause of action, except only the defenses based on the jurisdiction of the court and the statute of limitations: Provided, however, That said action shall be commenced within six months after this act shall go into effect: And provided further, That in said action the said court shall try and determine the question, notwithstanding any adjudication that may heretofore have been had, whether at the time of said seizure and sale there was any special tax due or owing by the said Thierman and Frost to the Government of the United States pertaining to said distillery, or growing out of the operation of the same, or on the output or product thereof; and if any such tax was then due or owing to the Government of the United States, the said court shall determine the amount thereof and apply the same as a set-off to any amount that may be found to have been due the said Thierman and Frost as damages sustained by them by reason of the wrongful seizure and sale of said distillery property and shall only enter a judgment in favor of the said Thierman and Frost for such balance, if any, as may be found to be due after applying as an offset any tax as aforesaid that may be found to be due without awarding any interest to either party: And provided further, That either party to such action shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the rules, laws, and regulations governing appeals in other cases from the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky if there was not an adjudication as to the validity of the tax and the validity of the seizure and sale?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know, Mr. President. I have simply an impression to the effect that the points involved in the bill which are referred to the Court of Claims were never covered or embraced in any litigation had heretofore. I have an impression, however, that there was some litigation as to the question of tax due at that time to the Government, but it is merely an impression.

As I stated before, the Senate bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Claims favorably, and the bill now before the Senate was so reported by the House Committee on Claims and passed the House, so that the Senate is now in the possession of both bills, one upon its Calendar on a favorable report from its own committee, and the House bill is also favorably reported.

Mr. SPOONER. I can see that if the distillery was seized and sold for nonpayment of a tax, and there is reasonable ground for the contention that it was an invalid tax, and that the seizure and sale were invalid, under those circumstances it would be entirely proper——

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Wisconsin is stating the facts of the case.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be entirely proper for Congress to waive any laches or failure to bring suit to contest the validity of the tax and seizure and sale at the proper time, But if the validity of the tax and the legality of the seizure and sale were years ago in the time of the transaction the subject of litigation and decision by courts having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, then this is an attempt after a great many years to grant practically an appeal from an adverse decision to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. SPOONER. I wanted to get at the fact; that is all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin, I am not advised nor do I know——

Mr. MASON. If the Senator will yield, I have the statement of it here in the report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. MASON. The facts are, if the Senator will yield to me just a moment, that the Government brought suit for the tax afterwards and were defeated in every contention, and the House committee reported, notwithstanding that fact, that the Government should have this right, and the Senate committee concur in the conclusion. The report says:

> The failure of the Government to secure a verdict in the principal suit against these parties does not seem to establish their equitable right, in view of all the facts, to compensation for alleged losses on account of the distraint and sale of the distillery property, or to any relief whatever from Congress.

That is quoted. The House committee says:

> Your committee concur in the conclusions of the Committee on the Judiciary, as announced in their report to the House in the Forty-seventh Congress, on the facts as they are disclosed. We do not believe that we would be warranted, on the facts disclosed, to recommend the passage of a bill by Congress authorizing the payment of any definite or specific sum as damages to the claimants. But the committee take into consideration the fact that after the seizure of the distillery property the Government, by its proper officers, commenced suits against the claimants, Thierman & Frost, and the securities on their bonds, to recover the taxes claimed to be due to the Government; that these suits were tried and judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants. But these adjudications were not on merits of the case.

So the bill now provides that, the Government having taken the property without due process of law and destroyed it, as a matter of equity, if there was any tax due the Government, it should be set off in whatever damages the court might allow.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So it will appear that this saving clause is not for the benefit of the claimants, but it is for the benefit of the Government. The litigation of which the Senator from Wisconsin inquired was determined in favor of the claimants and against the Government.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That provision of the bill declares that the Government shall not be precluded by reason of this adverse litigation, but that the Government shall have the right again to assert its claim for the tax which the court refused.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow the bill to go over until to-morrow I will look at it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator prefers it, let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. I will not object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, there is very little time, in the way the bill is brought before the Senate, to determine whether it is a case that we ought to send to the Court of Claims or not. I merely rise now for the purpose of entering a mild protest against the idea which seems to prevail in the Senate that whenever anybody having a claim against the Government, be it recent or remote, wants to go to the Court of Claims such action is taken almost as a matter of course.

I do not speak of this claim, but of claims against the Government, and I speak more especially now with regard to what are known as Indian claims. These claims are worked up by attorneys, who, I fear with the aid of people in the Departments who have knowledge of Indian affairs and of treaties, come to the conclusion that possibly they may get something through the Court of Claims in favor of an Indian tribe. So they work up claims which the Indian tribes very often have never heard of, get a contract of 5, 10, or 15 per cent, and then come to Congress and ask that the claim may be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

That is a very plausible request to make, and the Senate has very little time to consider whether it is a claim which is really of consequence enough and which has enough behind it to send it to the Court of Claims. So the matter goes upon request. Then an ex parte statement, which has been carefully and skillfully prepared by the attorneys, is submitted to the Court of Claims. It is true that the Attorney-General is directed to appear and make defense, but that defense is usually perfunctory, and the Court of Claims renders judgment practically upon an ex parte hearing of the case. I do not wish to say that it does so absolutely, but from the nature of these old claims the attorneys who are prosecuting them are the ones who have given most particular attention to them, who have presented them by putting forward everything in favor of a claim and carefully excluding in many cases everything which would bear on the right of the Government.

I am convinced, Mr. President, that the Government has thus suffered a loss of millions and millions of dollars growing out of just such circumstances as I have narrated, and out of the fact that we allow these claims to go to the Court of Claims for a judgment simply upon request.

I want to say that I think the practice here should be that no claim should be sent to the Court of Claims for judgment and decision unless, upon investigation by a committee, it be found, in the judgment of the committee, that there are really good grounds for supposing that the claim is a just claim; in other words, that we might apply in these cases the same rule which is applied in the early stage of criminal proceedings, that Congress should at least find that there is probable cause.

Now, take this claim. It has been before committees of Congress for the last twenty years, and each committee, so far as I have been able to read the reports, has said that it would not feel justified, with all the facts of the case as presented to the committee, in recommending to Congress that they should pay damages for the seizure of this distillery.

I suppose this bill will pass, but I wish to say now that we are sending cases to the Court of Claims with far too little investigation as to the validity of the claims which are sent there.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, with reference to the remarks made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], I am very glad to have him speak so plainly his mind on this subject, and I thank him for it, but I want to say in justice to the Senate Committee on Claims that at the present time its mode of doing business is such that but a very small proportion of the claims that come before the committee are recommended for reference to the Court of Claims. I do not think we recommend as many as 2 per cent of all the bills which are requested of us to be sent to the Court of Claims. We recommend no bill to go to the Court of Claims unless it has first received the investigation and favorable recommendation of a subcommittee, and secondly the unanimous consent or vote of the entire committee or all of the members who are present at the time and constituting a majority of the whole committee upon the report of such subcommittee.

I appreciate the danger or liability on the part of Congress to not investigate sufficiently and to send too many cases to the Court of Claims; but I do not think we should draw the lines tightly enough to amount to a prejudice against any class of claims because it is the practice of attorneys to annoy the Senate and its members and committees. These attorneys annoy me as much probably as they annoy anybody, but nevertheless we must not allow this annoyance to cause us to refuse entirely the reference of claims to the Court of Claims for investigation and report or trial and judgment, as the case may be.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I wish to say but a single word in reply to something that was said by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] as to his general characterization of the manner in which the United States is represented before the Court of Claims. There have been times when I should have been entirely in accord with the statement of the Senator from Connecticut, but I do not feel that I can properly, without a protest, allow that statement to go as a characterization of the present situation in that respect.

The Assistant Attorney-General, who represents the Government before the Court of Claims in these matters, Mr. Louis A. Pradt, is from my State. I have known him a great many years. He is as conscientious, laborious, and clear-headed a lawyer as I know. He is as faithful in his attention to the Government's interest in these cases as a lawyer could be in attending to any private interest. I have had occasion myself within the last two years to know that he gives minute and careful attention to protecting the interests of the Government in these cases.

I know the Senator from Connecticut would not be willing to make a general statement which would do any man injustice; and I therefore have felt at liberty to say what I have said in regard to the present situation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No, Mr. President, I would not reflect upon the ability or diligence of anyone connected with the Attorney-General's Department who is charged with the duty of defending these cases in the Court of Claims; but that Department is a sadly overworked Department. I think I may venture to state without exaggeration that the present Attorney-General has no more legal force available to do the business of the Attorney-General's office for the United States than he had for his private practice in the city of Pittsburg before he became Attorney-General. Indeed, I doubt if he has as much.

The business of the Department of Justice has grown immensely with the growth of this great country. That Department is most sadly overworked, and all the officials of that Department who are called upon to try the claims which are sent to the Court of Claims on behalf of the Government are so overworked that it is utterly impossible for them to give to any Government case the care, the attention, the investigation, or the research which has been given to it on the part of the attorneys of the claimants. I might specify instances.

I know of one case sent to the Court of Claims last year which involved millions of dollars, where a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs had investigated it with great care and had discovered documents and records which seemed to sustain the Government side of the case. The case was tried. The direction of the committee was that all the papers and documents which had been collected should be placed in the hands of the Attorney-General, but it turned out that in some way they never reached him, and those defenses which the Committee on Indian Affairs had so carefully and laboriously discovered never were applied to the case at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Were they sent to the committee?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is said they were never received at the Attorney-General's Office. I do not know whether that be true. I suppose it is true; but I suppose there was some question about their transmission.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not the fault of the Attorney-General.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not at all. I beg the Senator to understand that I am not reflecting upon the ability or the diligence of the officers of the Attorney-General's Department. I am simply speaking of the impossibility, under existing conditions, with those old claims, some of which go back seventy-five years, that they should investigate and determine and bring forward all the defenses which the Government ought to have a right to interpose against these claims.

I do not suppose that anything I say will prevent the passage of this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. It has already passed, I understand.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; it has not. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought that this bill had already passed, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think anything I say will interfere with the passage of this bill; but if these remarks which I have made call the attention of the Senate to what I consider a hasty, not to say loose, way of disposing of claims which are submitted to Congress, I shall be very glad.

I want to say one thing more, and I beg that what I say shall not be interpreted as reflecting upon the attention which any Senator gives to a matter which is referred to him, but I can refer to cases which have been acted upon at this session. For instance, a Senator introduces a bill for a constituent from his own State to send a case to the Court of Claims. The bill is referred in committee to that Senator as a subcommittee, and while that Senator undoubtedly thinks that he is giving it careful consideration, he in a few days reports to the full committee that the case should be sent to the Court of Claims, and it passes as a matter of course.

It was not so in the old time, Mr. President. I think the difficulty arises out of the fact that the duties and responsibilities of Senators have so increased with the growth of business that it is impossible for them to give that careful attention to such matters as used to be given to them in the Senate.

I can remember, Mr. President, when no claim either passed the Senate or was sent to the Court of Claims without the great Senator from New York, who then occupied the seat now so ably filled by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], made careful inquiry with reference to the claim, and each claim was fully considered and understood by the Senate before any action was taken upon it. If we should go back to the old practice I think we would do better.

I know how much there has been said about these claims having been for a long time neglected by the Government. I have no doubt it is true that many claims which ought to be paid by the Government have been neglected; but, on the other hand, Mr. President, I think that a great many claims which have a very shadowy foundation, either through the Court of Claims or through the want of careful attention by the Senate, are paid by the Government.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like to make one remark in that connection.

It is true that the business of the country is growing so rapidly that the labors of Senators on the committees to which claims generally go are so great that they can not do justice to all the hundreds of claims which come before them. The labor is too great, and good claims frequently go over for years and years because they can not be reached and considered.

I think if the proposition were agreed to which we had here last year, and which has been suggested several times, to have a well-paid attorney attend the Committee on Claims, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and other committees to which these claims are presented to resist those that ought to be resisted and to keep a record of the various claims, it would be of great assistance to the committees. It is out of the question to try these cases by individual members of the committees as they come up and to do justice to all of them.

I think the Committee on Claims and the Committee on Indian Affairs, who have jurisdiction of most of these claims, are as laborious, as attentive, and as hard working as those committees have ever been in my recollection, but the amount of work has grown so enormously that they do need assistance; and I hope that the Senate will come to the conclusion to give it, if not at this session of Congress, in the near future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 4074) for the relief of Thierman & Frost, on the same subject, will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 6058) granting an increase of pension to Edwin D. York; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut introduced a bill (S. 6059) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 6060) granting an increase of pension to Charles Stermer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 6061) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 6062) granting an increase of pension to James D. Stewart; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 6063) granting an increase of pension to Orson Nickerson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6064) granting an increase of pension to Rinaldo M. Griswold; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 6065) granting a condemned cannon to the Union Veterans' Union; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 6066) granting a pension to Edward Straub; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 6067) for the relief of Sarah A. Sutton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6068) for the relief of Richard Riggles; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEARNS introduced a bill (S. 6069) granting a pension to Isaac D. Gregg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURTON introduced a bill (S. 6070) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at a point to be selected, within 5 miles north of the Kaw River, in Wyandotte County, State of Kansas, and Clay County, State of Missouri, and to make the same a post route; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEROY A. LIVELY.

On motion of Mr. ELKINS, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate in connection with a bill (S. 2435, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session) granting a pension to Leroy A. Lively be withdrawn in accordance with clause 1, Rule XXX, of the rules of the Senate.

SUITS IN TARIFF CASES.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General are, respectively, directed to inform the Senate—

1. Whether the United States Government has abandoned its petition before the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari in the case of the United States v. Roessler et al. (79 Fed. Report, 813), involving the question of the time when the chief use of imported articles is to be determined.

2. Whether the United States Government has abandoned its petition before the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari in the case of Meyer v. Cadwalader, involving the duty on hat trimmings under the tariff act of 1883, in which case the verdict of a jury in favor of the Government was overthrown on October 17, 1898, by the United States court of appeals for the third circuit.

3. If either of said petitions have been abandoned, that the Senate be informed why they were so abandoned, and if upon agreement with importers, that a copy of the agreement be sent to the Senate.

4. If any such agreement has been made with importers, whether or not such agreements involved refunds of duty on piece goods, such as velvets, cotton-back satins, and similar goods not commercially known as hat trimmings.

5. Whether any refunds since 1897 have been made or agreed to be made by the Treasury Department on such piece goods as are the subject of litigation in the suit of Meyer v. Cadwalader.

6. State the amount of money refunded by the Treasury Department for piece and other goods claimed to be hat trimmings since March 4, 1877.

7. Whether any, and, if any, what amounts of money have been refunded or agreed to be refunded upon such piece goods except in accordance with the verdict of a jury and judgment against the Government thereon, and whether any judgments have been entered against the Government by consent in such cases, and if so, a full statement of such judgments.

8. Whether the question of fact involved in the case of Meyer v. Cadwalader—namely, whether piece goods, such as velvets, cotton-back satins, and similar goods not commercially known as hat trimmings are nevertheless hat trimmings under section 448, Schedule N, of the tariff act of 1890—has ever been decided by a jury other than favorably to the Government.

9. Whether any refunds have been made or agreed to be made by the Treasury Department involving four so-called Fleitman suits, Nos. 11402, 12184, 12545, and 16289, in payment of which a Treasury draft for an amount of about $196,000 was issued, but the payment of which was suspended on the order of President Harrison.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided for by law.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be given leave to print hearings before that committee.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and at the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on the first Monday in June in each year; which were on page 1, line 10, to strike out "June" and insert "May," and to amend the title so as to read: "A bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and at the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on the first Monday in May in each year."

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE A. ORR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 19) for the relief of George A. Orr, returned by the House of Representatives to the Senate in compliance with its request.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

H. B. MATTEOSIAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 567) for the relief of H. B. Matteosian, returned by the House of Representatives to the Senate in compliance with its request.

Mr. WARREN. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ALBERT C. BROWN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 1920) for the relief of Albert C. Brown, returned by the House of Representatives to the Senate in compliance with its request.

Mr. WARREN. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ISSUANCE OF DUPLICATE CHECK.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 679) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Capt. E. O. Fechét, disbursing officer United States Signal Service Corps, in favor of the Bishop Gutta Percha Company.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out the preamble and all of the bill after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That Capt. E. O. Fechét, disbursing officer United States Signal Corps, be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to issue to the Bishop Gutta Percha Company a duplicate of an original check issued by said E. O. Fechét on the 29th day of September, 1900, No. 35821, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, in favor of the said Bishop Gutta Percha Company, for the sum of $2,793, which check is alleged to have been lost in transmission through the clearing house before reaching the said assistant treasurer of the United States at New York: Provided, That said duplicate check shall be issued under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment as have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the issue of duplicate checks, under the provisions of section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, including an adequate bond of indemnity.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a small matter, but I notice the amendment reported by the committee says "instructed." The usual word is "directed," and I suggest that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 12, after the words "authorized and," it is proposed to strike out "instructed" and insert "directed;" so as to read:

That Capt. E. O. Fechét, disbursing officer United States Signal Corps, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Bishop Gutta Percha Company, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

KATHARINE RAINS PAUL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11249) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

J. H. GALLINGER,
J. C. PRITCHARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
J. H. BROMWELL,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 1992) granting the right of way to the Alafia, Manatee and Gulf Coast Railway Company through the United States light-house and military reservations on Gasparilla Island, in the State of Florida;

A bill (H. R. 12085) providing for the completion of a light and fog-signal station in the Patapsco River, Maryland; and

A bill (H. R. 14051) granting the consent of Congress to N. F. Thompson and associates to erect a dam and construct power station at Muscle Shoals, Alabama.

STATEMENTS BY FILIPINOS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Philippines:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 27th ultimo, as follows:

"Resolved, That the President be requested, if not, in his opinion, incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate whether there be any law or regulation in force in the Philippine Islands which will prevent any native of those islands who may so desire, not under arrest and against whom no charge of any offense against the United States is pending, from coming to the United States and stating his views or desires as to the interest of his people to the President or either House of Congress."

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of War, dated May 29, 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, June 4, 1902.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13676) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to make a request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator.

AGREEMENTS WITH CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

Mr. STEWART. There are two important treaties on the Calendar with the Choctaws and the Chickasaws. The Interior Department is very anxious that those treaties shall be acted upon at an early date, and I ask unanimous consent that when the Military Academy appropriation bill shall have been completed they may be taken up and considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will then take its place.

Mr. STEWART. I know that will take precedence whenever the time for its consideration comes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Nevada that he withhold his request until the pending bill is disposed of.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. STEWART subsequently said: I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the morning business, I I will call up the Indian treaties.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, who, I understand, only wishes to occupy a few moments.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. MONEY. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] has just handed me a copy of the New Orleans Picayune of the 1st of June, which contains some extracts from a speech delivered in this Chamber by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I did not have the pleasure of hearing that speech or of having read it, but I have heard it very highly praised by those who assented to it and those who dissented from it. Its scholarship and its eloquence have been praised all over the Union.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts is a great authority upon all historical matters, and not only an authority, but he is a great stickler for the truth of history, and it is on that account particularly that I myself, being interested in the truth of history, beg the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments to call attention to one paragraph which I wish to briefly animadvert upon. In the course of his remarks the Senator from Massachusetts said:

John Quincy Adams, as everybody knows, was the father of what we call the Monroe doctrine. He secured its adoption through the weight of his great influence by a hesitating President and a reluctant Cabinet. It is not so well known that he placed the Monroe doctrine solely upon the doctrine that just governments must rest upon the consent of the governed. That he declared to be its only foundation, and that, so founded, it rested upon the eternal principle of righteousness and justice.

Mr. President, without having had an opportunity to consult any work, but quoting simply from recollection, I will say that Thomas Jefferson long before that time, a quarter of a century before, had announced what was afterwards called the Monroe doctrine, which was subsequently announced in the message of Mr. Monroe in 1821, December 23. So that doctrine does not owe its paternity to John Quincy Adams, but it was the result of a conference between George Canning, the British premier, and Dr. Rush, our envoy near the Court of St. James.

The occasion which caused that conference was the fact that what was known as the Holy Alliance, having completed the work of subduing in Piedmont and in Spain those who had revolted against monarchical rule, and having declared that no reform in government could come except through those who reigned by divine right, then announced their intention to send fleets and armies to the New World and to reduce the revolting Spanish colonies to subjection. In that emergency Mr. Canning, who feared for the British trade in South America or a trade which he desired to create there, for really none existed, called upon the American minister and laid before him these plans of the Holy Alliance. The King of England, or the Regent. I believe it was then, had no one present at the conferences of the Holy Alliance to represent him in person, for the reason that the British King can do nothing and can act only through a responsible ministry, but he did send a person there to represent him in the capacity of looker-on and reporter.

When Mr. Canning made this disclosure to Dr. Rush he was also requested to transmit the news to Monroe and his Cabinet and to recommend that America protest against such an invasion of the Western Hemisphere for the purpose, on the part of the Holy Alliance, of reducing the free republics of Spanish America to the yoke of Ferdinand the Seventh.

Rush's dispatch was received and the "doctrine" embodied in a message to Congress and sent to Mr. Jefferson for his criticism and approval. Jefferson kept the paper six weeks, gave it his cordial approval, and transmitted it, without leave of anybody, so far as I know, to Mr. Madison, who, after a short while, returned it with his approval.

In the meanwhile, however, before the date of declaration of the so-called Monroe doctrine, Mr. George Canning found it necessary to check the active energies of the Holy Alliance that were being exerted in preparation for the conquest which they had designed by informing the French ambassador near the Court of St. James that the moment such an expedition was set on foot or such an attempt was avowed openly, Great Britain would acknowledge the independence of the South American Republics and would interfere in behalf of her own trade, and that action stopped any further purpose on the part of the Holy Alliance to invade Spanish America.

In the meantime, however, this declaration of what is called the Monroe doctrine remained with the Cabinet. It was not the work of Mr. John Quincy Adams in any sense whatever, except the latter part of it. The Monroe doctrine, as the Senate well knows, is divided into two sections. One declares that any European power, in concert with the Holy Alliance, in an attempt to extend its influence over or to put under its subjection any portion of American territory would be considered as acting in an unfriendly way toward the United States; which meant, of course, that there would be armed intervention to prevent its purpose being effected.

Now, the latter part of it was a declaration that there was now no part in all the country of the Western Hemisphere subject to colonization by any European power. That part was written by John Quincy Adams and was not submitted to the Cabinet until it was called upon to decide the whole question. Mr. Monroe had never been reluctant as to the first part nor had his Cabinet been reluctant or hesitating. They had been awaiting the transmission of the paper to Mr. Jefferson and its return. But upon the second part, upon which they had no information whatever and which they had never discussed, they did hesitate. They hesitated so much that it passed without their affirmative support. Mr. Calhoun, who had been Secretary of War, twice declared in this Chamber in the debate upon the question of the military occupation of Yucatan and in the case of the Oregon question that the second part, concerning colonization, was the work of Mr. Adams and was not fully considered. It was written by Mr. Adams without consultation with any member of the Cabinet.

There were at that time only two nations in Europe attempting in any way to colonize any part of the Western Hemisphere, and they were Great Britain and Russia. At that time Russia extended her pretensions down to Monterey, Cal., and had forts along the Pacific coast down that far. Great Britain was claiming sovereignty to certain parts of the country now known as British Columbia and the State of Washington. We had occupied Oregon, and our right was admitted. There was a modus vivendi subsisting between the Government of Great Britain and the United States Government for a mutual occupation for purposes of trade, no post to be made or occupied by the troops until settlement should be made by diplomatic negotiations.

From the dispute as to the line arose the slogan of "fifty-four-forty or fight," of which President Polk was the author, and from which he very gracefully receded, because we did not fight and we did not get fifty-four-forty.

The negotiation delimited the frontier as it now stands on the mainland, but left to another negotiation as to the true channel, and the Strait of Juan de Fuca was determined upon as the main channel of the sound, to our loss of Vancouver.

Those were the only two nations making any attempt to colonize America at any point, and they very promptly declared to the American Government that they would not pay the slightest attention to that part of the celebrated message of Mr. Monroe, and they did not. It has been a dead letter from the time it was passed in the Cabinet until to-day. It has had no effect whatever.

Now, as to the Monroe doctrine itself, which has been so much misunderstood or misrepresented, it did not attempt to say that the United States would resist by its force any attempt made by any foreign nation whatever, whether republic, monarchy, or empire, to establish a sphere of influence or to seize upon land or to upset the government of any Spanish-American State: That was the significance placed upon that instrument by South American States.

So the Pan-American Congress was called by a number of the leading States of the South, especially Mexico and Colombia. It met at its first session at Panama. We were invited to send representatives. A man named Anderson was appointed from Kentucky, and a man from New Jersey was appointed, whose name I have forgotten for the moment. Those two men received certain instructions from the Secretary of State, Mr. Henry Clay, John Quincy Adams, the author of this instrument, as it is claimed, then being President of the United States. One of the representatives died in a very short while, and the other never went to Panama at all, which occasioned the failure of the second congress to meet at the City of Mexico, because of the non-attendance of the representatives of the United States.

The instruction was that each one of the Southern States of America was advised to give a similar expression as to their view of the invasion of this continent by any foreign power; and it also stated specifically that the South American States were not to understand that the United States Government had in any way pledged itself to protect them from any invasion whatever. Those are the cold facts of history about this matter. The part that Mr. Adams played was to put in the declaration, without consultation with the Cabinet until brought up for consideration, that part of the Monroe doctrine which absolutely fell dead by the protests of the two nations at that moment concerned. Russia afterwards withdrew her pretensions to the southern part of her chain of forts.

The modus vivendi was acted upon until our commissioners could negotiate with those of Great Britain, and the delimitation of the frontier between the two countries was made, and it has subsisted until this day. But the first part of the Monroe doctrine, warning the sovereigns of Europe against interfering in American affairs, was originally the idea of Thomas Jefferson, and the cause of the declaration at that time was the communication of George Canning to Dr. Rush of the intention of the Holy Alliance. This is the story as I recollect it, and if I am wrong about it, any man can take the time to consult the authorities and correct me, and I shall be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that we may now proceed with the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to say a word upon the matter which has just been discussed?

Mr. WARREN. I wish to be entirely courteous, but there are only a few moments remaining until 2 o'clock. However, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the statement of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] who has just taken his seat in regard to the history of the Monroe doctrine, and his presentation of it is the view I have had of it; but I wish to say one word additional. When the Senator from Mississippi says the Monroe doctrine has been a "dead letter" I think he is mistaken. He overlooks at least one important historic instance in modern history which occurs to my mind in this connection. After or about the time of the close of the civil war, it will be remembered as part of history, when Maximilian had invaded Mexico and, after a severe battle, he was captured, tried, and condemned to be executed, an appeal was made by the very highest authorities to the Government of the United States to intercede in behalf of Maximilian and save his life. The petition was referred to the Secretary of State, Mr. Seward. The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, declined to interfere, and Maximilian was shot to death while a prisoner of war. It was a part of the current history of that time that Mr. Seward gave as the reason for not responding favorably to this call of mercy that Maximilian's course was in flagrant violation of the Monroe doctrine and he could not afford to do it, and declined it on the high grounds that it would be a bad precedent and weaken the force and sanctity of the Monroe doctrine. So Maximilian was executed, when a word from the Secretary might possibly have saved him.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to have one moment more, if the Senator from Wyoming will yield to me. It is merely to correct a statement.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to be entirely courteous, but I do not like to have a moot question taken up at the expense of a living question. It is only thirty minutes until the canal bill will be taken up.

Mr. MONEY. I desire only one moment, to set right my friend the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Wyoming is perfectly aware that I could occupy the time on his bill, but I do not care to do that.

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is mistaken in saying that I said the Monroe doctrine was a dead letter. I said that part of it was a dead letter which is peculiarly the acknowledged work of John Quincy Adams.

Mr. BATE. I stand corrected.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13676) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Permanent establishment," on page 2, after line 18, to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter the actual and necessary traveling expenses of candidates while proceeding from their homes to the Military Academy for qualification as cadets shall, if admitted, be credited to their accounts and paid after admission from the appropriation for the transportation of the Army and its supplies: And provided further, That the number of cadets authorized to be appointed by the President from the United States at large shall be 10 per annum, but the total number of cadets at large at the Military Academy at any one time shall not exceed 40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, before the word "engineering," to insert "military;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of five senior instructors of cavalry, artillery, and infantry tactics, ordnance and gunnery, and practical military engineering (captains), in addition to pay as first lieutenants, not mounted, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 5, after the word "day," to insert "$469.50;" so as to make the clause read:

For extra pay of three enlisted men as clerks in the office of the quartermaster, United States Military Academy, at 50 cents each per day, $469.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, in lines 3, 4, and 5, and in lines 10 and 11, to strike out the quotation marks where they occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous items and incidental expenses," on page 24, line 12, after the word "machines," to insert "athletic supplies;" so as to make the clause read:

Gymnasium and athletic supplies: For repairs, new machines, athletic supplies, and fixtures for gymnasium, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 9, before the word "suitable," to strike out "Welsbach burner or other;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of suitable incandescent lights, droplights, tubing, mantles, etc., $20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 10, under the subhead "For waterworks," after the word "gauges," to strike out "(at Round Pond and Delafield Pond);" so as to read:

For gauges and for stairs for access to same, and all other necessary work of maintenance and repairs, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, in lines 16 and 17, to strike out the parentheses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 14, before the word "suitable," to strike out "Welsbach burners or other;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of suitable incandescent lights, droplights, mantles, tubes, etc., $40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 20, after the word "therewith," to insert "and to provide for an increased water supply at a cost not to exceed $100,000;" on page 30, line 2, after the word "supply," to insert "to install a heating and lighting plant," and in line 8, before the word "million," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

To increase the efficiency of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings and for other necessary works of improvement in connection therewith, and to provide for an increased water supply at a cost not to exceed $100,000, made necessary by the increased number of cadets now authorized by law, immediately available and to remain so until expended, $2,000,000: Provided, That before any part of this amount is expended, except so much as may be necessary to provide an immediate increased water supply; to install a heating and lighting plant, and to complete the improvements begun on the cadet mess building, complete plans shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of War, covering all necessary buildings and improvements at West Point, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, which plans shall involve a total expenditure of not more than $6,500,000, including the sum herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 16, after the word "further," to strike out:

That no money shall be expended or obligation incurred for supervising architects after the plans for improvements above provided for have been approved by the Secretary of War.

And to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, in his discretion, a consulting architect, during the preparation of plans and the construction of buildings, at a compensation not exceeding $5,000 per annum: And provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to purchase for the use of the United States all that tract of land lying east of the easterly bank of the Hudson River and west of the westerly line or side of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company land, situate in the State of New York, formerly known as East Point and now commonly known as Constitution Island, lying opposite to the West Point Military Reservation, at and for such sum as he may deem reasonable, and the said sum so agreed upon is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of said land: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for said tract of land until a valid title to said land shall be vested in the United States free from all incumbrances nor until the State of New York shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. BATE. Has the Senator from Wyoming any amendments to offer?

Mr. WARREN. The amendments of the committee have been completed.

Mr. BATE. Some were passed over without objection. If they are to be considered now, all right.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that all the amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. BATE. The main amendment was acted upon?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BATE addressed the Senate. After having spoken five minutes,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Tennessee will kindly suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from Alabama if it would be agreeable to him to lay aside the regular business for a few moments until we finish the pending measure.

Mr. MORGAN. How long does the Senator from Wyoming think it would require?

Mr. WARREN. Not many minutes, I think.

Mr. BATE. We are going to have a yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. WARREN. That will not take long.

Mr. BATE. I think it will. Still, I will not object.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the Senator from Tennessee going to ask for a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. BATE. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that we proceed with the appropriation bill, and we will not trespass upon the good nature of the Senator from Alabama. If it becomes tiresome at any time he can, of course, demand the regular order.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator sees the condition of the Senate now. I do not want to disturb the repose of anybody so far as I am concerned. It would be, I suppose, quite convenient to take up the Military Academy bill to-morrow, as it will have the right of way at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming make a request that the unfinished business be informally laid aside?

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I would very much prefer to go on with it, as other matters are pressing, but I will not insist against the wish of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. It is immaterial to me whether the bill goes over or not. I will have the floor in the morning, I suppose, when the bill is taken up.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the action of the majority of our Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, touching the appropriation of $6,500,000 for the enlargement and improvement of buildings at West Point. This bill came from the House pretty much as it was reported to the Senate, with some increases, and especially an increase on our part of $1,000,000 in that appropriation.

I suppose, Mr. President, there has not been in the history of the Senate any such proposition as is made here now, so bold and so remarkable, that there should be appropriated by the Government of the United States six and one-half million dollars for the purpose of enlarging the plant at the National Military Academy. Such a proposition is unheard of, so far as I know. That Academy has been kept up and taken care of heretofore annually by comparatively small amounts, varying from some $400,000 up to $772,000. I beg to read what it has cost the Government for the last ten years. The figures are taken from the record.

In 1893 the expense of that Academy was $428,917.30; in 1894 it was $432,556.12; in 1895 it was $406,585.08, less than the two preceding years $25,000; in 1896 it was $464,261.66, an increase there, you see, a little; in 1897 it was $449,525.61; in 1898, when the Spanish war began, it will be remembered, it was $479,572.83; in 1899 it was $458,689.23; in 1900 it was $575,774.47; in 1901, last year, it was $674,306.67; and this year, 1902, up to the last of this month the amount will be $772,653.68 for the ensuing fiscal year.

There has been, Mr. President, an annual increase of a very small amount comparatively in the expenditures of this institution, and the appropriations have conformed to it. I do not know that there has been in any one of those years a deficiency of appropriation for conducting properly the Academy and for keeping in good condition its houses, grounds, and all appurtenances of whatever kind.

Now, however, it seems, for some reason not satisfactory to all of us, we are to have a change in West Point, and with that view the House passed this bill and sent it here in practically its present shape. The bill, with the amendments made on the part of the Senate, increases the amount which has been heretofore given annually for this institution. Many of the various items of expenditure are increased. They have been gone over with great particularity in the Senate committee as well as the House committee, and all the items of expenses that are necessary have been amply provided for; and to that I make no objection. I do not object to a liberal appropriation to this Academy for everything that is necessary for the comfort and convenience of professor and cadet and for every facility to educational advancement or for its improvement and enlargement in an economical and practical manner.

But, Mr. President, I enter my protest against the item appropriating six and one-half million dollars for the purpose of building up this institution to a much greater extent than is needed.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I will ask for the reading of the bill and also of the substitute that has been brought in by the minority of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured full control over the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Brito; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and such provisions for defense, as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

SEC. 3. That the President shall cause such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors, and in the constructing of the same may employ such persons as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 4. That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated; and the Secretary of War is, further, hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work that may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, defense, and completion of said canal, harbors, and defenses, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be hereafter made, on warrants to be drawn by the President of the United States, not to exceed in the aggregate $180,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed substitute will now be read.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the reading also of the substitute submitted by the minority of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has directed that that be read.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the understanding that it is now offered.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and on behalf of the United States, at a cost not exceeding $40,000,000, the rights, concessions, grants of land, right of way, unfinished work, plants, and all maps, plans, drawings, records, and other property, real, personal, and mixed, of every name and nature, owned by the New Panama Canal Company, of France, on the Isthmus of Panama and in Paris, including 68,482 shares of the Panama Railroad Company, owned by said canal company, provided a satisfactory title to said property can be obtained.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to acquire from the Republic of Colombia, for and on behalf of the United States, upon such terms as he may deem reasonable, control in perpetuity of a strip of land, the territory of the Republic of Colombia, 10 miles in width, extending from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, and the right to use and dispose of the waters thereon, and to excavate, construct, and to perpetually maintain, operate, and protect thereon a canal, of such depth and capacity as will afford convenient passage of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, which control shall include the right to perpetually maintain and operate the Panama Railroad, if the ownership thereof, or a controlling interest therein, shall have been acquired by the United States, and also jurisdiction over said strip and the ports at the ends thereof to make such police and sanitary rules and regulations as shall be necessary to preserve order and preserve the public health thereon, and to establish such judicial tribunals thereon as may be necessary to enforce such rules and regulations.

The President may acquire such additional territory and rights from Colombia as in his judgment will facilitate the general purpose hereof.

And such sum of money as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on warrants drawn by the President.

SEC. 3. That when the President shall have obtained a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company, as provided in section 1 hereof, and the control of the necessary territory from the Republic of Colombia, as provided in section 2 hereof, he is authorized to pay for the property of the New Panama Canal Company $40,000,000 and to the Republic of Colombia such sum as shall have been agreed upon, and a sum sufficient for both said purposes is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on a warrant drawn by the President.

The President shall then direct the Secretary of War to cause to be excavated, constructed, and completed, utilizing to that end as far as practicable the work heretofore done by the New Panama Canal Company, of France, and its predecessor company, a ship canal from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as shall afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing through the same from ocean to ocean; and the Secretary of War shall also cause to be constructed such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and make such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors. That the President is authorized for the purposes aforesaid to employ such persons as he may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation.

SEC. 4. That should the President be unable to obtain for the United States a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company and such control of the necessary territory of the Republic of Colombia, mentioned in sections 1 and 2 of this act, within a reasonable time and upon reasonable terms, then the President, having first obtained for the United States similar control of the necessary territory from Costa Rica and Nicaragua, upon terms which he may consider reasonable, for the construction, maintenance, operation, and protection of a canal connecting the Caribbean Sea with the Pacific Ocean by what is commonly known as the Nicaragua route, shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a ship canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito on the Pacific Ocean. Said canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth to afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing through the same from Greytown to Brito; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal as shall be necessary for the safe and convenient use thereof, and shall make such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said harbors and canal.

The President shall cause such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors to be made, and in making such surveys and in the construction of said canal may employ such persons as he may deem necessary, and may fix their compensation.

In the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated.

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into such contract or contracts as may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, completion, and defense of said canal, harbors, and defenses, by the route finally determined upon under the provisions of this act. Appropriations therefor may from time to time be hereafter made, not to exceed in the aggregate $135,000,000 should the Panama route be adopted, or $180,000,000 should the Nicaragua route be adopted.

SEC. 6. That in any agreement with the Republic of Colombia, or with the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, the President is authorized to guarantee to said Republic or to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the question in this case is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the subcommittee as a substitute for the bill. It seems that the discussion in this case is likely to be a wide one. So I hope the issues will be so narrowed down as that there will not be a very great amount of time consumed on either side in the discussion of the measure.

Mr. President, I do not care to approach the discussion of this important measure in a cloud of volcanic smoke and ashes which the opponents of the measure outside of the Senate have brought as a funeral pall to place over its bier, and I think it proper that I should try to clear the atmosphere and to quiet the apprehensions of the minority of the committee, if I can, so that we can proceed without undue agitation to consider the merits of the bill with sober and careful solicitude for the welfare of the country.

It is true that while the minority of the committee seem to be in despair as to the fate of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and their report shuts them out from all hope of being visited even by people of ordinary prudence, the minority of the committee have not closed forever the gateway between the oceans to the hopes of our people by prophecies of destruction by volcanoes and earthquakes; for in the same report they say: "The general points which now have been settled are these:

"First there must be a canal across the American isthmus."

Which means, of course, volcanoes and earthquakes to the contrary notwithstanding. That stalwart and patriotic edict will be obeyed, of course, and will be accomplished. It nearly fills the measure of my hopes to the brim, for it is a canal and not a particular route for which I have tried to work "in season and out of season" for many years, and all I have asked is a fair opportunity to express my choice of routes.

The part of the report of the minority that treats of volcanoes and earthquakes is so somber and threatening in its statements as to the awful danger of such disturbances that I was dismayed when I first read it, and I wondered how the minority could so heroically declare that "First there must be a canal across the American Isthmus." On further examination I saw that the minority have found a "hole in the sky" through which they have discovered that earthquakes and volcanoes can not ever disturb Panama and that all we have to do to get a canal is to pay the Panama Canal Company $40,000,000 for the privilege of constructing a canal at that heaven-favored location, and abandon the discussion as to the choice of routes.

When the committee closed its hearings, Mount Pelee was in slumberous repose. When, on the 7th of May, it went into convulsions that would alarm the occupants of Dante's inferno, the committee could not summon some bright intelligence from the courts of heaven to inform us where the next blow would fall, and felt that it was at least respectful, if not wise, to wait to be informed through the usual channels.

The minority of the committee, it seems, have gone deeply into the inquiry and have probed the subject to the bottom through a learned but very general disquisition of Mr. Heilprin and some allèged facts and searchlight reflections of the New York Sun. These are the only two authorities the committee quote.

The committee in its reports has made no suggestion that the Panama route is unsafe and should be abandoned on account of volcanoes, although they were aware that such opinions were entertained by some scientific people. They have forborne to make such an attack on Panama because it would tend to discourage the opening of a canal in any part of the isthmian region, all of which is involved in the same possibility of danger as to the operation of a canal without temporary disturbances. The committee does not regard such a danger as being either probable or serious, and made no special investigation of the subject in their investigations.

All the bills before them propose to construct a canal on some route, and the committee was not aware that objections would be made to the construction of an isthmian canal on any proposed route because of the danger of earthquakes and volcanoes.

In the report of the minority there is a disparagement of the Nicaragua route as being unsafe on account of alleged seismic disturbances, some of recent date.

If all that is said and conjectured or surmised about volcanoes and earthquakes is to be reckoned against Nicaragua, that is a very unsafe region for a canal; and if all that is said, surmised, and established about earthquakes and volcanoes in Panama is to be reckoned against that route, it is doubly unsafe for a canal or a railroad. But there is no ground for apprehension in either case that does not apply equally to many places in the United States.

From Alaska to the Antarctic Sea along the entire coast of the Western Hemisphere and from Salvador to Tierra del Fuego—"the land of fire"—earthquakes connected with volcanoes and earthquakes not apparently connected with them have shaken the earth through all the historic and prehistoric ages.

The whole mountain system of the Western Hemisphere, extending along both coasts, has been lifted above the waters by such convulsions, and the old craters of volcanoes, that are ranged behind the great plains formed of their ashes, mark the mountains and foothill regions with the evidences of their violence.

The surface of the earth seems to be approaching final completion in its structure, through such agencies, and is getting in better control of its titanic forces.

If I were a prophet, as some Senators are assuming to be, I would prefer to be a prophet of good, instead of a prophet of evil, and to foretell that Mount Pelee and the Soufriere would expend their forces and cease to do evil; and I would point to the fact that they have not disturbed the Isthmus at Colon, which is nearer to them than they are to Cuba or to Greytown, through any sympathy with their agitation, and that the recent great and disastrous earthquake in Guatemala has not made a ripple on the surface of Lake Nicaragua.

I would cite these facts and the violent earthquakes in Mexico during last January as proofs that there is not now any apparent connection between such disturbances in Mexico, Guatemala, and the islands of West Indies, whatever connection may have existed formerly. I would also cite the following facts, collected and published by the French Meteorological Association in 1858, to show that no such connection has ever existed within historic periods.

This learned association published a list of earthquakes in the West Indies that have been examined by scientists, and they give a statement of each important convulsion, with the date of its occurence, on each day, month, and year, since 1530 down to 1858.

The number of earthquakes in these islands, at large, during this period of nearly four centuries, is 915, or more than 200 in each century, and more than 2 in each year, distributed through 25 islands of the West Indies, from Cuba to Trinidad.

Some of these convulsions, but only a small fraction of them, have been connected with volcanic disturbances. They have been independent, lateral movements in the crust of the earth.

They have extended to and along the Atlantic coast of North America, in some instances causing serious disturbances at Quebec and in Vermont and Connecticut, and dangerous and destructive convulsions at New Madrid, Mo., in 1812, and later in the islands along the coast of Mississippi, and yet more recently at Charleston, S. C., which has received several unpleasant visitations.

That there is no recorded instance of any sympathy between these 915 earthquakes and any part of Central America should quiet the fears of Panama that Mount Pelee, at Martinique, and the Soufriere, at St. Vincent Island, will cause the disasters of September 7, 1882, to be repeated there.

As to Nicaragua, it has escaped any sensible impression from the earthquake in Guatemala, or from the volcanoes of the islands of the West Indies. There has been no earthquake at Martinique, St. Vincent, or elsewhere in the West Indies during the present volcanic disturbance, and the theory is confidently asserted by scientists that the volcanoes are the fissures through which confined gases escape vertically, and are the only real protection against earthquakes, which generally move laterally and dislocate the geological strata from their bearings.

In the older formations from California to Chile, along the whole coast of the Pacific, the seismic disturbances are becoming more infrequent and less in violence. That coast, as a rule, is an older formation than the islands of the West Indies.

Under such circumstances, is our courage to collapse and are we to abandon the hope of a canal across the Isthmus, because we fear earthquakes and volcanoes?

The great bridges across the Mississippi at Memphis and St. Louis would not have been built, with the earthquake region of New Madrid between them, if our great engineers—Eads and Noble—had been as fearful as the friends of Panama are with reference to the Nicaragua Canal. They did not find a hole in the sky to reveal to them the safety of either location for a bridge.

If we are to stop our great national work until coming decades and eras are to put a quietus on the apprehended seismic disturbances, the United States had better throw up the sponge and quit talking about a canal.

If we must have a battle of earthquakes and volcanoes to determine the choice of routes, I see no escape from the necessity of making a comparison between the violence of the disturbances and their frequency with reference to both these routes, only to show that Panama is not the safest spot in isthmian America.

The latest statement as to the volcanoes in Nicaragua is found in the New York Sun newspaper of date May 30, 1902, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.

Passengers arriving from Guatemala brought this account of the Nicaragua earthquake and the activity of the Nicaragua volcanoes of Momotombo and Asososca, taken from local newspapers:

A terrific earthquake shock passed over the port of Momotombo, carrying away the Government wharf and dumping into the lake great quantities of coffee, in sacks, and machinery. The bottom seemed to have dropped out of Lake Managua all at once, and the wharf sank down to the bottom. No soundings were taken immediately after the occurrence, and it is not definitely known what changes took place. The Government of Nicaragua has placed the matter in the hands of an engineer for investigation.

On the following night a severe shock passed over the rich old city of Leon and Chinandego, doing some damage to the big buildings. The motion of the earth started all the bells in the city to ringing, which frightened the population to such an extent that they spent hours in the open air.

A passenger on the boat which runs on Lake Managua tells of a terrific volcanic eruption which occurred at the very moment of the earthquake. The steamer was not far from the volcano of Momotombo when, just about noon, a great column of smoke and a great shaft of fire was seen to shoot upward, and a deep, rumbling noise like distant thunder passed over the lake.

From that time on the old volcano, which has never been quiet, continued to shoot columns of smoke miles into the air and to pour a liquid over the side of the mountain. The eruption and earthquake occurred almost at the exact moment.

Reports from Chinandego tell of a party of natives who came into the city from the neighborhood of Asososca volcano. They tell of great flows of red-hot lava which have been running down the sides of the volcano since March 24. This mountain has shown more activity than any of the others. There are few persons living near its base, and there is little danger of a heavy loss of life. Up to the last advices received the volcano was still shooting up its shafts of fire, columns of smoke, and running over with melted lava.

On May 8 and 9 a severe shock of earthquake was felt in the city of Guatemala, but no extensive damage was done.

This is the only proof presented by the minority of the committee as to recent volcanic activity in Nicaragua.

They omitted to add the following additional editorial statement of the New York Sun of the 30th of May, 1892:

DANGER TO THE PANAMA CANAL FROM NICARAGUAN VOLCANOES.

The Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN'S personal guaranty of the benign character and future good behavior of the Nicaragua volcanoes is not worth much from a business point of view. If on the strength of his insistent advice the United States Government should invest $200,000,000 or more in the neighborhood of Coseguina, Momotombo, Omotepe, and the rest of them, and calamity to the canal should occur, it would be no great satisfaction to remember that Senator MORGAN had personally certified to the safety of this route.

Central American newspapers just received at this office are full of recent doings of these objects of Mr. MORGAN's sublime, if unreasoning, faith. La Democracia, of Managua, and El Iris de la Tarde, of Granada, confirm the accounts which we have received by way of New Orleans as to the destruction wrought by the eruption of Momotombo and the accompanying earthquake, the widespread consternation throughout that region, and the spectacular performance of the volcano which dominates the lake of Managua, a body of water directly linked with Lake Nicaragua itself. The neighboring volcano of Asososca is also reported as having been in continuous eruption since March 24, ejecting torrents of red-hot lava.

These manifestations of fiery activity in the Nicaraguan cordillera occur at a time very inconvenient to Senator MORGAN, and very inopportune for those newspapers which have been either solemnly assuring their readers that all these volcanoes were extinct, or making the question of danger from their outbursts the subject of more or less intelligent jocosity.

As the New York paper had manufactured that statement relating to myself in its editorial comments, for which there is no foundation in the truth, so far as my action is concerned, I felt called upon to get from the diplomatic authorities of Nicaragua a statement as to the truth of what the New York Sun had published, which has been adopted by the minority of the committee as the foundation of its anxious fears for the fate of Nicaragua and its calm confidence in the everlasting tranquillity of Panama.

The Nicaraguan minister, at my request, sent a dispatch by cable to President Zalaya, which, with the answer to it, is as follows:

LEGACION DE NICARAGUA,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1902.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN.

DEAR SENATOR MORGAN: On receipt of your letter of June 1, inclosing an editorial from the New York Sun of May 30, alleging recent volcanic eruptions in Nicaragua, I sent the following cablegram to President Zelaya:

"It is urgent for me to answer officially as to the truth of published assertions that volcanoes of Nicaragua have recently been in eruption."

President Zelaya answered me as follows:

"The news published about recent eruptions of volcanoes and earthquakes in Nicaragua entirely false."

It stands to reason also that any seismic disturbances or eruptions of the kind alleged in the editorial would not be published exclusively in one or two papers, but would be discussed by the press at large. You will remember how quickly the Associated Press gave us the news of the earthquakes of Guatemala and Panama, and as quickly would that association have given us the details of troubles in Nicaragua, if any had existed, and we would not have had to wait reports via New Orleans. I may add also that Nicaragua has not had any volcanic eruption since 1835, and at that time Cosiguina discharged smoke and ashes, but no lava. No one was killed or injured and no property was destroyed by that occurrence.

You will observe on the map that all of the volcanoes of Nicaragua are confined to the Pacific coast, the nearest to the line of the canal being the Momotombo, about 100 miles distant. And in the Pacific coast you well know that the canal line is only 17 miles in length from the lake to the ocean. In the lake, as in the sea, there is nothing to be feared, and not a single volcano exists on the Atlantic side. Neither is there danger from earthquakes on this side, owing to the geological condition of the land here.

With great respect, sincerely yours,

LUIS F. COREA.

In further support of the statement of Mr. Corea and President Zelaya I will read the following communication from Mr. Merry, our minister to Salvador, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, who was resident at San Juan for five years, and for thirty years has been intimately acquainted with all public events and conditions in Nicaragua. For many years he was consul of Nicaragua at San Francisco:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 29, 1902.

The Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith for your information a copy of a dispatch from the United States minister at San José, Costa Rica, reporting the exemption of the Nicaragua Canal route and Costa Rica from seismic disturbances during the past two months, while earthquakes are reported at and in the vicinity of the Isthmus of Panama.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

This is the dispatch:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
San José, Costa Rica, May 17, 1902.

The Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: It may interest the Department of State, in connection with the location of the interoceanic canal, to know that during the very serious seismic disturbances that have occurred on the west coast of the American continent and in the West India Islands the line of the proposed Nicaragua Canal and its vicinity has been exempt from this phenomena.

From Guatemala southerly the violence of the seismic disturbances gradually decreased in intensity, slight shocks being experienced at Managua, while Granada, Rivas, and the entire Nicaragua Canal line were exempt. In Costa Rica there have been no seismic disturbances since the catastrophe at Quezaltenango, Guatemala, and for some time previous.

At Panama, and on what is called the "Spanish Main," earthquakes have recently been frequent and in some locations severe, culminating at the Southern Windward West India Islands.

It is proper to mention this exemption of the Nicaragua Canal line from earthquakes, which have recently been experienced on and near the line of the proposed Panama Canal, for the reason that with the French and Franco-American proponents of the Panama route the earthquake argument has been reiterated against the Nicaragua Canal line with a persistency that is "childlike and bland," claiming that earthquakes are unknown at Panama and very prevalent on the Nicaragua Canal route. Certainly there exists a possibility of earthquakes yet to come in southern Nicaragua and Costa Rica, but thus far the late seismic disturbance has certainly not been experienced on the Nicaragua Canal routes or in this Republic, while it has attacked the route of the proposed Panama Canal with a severity that is possibly not permitted publication in Panama papers.

With assurances of my highest consideration, I remain, your most obedient servant,

WILLIAM LAWRENCE MERRY,
United States Minister.

Only this morning I received the following letter from Mr. Merry:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
San Jose, Costa Rica, May 24, 1902.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senator, Washington.

MY DEAR SIR: You are well aware that the French, Franco-American, and railroad proponents of the Panama Canal project have been loud in denouncing the Nicaragua Canal route as subject to imminent danger from seismic disturbance. As if nature desires to give the lie to their interested pretensions, the southern part of Nicaragua and Costa Rica have been free from earthquakes during the recent shocks experienced north and south of the canal location. The severity of the seismic disturbances in Guatemala decreased southerly, and only a light shock was felt at Managua, while Rivas and Granada were exempt, as well as the entire line of the canal and also this Republic.

Panama and vicinity experienced severe shocks, probably more severe than the newspapers of Panama, well under control, dared or cared to state, and earthquakes have been lately frequent in that part of South America formerly called "The Spanish Main," culminating in the dreadful catastrophe at Martinique. We may yet experience earthquake shocks here; but it is true that the Nicaragua Canal line and Costa Rica have been lately exempt from them, while the Panama Isthmus has not. The earthquake question as applicable to the canal is, in my judgment, of no practical consequence, as no structure can be safer than one just below the surface of the ground (comparatively), and there will be a very limited danger in this connection at either location. Should a violent shock occur at the Bohio Dam, starting the water through it, the Panama Canal would be destroyed.

Should a shock equally severe attack and destroy the Conchuda Dam on the San Juan River, the dam might be destroyed, but the damage to the canal would be the cost of another dam. But only the enemies of any canal use the earthquake argument, and I only allude to the present exemption of the most practicable route to contradict the assertions made by interested parties.

Hoping that this will find you in good health, and with assurances of my sincere esteem, I beg to remain, my dear Senator,

Your friend and obedient servant,

WILLIAM LAWRENCE MERRY.

I will also add the following extracts from the statements of witnesses before the committee on the hearings:

Statement of Chester A. Donaldson, United States consul at Managua, Nicaragua.

Q. Are there volcanoes in the lake?

A. Yes; there is one volcano in Lake Nicaragua, rising out of the lake, Ometepe.

Q. About what is the height of that volcano?

A. I believe it is put down at nearly 6,000 feet.

Q. About what is its measurements across the base?

A. That I do not know. I should say it is about 10 miles through.

Q. Do people reside around the base of the volcano?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there a village there?

A. Yes; there is a village of about 1,000 inhabitants, who are mostly Indians. Some of them are agriculturists.

Q. Is the island fertile?

A. Yes; it is very fertile. They raise coffee, bananas, plantains, sugar cane, cacao, and cattle. I think that is about all they raise.

Q. So that the village there is a permanent agricultural settlement?

A. Yes. Everybody living in the village has a little piece of land outside. The Nicaraguans always live in that way. They do not live on their farms as our farmers do. They live almost entirely in the cities and villages, and they ride out and see their farms probably 20, 25, or 30 miles.

Q. Do tenants live on their farms?

A. They always have some workmen—Indians—living on their farms.

Q. Is this Ometepe volcano in action? Is it alive?

A. It has the appearance of being in action, as there is always smoke or steam rising from it.

Q. Is it smoke, or is it a cloud?

A. It is very difficult to tell. I have never seen what I would be sure was smoke coming out, although it does occasionally issue smoke.

Q. What is the tradition or reputation there as to how long it has been since the volcano was in action?

A. I never heard of its being in action at any time. It rises to a perfect cone. Most volcanoes that have ever been active have blown off one side, but there is nothing of that kind there. It is perhaps the most perfect volcano in the world, rising right to a perfect cone.

Q. There is another volcano, Mombacho, near Grenada, right on the shore of the lake?

A. That is also a live volcano in the same way as Ometepe. It is not extinct. The smoke does show, but it is almost always cloudy, so that you can not see anything. Occasionally the clouds break away, and then it appears as if there is a little light smoke or steam rising from the top. Mombacho was in action about twenty years ago, before I went there, and it frightened the people there very much. They have some earthquakes.

Q. I suppose you have experienced earthquakes since you have been living in Nicaragua?

A. Yes. The biggest earthquake they have ever had in Managua was since I have been there.

Q. Did that earthquake seem to produce an impression on the volume of water in the lake?

A. Not at all.

Q. Did it produce any real disturbance on the lake?

A. Not at all. My wife was sitting, chatting with a friend, looking at the steamer as it drew away from the dock. The steamer had gone about half a mile away from the dock when the earthquake occurred, and my wife said it looked as if the steamer stopped. When the earthquake began, the lake was slightly wavy, rough; but immediately after the earthquake it was very noticeable that the lake was perfectly calm. The earthquake seemed to have had a neutralizing effect upon it.

Q. What year was that?

A. On the 20th of April, 1898. That was the hardest earthquake recorded in Nicaragua for a century.

This is the statement of Mr. Lyman E. Cooley:

The CHAIRMAN. You have spoken of Ometepe, one of the volcanoes on the island of that name.

Mr. COOLEY. There is one, Mosaya; another, Mambaco, and also Monotombo, and many old cones.

The CHAIRMAN. They are grouped together in the lake?

Mr. COOLEY. West of the lake there is another on Omotepe Island, called Madera.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any sign of recent volcanic disturbances in those uplifts?

Mr. COOLEY. I looked particularly for that. There are discoverable cracks in the adobe buildings, due to earthquakes, which I found at Rivas. I could not discover around Lake Nicaragua any evidences that there had been any warping of the earth which has changed the present level of Lake Nicaragua or its shores since it was formed. I do not think there has been. I feel safe in this statement, that since the formation of Lake Nicaragua there has not been a disturbance on that route equal to the New Madrid earthquake of 1811 (December 16) in northeastern Arkansas and southeastern Missouri.

I was in that country when I was on the Mississippi River surveys in 1878–79, and there still exists sunken lands and lakes and changed rivers that were produced by that earthquake, that everybody recognized as having been so produced. There has not been a disturbance in historic times in Nicaragua that has produced phenomena as radical as that in character, and probably not since the lake was established at the present level. It has been stated, and I think probably it is true, that there have been no earthquakes in that country in the historic period as severe as the Charleston earthquake.

I suppose the Senate knows Mr. Lyman E. Cooley. A great many of the Northwestern Senators certainly know the man who constructed the Chicago drainage canal.

This is the statement of S. W. Plume. Plume was trackmaster on the Panama Railroad for six years:

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Panama Canal Company have good shelter for its hands and good hospitals?

Mr. PLUME. Yes; there is no finer hospital on the globe than the one they have at Panama. It is on the side of the Ancon Mountain, which used to be a volcano several centuries ago, and the lava from the volcano went across Panama and out into the bay about a mile. The hospital is a splendid thing. It is said to have cost $5,000,000, and I guess it did. Down in this valley you dig a hole about two feet deep and you come to a boiling spring, right under the mountains, and they have engines there pumping water up to this hospital.

There is a man in Panama who has a concession to bury people. He opened a graveyard, I suppose 300 feet one way and 400 the other. Every grave is numbered that they may know who is buried there. In exactly one year after he opened it I drove by there, and there were 1,875 crosses in that burying ground, and that does not count the men that were in the ovens. They have ovens along the wall, a brick wall, and they bury people in there who can afford to pay for it; but there were 1,875 crosses in that burying ground, to give you a little idea of the health of the country.

Statement of Prof. Lewis M. Haupt.

EARTHQUAKES.

As to the question of seismic disturbances, I would only add that it has been shown by students of seismology that the presence of active volcanoes act as a safety valve for internal disturbances; and the number of craters along through Nicaragua and Costa Rica being quite large, it affords a vent for any internal stress of the earth, and therefore there are fewer injurious earthquakes in that section of the world than at Panama or elsewhere; and I was very much surprised in studying that subject to find that the percentage of earthquakes was lower in Nicaragua than in almost any other portion of the world. Now, we have had some earthquakes in this country recently—one in St. Louis and one in Oregon and many in California—so that, so far as that goes, it shows that there need be little anticipation of trouble from that source.

Senator HARRIS. You say that your investigation shows that Nicaragua is the freest from earthquakes of any country in the world?

Mr. HAUPT. Yes; from serious earthquake trouble; but they have had some earthquakes there. Panama was badly shaken in 1858 and again in 1882, when Colon was rent with a seam across the town. The iron railroad bridge at Barbacoas was shifted out of position. So that the Commission has put those on a parity and dismissed the subject, with the belief that the canal works being buried in the earth would not be seriously interfered with by earthquakes in either case. I think, Mr. Chairman, that that probably covers most of the points.

I next present a statement from Lyell accompanying an editorial of the Engineering News.

LYELL—PRINCIPLES OF GEOLOGY.

Previous to the destruction of La Guaira and Caracas, in 1812, South Carolina was convulsed by earthquakes, and the shocks continued until those cities were destroyed. The valley also of the Mississippi, from the village of New Madrid to the mouth of the Ohio in one direction and to the St. Francis in another, was convulsed to such a degree as to create lakes and islands.

Flint, the geographer, who visited the country seven years after the event, informs us that a tract of many miles in extent, near the Little Prairie, became covered with water 3 or 4 feet deep, and when the water disappeared, a stratum of sand was left in its place. Large lakes of 20 miles in extent were formed in the course of an hour, and others were drained. The graveyard at New Madrid was precipitated into the bed of the Mississippi; and it is stated that the ground whereon the town is built and the river bank for 15 miles above sank 8 feet below their former level. The neighboring forest presented for some years afterwards "a singular scene of confusion; and the trees standing inclined in every direction, and many having their trunks and branches broken."

The inhabitants relate that the earth rose in great undulations; and when these reached a certain fearful height, the soil burst, and vast volumes of water, sand, and pit coal were discharged as high as the tops of the trees. Flint saw hundreds of these deep chasms remaining in an alluvial soil, seven years after. The people in the country, although inexperienced in such convulsions, had remarked that the chasms in the earth were in a direction from southwest to northeast; and they accordingly felled the tallest trees; and laying them at right angles to the chasms, stationed themselves upon them.

By this invention, when chasms opened more than once under these trees, several persons were prevented from being swallowed up. At one period during this earthquake the ground not far below New Madrid swelled up so as to arrest the Mississippi in its course and to cause a temporary reflux of its waves. The motion of some of the shocks was horizontal and of others perpendicular; and the vertical movement is said to have been much less desolating than the horizontal. If this be often the case, those shocks which injure cities least may produce the greatest alteration of level.

We learn from Captain Bayfield's memoirs that earthquakes are very frequent on the shore of the estuary of the St. Lawrence, of force sufficient at times to split walls and throw down chimneys. Such were the effects experienced in December, 1791, in St. Pauls Bay, about 50 miles NE. of Quebec, and the inhabitants say that about every twenty-five years a violent earthquake returns, which lasts forty days. In the History of Canada it is stated that in 1663 a tremendous convulsion lasted six months, extending from Quebec to Tadeausac—a distance of about 130 miles. The ice on the river was broken up, and many landslides caused.

[Engineering News, May 15, 1902.]

Among the most notable earthquakes, that of Lisbon is doubtless the most famous for a similar reason to that which has made Pompeii so celebrated. But the total loss of life in the Lisbon disaster (given by Mulhall at 35,000) has been several times exceeded in the past two centuries. In 1703 no less than 190,000 lives are said to have been lost at Yeddo, Japan, and in 1731 Pekin was visited by earthquake shocks which cost 96,000 lives.

At Cairo, in 1754, a year before the destruction of Lisbon, 40,000 lives were lost in an earthquake, and almost the same number were lost in Quito, in South America, in 1797. No longer ago than 1880 an earthquake in Manila cost 3,000 lives. A very recent earthquake at Shemakha, in the Transcaucas, in which 3,000 to 5,000 lives were lost, was described in our issue of April 24. Central America is a seat of almost continual seismal activity. In 1733 Guatemala experienced an earthquake which is said to have cost 33,000 lives, and only recently (on April 18) earthquake shocks were reported to have caused many deaths there.

It is of interest to note that in the disasters due to earthquakes most of the deaths usually occur from secondary causes. People are killed in earthquakes chiefly by the fall of buildings and other structures and also by the tidal wave, which is the most frequent accompaniment of earthquake shocks. In fact, in some cases such waves, due doubtless to an earth tremor beneath the sea, has swept upon a coast when no earth tremor had been felt at all.

Everywhere man looks upon the ocean's level as only less fixed and unchangeable than the land itself. Just beyond the reach of its highest tides he builds homes and cities with supreme confidence in their safety. But the earth shock beneath the ocean bed often sets a wave in motion on the surface, like the ripple which a jar will start upon the surface of a filled cup, and it sweeps on the shore, carrying everything before it.

In the old time physics, matter was classified in the four elements of earth, air, fire, and water. The volcano and the earthquakes may be said to represent activities of the first element, tornadoes the second, conflagrations the third, and floods the fourth. These last far exceed in magnitude all the other great disasters which history records.

Indeed, it is altogether probable that the loss of life in floods since history began exceeds the combined losses from all the other calamities named above. The greatest and most disastrous floods have been those from the ocean, of which the most recent example is the destruction of Galveston only two years ago, when some 12,000 lives were lost. Two other severe inundations of the South Atlantic coast have occurred during the past half dozen years, in each case accompanied by the loss of many lives among the dwellers on low-lying coast islands.

Of all the lands on which the ocean has wreaked its fury Holland has suffered the worst, through the breaching of the dikes which shut out the ocean from great tracts lying below the ordinary sea level. The greatest of these disasters, as recorded in the paper referred to above, was in 1530, when no less than 400,000 lives are said to have been lost. A century later, in 1646, 110,000 persons met death in another great inrush of the ocean.

Compared with these the loss of life in flooded river valleys is insignificant. Here, except in such rare instances as that at Johnstown, where the flood caused by the breaking of a dam rushed down a narrow valley before warning could be given, most persons in the flood's pathway are able to flee to higher ground. The only great disasters from river floods which can compare with those from floods of the ocean have occurred on the flat delta plains at the mouth of great rivers where the land was crowded with a dense population.

The most notable example of this is the Yellow River, of China, by whose floods in 1642 300,000 lives are said to have been sacrificed, while 200,000 are believed to have perished during a similar inundation only fifteen years ago. In India the Ganges rose in a similar flood in 1876, claiming some 200,000 victims.

On our own Mississippi the loss of life in its frequent floods have been comparatively slight, owing to the widely different topographical conditions. The so-called delta, from Cairo to New Orleans, is really an alluvial valley with comparatively steep slope and plenty of opportunity for refuge in case of floods. The true delta plains below New Orleans is practically uninhabited.

Compared with these great calamities, those due to the failure of the works of men seem trifling indeed. It is by their number and frequency and the fact that they are to a greater or less extent preventable that they deserve and receive so much larger share of attention.

Finally, there are two classes of great disasters which have each cost more lives in the aggregate by far than any of the elemental disturbances—the so-called "acts of God." These are great pestilences and great battles, the first due to man's ignorance, the second to the rein which he gives to his more primitive and savage instincts. Modern civilization is fast proving itself able to cope with the causes of each of these great calamities, and future historians will have fewer of them to record upon the roll of great disasters.

I will read the statement of Daubeny for the purpose of showing the volcanic condition of the Galapagos Islands, which lie off the coast of Panama to the south, right across the equator, and are about 300 or probably 500 miles distant, according to where the island may be located in the group.

The islands—

Says he—

The islands of Revillagigedo, near the coast of Mexico, lie nearly in the same latitude, and being volcanic may perhaps connect the band of igneous operations going on beneath the Pacific with that of North America. Farther south, nearly parallel with the equator, and with the volcanoes of Quito, which will be afterwards considered, is the Galapagos group, of which Mr. Darwin has given us so interesting an account. It consists of five principal islands and of several small ones, all of which are volcanic, and on two of them craters have been seen in a state of eruption.

The craters are extraordinarily numerous, amounting perhaps to more than 2,000, and are formed either of tufa or of scoriæ and lava. The tufa is met with in two forms, the one friable, like slightly consolidated ashes, the other compact, with a luster resembling resin, of a yellowish-brown color, and translucent. It is brittle, with an angular, rough, and very irregular fracture, and in hand specimens might be taken for pitchstone, although when examined on a large scale its concretionary structure reveals its real origin. Mr. Darwin suggests that the remarkable change which this material appears to have undergone since it was first deposited under water may have arisen either from the action of heated water within the craters or more probably from the admixture of the calcareous matter which penetrates it in thin seams.

The Galapagos Islands are not more than 500 miles from the Bay of Panama, out in the Pacific Ocean, and are the cause of the seismic disturbances that reach Panama.

Colonel Ernst, in giving his testimony before the committee, described some pits that had been sunk, large square wells (I think they were square), down to the ocean level, or very close to it, for the purpose of determining what was the geological structure of that country from top to bottom—Culebra Hills and Emperador. He and Mr. Noble also testified that when they were down in the pits they brought up specimens of indurated clay, said to be compacted so hard that it looked like rock and had to be handled almost like rock.

They brought the specimens up with them from the bottom of the pits and put them in bowls or glasses of water, and they instantly dissolved. They tried it over and over again, always with the same effect. They could not account for it. Some day it will be accounted for, when you get the water in there. You will find the bottom of your canal melting away. That is the reason why the Isthmian Canal Commission have made an allowance for building a stone wall on each side of the canal not less than 2 feet thick—I think it is 3—from 2 to 3 feet thick—below the proposed bottom of the canal up to and 3 feet above the level of the water in the canal for 7 miles on each side—14 miles of wall—necessary to protect the canal against that dissolving material.

Colonel Ernst said while he was down in these pits he found sharks' teeth. How did they get there? I do not think the sharks could have been bred on land. Those sharks were inhabitants of sea water, and they were there when an earthquake tumbled in that country and built the mountain that we call Culebra and Emperador; and some of these days when we get to work down there, if we ever shall, we will find it very necessary indeed to look out for seismic disturbances which will tumble that ground back again or else will bring down the volume of the mountain or the hills into the valley of the canal.

Knowing that Prof. Lyman Cooley is a man of remarkable abilities and learning and that he is a just man, I asked his opinion and his knowledge as to seismic disturbances in Nicaragua. He visited that State in company with a large party of engineers and contractors who were examining the questions of investments in construction contracts for building the Nicaragua Canal. Their researches were such as men would make who had large personal interests at stake, and their conclusions are practical and reliable. I will read Mr. Cooley's letters, in reply to my inquiries:

CHICAGO, ILL., 21 QUINCY STREET, May 15, 1902.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I trust you are not disturbed by the calamity howlers who are using the appalling loss of life by the volcanic eruptions in the Windward Islands as a base for predicting dire disaster to the Nicaragua Canal.

The cone of Ometepe is some 12 miles from the canal location, with about 8 miles of intervening water. I have seen nothing in the dispatches to indicate that a canal similarly located in respect to Mount Pelee would have been destroyed in the present eruption, though some damage might have resulted. Vesuvius is a mountain of vastly larger bulk than Ometepe, has had sixty eruptions in the Christian era, has destroyed the population on its slopes and buried cities at its foot, and in one eruption has thrown out more than its entire mass; yet a city has always existed across the bay at Naples, not farther away than the canal line from Ometepe. A canal could have been maintained at Naples for the past two thousand years.

The conditions in the Nicaragua Valley are not parallel to either of these cases. There are no physical evidences, no historical records or traditions, to indicate a similar expectation. We know of nothing in the vicinity of either the Nicaragua or the Panama route equal to what occurred on the Atlantic coast at Charleston, and this would not deter the construction of a canal in that portion of the United States.

There has been nothing to compare with the series of New Madrid earthquakes in 1811-1813 in the heart of the Mississippi Valley. The exhibit is still in evidence in lands sunk, lakes formed, and rivers changed. Judging by actual occurrences, a canal anywhere in the region between St. Louis and Vicksburg would be more unsafe than in Nicaragua or Panama, yet I do not know that the possibilities have been raised in connection with any public work in this region or in the building of the city of Memphis.

In San Jose, in the very shadow of the great volcanic knot of Costa Rica, I inspected a public building costing several million dollars that in design and construction would be suited to the United States. The railway that reaches this city from the coast has locations as perilous as the Denver and Rio Grande. Costa Rica has been populated by an intelligent people since the early settlement of America, yet the authorities are not apprehensive.

As between Nicaragua and Panama, there is no evidence on the Nicaragua route equal to the earthquake on the Panama route in 1882, if I recall the date. A crevasse was opened across Colon, and the old cathedral at Panama was damaged. The old cathedral at Leon, on the plain of Leon and opposite several volcanic vents, has been built since the early occupation, nearly four hundred years ago, and shows little evidence of destructive effects. Leon is more than 100 miles west of the canal route and near the most active center of disturbance in Nicaragua. At Rivas, close by the canal route, there are some evidences of earthquake effects, but none of a serious character.

The Caribbean is bounded on all sides by volcanic formations. The Greater Antilles, the Isthmus, and the coast of the mainland antedate the Tertiary period. The forces have been dormant and the land stable during recent geologic time. The volcanic formations athwart the Caribbean, and known as the Windward Islands, are comparatively recent.

The formations between Lake Nicaragua and the sea are partially volcanic, but of such great age that they are decomposed for a depth of more than 100 feet and constitute the red clays of this region. Earthquakes are no more serious here than in this latitude; in fact, I failed to learn that they had ever excited more than passing interest at Greytown. The western division of the canal, between the lake and the Pacific, is in sedimentary rock, and not in volcanic formation at all.

There is a line of vents from the Costa Rica knot to the Bay of Fonseca. So far as active in recent time they constitute a series of cones and dumps as on the open plain of Leon. Farther west, in Salvador and Guatemala, volcanic disturbances are on a large scale and destructive. Coseguina, at the remote corner of Nicaragua, on the Bay of Fonseca, experienced a violent eruption in 1835, but this did not deter the British from occupying Tiger Island, in the same bay, as a naval base a few years later.

The island of Ometepe is on this line of vents and immediately opposite the Pacific division of the canal. It is a volcanic dump in Lake Nicaragua from the two cones Madera and Ometepe, which occupy its entire area. Madera has been so long spent that the summit is degraded to a rounded contour. Ometepe has a sharp ash cone and smoke has been reported, but I do not know of any positive eruption. In fact, I do not know of any notable eruption in historic times nearer than Mount Monbacho, toward the head of the lake and near the city of Granada. There is no evidence to show that the immediate valley of Nicaragua, near the canal route, has been seriously disturbed since remote geologic time, and there is much evidence to show that no serious disturbance has occurred in recent time.

Lake Nicaragua is an old arm of the Pacific, shut out by change in base level and by volcanic dumps in the region of Masaya and farther west. An old river bed can be traced in Lake Nicaragua more plainly than old river courses are defined in Lake Erie, so volcanic matter has not obliterated the outlines of ancient topography in the lake. An eruption similar to the Java eruption would have boiled all the water in Lake Nicaragua, and as Pacific sharks are still in the lake such an eruption has not occurred since the lake was formed.

There is an ancient crater of tremendous size a few miles from Masaya, in the rim of which a railway is built. It contains a large lake, and on its shores are monuments so ancient as to leave no tradition. This is probably one of the originals, now as dormant as the old craters that constitute the diamond fields of South Africa.

There are no evidences of any changes in level due to earth warping about the shores of Lake Nicaragua, and there is much evidence in alluvial deposits of long-continued stability.

The Rio Grande and the Tola have both captured tributaries of the lake through long-continued and undisturbed processes of erosion, so the canal region between the lake and the Pacific can not have been greatly disturbed in any recent period.

The country about Rivas was well populated and governed by a powerful chief at the time of the conquest, nearly four hundred years ago. The inhabitants were and are still of the Maya stock, to whom the monuments of Yucatan and Guatemala are ascribed. They were the most civilized and ancient stock of the Montezuma empire and bore about the same relation to the warlike Aztec and Toltec as the Greeks did to the Romans. We have neither history nor tradition of violent eruptions in this vicinity.

The island of Ometepe was occupied by different stock (also the shore of the bay of Fonseca), which Squiers regards as a military colony planted in the formative period of the Montezuma empire. The island is still populated. It may be assumed, therefore, that for at least seven hundred years there has been no eruption sufficiently serious to destroy or drive away the inhabitants of this small island, and, further, that it must have been regarded as a safe abiding place for a military colony at that remote time.

I gave this whole question careful study four years ago, and what I now state is from recollection, and I do not undertake to be exact as to details. I then became fully satisfied that there was no imminent danger such as should deter the construction of a canal, though earthquake contingencies should not be ignored. No man can say that violent eruptions and earthquakes will not occur.

That is possible anywhere on earth and we have two examples of destructive earthquakes in the United States in one century, and apparently remote from volcanic regions.

If you wish to go into this matter fully, I suggest that you call upon Dr. Hayes and Major Dutton, both of whom have made special study of this question.

Trusting that this will be of service, I remain,
Yours, truly,
LYMAN E. COOLEY.

I have already had published a paper, by order of the Senate, from Major Dutton, containing a letter addressed to the Maritime Canal Company many years ago, in which that very eminent scientist and geologist went to the bottom of the whole subject and pronounced the most thoroughly satisfactory opinion, which I am requested by Mr. Cooley to bring forward. I had that printed as a document twelve or fifteen years ago for the information of the Senate.

On May 17 Mr. Cooley again says:

CHICAGO, ILL., 21 Quincy Street, May 17, 1902.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I wish to add to my letter of the 15th instant, in respect to volcanic action in Nicaragua, as follows:

1. The direct effect of volcanic action is limited to the dump, though lava may flow beyond the base and fine material be more widely distributed, to the temporary injury of vegetation.

2. Destructive effects to structures located at a distance are due to shock. The walls of Herculaneum and Pompeii were not thrown down. Walls in St. Pierre are still standing. Fort de France, in Martinique, and Kingston, in St. Vincent, only a few miles from destructive eruptions, have not suffered. The observatories throughout the world have detected no earth quivers, such as accompany ordinary earthquakes. Volcanic eruptions are not necessarily destructive except in the immediate vicinity.

3. The entire Isthmus of Panama is of volcanic origin, but so remote that it is deeply decomposed and denuded. More earthquakes are recorded and of a more severe character than on the Nicaragua route.

4. The Nicaragua route is in sedimentary rock, except a limited area back of Greytown, of ancient date and deeply decomposed and eroded, and free from disturbance, as far as known. The valley of Nicaragua along the canal route has been stable since its formation. There are no ancient beach lines, as about the Great Lakes, to show changes in level and warpings, nor any indications such as lead Professor Gilbert, of the United States Geological Survey, to predict that the outlet of the upper lakes will be transferred from Niagara to Chicago in twenty-five hundred years.

5. The regional activity in the past was restricted to the Costa Rica district, east of the valley, and to the Masaya district on the west, and connected by a line of vents, of which Ometepe is an example. These forces are so far spent that no investigations, official or otherwise, have heretofore considered them a serious menace.

6. There is a regional activity in Salvador and Guatemala and beyond the bay of Fonseca. Destructive effects characterize these districts.

7. Such cones as Ometepe and Monotombo and those on the plain of Leon characterize the Nicaragua dumps. These are sharp ash cones with steep declivities, indicating mere chimneys rather than explosive eruptions with large lava flows.

8. A new line of fractures is not probably any more than in a boiler, unless the old line is patched up so as to be stronger than elsewhere.

9. The recorded phenomena in regard to tornadoes indicate a greater mathematical probability of Kansas City or even Chicago being wiped out by a tornado than the evidence in the Nicaragua Valley indicate that the Nicaragua Canal will be destroyed by an earthquake. Direct destruction by a volcanic eruption is not within the domain of mathematical probability.

10. Earthquake shocks occur nearly every year, and sometimes several times a year, on the Pacific coast; but they build irrigation works, dams, and heavy buildings just the same, and are not deterred by the possibility of a destructive earthquake, which may be a remote contingency or may never occur.

11. What may happen in long periods of time anywhere on earth can not be discounted. The ruins of Baalbeck were dislocated six to seven thousand years after the structures were built, and when the builders had passed into tradition. I do not imagine that such a contingency would affect an insurance rate. There are possibilities of destruction to any great bridge in the United States which, from the commercial standpoint, engineers consider too remote to justify provision against.

12. The health question is vastly more important to human life than any question of volcanoes or earthquakes. You can concede all the allegations of volcanic possibilities in Nicaragua and still have a very small menace to human life in comparison to the health conditions on the Isthmus of Panama.

Yours, truly,

LYMAN E. COOLEY.

Turning to Panama, without a desire to disparage it, I will read an account, taken from the Panama Star and Herald, that was published in Panama at the time of the great earthquake of September 7, 1882. That paper had no reason for exaggerating that great calamity, and its statements are accepted as being literally true:

GREAT EARTHQUAKE ON THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA SEPTEMBER 7, 1882.

The United States consul at Panama (Mr. R. W. Turpin), in an official dispatch to the State Department dated September 14, 1882, inclosed a copy of the weekly edition of the Panama Star and Herald containing a full account of the great earthquake of September 7 and 8 of that year, from which the following facts are culled.

The damage to Panama city alone was estimated at from $250,000 to $300,000. The municipal buildings and the assembly chambers were greatly damaged. The whole of the massive balconies were shaken down, dragging the roof and adjacent timbers with them. The great cathedral was almost a total wreck. Its ornate pediment and tower, composed of heavy blocks of stone masonry, fell, crashing through the roof near the main entrance to the building. Every arch in the nave was seriously cracked and split. All the side aisles were shaken out of position, and the side and end walls of the edifice were so badly cracked that the building was condemned as unsafe. Many of the private residences were shaken down; others were seriously damaged. The walls of the canal office were rent and the building was condemned as unsafe.

Outside the city the damage was even more serious. The great tower of Malambo Church was tumbled down, and half the roof of another church—the Santa Anna—fell in. The Pacific Mail steamship Clyde, anchored outside the shallow harbor, was lifted bodily out of the water and fell back with a frightful thud, flooring crew and passengers; but, strangely enough, there was no very serious damage to the vessel itself beyond the springing of a few leaks in the keel.

The effects of the shock, or rather succession of shocks, along the line of the Panama Railway were very serious. Stone abutments, bridges, and culverts were cracked, warped, or thrown down entirely. The earth sank from 2 to 10 feet in some half dozen different places. At Emperador, Gatun, Matachin, and other stations along the canal route the damage was very great. In many places the roadbed and rails of the Panama Railway were torn up or warped and twisted out of position. It was fully a week before trains could pass from one side of the isthmus to the other. Between Gavilan and Punta Mala a crevice was opened in the earth from 10 to 15 meters wide.

At Colon, the Atlantic terminus of the canal, a deep fissure was opened in the earth about 400 feet long of considerable width and great depth. Buildings were shaken from their position, and vessels at anchor in the harbor were violently shaken up. Between the wharf and the lagoon the earth was split in many places. Many of the buildings near by were shaken down bodily. Several lives were lost, and many people were badly crippled.

At a point about 20 miles from Chagres, near the line of the canal, a small mud volcano was developed, which, however, soon subsided without doing much damage. About 35 miles from Colon, in the direction of Bocas del Toro, the tide suddenly rose to the height of nearly 15 feet, completely flooding the houses; and nearby the earth sank in many places several feet. Thermal springs appeared in the same neighborhood, throwing boiling water to considerable heights, which, however, soon subsided.

The bronze statue of Columbus near the wharf at Colon was shaken down from its pedestal, and the stone foundation was moved several inches; and just outside the city new lagoons were formed while existing ones disappeared.

I had supposed when the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission on the subject of volcanoes and earthquakes was not questioned in the committee that no point would be made on either route on that account.

But the new light thrown on the subject by Mount Pelee and the Sun of New York has brought Panama under observation and would forever destroy her pretensions in the minds of those who would not build a bridge across the Mississippi River because 30 acres of land was sunk by an earthquake at New Madrid and an island was sunk in the Gulf near the mouth of the Mississippi.

If this is the only way to defeat the Nicaragua route, I am very sorry that it will necessarily carry the Panama route down with it if the facts have anything to do with the result.

Mr. President, in our national infancy, in the early days of the last century, we began to prepare for a work that we are now about to consummate.

The Committee on Interoceanic Canals agree "that there must be a canal across the American Isthmus." In this they represent almost the entire population of the United States.

The great geographers, such as Humboldt and Maury, explored the field of operation with clear vision and scientific research, and Maury seventy years ago made a selection of the canal line that is as true and accurate as to the proper location and feasibility of the canal as if he had measured the ground in company with Childs, and Lull, and Menocal, and the Commission of Ludlow, and the Nicaragua Canal Commission, and the Isthmian Canal Commission.

With the exact eye of science, Maury saw the truth of the situation and pointed it out with an accuracy of demonstration which has not failed in any particular and with the enthusiasm that inspires the prophecy of the future glory of his country that always warms the soul of a true American.

All these great engineers and commissions agreed with Maury in all their reports until the siren of speculation diverted their lines of measurement to lines of financial economy, and for a time some of them doubted the value of their own long and laborious studies and frequent reports in the prospect of saving money in the cost of construction and operation of the canal. That was a mistaken calculation.

Following Humboldt and Maury, the Government began, with the dawn of the century, to prepare for its proper work of opening the canal, and such minds as those of Adams, Clay, Monroe, and Jackson took it up with intense zeal and enlightened purpose.

Since those days and in the midst of many disappointing delays we have as a people grown up to the full magnitude of the subject and have attained the ability to deal with it.

Even ten years ago we did not fully understand all the questions that enter into this great inquiry as we do now, and we had not then so developed our commercial and financial strength that we could feel an absolute assurance that the cost of such an enterprise was within our control, so as to undertake it with no fear of straining the credit or the resources of the country.

It now appears that we alone of all the great nations are able to build this canal without borrowing money from other countries or from other people.

While being delayed by the wise hand of fate—shall I call it?—we have cleared up some troubles that were of our own creation, if they were ever real, in a treaty with Great Britain. We have also removed this mask from the faces of those who wore it to conceal the real purpose of their selfish opposition to any and every isthmian canal.

Now, that we have reached a pure and unclouded American atmosphere, we are ready to proceed with caution, firmness, and determination to complete this great undertaking.

I am much tempted to look up from the ditch I have been trying to dig, as a colaborer with many earnest and able men, and survey the glorious work in which this great Republic is engaged, but I dare not, lest I should become dazed by its magnificence and lose all usefulness in the performance of my personal task.

I will try to examine what we are doing with careful scrutiny to see if the work is safe and certain, within the limitations of reasonable calculation and forecast and in the light of experience, and, so far as I am concerned, I will continue to dig in the ditch until, in the providence of God, it is filled with hot lava rather than run away from it because some other place has been shaken with earthquakes or covered with the ashes and lava of volcanoes.

It is a work that deserves the courage of men who are moved by a sense of duty.

If the canal can exist as long in Panama or Nicaragua as Naples has lived, and has grown great and prosperous at the foot of the volcano of Vesuvius, I think this generation at least should be content to build it.

Vesuvius covered up Herculaneum and Pompeii in the fifty-second year of the Christian era, and it has been vomiting flame and smoke from that time to this. They are on a direct line about 15 miles from Naples, which has sat on the shores of its beautiful bay and smiled at the world for more than nineteen centuries.

That is, perhaps, as long a lease as we would like of a canal route, accompanied with a guaranty of the sovereignty of the country through which the canal is to be cut.

I will return to this branch of my subject before I close my remarks.

Whatever course the Senate may take on this bill, whether it is to concur with the House in its views, twice repeated in the same language—once in the bill that passed the House in the Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, on the 2d day of May, 1900, and the other in the present Congress, on the 9th day of January, 1902, which is the bill now before the Senate; or whether it shall pass the substitute to this bill, which has just been read, or whether some other form of legislation is adopted for the construction of a canal, a canal will now be dug.

Believing that this is the honest purpose and determination of the whole Senate, I will do what may fall to my lot in this matter, in the spirit of free conference, on all its features, with every Senator and with the House of Representatives.

The minority of the committee, in recommending the selection of the Panama route, omit any discussion of the character of the population that inhabit the canal region and the chronic state of insurrection and violence that has existed among them for more than sixty years—conditions that must be radically changed before we can venture to pay a vast sum of money for the construction and operation of a canal at Panama.

In the studies I have been able to make of the Panama route, so that I could reach a just and impartial conclusion as to its merits, I have considered it of the highest importance to learn what I could about the population of the State of Panama and its political conditions, as they may affect the tranquillity, peace, and safety of those engaged in constructing and controlling a great ship canal, which is a peculiar task of great delicacy, and requires safe conditions and environment to secure success.

I attach such importance to these conditions that I must beg the indulgence of the Senate for presenting some facts taken from standard authorities, and the depositions of witnesses on the hearings before the committee that truly describe them.

Under the Spanish rule negro slaves were imported in large numbers from Africa to all the tropical countries of America, and especially to those places where the conditions of climate and health were least favorable to Spanish occupancy.

The islands and coasts of the Caribbean Sea were the favorite plantation localities for these reasons, and the negroes were employed in raising profitable crops of sugar, coffee, tobacco, cacao, and tropical fruits and nuts that would bear exportation.

The Carib Indians, whose home was in the Leeward Islands—chiefly in St. Vincent and Dominica—are the only aborigines who have withstood the civilization of the white man and the competition of the negro, and this has resulted most largely from the fact that they are a race closely allied, in color and other physical conditions, with the negro.

The English, in 1796, to get rid of the strife they habitually engendered, moved them in large numbers to the isthmian countries, chiefly to Honduras.

They intermarried with the negroes and have bred a mestizo race, very extensively, of whom there are large numbers in Panama. They have not been allowed to settle in Nicaragua or Costa Rica.

All the isthmian states abolished slavery when they achieved their independence of Spain in 1821, after much effort and commotion, but with little bloodshed.

Panama became an independent state, with a population of negroes, Caribs, and native Indians that comprised about two-thirds of its inhabitants, all of whom, with the people of Spanish origin, were put upon an equal basis as to political rights.

Panama was a separate, sovereign state, by the recognition of Spain, and entered into a federation with Colombia, Venezuela, and other states of South America, called the "Republic of Colombia," of which Simon Bolivar was President.

In 1831 Venezuela withdrew from the federal government and Panama entered into another confederation, called the "Republic of New Granada." Civil war ensued upon this new combination, and Panama declared its independence of New Granada in 1840, and again returned to that confederation in 1841. The bond of union between these States was slack, and the separate independence of Panama was the political ideal of some adroit men (some of whom were negroes), who numbered nearly the entire body of negroes, Caribs, and Indians in their following.

In this period, from 1821 to 1846, Panama was in continual political ebullition, strife, and civil war over the offices of the State and federal government. To such an extent was this carried that the government of New Granada was put to much expense in supplying armed forces to sustain its authority in Panama.

The following brief extracts from Bancroft's History of Central America will show the political conditions in Panama down to 1846, when the United States undertook, by treaty, to guarantee to New Granada the ownership and sovereignty over Panama. They will also make clear the reasons of New Granada for seeking that guaranty.

If that treaty of 1846–1848 discloses any corresponding inducement to the United States for making such engagements I have failed to discover it.

I wish to say here that in the researches I have been able to make that is the only treaty of this kind in the world. It is the only treaty in which a foreign government engages to maintain the supremacy of another foreign government over one of its dependencies or provinces, or whatever the political division may be called.

The treaty is entirely sui generis. It is entirely without precedent. It is in all of its features, as I conceive, the most dangerous treaty that could be made. It is a guaranty on the part of the United States that it makes no difference what Colombia may do to Panama, or what the extent and nature and character of the abuses of Panama may be, we will still guarantee the sovereignty and the ownership of Colombia over Panama, notwithstanding justice and mercy might call upon us in trumpet tones to reverse our line of action and discard the obligation of that treaty.

That is the way we bound ourselves in 1846 to the State of Colombia, and we are bound there now. The proposition now brought before the Senate in the convention which Colombia submits to us as the description and basis of her future relations with the United States requires us to go very much further and to enable her to put these chains and rivets more tightly upon the limbs of Panama than we have heretofore done, and we have done very much in that direction.

On page 514 of volume 8 of his history Bancroft says:

Civil war broke out in 1831. Colonel Alzuru, who had arrived from Guiaquil with troops, by the instigation of some prominent men rose in arms in Panama to detach the provinces from Nueva Granada. On the news reaching Bogota the National Government dispatched Col. Tomas Herrera with a force to quell the rebellion, and upon his approaching the city the more prominent families fled to the island of Taboga. Those who had prompted Alzuru's act now forsook him and rendered aid to Herrera, with all the information they possessed. The rebels were attacked on their way to La Chorrera while crossing marshy ground and defeated. Alzuru was taken prisoner, tried by court-martial, and shot in the Cathedral plaza of Panama.

Gen. Jose Fabrega restored order in Veragua and made it known to the general Government on the 30th of August, 1831. The garrison at Panama, together with Tomas Herrera, the comandante-general, assured the president of the Nueva Granada convention of their unswerving fealty. Later, in March, 1832, an attempt was made by two subalterns to induce the sergeants of their battalion to join them in a conspiracy for upsetting the government.

The two officers were tried and executed and two of the sergeants sent into exile. Chaos reigned throughout the Republic in 1840; then came revolution. The chief men of Panama met in a junta and resolved to detach the Isthmus and form an independent republic.

It is the second time they tried that. On pages 515 and 516 he says:

The Government had carefully avoided the commission of any act of hostility against Nueva Granada; but the time came when news reached Panama that the government of Bogota was fitting out a force to bring the Isthmus into subjection. Whereupon the officers of the British chargé d'affaires at Bogota were asked to obtain the consent of Nueva Granada to receive a commissioner in the interest of peace.

But the other parts of Nueva Granada having become pacified in the course of 1841, two commissioners came from the General Government, and the people of Panama, being convinced of the folly of resistance, peacefully submitted. Herrera so managed that he was appointed governor of the restored province. The constitutional reforms of 1842 and 1843 tended to re-establish good understanding between the provinces, and Panama again appeared satisfied with the connection.

But the dread of a renewal of the insurrection caused New Granada to seek the protection of the United States. Almost immediately after we had guarantied the sovereignty of New Granada over Panama, in 1846–1848, the following events show the contempt in which the people of Panama held our intervention.

Bancroft says, pages 516 and 517:

The Canton de Alange, detached from Veragua, and the districts of David, Bolega, San Pablo, and Alange were, on the 24th of July, 1849, formed into a separate province under the name of Provincia de Chiriqui, with its governor and assembly of 7 members.

This organization continued several years, though the province subsequently took the name of Fabréga and so continued until August, 1851, when it resumed the former name of Chiriqui. The territory which in early days was embraced in the province of Veragua appeared in August, 1851, divided into three provinces, each having a governor and legislature, namely, Chiriqui, Veragua, and Azuero. This new arrangement lasted only till April 30, 1855, when the province of Azuero was suppressed.

On pages 518, 519, 520, 521, and 522 Bancroft says:

On the 26th of January, 1854, the consuls of the United States, France, Great Britain, Brazil, Portugal, Denmark, Peru, and Ecuador addressed a protest to the governor of Panama against the neglect of his Government to afford protection to passengers crossing the Isthmus, notwithstanding that each passenger was made to pay the sum of $2 for the privilege of landing and going from one sea to the other. Gov. Urrutia Anino, on the 14th of February, denied the alleged neglect, as well as the right of those officials who had no recognition from the New Granadan Government to address him in such a manner.

He pointed to the public jail, which was full of prisoners, some already undergoing punishment and others being tried or awaiting trial. He also reminded the consuls that only a short time had elapsed since three men were executed for crimes. It was a fact, nevertheless, that the Government could not cope with the situation, the Isthmus being infested with criminals from all parts of the earth, that had been drawn thereto by the prospect of plunder, in view of which a number of citizens and respectable foreigners combined in organizing the Isthmus guard, whose chief was Ran Runnels, charged with the duty of guarding the route between Panama and Colon, and empowered to punish, even with death, all persons guilty of crimes. Urrutia Anino, the governor, unhesitatingly acquiesced in the arrangement.

Americans had occasional misunderstandings with the authorities, a notable one occurring in 1855, when the local governor of Panama returned unopened an official letter from the consul of the United States, who at once threatened to strike his flag; but the matter was settled amicably by the chief officers of the Isthmus. A more serious affair was the demand of the State Government that steamships arriving at Panama and Colon should pay tonnage money. This raised the protest of the American consul and the railway and steamship agents. The controversy was finally terminated by the Executive of the Republic declaring that the law under which the tonnage money was claimed had been enacted by the State of Panama, without any right to legislate on such matters, as they were of the exclusive province of the general Government.

The lack of protection, as well as a marked spirit of hostility on the part of the lower class toward foreigners, was made further evident in the riot of the 15th of April, 1856, when a considerable number of American passengers were killed and others wounded, much property being also appropriated.

Consequent to this affair the city of Panama, which, owing to the misgovernment of previous years, was already on the decline, had to suffer still more. Many business houses closed their doors, because the American transient passengers, who during their stay were wont to scatter gold, thenceforth remained on shore only a few minutes. Much diplomatic correspondence passed between the American and New Granadan Governments on the subject, the former sending a commissioner to Panama to investigate the circumstances, and finally claiming a large indemnity.

At last a convention was concluded on the 10th of September, 1857, between Secretary Cass and Gen. P. A. Herran, minister of New Granada, for the settlement of all claims, the latter having acknowledged the responsibility of his Government for the injuries and damages caused by the riot.

The relations with Americans on the Isthmus continued to be unsatisfactory for some time longer. Notwithstanding that New Granada was apparently inclined to cordiality, cases of injustice or ill-treatment to American citizens often occurring, at last the President of the United States asked Congress, on the 18th of February, 1859, for power to protect Americans on the Isthmus. In later years Americans have seldom had any serious cause of complaint.

Bancroft describes the situation in 1854, page 525, as follows:

Nevertheless, the white population of Panama had been for some time past discontented with the General Government, and a desire had sprung up to get rid of a yoke which was deemed oppressive. The supreme authorities at Bogota were not aware of this, and whether prompted by the fear of losing the territory or by a sentiment of justice, or by both, concluded to allow the Isthmus the privilege of controlling their local affairs, which was hailed with joy by all classes.

An additional clause to the national constitution was then enacted by the New Granadan Congress on the 27th of February, 1855, by which Panama was made a State, and a member of the confederation, with the four provinces of Panama, Azuero, Chiriqui, and Veragua, its western boundary being such as might come to be fixed upon by treaty with Costa Rica. A constituent assembly of 31 members was convoked March 18 by the national executive, to meet at Panama on the 15th of July, to constitute the State.

The situation in 1855 he describes as follows (pp. 526 and 527):

A misunderstanding having occurred between the Jefe Superior and the assembly, the former resigned his office on the 28th of September, and having insisted on his resignation being accepted, Francisco Fabrega, who had been elected vice-governor on the 22d, was inducted into the executive office on the 4th of October.

Notwithstanding the hopes of a bright future, from this time the Isthmus was the theater of almost perpetual political trouble, and revolution became chronic, preventing any possible advancement. In 1856 there was a stormy electoral campaign that culminated in a coup d'état, for which the responsibility must be about equally divided between the executive, Francisco Fabrega, and the demagogues.

On pages 528, 529, and 530 he says:

Another outbreak of the negroes against the whites took place on the 27th of September, 1860, necessitating the landing of an armed force from the British ship Clio, which, after order was restored, returned on board.

This contest, out of which the liberal party came triumphant throughout the country, was known as "la revolucion de Mosquera." The minister of Nueva Granada in Washington, on the plea that a mere naval force could not afford security to the Isthmus transit, asked the United States to provide also a land force of 300 cavalry, but the request was not granted.

The efforts of Guardia to keep the Isthmus out of the general turmoil were of no avail. A force of about one hundred and fifty or two hundred men under Gen. Santo Coloma came from Cartagena to Colon with the apparent purpose of enabling the governor to carry out certain liberal measures. The latter protested against such a violation of a solemn agreement; but the force insisted on coming across to Panama, and there was no way of preventing it. In the course of a few weeks Guardia, being convinced that he was being employed as a puppet, removed himself from the capital to Santiago de Veragua.

As soon as he was gone, with the connivance of Santa Coloma, a party of men, all but one of whom were of the colored race, assembled at the town hall and deposed Guardia, naming one of their own party, Manuel M. Diaz, provisional governor. A few days after, on the 19th of August, in a skirmish between forces of the two factions, Governor Guardia and two or three others were killed.

In 1865 the situation is described as follows (pp. 534–535):

Olarte's election is represented as an enthusiastic one, and intended as a reward for the services he rendered to the better portion of the isthmian community, with his defeat of the caucano invaders (white invaders).

He found himself in a constant disagreement with the legislature of the State, which he forced to submit to his dictation. The whole negro party of the arrabal was his mortal enemy, but he managed to keep it under by making it feel occasionally the effect of his battalion's bullets. In the last attempt against his power the negroes were severely punished, and they never tried again to measure strength with him. His power was now more secure than ever, and his way became plain to procure the election, as his successor to the presidency, of his brother, then residing in Chiriqui.

The negroes were in despair, as they could find no means of seizing the government. From the time of Guardia's deposal they had been enjoying the public spoils, and could not bear the idea of being kept out of them when their number was four or five times larger than that of the white men. The success of Olarte's plans would be the death of their aspirations, which were the control of public affairs, by ousting the whites, who were almost all conservatives. It became, therefore, a necessity to rid the country of that ogre; and as this could not be done by force of arms poison was resorted to.

The plan was well matured and carried out in San Miguel, one of the Pearl Islands, where Olarte went on an official visit. Olarte's death occurred on the 3d of March, 1868, without his knowing that he had been poisoned. This crime was not the act of one man, but of a whole political party, which took care to have the death attributed to a malignant fever. It became public, however, through the family of another man, who also became a victim. No official or post-mortem examination was made, and the matter was hushed up.

Armed conflicts between the political parties were frequent in 1872 and 1873, with severe fighting, so that the United States was compelled to interfere. Bancroft says (pages 539 and 540):

The pichincha (battalion of national troops) interfered to restore Neira. After some firing it was agreed that Cervera should continue in power and Neira remain in the custody of the national force.

The national force having taken part in the troubles, its efficiency to protect the transit was rendered doubtful, for which reason troops were landed from the United States ships of war by order of Rear-Admiral Steedman. Finally, terms of peace were arranged in the evening of May 9, based on the conditions that Neira's government should be reestablished. The State militia surrendered their arms to the foreign consuls the next day, the pichincha performing the duties of the state force.

Meantime, till Neira's return, Col. Juan Pernett was to act as President. Neira heard of the change at Barranquilla on the 13th of May and returned at once. On the 21st he made Jose Maria Bermudez secretary of state and Colonel Pernett comandante general. The votes for senators and representatives to the National Congress were counted on the 15th of July, and the names of the elect were published.

The people of the arrabal made another disturbance on the 24th of September, attacking the Government outposts at Playa Prieta. Hostilities were continued during twelve or fourteen days, when the rebels under Correoso abandoned their ground and were afterwards defeated in the country. Meantime an American force of nearly 200 men, sent on shore by Rear-Admiral Alony, a second time within four months, occupied the railway station and the cathedral plaza.

The minister resident of the United States, William L. Scruggs, on the 19th of December, 1873, laid before the Colombian Government, of which Colunje was secretary of foreign affairs, a protest of the Panama Railway Company upon the recent disturbances of the Isthmus, and a demand that the transit should in future be under the immediate protection of the Colombian Government against the acts of violence of local factions. The latter acknowledged the justice of this demand on the 26th of December, pledging that in future there would be a national force stationed in Panama for the purpose of protecting the transit.

He thus describes the situation in 1876:

The presence of federal forces on the Isthmus had often been a source of danger to the State Government. But it was required by international obligation, and its necessity could but be recognized in view of the fact that the construction of the interoceanic canal, already under way, demanded the employment of thousands of men from all parts of the world, who in the event of strikes or other causes might commit outrages.

Constant strife continued through the years until 1885, when Bancroft describes the situation as follows (pp. 550–551):

The Isthmus now becomes again the theater of deadly strife, with its concomitant bloodshed and general destruction, to the disgrace of the nation of which it forms a part, and the scandal of the world. A plot by some men of the national force to seize the revenue cutter Boyaca having been detected, thanks to the loyalty of other members of the same force, the executive notified the convention that the time had come to proclaim martial law, which he did on the 9th of February. The convention accordingly closed its session on the 11th.

On the 17th Santodomingo Vila obtained a leave of absence to proceed to Cartagena, where his military services were required, and Pablo Arosemena, the first designado, was summoned to assume the executive authority. At about 5 o'clock on the morning of the 16th of March the population was awakened by the cries of "Vivan los liberales! viva el General Aizpuru!" accompanied with numerous shots. Aizpuru, at the head of about 250 men, attacked the cuartel de las Monjas and the tower of San Francisco, which was defended by a handful of Government troops, and a running fight from corner to corner ensued.

The assailants overran the city. The British war ship Heroine then landed some marines and sailors to protect the railroad. The President called for troops from Colon, which came at once under General Gonima, and, entering the city on the 17th, compelled the portion of the revolutionists who had remained in the city to rejoin their main body in the plains.

The following description of the events of March 29, 1885, give a correct idea of the feeling toward Americans existing all the while since the landing of marines by Rear-Admiral Alony, in September, 1873, pages 552, 553, 554, 555:

On the 29th of March the American mail steamer Colon arrived at the port of the same name from New York, and the Government directed that she should not deliver arms to the rebels. This gave rise to most high-handed proceedings on the part of Prestan, culminating in the arrest by his orders of the American consul, Mr. Wright; Captain Dow, general agent of the steamship line; Connor, the local agent at Colon; Lieutenant Judd and Cadet Midshipman Richardson, of the United States war steamer Galena.

Soon afterwards Richardson was released and sent on board the Galena to tell his commander, Kane, that the other prisoners would be kept in confinement till the arms were surrendered, and if the Galena attempted to land men or to do any hostile act the boats would be fired upon, and every American citizen in the place would be shot. Kane, knowing Prestan's character, did not attempt any hasty act. Prestan then went to the prison and told Consul Wright that he must order Dow to deliver the arms or he would shoot the four prisoners before that night. Wright complied, and they were set at liberty.

But Kane took possession of the Colon, and in the night landed a force and three pieces, under Lieutenant Judd, with orders to release at all hazards Dow and Connor, who had been again imprisoned. No sooner had the Americans occupied the offices of their consulate and of the railway and Pacific Mail companies than a force of Colombian national troops came on, driving the rebels before them into the intrenchments.

During the whole morning the firing was kept up, and ended about 12 noon when the rebels were routed; Prestan and his rabble set fire to the town at various places and fled. A strong wind blowing, the flames spread violently, and the town was consumed with all its contents. The American forces continued some days longer holding the place, Commander Kane's authority being recognized, and the Colombian officers cooperating with him in the preservation or order.

Prestan was captured, taken out to sea in an open boat, and drowned. He was thrown overboard with a weight attached to his body.

But to return to Panama, Aizpuru took advantage of the situation, Gonima being left with only 60 soldiers and a few civilians that had joined him to occupy the principal streets on the 31st. To make the story short, by 3 o'clock in the afternoon he was master of the place, Gonima having surrendered.

Aizpuru announced in a proclamation on the 1st that he had assumed the functions of jefe civil y militar, to which he had been called by the supporters of free political principles, and on the 4th appointed his advisers and adopted measures to protect the city from incendiarism, and especially to guard the interoceanic transit.

Marines and sailors having been landed on the 8th of April from the United States frigate Shenandoah, by Aizpuru's request, both ends of the Isthmus were on the 10th guarded by American forces. Soon after the United States sent reenforcements of marines and sailors with special instructions to protect the transit and American citizens and their interests, avoiding all interference in the internal political squabbles. Several war vessels of the United States home squadron, under Rear-Admiral Jouett, arrived at Colon.

In the night of the 24th of April, while the revolutionists were erecting barricades—against an understanding with the American commander—the marines under Commander McCalla took possession of the city as a necessary measure to protect American property, and Aizpuru and others were arrested. However, on the next day, Aizpuru having pledged himself not to raise barricades or batteries, the prisoners were released and the Americans retired to their encampment outside.

Aizpuru was one of the persons who offered to defeat the federal forces and annex Panama to the United States, if we would advance him the money to conduct his campaign.

The general situation is thus stated by Bancroft, pages 556, 557, and 558:

After the death of President Olarte, in 1868, the Isthmus for many years did not enjoy a single day of peace. The general wealth having declined throughout the country and more so in the interior; poverty prevailed. Capital, both foreign and native, abandoned so dangerous an abode. The cattle ranges and estates disappeared; likewise agriculture, except on a small scale.

The black men of the arrabal in the city of Panama, after they were made important factors in politics, accustomed themselves to depend on the public funds for a living, and the people of the interior, who were always peaceable and industrious, came to be virtually their tributaries. The State became the puppet of the men at the head of the national Government, or of political clubs at Bogota, whose agents incited disturbances, removing presidents indisposed to cooperate with or to meekly submit to their dictation, substituting others favorable to their purposes, and thus making themselves masters of the State Government, together with its funds, and with what is of no less import, the State's vote in national elections.

Since the establishment of the constitution of 1863, Panama has been considered a good field by men aspiring to political and social position without risking their persons and fortunes. They have ever found unpatriotic Panamenos ready to aid them in maintaining the quondam colonial dependence and investing them with power that they might grow fat together on the spoils. Almost every national election since the great war of 1860 has brought about a forced change in the State Government. The first victim, as we have seen, was Governor Guardia, deposed by national troops under Santo Coloma.

That was the beginning of political demoralization on the Isthmus. Every similar alleged device to insure party triumph and power at Bogota has been, I repeat, the work of agents from the national capital, assisted by men of Panama, to push their own interests, and supported by the federal garrison.

The office of chief magistrate is desired for controlling political power, and the public funds to enrich the holder and his chief supporters. Patriotism and a noble purpose to foster the welfare of the country and the people in general are, if thought of at all, objects of secondary consideration.

At times the presidency is fought for with arms among the negroes themselves, and the city is then a witness of bloody scenes. The aim of every such effort is to gain control of power for the sake of the spoils.

Panama can not, being the smallest and weakest State of the Colombian union, rid itself of the outside pressure. Neither can it crush the unholy ambition of its politicians. Both entail misfortunes enough. But the Isthmus must also share the same sufferings as the other States in times of political convulsion in the whole nation.

Bancroft closes his history of political and social conditions in Panama with a question that sets aside the proposal of Colombia for the joint control of a canal belt through the heart of that State by Colombia and the United States as a suggestion that is scarcely less than reckless folly.

On page 558 he says:

What is to be the future status of the Isthmus? A strong government is doubtless a necessity, and must be provided from abroad. Shall it assume the form of a quasi independent state under the protectorate of the chief commercial nations, eliminating Colombia from participation therein, or must the United States, as the power most interested in preserving the independence of the highway, take upon themselves the whole control for the benefit of all nations? Time will tell.

In this connection I will state, on authority that I know is thoroughly informed and credible, that Nunez, President of the Republic of Colombia, seriously proposed to sell Panama to the United States; and an ex-governor of Panama approached the minister of the United States with an offer to accept a loan of about $300,000, to be used in the establishment of the independence of Panama, when it would offer annexation to the United States.

The relations between Colombia and the State of Panama have been strained to the point of dissolution since 1862, and that is the cause of the reduction of Panama from sovereign statehood to that of a department in the present Republic of Colombia, and is now under a governor appointed by the President of the Republic.

The evidence taken by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals shows the same state of affairs in Panama, which these authentic historical statements fully verify.

The proposition of Colombia to make a lease of canal privileges at Panama to the United States brings into view at once the character of the people we are to deal with in the construction and control of such a canal and the provisions of the proposed convention under which we are to deal with them.

Having shown the character of those people by the highest historical authority, we must inquire as to the probability or possibility of being able to construct and control a canal in their midst with safety and success under the terms of the proposed convention as to their Government, at least within the limits of the canal zone.

This political history which has characterized Panama for three-quarters of a century is due to the peculiar and low grade of its population and to its isolated geographical position.

It has no valuable commercial or social relations with the other States of Colombia, and must always be a political appendix to that Government. Colon is at least fifteen days' travel from Bogota by the shortest and most rapid route of travel.

Mr. Bancroft is right when he says that it will require a strong government to control that native population of more than 100,000 in the State of Panama and the hordes of laborers and adventurers that inhabit the valley of the Chagres and Panama.

Such a divided authority as is proposed in the convention submitted for our acceptance by Panama would soon lead to the overthrow of useful government in the vicinity of the canal line and in the cities at its terminals, with such a mixed and turbulent people to be controlled.

When there is added to that difficulty the delicate and hazardous care that is to be given to a great ship canal and the commerce that is to pass through it, a divided jurisdiction is at once rejected by common sense as being outside of all reasonable hope of success.

To build a canal in such a country, with cities at both ends that are not under our control as to police powers, supported by judicial authority, or in the exercise of military power, only when Colombia shall from time to time give her consent, would be a most hazardous undertaking. We would be there only a short time until we would be compelled to assert sovereign authority over the department of Panama, contrary to our treaty pledges to protect Colombia in her sovereignty. This would lead to war, and war would lead to annexation, and that would violate our national honor pledged to Great Britain and to the whole world, in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, as to the neutrality of the canal when the sovereignty over that country is in the United States. That could never be.

But, above all, it would poison the minds of the people against us in every Spanish-American Republic in the Western Hemisphere, and set their teeth on edge against us, to annex Panama. Besides, it would tarnish our national honor to enter Panama under the pledge that our purpose is to build a canal and follow it with the annexation of Panama; and no actual necessity for annexation, however imperative it may be, would ever excuse or palliate that result, in the opinion of the Spanish-American people. If this is to be, or if it may be, as a necessity for the protection of the canal, it would be the most dangerous national pitfall into which we could plunge.

We can purchase Panama from Colombia for less than $40,000,000 if we were base enough to make the bargain, and let the Panama Canal Company work out their concession, which would then be under our control, if they can do so, or forfeit it if they can not complete the canal. I do not by any means advise or tolerate such a course, but I can not refuse to see that it would be easily practicable, and if we know, as we must, that the United States will be forced to annex Panama, as the only means of preserving our property, and almost unavoidable, if we build the canal under the convention proposed by Colombia.

Wisdom, honor, and public faith require that we should even purchase Panama rather than enter upon a plan that will force the United States to exercise sovereign jurisdiction over the canal and railroad through the necessity of providing for their protection.

If we intend to assume an attitude that will compel us to control the canal as a sovereign in order to protect it, let us buy the country and build the canal or let the Panama Canal Company build it under the existing concession.

If we chose to be false to our obligation (a very peculiar one, I admit) to keep Panama subject to the sovereignty of Colombia, without regard to the right or humanity of such an engagement, there is no doubt that Panama would eagerly seek protection under the folds of the flag of the United States to escape the sort of rule that Colombia would impose upon her, through our pledged assistance. I can understand how the United States can pledge her protection to a sovereign state against a foreign country that invades it, but I can not understand how a pledge of protection for the sovereignty of a state over one of its departments can be just or lawful, since it is a pledge to interfere in the national affairs of a state.

If Colombia should oppress Panama would we protect her against the revolt of the people of Panama on account of such wrongs? If we did so protect Colombia against such a revolt we would be interfering in her internal affairs, and if we did not compel the submission of Panama, without reference to her wrongs or sufferings, we would violate our treaty obligations to Colombia. It is a dangerous situation, in which Colombia can compel us to aid her in the oppression of her own people, and it is this that the proposed convention pledges us to do.

There is little doubt that Colombia would get rid of this thorn that has rankled in her bosom for sixty years and is now fighting her with gallant and determined energy if we would pay her the $40,000,000 we are asked to vote to the Panama Canal Company for a canal that it is not able to complete, and that France will not aid it to complete. With a claim of title that is strong enough only to excite discussion among the lawyers and to promote speculation among stock gamblers, and with a reputation that the Isthmian Canal Commission has stamped as criminal, in its final report to the President, we would purchase troubles and evils that we can neither foresee nor provide against if we purchase the Panama Canal.

If we must encounter these adverse and disreputable conditions in order to get a canal, let us clear the field of all doubt and all reproach by the annexation of Panama, for it will come to that at last. When we see that such a result will necessarily follow the plan of the proposed substitute, why should we hesitate to provide for it at the outset?

Taking into view only the chronic condition of political disturbance between Panama and Colombia, it is impossible for us to anticipate anything but a continuance of those conditions in the future unless we change them by the strong arm of sovereign power.

Under the proposed arrangement as provided in the substitute before the Senate and by the proposed convention we are compelled to choose one of three alternatives. We must compel the absolute subjection of Panama to Colombia or we must take sides with her and make her independent, or else we must make Panama a part of or a dependency of the United States.

The Liberal or antichurch party in Colombia and in adjoining republics is engaged in bitter strife and active hostilities against Colombia. It was this situation that caused the peculiar and offensive provision of Articles III and IV of the proposed convention with Colombia, copied in Appendix A to the report of the committee, as follows:

ARTICLE III.

All the stipulations contained in article 35 of the treaty of 1846-1848 between the contracting parties shall continue and apply in full force to the cities of Panama and Colon and to the accessory community lands within the said zone, and the territory thereon shall be neutral territory, and the United States shall continue to guarantee the neutrality thereof and the sovereignty of Colombia thereover, in conformity with the above-mentioned article 35 of said treaty.

In furtherance of this provision there shall be created a joint commission by the Governments of Colombia and the United States that shall establish and enforce sanitary and police regulations.

This and the memorandum prefixed to the draft of the convention renews all our obligations of the guarantee of the sovereignty of Colombia over Panama and her right of property in that State.

Not content with that, and moved by the present belligerent attitude of the people of Panama, Colombia makes this further demand in Article IV:

ARTICLE IV.

The rights and privileges granted to the United States by the terms of this convention shall not affect the sovereignty of the Republic of Colombia over the territory within whose boundaries such rights and privileges are to be exercised.

The United States freely acknowledges and recognizes this sovereignty and disavows any intention to impair it in any way whatever or to increase its territory at the expense of Colombia or of any of the sister republics in Central or South America, but, on the contrary, it desires to strengthen the power of the republics on this continent and to promote, develop, and maintain their prosperity and independence.

The guaranty of protection given in the treaty of 1846–1848 to Colombia over Panama is stated by the Panama Canal Company to be one of its valuable assets under the concessions made to it by Colombia. It is its most valuable asset, since Colombia, unaided, can not protect that canal from seizure by the people of Panama.

Panama was degraded from a State to a department by Colombia, and the proposed convention pledges the United States to confirm that act, which excites the rebellion of Panama, and will make those people our relentless enemies. It then proceeds to pledge the United States to "strengthen the power of the republics on this continent," including Colombia. Thus we are to be involved in pledges made to every republic in South America.

There can be no mistake as to these purposes, and none as to the offensive and derogatory declaration that the United States disavows any intention to impair the sovereignty of the Republic of Colombia over Panama "in any way whatever, or to increase its territory at the expense of Colombia or of any of the sister republics in Central or South America."

This provision, no doubt, was also intended to prohibit the United States from acquiring exclusive canal rights in Nicaragua and Costa Rica under the offensive admission that, but for such a pledge, our purpose and policy toward the Central and South American republics is to increase our territory at their expense.

The unpublished records of the State Department contain accounts of overtures from Colombia to sell Panama to the United States, and overtures from Panama for annexation to the United States, unless those records have been lost or destroyed, but such is the fact, but the overtures fell upon unwilling ears. We are now bound to sustain Colombia as sovereign and owner of Panama against any wrong or depredation she may inflict upon these States.

Colombia is in no situation to demand from the United States the disavowal of any intention to increase our territory at her expense, while we have kept our pledges to her at great expense and trouble to our Government. But those articles, 4 and 5, are part of a plan for the joint government of the canal zone by the United States and Colombia through joint commissions and the exclusive government of the cities of Panama and Colon and of all territory outside that zone by Colombia.

Inside the zone all sanitary and police regulations are to be made by a joint commission and "established and enforced" by them. The joint government of the canal zone, as to the regulations for police and sanitary purposes, and as to their enforcement, comprehends everything relating to the preservation of the public peace and the public health that could be enforced by sovereign authority.

These essential matters, that are indispensable to canal construction, regulation, and management, are the points where governments come most directly in contact with the people. A joint government in such matters is an impossible situation unless one of the governments has the mastery over the other.

Under this convention, if it should be accepted by the United States, Colombia being the only sovereign power that is recognized as existing there, its will would give supreme control and direction to the joint commission.

It is inconceivable that a peaceful administration of such power could be conducted in the midst of such a population, or that we could escape war with Colombia on the first serious disagreement as to the government of the canal zone.

With such places as Colon and Panama outside the canal zone, yet with Colon between the canal and the ocean and Panama on the margin of the zone, it would be impossible to execute quarantine or police regulations without constant conflicts with those people, and they would inevitably lead to war.

This situation, created by Article IV of the proposed convention, is greatly aggravated by Article XIII, which leaves all the powers to dispose of controversies, civil and criminal, to be determined after the convention is ratified. Then the sovereign of the canal zone will exert its powers to prescribe "regulations," if they are not agreed upon, "to protect and make secure the canal as well as the railroad and other auxiliary works, and to preserve order and discipline among the laborers and other persons who may congregate in that region in consequence of the proposed work."

ARTICLE XIII.

The Governments of Colombia and the United States shall agree upon the regulations necessary for said purpose, as well as to the capture and delivery of criminals to the respective authorities. Special regulations also shall be agreed upon, in the manner aforesaid, for the establishment of laws and jurisdiction to decide controversies that may arise respecting contracts relative to the construction and management of the canal and its dependencies, as well as to the trial and punishment of crimes that may be committed within the said zone of the canal.

"The establishment of laws and jurisdiction to decide controversies that may arise respecting contracts relative to the construction and management of the canal and its dependencies" is the most important function of government that relates to the building of the canal and its ownership, control, and management.

There is no feature of this proposed convention that the United States could yield to the joint or separate control of Colombia with so little safety as this. No "special regulations" or general regulations can ever be adopted under which Colombia can participate in the creation of laws and jurisdiction to decide controversies respecting "contracts for the construction and management of the canal and its dependencies."

It would be a national humiliation and degredation to permit any country to unite with us in making laws and creating jurisdictions to decide as to contracts relative to the construction and management of a canal with our own means.

If such an arrangement could be possible, it should be made absolutely certain by the terms of the convention before it is ratified. Leaving such provisions open to future arrangement and definition is only to invite contention which will end in controversy and lead to war.

The probabilities of rupture and conflict between the United States and Colombia are greatly increased—indeed, they are inevitable—under Article XXIII of the proposed convention, as follows:

ARTICLE XXIII.

If it should become necessary at any time to employ armed forces for the safety or protection of the canal, or of the ships that make use of the same, or the railways and other works, the Republic of Colombia agrees to provide the forces necessary for such purpose, according to the circumstances of the case; but if the Government of Colombia can not effectively comply with this obligation, then, with the consent of or at the request of Colombia, or of her minister at Washington, or of the local authorities, civil or military, the United States shall employ such force as may be necessary for that sole purpose; and as soon as the necessity shall have ceased will withdraw the forces so employed.

Under exceptional circumstances, however, on account of unforeseen or imminent danger to said canal, railways, and other works, or to the lives and property of the persons employed upon the canal, railways, and other works, the Government of the United States is authorized to act in the interest of their protection, without the necessity of obtaining the consent beforehand of the Government of Colombia; and it shall give immediate advice of the measures adopted for the purpose stated; and as soon as sufficient Colombian forces shall arrive to attend to the indicated purpose those of the United States shall retire.

The necessity of employing armed forces to protect the canal and the railroad at Panama has existed on many occasions during the past fifty years, and has cost us heavily for naval expeditions to both coasts of Panama, and now we have war ships at Panama and at Colon for that purpose.

In every instance the cause of disturbance has been political, and in the majority of cases has been the result of the dissatisfaction of the people of Panama with the Government of Colombia. Such is the case in the present war, which has lasted for nearly two years.

Colombia has no power under the treaty of 1846–1848, which is the authority for our action, to dismiss our forces or to order them away from Panama when her troops have appeared on the scene of action. But that right is distinctly, arrogantly, and offensively reserved in Article XXIII of the proposed convention; that is to say, that while we are defending the sovereignty of Colombia over Panama and the canal and railroad that belongs to the Panama Canal Company and to Colombia we can remain at our post of duty until we consider that our full duty has been performed; but when we enter upon the defense of a canal that we have built and a railroad that we have bought, "as soon as sufficient Colombian forces shall arrive to attend to the indicated purpose those of the United States shall retire."

That is a situation that places the canal and the railroad under the exclusive military control of Colombia, at her option; and when such a power is once used by Colombia it will not be relaxed until it is wrested from her by force.

It is quite unnecessary to discuss a proposal that is certain to produce armed conflict whenever the occasion may present, or to characterize the absurdity of the attitude of Colombia in demanding our protection of the canal and railroad, under the treaty of 1846–1848, while they are in possession of the French and are under her protection, and that we shall desist, at her bidding, from protecting them, when they have become the property of the United States. If, in the history of diplomacy, a more absurd proposition was ever advanced, it must have been insincere, or else it must have proceeded from a conqueror to some beaten enemy as the terms of a capitulation.

I will not now go into a further examination of the many reasons why this proposed convention can not furnish the safe basis of concessions from Colombia. My first purpose and duty, as I think, being to show that the existing conditions in Panama are such as to warn us off from that dangerous ground and that these conditions are made still more dangerous by the terms of the proposed convention. I also wish to point out that this convention can not be sanctioned or recommended by Congress as being respectful to the Government of the United States.

If the provisions of this proposed convention are connected with the letters of its advocate to the President and the Secretary of State, as shown in the former reports of this committee and in the deposition of H. Lampre, it will be seen that it only completes a scheme of the attorney of the Panama Canal Company to defeat legislation in favor of the Nicaraguan Canal route and that many astute devices have been contrived for the purpose.

I do not intend now to discuss that feature of the transaction. I think enough has been shown, aside from the questions of engineering, health, commercial value, military and naval advantages, and cost, that will be more fully examined by others, to show that, under the concessions proposed by Colombia, or under the political conditions existing in Panama, it is impossible that the United States can undertake to purchase and complete the Panama Canal. That it will not only embroil us with Panama, Colombia, and, possibly, with other American republics, but that it will plunge the entire canal question in a darker cloud of doubt and uncertainty than that from which it has so recently been relieved, after a struggle of a half century of sickening delay.

If the amendment offered as a substitute to the House bill is intended to carry into effect the convention proposed by Colombia and sent to Congress by the Secretary of State as an official document, it will be seen on even a slight examination that it is not by any means suited to accomplish that purpose.

The substitute and the proposed convention are in direct conflict in many points. The substitute was offered in the Senate and reported upon by its committee before the draft of the convention was presented to the Secretary of State. They are entirely independent and entirely repugnant propositions.

There is no proposition before the Senate to accept the proposed convention and enact it into law. Indeed, such acceptance is impossible, according to its terms, because it can only be binding on Colombia after the congress of that Republic has authorized the concessions it proposes to make.

If, therefore, the substitute is enacted by Congress, it can only mean delay until it can be seen whether Colombia will change her offer of concessions to conform to the requirements of the substitute.

It will change the whole current of legislation into an offer of terms by the United States to Colombia as to the concessions to be acquired, which Colombia has already notified us that she will not accept.

Such a movement, if it is not intended for delay, can produce no other result than the defeat of all canal legislation.

The substitute recommended by a minority of the committee for the House bill reported by the majority does not leave the choice of canal routes to the judgment and discretion of the President.

The President can not acquire "control of the necessary territory from Costa Rica and Nicaragua for the construction, maintenance, operation, and protection of a canal by the Nicaragua route" until he has made the effort and is "unable to obtain for the United States a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company and such control of the necessary territory of the Republic of Colombia, mentioned in sections 1 and 2 of this act, within a reasonable time and upon reasonable terms."

"Then the President" shall take up the Nicaragua route and proceed to obtain the control of it.

I suppose this statement of the provisions and purposes of the substitute will not be questioned or denied.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, not only that, but if the officers of the Government to whom is remitted the question as to whether a satisfactory title can be had at Panama report in the affirmative, then the hands of the President are bound. He is bound, then, to build the canal at Panama, paying those people $40,000,000, whether he thinks it is the better place or not.

Mr. MORGAN. It can hardly be that Congress would require the President to make a contract with Colombia and at once violate it by making a contract in similar or identical terms with Costa Rica and Nicaragua for the control of territory in those States.

The test of the question as to the meaning of the proposed substitute to the House bill is conclusive when the question is asked, Can the President reverse the prescribed order of proceeding and first make the effort to acquire the control of the Nicaragua route, and that he shall only attempt to acquire the control of the Colombia route when that effort has failed?

The President would violate the law, if this substitute is enacted, if he should conclude an agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, without having first made an effort to agree with Colombia. This plan of dealing with this subject is wholly at variance with the popular notion that this proposed substitute leaves the choice of routes to the untrammeled judgment and discretion of the President. There is no such provision and there is no such purpose in the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. It was not intended that there should be.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose not. It was intended to compel Congress to decide first in favor of Colombia or against it.

On the contrary, it requires him to exhaust his efforts to acquire the route through Colombia, and if he finds himself unable to do this he is authorized to make an effort to acquire the control of the Nicaragua route.

If the substitute is adopted, the Colombian route is adopted as the choice of Congress, and the Nicaragua route is only a second or alternative choice, which the President is authorized to make if the first choice can not be satisfactorily obtained.

That this is the careful and well-guarded purpose of the substitute is shown by the fact that section 3 makes a specific appropriation of $40,000,000 "to pay for the property of the New Panama Canal Company," and to the Republic of Colombia such sum as shall have been agreed upon, and a sum sufficient for both said purposes is hereby appropriated.

The sum to be paid to the New Panama Canal Company is fixed at $40,000,000, and is payable upon the sole conditions that the President shall have obtained a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company, described in section 1 of the substitute, and the control of the necessary territory from the Republic of Colombia, as provided in section 2 of the substitute.

The property of the New Panama Canal Company is the only property or rights upon which a specific price is fixed and ordered to be paid. All the rest is left to be agreed upon by the President.

The New Panama Canal Company is the star performer in the drama, and when we have provided its compensation all other considerations become matters of minor concern.

The substitute fixes this sum of $40,000,000 upon the title of Colombia as an incumbrance, and instead of requiring her to remove it on the payment of that sum to her and requiring her to remove it and guarantee her title to the United States free of all incumbrance, we are to pay it off and take Colombia's title with no guaranty whatever that the title of the Panama Canal Company is free of incumbrance.

If the substitute is passed it authorizes the President to ascertain what is "the property of the New Panama Canal Company," and when he has done that he is authorized to obtain "satisfactory title" to that property of the company.

If it has "rights, concessions, grants of land, right of way, unfinished work, plants, maps, plans, drawings, records, and other property, real, personal, and mixed, which it owns on the Isthmus of Panama and in Paris, including 6,863 shares of the Panama Railroad Company," that is the property for which the President is authorized to pay $40,000,000.

If it has money or other stocks in Paris or elsewhere, the President is not authorized to claim or purchase that under this act, if the substitute is adopted.

No inventory of the property is provided for in the substitute, and no provision is made for ascertaining its description or value or whether the title is free from incumbrance. All the requirements of the law are complied with if he obtains "a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company." If that corporation is entitled to convey its property the title must be satisfactory. The property corresponding to the classifications in section 1 of the substitute, whether it is much or little, is to be paid for at the price of $40,000,000.

It does not bind the company to convey all its property of certain descriptions or to supply any inventory or memorandum of the items or any valuation of them.

It has been loudly heralded that this is a business proposition. If it is, it is time that our business methods were improved and that the star performer in the drama was required to come down to facts and figures.

Is Congress never to know more about this transaction than is disclosed on the face of this proposed substitute?

Is the unlimited discretion of the President in the expenditure of $40,000,000 for the property of which there is no description, except by classes, without reference to its actual value, to be covered only by his warrant on the Treasury without the scrutiny or approval of Congress? Such is "the business method" of this substitute.

This matter requires very careful examination, which I am not endeavoring to give to it, because I am only engaged now in presenting the questions to the Senate that arise on the House bill and the proposed substitute. I am only touching the promontory points of the counter project to the bill, which are plainly unsound and unsafe.

In this $40,000,000 gift to a corporation of France, under the guise of a purchase of property that inevitable bankruptcy induces them to sacrifice in order to divert the proceeds from their honest creditors into their own pockets, there is much circumspection necessary if we would not disparage the fair name of the United States by greedily seizing a proffered bauble, gilded with fine gold, but full of corruption.

The New Panama Canal Company never had a capital stock that exceeded 63,000,000 francs, or $12,300,000, and it claims to be the owner of properties of the old Panama Canal Company, valued by the new company at $109,000,000 in February, 1901, which cost the stockholders and bondholders of the old company more than $350,000,000. Some of the leading stockholders in the new company were compelled to take stock in it, and so to provide a life buoy for the old company, as a condonation of the frauds they had perpetuated on the old company. For these frauds some of them stood convicted in the courts and were released from punishment because they agreed to float the old company on the back of this new or reorganized company. But I will let the Isthmian Canal Commission tell that story in their own way.

In their final report they say:

> Six hundred thousand shares had been subscribed to be paid for in cash, and 50,000 shares were given as full-paid stock to the Colombian Government in compliance with the terms of the extension of the concession, dated December 23, 1890. Thus the cash capital of the company was 60,000,000 francs, or $11,640,000, a sum deemed sufficient for the provisional operations contemplated. The scandals connected with the failure of the old company, which had led to the prosecution and conviction of De Lesseps and other prominent persons, had made it difficult to secure even that amount.
>
> Suits had been brought against certain loan associations, administrators, contractors, and others who were supposed to have unduly profited by the extravagant management of the old company. A series of compromises were made with these persons, by which it was agreed that they should subscribe for stock in the new company on condition that the suits should be dropped. Whatever amount remained to make up the 60,000,000 francs, after deducting the sums thus obtained and those to be obtained by public subscription, was to be subscribed by the liquidator. The stock was subscribed as follows, viz:

	Francs.
Eiffel	10,000,000
Crédit Lyonnais	4,000,000
Société Générale	4,000,000
Crédit Industriel et Commercial	2,000,000
Administrators of the old company	7,885,000
Artigue, Sonderegger & Co	2,200,000
Baratoux, Letellier & Co	2,200,000
Jacob heirs	750,000
Couvreux, Hersent & Co	500,000
Various persons to the number of 60 who had profited by syndicates created by the old company	3,285,700
Hugo Oberndorffer	3,800,000
Public subscription	3,484,300
The liquidator	15,895,000
Total	60,000,000

> See fourth report of the liquidator to the court, dated November 26, 1895, pages 8, 9, and 13.
>
> The old company and the liquidator had raised by the sale of stock and bonds the sum of $246,706,431.68. The securities issued to raise this money had a face value of $435,559,382.80. The number of persons holding them is estimated at over 200,000.

The substitute for the House bill was prepared with a most optimistic conjecture as to what Colombia would propose in the way of concessions to the United States to induce us to complete the Panama Canal. The result is very disappointing to those who have $40,000,000 suspended on this speculation.

Section 2 of the substitute requires that the terms of the concessions from Colombia shall be such as the "President may deem reasonable."

The offer of Colombia is an annual rental of $500,000, of which $7,000,000 shall be paid in advance. The rental to be changed to a higher or lower figure, as shall be fixed by arbitrators at the end of fourteen years, and again at the end of one hundred years, but it is $500,000 a year. It will never be less; it may be more.

Fifty million dollars rent for one hundred years is scarcely reasonable for the use of the canal, when we have paid $180,000,000 to construct it, with interest and betterments to be added.

This demand is conclusive of the fact that Colombia does not want the canal, or that she thinks the United States is an easy victim of extortion.

The substitute demands "control in perpetuity" of a ship canal route through Colombia.

The Colombian convention concedes a lease for one hundred years, subject to the payment of rent and renewable at the end of that period for another hundred years, subject to such rent as then may be agreed upon or awarded by arbitrators.

The substitute demands that the canal zone shall be "a strip of land 10 miles wide from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean," which would include the cities of Panama and Colon, besides much public land.

The Colombian convention includes a strip of land only 6 miles wide from the coast of the Bay of Colon to the coast of the Bay of Panama, which is 105 miles shorter than the strip required by the substitute, and from which Colon and the city of Panama are expressly excluded.

The substitute for the House bill, with wise forecast and the necessary provision for self-preservation, demands, even in case we should acquire only a controlling interest in the canal in a sort of coparcenery with Columbia, that the United States shall have "jurisdiction over said strip and the ports at the ends thereof to make such police and sanitary rules and regulations as shall be necessary to preserve order and preserve the public health thereon, and to establish such judicial tribunals thereon as may be necessary to enforce such rules and regulations." This well-devised but incomplete demand of rights that are indispensable to the safety of the canal and our control over it is broken through by the arrogant demands of the convention proposed by Colombia as a mogul engine would break through a wicker fence.

Instead of the exclusive police and sanitary jurisdiction of the United States in the canal zone, we are excluded from such jurisdiction in Colon and Panama city, and are required to establish and keep up waterworks in those towns during the life of the proposed lease. Within the canal zone police and sanitation and the laws that regulate them and the execution of those laws are to be provided by a joint commission appointed by the respective governments.

As to the "regulations necessary to preserve order and preserve the public health in the zone, and to establish such judicial tribunals thereon as may be necessary to enforce such regulations," the Colombian convention confides them to a joint commission to be appointed by the respective governments.

I am dealing only with the substitute for the House bill, and pointing out the havoc the Colombian convention has made in its requirements, and will in the course of my remarks point out the aggressions that Colombia proposes to make upon us which seem not to have entered into the imagination of the framer of the substitute, as no provision is made against them.

They evince an insolent and accusing temper against the United States that condemns that proposed convention to diplomatic contempt as a gratuitous impeachment of our national honor.

The shock of the conflict is so severe between the propositions of legislation stated in the proposed substitute to the House bill and the proposed convention of Colombia that I do not see how it is possible to reconcile them or to get these measures into harmony so as to make a friendly disposition of the $40,000,000 that the substitute to the House bill requires Congress to appropriate and to be paid to the New Panama Canal Company; and I think it certain that the American people will agree with the committee in the recommendation that our Government had better wash its hands of the entire scheme.

The alternative proposition of acquiring the right and of constructing the canal on the Nicaraguan route, as stated in sections 4, 5, and 6, is in substance the same as the provisions of the House bill now before the Senate. The difference between them is that, in passing the House bill, Congress would do its duty in selecting the route for the canal, and would still leave it open to the President to interpose his constitutional right of objection, if he should be of opinion that Congress had made an unwise choice.

None of these questions hang over the Nicaragua route, as to which there are no difficulties as to the population or as to insurrections, where all the people are anxiously awaiting the coming of the United States to their assistance, with eager hopes and a warm welcome, to their fertile, healthy, and beautiful land.

A legal situation was created by diplomatic agreement, in writing and under seal, in December, 1900, in the following language:

Protocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Nicaragua in regard to future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Nicaragua.

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near San Juan del Norte on the Caribbean Sea via Lake Nicaragua to Brito on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreements, in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal.

As preliminary to such future negotiations it is forthwith agreed that the course of said canal and the terminals thereof shall be the same that were stated in a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on February 5, 1900, and now pending in the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and that the provisions of the same shall be adhered to by the United States and Nicaragua.

In witness whereof the undersigned have signed this protocol and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at Washington this 1st day of December, 1900.

[SEAL.] JOHN HAY.
[SEAL.] LUIS F. COREA.

The agreement with Costa Rica of the same date is in the same language.

The language of these agreements was taken from the House bill, then pending in the Senate in the Fifty-sixth Congress, and is the same in the House bill No. 3110, now before the Senate for consideration. Costa Rica and Nicaragua have informed the Secretary of State that they insist upon the submission of their respective agreements to Congress for its action. This is done to make the distinct acknowledgment that the agreements are binding on them notwithstanding the fact that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, referred to in those agreements, was not ratified, the subsequent treaty, which was ratified, being the same in substance with the former treaty so far as it affects these States or their agreements.

The passage of the bill now before the Senate would make those agreements binding on those Republics, according to their terms.

The authorization of the President by Congress to make such acquisitions of the control of their territory for canal purposes is the condition upon which the agreements are to be binding, and when that is given the obligation is completely binding and irrevocable. What those Republics have done is to make the concessions stated in their agreements, if Congress will authorize him to acquire the rights described therein, and the contract is of perfect obligation when Congress gives him such authority.

In the bill before the Senate such authority is given to the President. Coupled with such authority is an appropriation, which he may use for the purpose of acquiring the rights therein designated, but can not use to acquire such rights from any other than the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. He is not compelled to pay anything for these rights. No price is put upon them either in the bill or in the contracts, and the price he shall pay, if any, is left to his just and legal discretion. These States agree further that they will enter into negotiations with the United States to arrange the details of the plan for the construction and control of the canal, but as to the route and terminals to which the exclusive canal rights apply the contract is forthwith binding when ratified by Congress.

The situation leaves the plan, arrangements, and compensation, if any, open to further negotiation when Congress has given the requisite authority to acquire the rights designated in those contracts of December, 1900.

Until such action is taken by Congress, the signatory powers could not conclude a final convention, because Costa Rica and Nicaragua desired the action of Congress as an assurance that the canal would not fail because of the indisposition of Congress to adopt the policy of the construction of the canal by the Government, to be under its exclusive ownership and control.

These States wisely and properly placed their offer before Congress for acceptance or rejection as the only satisfactory means of ascertaining whether the route they proposed to cede would be accepted by this Government, and whether Congress desired to abandon the former policy of constructing the canal through a corporation having a membership of private persons or of the three States concerned through the ownership of stock.

Now, in order that Congress may know the scope of the concessions so far as they are left undetermined by those contracts, Nicaragua has presented to the Secretary of State the draft of a convention, which sets forth in detail "the plan and the agreements in detail found necessary," in her opinion, "to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal."

If the House bill is passed by the Senate, this draft of a convention will be the basis of action by our diplomatic authorities in formulating and agreeing to a treaty to execute those agreements of December, 1900. The passage of the House bill will not be an acceptance of this draft of a convention as a concluded treaty, but it is a committal of Nicaragua as to the character and extent of the rights she offers to concede. It is a fair, open, and sincere avowal of the various provisions that she considers proper to be incorporated in the treaty, and of the terms in which she considers that they should be expressed.

No expression or intimation is given by the President, through the Department of State, as to the provisions of this paper, whether or not they are sufficient for all purposes, or are just, or whether they are written in the terms he would approve.

It is information officially received by the Secretary of State and officially communicated to Congress of an ascertained basis on which further negotiations will be conducted when Congress has determined that the Nicaragua route is chosen for an isthmian canal, if it shall so determine.

The draft of the convention submitted by Colombia has the same effect, except that there is no existing agreement with Colombia relating to any concession of the right to construct a canal through that Republic.

The agreement proposed by Colombia sets forth all that she is willing to concede to the United States, and all that she, at present, demands of the United States in the way of compensation for such concessions.

Colombia, in the draft of the convention submitted to the Secretary of State, and through him to the President, has given an official statement of what she proposes, and the same has been officially presented to Congress by the Secretary of State.

Thus the entire subject has been fully presented to Congress in the various reports that have been made, in both Houses, during a period of fifty years, and the question is, Shall it now be decided?

If I should consider only the toil and anxiety it has cost so many honorable and able men to bring this question to a final vote, I would feel inexpressible anxiety to reach that conclusion.

The Government has spent not less than $3,000,000 in explorations and surveys of isthmian canal routes, while the cost to private persons in making such examinations, and in work on the canal, has been more than $6,000,000 on the Nicaragua line and at least $350,000,000 on the Panama route.

The work done by private enterprise in searching out the best lines for a canal through the dense tropical jungles has been quite as useful to this great enterprise as the millions that have been spent by governments. No government has spent a dollar in aid of the construction of a canal at Panama or Nicaragua. The people have supplied all the money that has been expended in actual work on these canals, and the contributions have come from those who were the possessors of small means—the middle classes.

They were not tempted by the prospect of gain, but were moved by the nobler impulse of duty and the love that every generous spirit feels for doing all that is possible for the glory of his country and the benefit of coming generations. It is the body of the people that supplies the men, the means, and the courage to achieve the great conquests of civilization and progress. It is not the men who selfishly save their own interests. They always follow in rear of the column with the wagon train and make profit out of great enterprises and the great bankruptcies that often ensue, but these men must always be secured an enormous profit, with gilt-edged collateral, before they will turn a hand to help the country to increase its prosperity or to save it from ruin or distress.

These wreckers of great enterprises and salvage men are always alarmed at the dangers that threaten others, unless they are in a position to profit by their misfortunes. They oppose improvements by the Government because they furnish no opportunity to load mortgages upon public works and through them enormous burdens of interest and profits upon the industries of the country. Until the Government took hold of this canal question for the benefit of the people, the great capitalists looked with something akin to toleration at the canal enterprises that would probably furnish fresh opportunities for capital to levy severe contributions upon industry.

When the Government endeavored to come to the assistance of the people and essayed to use their taxpaying power for their benefit all was changed.

The great corporations that have power to place the commerce of the world in the grasp of transportation monopoly, and the capitalists who coin their credit into gold in the mints where corporation stocks are created, when they discover that the Government is about to come to the aid of the people, cry out against the effort as reckless folly and muster about Congress a display of scarecrows to frighten us from our propriety.

If they did not invade the dominion of truth and throw its votaries into the mire of defamation and attempted disgrace, their conduct would be less censurable. But they hesitate at nothing.

I have a motive in this work that is not personal. It is not the hope of winning the applause that is so dear to every honorable man. It relates, in the largest and most catholic sense, to the duty that rests upon the generation of Americans, as it has rested upon no other people or generation, to complete the physical and political geography of this hemisphere by the removal of the isthmian barrier to the union of the great oceans through a gateway that we alone are able to construct.

It is from this ability that this duty arises. If we have the ability and the opportunity, our failure to do this work can be attributed to nothing but moral weakness, engendered by the opposition of powerful private interests, or by the dread of some unseen or unknown force of nature that alarms the imaginations of men.

When Ferdinand de Lesseps lifted the first spade of earth from the line of the Suez Canal it was in one of the ancient mouths of the Nile, near a lake that covered an ancient city in the land of Goshen, where the tops of its temples were 50 feet below the surface of the water, but were plainly visible.

The land of Goshen had long been covered with silt from the Nile, and was a desert, through which the canal was dug.

Great Britain, using all its powers of diplomacy, caused the Sultan of Turkey to withhold his firman to authorize the Khedive of Egypt to do the work. De Lesseps had no government at his back and no money except private subscriptions and the assistance of Said Pasha, Khedive of Egypt, who bankrupted his estate to help a great cause.

We have nearly the entire body of 85,000,000 of people to encourage our work, and, if we choose, a Government that can stand the draft of more than a billion dollars from its Treasury, annually, without creating alarm or distress.

Under such favoring conditions I feel that Congress can do an act of kindness to a land that I love, and that is the hope that refuses to perish while success is possible.

I would change the sad conditions that are still roots of bitterness in the South, hidden beneath the ashes of a terrible destruction. I would brighten that land with the bloom of prosperous industry, and bring back to my brethren the consciousness that they live and move in the current of human affairs. I hope to see the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, the twin Mediterraneans of America, as busy with commerce as the bay of San Francisco.

I will read the names of the signers of the first report to the Senate of a bill to construct the Nicaraguan Canal. It was the unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and was signed by every member, each one claiming the privilege of signing it: John Sherman, chairman; George F. Edmunds, WILLIAM P. FRYE, William M. Evarts, JOHN T. MORGAN, Joseph E. Brown, H. B. Payne, J. B. Eustis.

All have gone to their account except three, but none of them ever wrote upon a page of American history a nobler contribution to its prosperity or a more beautiful tribute to their own characters than was written in the first report made in favor of this canal. Mr. George F. Edmunds, the early, intelligent, and magnificent friend of this system, has stood by it through evil and good report, and is to-day a warmer friend of it than I am.

Only two Senators of those who signed that report are now members of this body; but three of the number survive. Not one single tarnish of dishonor rests upon the names of any of those glorious men who have gone to their great account. If I could recall them to-day and ask them of what act of Senatorial work they were proudest, I believe they would say an effort to unite the oceans through Nicaragua by the canal.

I yield the floor to my colleagues on the committee, who will follow me in a more complete discussion of the matters involved in this great controversy.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I will address the Senate to-morrow at 2 o'clock on the pending bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to give notice that I shall follow the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] in a discussion of the bill.

MINNESOTA INDEMNITY SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLAPP. I hope the Senator will defer that motion for a few moments. I have here a joint resolution which, owing to a decision of the Supreme Court, it is very important for the State of Minnesota to have passed at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw his motion?

Mr. CULLOM. Has the joint resolution been considered by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. CLAPP. No; it does not relate to judicial matters.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withdraw the motion so that the joint resolution of the Senator from Minnesota may be considered.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 110) empowering the State of Minnesota to file selections of indemnity school lands upon public lands in Minnesota otherwise undisposed of, after the survey thereof in the field and prior to the approval and filing of the plat of survey thereof.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the State of Minnesota to make selections of indemnity school lands in lieu of lands in sections 16 and 36, granted to that State for school purposes and lost by reason of prior disposition thereof by the United States, or other causes, of any public lands in that State of which the survey thereof has been made in the field and which have not been otherwise disposed of, and to which no valid settlement right has attached; and any selections made prior to the approval and filing of the plat of survey are declared as valid and binding upon the United States as though the plat of survey of any such township had been approved and filed as aforesaid; but within thirty days from the date of filing of such selections the State shall cause notice to be published, in some newspaper of general circulation, to be designated by the proper district land officers within the vicinity of the lands selected, setting forth that the State has applied for the lands designated, and that the same are reserved thereby from any adverse appropriation, by settlement or otherwise, which publication shall be continued for thirty days from the first publication; and such indemnity school-land selections shall be subject to any modification or alteration of description and area rendered necessary by subsequent correction of the survey of any township wherein the lands so selected are situated.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALIFORNIA LAND GRANT.

Mr. BARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 5212.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield to the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] for the consideration of the bill named by him, but I hope I shall not be asked to yield by any other Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was going to ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for the consideration of a bill after the bill of the Senator from California shall have been concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will not ask that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. BARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5212) granting to the State of California 640 acres of land in lieu of section 16, township 7 south, range 8 east, San Bernardino meridian, State of California, now occupied by the Torres band or village of Mission Indians.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, before the word "band," to strike out "Torres," and insert "Torros;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of California 640 acres of land, to be selected by said State, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, from any of the unappropriated public lands of nonmineral character in said State, in lieu of section 16, township 7 south, range 8 east, San Bernardino meridian, State of California; and the selection by said State of the lands hereby granted, upon the approval of same by the Secretary of the Interior, shall operate as a waiver by the State of its right to said section 16, and thereupon said section 16 shall become a part of the reservation heretofore set apart for the use and occupancy of the Torros band or village of Mission Indians, of southern California, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 12, 1891, entitled "An act for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California," according to the terms and subject to the conditions imposed by said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting to the State of California 640 acres of land in lieu of section 16, township 7 south, range 8 east, San Bernardino meridian, State of California, now occupied by the Torros band or village of Mission Indians."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 5, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 4, 1902.

CONSULS.

Benjamin H. Ridgely, of Kentucky, now consul at Malaga, Spain, to be consul of the United States at Nantes, France, vice Joseph I. Brittain, nominated to be consul at Kehl, Germany.

Joseph I. Brittain, of Ohio, now consul at Nantes, France, to be consul of the United States at Kehl, Germany, vice Courtlandt K. Bolles, deceased.

Ross E. Holaday, of Ohio, to be consul of the United States at Santiago de Cuba, to fill an original vacancy.

Max J. Baehr, of Nebraska, now consul at Magdeburg, Germany, to be consul of the United States at Cienfuegos, Cuba, to fill an original vacancy.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

James C. Ford, of Tennessee, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Knoxville, in the State of Tennessee, to succeed Elijah W. Adkins, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Second Lieut, George C. Carmine, to be a first lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed William H. Cushing, promoted.

Second Lieut. George M. Daniels, to be a first lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Walter S. Howland, promoted.

Second Lieut. Detlef F. A. de Otte, to be a first lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed A. P. R. Hanks, promoted.

Second Lieut. Frederick J. Haake, to be a first lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Frank G. F. Wadsworth, promoted.

Third Lieut. Eugene Blake, jr., to be a second lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed George C. Carmine, promoted.

Third Lieut. Frank B. Goudey, to be a second lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed George M. Daniels, promoted.

Third Lieut. Philip H. Scott, to be a second lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Frederick J. Haake, promoted.

Third Lieut. William J. Wheeler, to be a second lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Frederick G. Dodge, promoted.

Third Lieut. Herman H. Wolf, to be a second lieutenant in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Percy H. Brereton, promoted.

First Assistant Engineer J. Edward Dorry, to be a chief engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Sidney T. Taylor, retired.

First Assistant Engineer Charles A. McAllister, to be a chief engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed James T. Tupper, retired.

Second Assistant Engineer Theodore G. Lewton, to be a first assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed George B. Maher, promoted.

Second Assistant Engineer Albert C. Norman, to be a first assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Henry O. Slayton, promoted.

Second Asst. Engineer C. Gadsden Porcher, to be a first assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed J. Edward Dorry, promoted.

Second Asst. Engineer John B. Turner, to be a first assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Charles A. McAllister, promoted.

Acting Second Asst. Engineer Norris K. Davis, of Virginia, to be a second assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Theodore G. Lewton, promoted.

Acting Second Asst. Engineer Lorenzo C. Farwell, of Massachusetts, to be a second assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed C. Gadsden Porcher, promoted.

Acting Second Asst. Engineer William J. Gilbert, of North Carolina, to be a second assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed Albert C. Norman, promoted.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

Medical Department.

William Lordan Keller, of New York, contract surgeon, United States Army, to be assistant surgeon with the rank of first lieutenant, June 2, 1902, to fill an original vacancy.

Charles Clarence Billingslea, of Maryland, contract surgeon, United States Army, to be assistant surgeon with the rank of first lieutenant, June 2, 1902, to fill an original vacancy.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Phillips Lee Goldsborough, of Maryland, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland, to succeed B. F. Parlett, resigned.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

C. Ross Mace, of Maryland, to be appraiser of merchandise in the district of Baltimore, in the Sate of Maryland, to succeed Henry R. Torbert, removed.

POSTMASTERS.

William R. Cady, to be postmaster at Rogers, in the county of Benton, State of Arkansas, in place of Leo K. Fesler. Incumbent's commission expired January 10, 1902.

Reuben A. Edmonds, to be postmaster at Bakersfield, in the county of Kern and State of California, in place of Reuben A. Edmonds. Incumbent's commission expires June 13, 1902.

Albert W. James, to be postmaster at Cobden, in the county of Union and State of Illinois, in place of Henry Ede. Incumbent's commission expired May 4, 1902.

Geradus L. Van de Steeg, to be postmaster at Orange City, in the county of Sioux and State of Iowa, in place of Geradus L. Van de Steeg. Incumbent's commission expired May 28, 1902.

Drewy W. Rhyne, to be postmaster at Lexington, in the county of Holmes and State of Mississippi, in place of Drewy W. Rhyne. Incumbent's commission expired May 27, 1902.

Edward H. Clough, to be postmaster at Manchester, in the county of Hillsboro and State of New Hampshire, in place of Ossian D. Knox. Incumbent's commission expires June 21, 1902.

Albert P. Merriam, to be postmaster at Phoenix, in the county of Oswego and State of New York, in place of Albert P. Merriam. Incumbent's commission expired May 5, 1902.

George W. De Priest, to be postmaster at Shelby, in the county of Cleveland and State of North Carolina, in place of John H. McBrayer. Incumbent's commission expired February 1, 1902.

J. W. Utterback, to be postmaster at Cordell, in the county of Washita and Territory of Oklahoma. Office became Presidential April 1, 1902.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 4, 1902.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

George W. Bibee, of Sheridan, Oreg., to be receiver of public moneys at Oregon City, Oreg.

POSTMASTERS.

James A. Simpson, to be postmaster at Kissimmee, in the county of Osceola and State of Florida.

Benjamin J. Rosewater, to be postmaster at Eureka Springs, in the county of Carroll and State of Arkansas.

Levi W. Davison, to be postmaster at Earlville, in the county of Lasalle and State of Illinois.

James Bromilow, to be postmaster at Chillicothe, in the county of Peoria and State of Illinois.

James H. Spencer, to be postmaster at Necedah, in the county of Juneau and State of Wisconsin.

Lewis S. Patrick, to be postmaster at Marinette, in the county of Marinette and State of Wisconsin.

Ezra M. Rogers, to be postmaster at Hartford, in the county of Washington and State of Wisconsin.

Henry G. Kress, to be postmaster at Manitowoc, in the county of Manitowoc and State of Wisconsin.

Edward G. Edgerton, to be postmaster at Yankton, in the county of Yankton and State of South Dakota.

John Kellogg, to be postmaster at Reedsburg, in the county of Sauk and State of Wisconsin.

Benjamin Webster, to be postmaster at Platteville, in the county of Grant and State of Wisconsin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 4, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPENDITURES IN CUBA.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the following resolution and move that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, reports back the following resolution and moves that it lie on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 274.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to transmit to this House a detailed and itemized account of the expenditures made by or under the direction or orders of Gen. Leonard Wood, as the military governor of the island of Cuba, during the period of time that such island was under the control of the military authorities of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HULL. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 76, noes 46.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, can we have that resolution read over again?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be again reported.

The resolution was again reported.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 80, answered "present" 15, not voting 145; as follows:

YEAS—111.

Alexander,	Davidson,	Kahn,	Rumple,
Allen, Me.	Draper,	Knapp,	Schirm,
Ball, Del.	Emerson,	Lacey,	Shattuc,
Barney,	Esch,	Landis,	Shelden,
Bates,	Evans,	Lawrence,	Sibley,
Beidler,	Fletcher,	Lessler,	Smith, Ill.
Bowersock,	Foerderer,	Littlefield,	Smith, Iowa
Brick,	Fordney,	McCleary,	Smith, H. C.
Bristow,	Foss,	Mann,	Steele,
Bromwell,	Gardner, Mich.	Moody, N. C.	Stevens, Minn.
Brown,	Graff,	Moody, Oreg.	Stewart, N. J.
Burk, Pa.	Graham,	Morgan,	Sulloway,
Burleigh,	Grosvenor,	Morrell,	Sutherland,
Burton,	Grow,	Morris,	Tawney,
Butler, Pa.	Hamilton,	Mudd,	Tayler, Ohio
Cannon,	Haskins,	Needham,	Thomas, Iowa
Capron,	Henry, Conn.	Nevin,	Tirrell,
Connell,	Hepburn,	Olmsted,	Tompkins, Ohio
Conner,	Hildebrant,	Otjen,	Tongue,
Coombs,	Hill,	Parker,	Van Voorhis,
Cooper, Wis.	Hitt,	Payne,	Vreeland,
Corliss,	Howell,	Pearre,	Wachter,
Cousins,	Hull,	Perkins,	Wadsworth,
Creamer,	Irwin,	Powers, Mass.	Wanger,
Curtis,	Jack,	Prince,	Warnock,
Cushman,	Jenkins,	Ray, N. Y.	Watson.
Dahle,	Jones, Wash.	Reeder,	Woods.
Dalzell,	Joy,	Reeves,

NAYS—80.

Adamson,	Fitzgerald,	Lewis, Ga.	Robinson, Nebr.
Ball, Tex.	Fox,	Lindsay,	Rucker,
Bankhead,	Gilbert,	Little,	Ryan,
Bartlett,	Hay,	Livingston,	Scarborough,
Brundidge,	Henry, Miss.	Lloyd,	Shafroth,
Burgess,	Hooker,	McAndrews,	Sims,
Burleson,	Howard,	McCulloch,	Smith, Ky.
Burnett,	Jackson, Kans.	McLain,	Snook,
Candler,	Jett,	McRae,	Sparkman,
Cassingham,	Jones, Va.	Maddox,	Spight,
Clark,	Kehoe,	Mahoney,	Stark,
Cochran,	Kern,	Mickey,	Stephens, Tex.
Cooney,	Kitchin, Claude	Moon,	Taylor, Ala.
Cooper, Tex.	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Padgett,	Thayer,
Cowherd,	Kleberg,	Patterson, Tenn.	Vandiver,
Crowley,	Kluttz,	Ransdell, La.	Wiley,
Davis, Fla.	Lamb,	Reid,	Williams, Ill.
De Armond,	Lanham,	Rhea, Va.	Williams, Miss.
Edwards,	Latimer,	Richardson, Ala.	Wilson,
Feely,	Lester,	Rixey,	Wooten.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—15.

Adams,	Deemer,	Metcalf,	Scott,
Brantley,	Griggs,	Minor,	Slayden,
Burkett,	Ketcham,	Naphen,	Wright.
Crumpacker,	McClellan,	Pierce,

NOT VOTING—145.

Acheson,	Dovener,	Kyle,	Robinson, Ind.
Allen, Ky.	Driscoll,	Lassiter,	Ruppert,
Aplin,	Eddy,	Lever,	Russell,
Babcock,	Elliott,	Lewis, Pa.	Selby,
Bartholdt,	Finley,	Littauer,	Shackleford,
Bell,	Fleming,	Long,	Shallenberger,
Bellamy,	Flood,	Loud,	Sheppard,
Belmont,	Foster, Ill.	Loudenslager,	Sherman,
Benton,	Foster, Vt.	Lovering,	Showalter,
Bingham,	Fowler,	McCall,	Skiles,
Bishop,	Gaines, Tenn.	McDermott,	Small,
Blackburn,	Gaines, W. Va.	McLachlan,	Smith, S. W.
Blakeney,	Gardner, N. J.	Mahon,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Boreing,	Gibson,	Marshall,	Snodgrass,
Boutell,	Gill,	Martin,	Southard,
Bowie,	Gillet, N. Y.	Maynard,	Southwick,
Breazeale,	Gillett, Mass.	Mercer,	Sperry,
Broussard,	Glenn,	Meyer, La.	Stewart, N. Y.
Brownlow,	Goldfogle,	Miers, Ind.	Storm,
Bull,	Gooch,	Miller,	Sulzer,
Burke, S. Dak.	Gordon,	Mondell,	Swanson,
Butler, Mo.	Green, Pa.	Moss,	Talbert,
Calderhead,	Greene, Mass.	Mutchler,	Tate,
Caldwell,	Griffith,	Neville,	Thomas, N. C.
Cassel,	Hall,	Newlands,	Thompson,
Clayton,	Hanbury,	Norton,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Conry,	Haugen,	Overstreet,	Trimble,
Cromer,	Heatwole,	Palmer,	Underwood,
Currier,	Hedge,	Patterson, Pa.	Warner,
Darragh,	Hemenway,	Pou,	Weeks,
Davey, La.	Henry, Tex.	Powers, Me.	Wheeler,
Dayton,	Holliday,	Pugsley,	White,
De Graffenreid	Hopkins,	Randell, Tex.	Young,
Dick,	Hughes,	Richardson, Tenn.	Zenor.
Dinsmore,	Jackson, Md.	Robb,
Dougherty,	Johnson,	Roberts,
Douglas,	Knox,	Robertson, La.

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. DAYTON with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. LONG with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. BURKETT with Mr. SHALLENBERGER.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. NAPHEN.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. CREAMER.

Mr. POWERS of Maine with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. SNODGRASS.

Mr. MCCALL with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. HOLLIDAY with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

Mr. SKILES with Mr. TALBERT.

Mr. GORDON with Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. GILLET of New York with Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. ROBB.

Mr. BISHOP with Mr. DOUGHERTY.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. PIERCE.

Mr. HEMENWAY with Mr. ZENOR.

For the session:

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. BOREING with Mr. TRIMBLE.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. DEEMER with Mr. MUTCHLER.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RUPPERT.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. TATE.

For one week:

Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. BELLAMY.

Mr. CURRIER with Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont with Mr. POU.

Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. GRIFFITH.

For ten days:

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. THOMPSON, until June 9.

For this day:

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. METCALF with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

Mr. DICK with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. STEWART of New York with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. WARNER with Mr. SHEPPARD.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. SELBY.

Mr. MONDELL with Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. NEWLANDS.

Mr. MARTIN with Mr. NEVILLE.

Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. MAYNARD.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. MCDERMOTT.

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. LEVER.
Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania with Mr. GOOCH.
Mr. KYLE with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.
Mr. KNOX with Mr. GLENN.
Mr. HUGHES with Mr. FOSTER of Illinois.
Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. FLOOD.
Mr. HEDGE with Mr. FLEMING.
Mr. HANBURY with Mr. ELLIOTT.
Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. DINSMORE.
Mr. GILL with Mr. CONRY.
Mr. GAINES of West Virginia with Mr. CALDWELL.
Mr. FOWLER with Mr. BUTLER of Missouri.
Mr. DOVENER with Mr. BROUSSARD.
Mr. COUSINS with Mr. BREAZEALE.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota with Mr. BOWIE.
Mr. BULL with Mr. BRANTLEY.
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.
On this vote:
Mr. JACKSON of Maryland with Mr. BELMONT.
Mr. ADAMS with Mr. LASSITER.
Mr. CROMER with Mr. SULZER.
Mr. MERCER with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.
Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. FINLEY.
Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. BELL.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BOUTELL, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. GRIGGS. Then I would like to withdraw my vote of "no" and be marked "present."

The Clerk called Mr. GRIGGS's name, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BROWNLOW, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. PIERCE. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and be marked "present."

The name of Mr. PIERCE was called, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, I am just informed that a pair was read between myself and Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I wish to withdraw my vote of "aye" and be marked "present."

The name of Mr. BURKETT was called, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 3653, for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS] such time as he desires.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, after listening yesterday to the very interesting and fascinating speech from my distinguished, learned, and lovable friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], I could not but feel that the effect of that speech was to cause this House to drift a long way from its original moorings. I could well understand how anyone that was capable of making a speech so interesting, so fascinating, so full of incident and story, could well become the governor of the great empire of the State of Texas, and I regret that my friend should have seen fit to so far limit his ambition as to say that he is not a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. [Applause.]

I can understand perfectly well that while our friends upon the other side are at present casting around for some one to be their standard bearer in the next Presidential campaign, they could not do better than to take the gentleman from the great State of Texas. [Applause.]

I assume that no bill has come before this House at this session which was so strongly backed by petitions from the people as this bill for the better protection of the President of the United States. Directly after the assault upon the President, the arrest of the assassin, and later on, even before his trial, petitions in favor of some national law for the better protection of the President of the United States were put in circulation in every part of the United States. They were not signed, Mr. Chairman, by the unthinking people of this country, but they were signed by the most law-abiding and intelligent citizens of America. They were signed, and very generally signed, by eminent lawyers practicing in the different courts of the different States of the Union. And what did they ask? They asked that this Congress should enact some law which should better protect the Chief Magistrate of this nation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why were those petitions put in circulation? What was the reason for it? Suppose we examine the reason which actuated American citizens to put in circulation these petitions and send them to their Representatives in Congress. After the assault the assassin was promptly arrested by the officers of the State of New York. Later on, after the death of his victim, he was indicted, brought to a speedy trial, convicted, and he was executed.

Now, mind you, he was indicted because he had violated the laws of the State of New York. He had violated no national law, but he had violated the laws of the State of New York. In other words, President McKinley, as a citizen of the State of Ohio, while stopping in the State of New York, and entitled to the protection of the laws of the State of New York, had been assaulted, and the assault resulted in death. He was arrested because he had assaulted unto death a citizen entitled to the protection of the laws of the State of New York, within the jurisdiction of the courts of New York, and therefore the assassin was arrested and tried and punished.

But, mind you, the assassin had not in mind the death of William McKinley as an individual, or as a citizen. What he had in mind was an attack upon organized society, upon organized government. He bore no malice against William McKinley as a man; he bore no malice against William McKinley as a citizen; but he bore malice against the Government of the United States, and William McKinley stood as the representative of organized government. He sought the destruction of the Government of the United States by the assassination of the chief ruler of the people. He bore not the slightest malice against William McKinley as a man, and when he committed that crime, it was a crime against the Government of the United States, and he was punished not by reason of the crime which he committed and not by reason of the motive which actuated him to commit the crime, but he was punished because it happened that in committing that crime he incidently violated a law of the State of New York.

Now, in violating that law of the State of New York it was a breach of the peace and dignity of that Commonwealth; and yet, as a matter of fact, he did not have in mind the violation of any law of the State of New York. He had in mind a premeditated attempt to injure and destroy the organized government of this country.

Now, at the time of his indictment, and at the time of his trial, the Attorney-General of the United States, the law adviser of the Government, the chief prosecuting attorney of the United States, and also the United States attorney of the district of New York, in which the crime was committed—neither one had the right to go into the courts of New York and take any part either in the indictment or at the trial. If they appeared there at all they appeared there by the courtesy of the law officers of the State of New York, and the Attorney-General has no more right to appear there to take part in the prosecution of one who had attempted to destroy the Government of the United States than any other member of the Pittsburg bar had the right to appear there.

In other words, even though the crime were committed against the Government of the United States, premeditated, possibly as the result of a lot cast that this very assassin should commit that crime, a crime against the Government, a crime against organized society, at the same time that man could not under any law upon the statute book be punished for the crime that he had intentionally committed.

Now, when that situation appeared to the American citizens they said that it was necessary, in their judgment, that some law should be put upon the statute books which should provide for the punishment of those who might attempt to destroy or to weaken the Government of the United States; in other words, they said that when the attack was made upon the sovereignty of this great nation, the nation, through its courts, should have jurisdiction to punish it. And so they put in circulation the petitions which came to us, signed by thousands, in favor of some national law on this subject.

Now, it has been claimed here that the enactment of any law of the kind proposed by the various measures that are now under consideration is an infringement upon the sovereignty of the State. Why so? No State in its sovereign capacity has imposed upon it the duty or the burden of defending the sovereignty of this Government. In other words, when this assassin of President McKinley was punished in the courts of the State of New York he was punished because he had committed an infraction of the laws of that State. He was not punished by reason of the crime that he had committed. In other words, the situation would have been exactly the same if he had committed that crime in the State of Massachusetts (a part of which I have the honor to represent), or if it had been committed within the limits of any other State of this Union. In other words, the only punishment that could reach this criminal was an incidental punishment, because in attempting to commit one crime he had incidentally committed another crime, and he was punished not for the crime he had committed, but because in committing that crime he had incidentally committed another crime, which was an infraction of the laws of the State.

Now, what I maintain, Mr. Chairman, is this: That the United States Government has the right at all times to maintain its sovereignty; that it has the right at all times to punish those who attempt to destroy this Government. But at the present time there exists no law by which this great nation can punish the offense, if the crime is committed outside of the District of Columbia and the other Territories not embraced in the States of the Union.

Now, the people of this country said—and they had a right to say it, and they had the right to insist upon it—that this Congress should take this matter into consideration, and that inasmuch as the Constitution had conferred upon the Congress of the United States the power to make all proper and necessary laws, this was a proper and necessary law for Congress to make; in other words, that it was proper and necessary for Congress to enact a law by which any attempt to destroy Government should be punished.

I want one thing distinctly understood—and I call the particular attention of my friend from Texas to this point—that we are not attempting to legislate against crimes committed upon an individual. What we are undertaking to reach is the crime committed upon organized government, just as the crime which led to the death of President McKinley was a crime against the Government, not a crime against the individual.

Now, in our attempt to frame this law, we bring before the House for its consideration a bill which seeks to protect the Government of the United States. It does not in any way interfere with the sovereignty of any State. It does not undertake to take away from any State the rights which exist now under the sovereignty of the various States to which this act applies. The sovereignty of the United States is in the people of the United States.

This is a nation which is operated and maintained by law. We have nothing in this country in the nature of a ruler by inheritance or by "the divine right of kings." The people in this country rule, and the sovereignty of the United States, as has been so well expressed by the distinguished chairman of the committee that has this bill in charge, extends over every foot of soil in the United States. And wherever that sovereignty goes there Congress has the right to enact whatever laws may be necessary for the maintenance of that sovereignty against the interference or attack of anybody and everybody.

Now, what do they seek to do? We undertake to say that whoever anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States undertakes to take the life of the President when he is in the discharge of his official duty, or by reason of his official capacity, or by reason of the omission or commission of an official act, commits a crime against the Government of the United States.

Does that interfere with State sovereignty? Does anyone claim that the attempt to protect the Government in the orderly operations of the machinery of government is an interference with the sovereignty of any State? I fully agree with my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that if an assault be committed upon the President of the United States while he may be temporarily sojourning in the State of Texas, that crime will be punished under the laws of the State of Texas. But what is the crime that will be punished under the laws of the State of Texas? Is it the crime of attempting to destroy the National Government? Not at all. It is the crime of having committed an assault, a felonious assault, upon a citizen of the United States, while he is in Texas and under the protection of the laws of Texas. That right remains with you after the passage of this bill, except you may say that the remedy under this law exhausts the remedy which you have, but which accomplished the same effect, and even if we do not take advantage of this law, it would still be left for the State of Texas to administer its own laws and to punish the crime which had been committed against its own laws. And so I say that the passage of this bill in no way trenches upon the sovereignty of any State.

Now, it is a mooted question which has been discussed here, and discussed most interestingly, as to how far the United States Government has a right to protect its officers, whether in the discharge of duty or not. I take the position, which is entirely in accord with the position taken yesterday by the chairman of the committee, that our right to protect the officers of the Government means our right to protect them while in the discharge of duty. In other words, the United States Government is to-day operated through the agency of officers and men. It can not be operated in any other way. We have a right to protect this Government in its existence. We have a right to protect it in the operation of its laws, and so long as we protect this Government in its maintenance and its operation, then we go as far as we have the right to under the sovereignty which exists under the Constitution of the United States. In other words, suppose this case: Suppose that President McKinley had been in New York and had not been in the performance of any duty, that he had been assaulted by one who did not assault him as the President of the United States, but who assaulted him by reason of some old feud that had existed long before he became President of the United States.

That assault would not be an assault upon the Government of the United States; it would be an assault upon William McKinley as an individual and a citizen, and the laws of the State of New York would punish that assault and punish it to the extent to which it was entitled to be punished; but I can not agree with my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that the people of this country have no greater interest in their chief ruler than they have in any other citizen, because the interest of 80,000,000 of people in the President of the United States is not an interest in the President of the United States as an individual; it is an interest in the President of the United States because he is Chief Executive of the United States and a part of the machinery of government. We protect him not as an individual; we protect him because he is Chief Executive of the nation; we protect him and seek to protect him because in protecting him we protect the Government of the United States, and that is the distinction between the protection of the President of the United States as a President and the protection of the President of the United States as an individual.

I understand that there are those in this House, possibly members of the committee that report this bill, who believe that we have the authority under the Constitution to go much further than this bill goes. There are those, for whose opinions I have the highest regard and esteem, who claim that we have the right under the constitutional power which is vested in Congress to protect the President as a citizen, whether in the discharge of his duty or not; but to my mind that is not necessary for the purposes of this legislation. We are attempting to protect the President of the United States. We do not seek by this law to protect any citizen of the United States as such. We undertake to say that anyone who attempts to interfere with the existence of government or anyone who attempts to interfere with the operations of government interferes with the sovereignty of the country. This bill does not seek to punish anyone who commits an assault upon any Federal officer so long as he commits that assault upon the Federal officer when he is not in the discharge of duty and not by reason of any Federal act which he has performed or failed to perform.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Does this bill contemplate such an act as an assault upon the President at a time when he may not be engaged directly or indirectly in the discharge of his public duty, and yet when such an assault might be made for the reason that he was the Chief Executive and was the President of the United States?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly; in terms.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly; it says so in terms.

Mr. SCOTT. Does it in such event protect the President?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. The bill is drawn so broadly that it protects the President not only when in the discharge of his official duties, but by reason of his official position, and more than that, it goes to the extent of inquiring into the very motive which actuates the attack. Now, I can conceive a case of an assault upon the President of the United States that might not come within the provisions of this bill; but at the same time that assault would not in any way be an assault upon the Government of the United States. By that I mean that it might grow out of a personal feud between the President and some one, and the assault would have no relation whatever to the official connection which the President had with the Government of the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is making a very interesting and instructive speech; but if the death of the President resulted from an attempt on the part of some one to commit robbery in one of the States while the President was not engaged in some official act, the offender would not be liable to prosecution under this law, as I understand it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, yes; he certainly would be.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it the view of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS] that he would not be?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. No; that is not my view. That must come with all kinds of qualifications.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to get at a case of this kind: The gentleman just said that he could conceive a case where an assault might be committed upon the President of the United States when he was not engaged in his official duty, when the law under consideration would not apply because the attack would not be upon the Government. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I think that statement should be made with this limitation, on the assumption that there might be times when the President of the United States, under a fair construction of the law, is not engaged in the performance of official duty.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, is not the President of the United States President at all times during his constitutional period, without regard to what he is doing?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. If that be true, that he is President at all times, and if it be true, as the gentleman states, that the assault is committed while he is President and is in the performance of his official duty, then it comes within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Suppose he be not, in the sense of this law, in the performance of an official duty, and is not assaulted because of his official character or because of some official act; then I want to know whether the gentleman believes that the offense would come within the purview of the pending bill?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Upon that assumption I should say that we could assume an offense that would not come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, let me ask the gentleman another question. Is it not an offense against the Federal Government, an embarrassment of its operations, to take the life of the President of the United States at any time, without regard to the purpose or provocation of the act?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. There is no question but that. It is an interference with the operations of the Government.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And have we not the power to prevent by penal laws that sort of interference?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that that brings us to the very threshold of that question on which lawyers disagree. Now, all the adjudicated cases would undertake to say that when we undertake to protect the officers of the Government while in the discharge of their official duties and by reason of their official character, when the attack is not made upon them with a view of interfering with the operations of government, that then we have gone to the full extent that we can go.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to his colleague?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. THAYER. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman to any great extent, because I am fully in accord with the spirit of this bill; but I want to ask the gentleman this question: I understand that authority is claimed for this bill because these assaults are attacks upon the sovereignty of the Government. Otherwise we would have no right to go into the States to punish criminals. Now, there are three classes of persons here pointed out, the President, the Vice-President, and foreign ambassadors and ministers. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks that an agent representing a foreign country or government, coming here in the interest of that government and that country, is a part of the machinery of this Government to such an extent that we can punish those who make assaults upon him as well as we can upon the President and Vice-President of the United States?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Why, it strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that this case comes fairly within the law, which clearly defines our relations with friendly powers having ambassadors and ministers here, and while they are here they are a part of this Government and are entitled to the same protection as is the President of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. If the gentleman will permit me, the Constitution of the United States expressly says that the Congress shall have power to define and punish offenses against the law of nations, and in United States re Arzona it is declared by the Supreme Court under that clause that we have the power to enact criminal laws protecting aliens when in the United States.

Mr. THAYER. But, assuming that to be a fact, would it not still be necessary to protect those within the President's Cabinet?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, we have that provision in this bill, and if the gentleman would only take the time and take the bill and read it he would see that it not only protects the President, the Vice-President, but also other officers entitled under the law to succeed to that high office. That is in the bill in express terms.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I understand it can well be argued that this bill is limited, and that it ought to include not only the President and those in line of succession, but possibly other officers of the Government. Now, of course there ought to be a limit to the protection, and this thing can well be borne in mind, that when we introduced this bill it was for the purpose of protecting the Government against those who believed in individual liberty to that extent that no government ought to exist at all, and you will find that the history of anarchists has been an effort to take the life of the chief ruler. That has been true when they attempted to take the life of the Czar of Russia, and to take the like of the Emperor of Germany, or the king or queen of this country or that country; and they do it upon the principle that if they destroy the head of the government, they are more likely to cripple the operations of government. Now, I want to say just one word concerning the third section—I think it is the third—which provides for the protection of ambassadors and ministers accredited to this country.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like, before the gentleman passes from the President, to ask a question.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I would be very glad to answer it.

Mr. LACEY. Take the specific case of the assassination of President McKinley. Of course in that case the assassin, by his subsequent confession, says that his purpose was to kill the President because he was the President. Supposing he was mute; the question then would be that he simply killed the President. Would not this bill fail to protect? He was simply at a public meeting, an exposition, holding a reception of his friends, not performing the duties of the President of the United States, but at a social gathering. Now, would not this bill entirely leave him out of its protection or that protection which is given him in the performance of official duty?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. No, sir. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that he by all fair interpretation was engaged in the performance of official duty. He was invited to the exposition as the President of the United States; he accepted that invitation as President of the United States; he was giving a reception to the people as President of the United States, and when the assault was made upon him he was known to be the President of the United States. But even if that had not been so, we have so drawn this bill that we have put the presumption in favor of the Government and the burden upon the defendant to show that he did not have that in mind when he made that attack. I think this bill is very well safeguarded along that line. Now, coming to the protection——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before leaving that, take the case of President Lincoln. He was attending a theater at the time of his assassination. Supposing, now, he had been assassinated under those circumstances, and that the assassin had been able to prove that he committed the act on account of some personal grievance against him, the bill under consideration would not have provided any punishment for that man.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I can imagine a case which would not come within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the case stated hypothetically.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I do not think you included all the limitations that ought to be included.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. While he would not be engaged in the performance of any official duty.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. By reason of the fact that he is the President of the United States and the fact of the civil war, which possibly might influence the assassin——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Eliminate all those aspects, then your bill would not cover the case.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. The bill would not cover the case except the act was committed in the District of Columbia, and would come by that reason under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a matter of accident only. Let me ask another question. Was President Lincoln, in the opinion of the gentleman, engaged in the discharge of the duties of his office at the time he was in attendance at Ford's Theater on the occasion of his assassination?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I should doubt if it could be construed that he was in the performance of his official duty.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I would gladly support a bill which protected the President from assault whether in discharging his duty or not. My sympathy is in that direction, and if I could reach the same conclusion that possibly the gentleman from Indiana may have reached, and that is that the law ought to go to that extent to protect the President as President, whether in the performance of his duty or not, and go to the extent of protecting the President whether the motive of committing the assault was by reason of any official act or not, I gladly would go to that extent. But on a close examination of the adjudicated cases, it seems to my mind clear that the court has drawn a marked distinction between the sovereignty of the nation and the sovereignty of a

State, and that we can not go beyond that mark without infringing upon the sovereignty of the State, which was so ably defended by my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] yesterday.

In other words, when we seek to protect the Government outside the operations of the Government, then we infringe upon the sovereignty of a State where the constitution has vested the authority for the punishment of offenses of that kind. But if it be the judgment of this House that we can go to the extent of protecting the President as such whether or not in the discharge of his duty, I will gladly support that bill. I wish to say to my friend from Indiana that I reluctantly came to the position that we were bound to keep within the limit so forcibly expressed by the chairman yesterday. If you will allow, let me recall your attention to the message by President Harrison, I think in 1889, when he called upon the Congress of the United States to enact some law for the better protection of the Federal officers, confining that protection to them while in the discharge of their official duty. And the same has been true in every one of these cases. Take the Nagel case, the Siebold case, the Fisher case, the Tennessee or Davies case, and in every one of these cases the court has drawn that distinction between the exercise of the sovereignty of the United States and the exercise of the sovereignty of the State.

Mr. RAY of New York. And, if the gentleman will permit me, whenever the Congress of the United States, commencing back in 1790, immediately after the adoption of the Constitution, when it commenced, as it did in that year, to enact law for the protection of the officers of the Government, it read that condition into the law, engaged in the execution of their duties, showing their understanding of the limitations upon the power of Congress, and it has been carried into every act since without an exception. It is in every decision where the courts have construed the statutes and in every decision of the courts where they have defined or prescribed the criminal jurisdiction of the United States independent of a statute.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. And if, Mr. Chairman, I may be permitted once more to refer to the provisions in the Constitution, the language is, "Congress may enact all laws that may be proper and necessary." Now, the question is, who are to be the judges of what laws are proper and necessary? I assume that judgment is vested in Congress; but it is limited, and it must be, to the law that is necessary and proper for the protection and enforcement of the sovereignty of the nation. It may not go beyond that extent, and if it be not necessary and proper that we should protect the President as an individual, when the motive for the attack or the assault upon him in no way depends upon or is based upon the fact that he is the Chief Executive of the nation, or by reason of any act that he has committed as Chief Executive of the nation, we must stop at that point,

I would gladly, as I have said, go to the full extent of giving the most ample protection that Congress has the right to give under the authority of the Constitution. Now, I want to say a word with reference to the criticism that was made yesterday by my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] upon the third section of this bill, which seeks to extend the same protection to ambassadors and ministers accredited to this country and residing herein.

When this matter came up for consideration before the committee, I think that I had the honor of suggesting that as an amendment to the original bill. I did that for this reason. We were seeking to protect against the anarchists—what we call anarchists—we were seeking to protect the Chief Executive of the nation and those in the line of succession.

In other words, we did not go outside of the protection of the President and those that might be called upon to act in his place in the case of his removal. But it seemed to me that it was but gracious and proper that we should also protect the official heads of the different countries at the capital of this nation, and particularly so since the last sovereign that had fallen by the hand of the anarchists in the Old World appeared, by undisputed evidence, to have fallen by reason of a plot upon our own soil, and we could not do much less than to say that while we were protecting our President against the red-handed assassin that had struck down a sovereign of Europe, it was only right and proper that we should protect the official heads of foreign nations while they were under the protection of the United States Government; and I believe the members of the House will generally agree with that proposition.

When my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] took up the Congressional Directory yesterday and read over the names of certain official representatives of the South American republics, giving to those names that peculiar pronunciation of the Spanish dialect which no man save one who had resided in a State where the Spanish language was originally spoken could have given, he said, "Why should we protect Señor So-and-so and Señor So-and-so and not protect the Speaker of this House?" I did not understand whether in saying that my friend went to the extent of saying that he stood prepared to protect the representatives of the great monarchies, but would not protect the representatives of the little struggling Republics in South America.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Let me finish the statement, and then I will yield.

I assume that the gentleman used that language in a purely Pickwickian sense. I know him so well as to know he has no sympathy with the monarchies of Europe and that he has all kinds of sympathy with the little republics of South America. I assume that he brought out this suggestion in order to show that there is no reason why we should protect these officials who represent these small nations that have no particular importance in the diplomatic circles in Washington.

Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. It was not my purpose in the least to draw any such distinction as the gentleman suggests, but simply to show that we ought to be as good to our own officials in this Government as we are to the representatives of alien countries.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I did not assume that the gentleman had any such motives as he has now disclaimed, but I meant to affirm that in our diplomatic relations we can not recognize the great monarchies of Europe without recognizing and protecting the representatives of the little republics of the earth. We have got to treat them all alike. In other words, they stand as peers in the realm of the diplomatic circles here at Washington. Now, I want to say one word with reference to one provision in this bill which in my mind is not sufficiently drastic. I refer to the provision that wherever an assault is made upon the President of the United States with an intent to take his life it shall be punished by imprisonment, and imprisonment only. It seemed to me at the time this bill was under consideration in committee that whenever an assault is made upon the President of the United States, with a deliberate and premeditated purpose to take the life of the chief ruler of the people, the punishment ought to be death; and I suggested at the time—and it is my purpose when this bill comes up under the five-minute rule to offer an amendment—that wherever an assault of this kind is committed upon the President of the United States it shall be punished either by death or by imprisonment for life, as the jury trying the case may recommend.

I can understand perfectly well that there may be an assault made upon the President of the United States which will absolutely incapacitate him for the further performance of his duty, but he may survive the attack—may linger on for years; that blow has had its purpose and has incapacitated him for the performance of any further duty, yet under the provisions of this bill the punishment in such a case is to be only imprisonment—imprisonment for not less than twenty years. I feel that the jury should have the right to take into consideration all the circumstances under which the act was committed; that they should have the right to take under consideration the extent of the injuries inflicted, and if they see fit to recommend punishment by death that they should have the right to recommend such punishment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word with reference to the Senate bill. I firmly believe that the House bill is a far better bill than the Senate bill. I trust that this House will substitute the House bill for the Senate bill. I believe there are important questions of constitutional law connected with many of the provisions of the Senate bill, and which are of such a nature that we can not with safety pass that bill. It is not necessary that this House should undertake to pass a bill so drastic as to be pronounced unconstitutional. We can protect the operations of the Government and keep well within our constitutional limits, and I feel that this House bill should for that reason be substituted for the Senate bill.

There is one provision of the Senate bill which has caused more or less discussion throughout the country, and, so far as I know, has been received with some favor. It is the provision that the Secretary of War shall detail a bodyguard from the Regular Army for the protection of the President. Now, I want to say that this idea, though it may be novel, did not originate with any member of Congress, either of this branch or the other. That idea originated some time in the early part of the year, and first appeared in an address delivered by a very learned and scholarly gentleman, who is a judge of the circuit court in the first district, in an address delivered before the bar association of the State of New Hampshire. He undertook to demonstrate in that address that we can, by providing a bodyguard, absolutely protect the President of the United States; and he referred, by way of example, to the provisions which are made to protect the sovereigns of the different nations of Europe.

Now, if we have come to that point where we are going to undertake to legislate for the absolute protection of the person of the President, there are other and better ways to legislate than by guard system proposed under the provisions of the bill. Why, we might go to the extent of saying that the President during his term of office should live in a fortress surrounded by soldiers; that no one should have access to the President but trusted subordinates, and that they should be searched before they enter therein. My friend, I think it was, from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] suggested that we might go to the extent of having a little fortress or castle upon wheels, which could be moved throughout the country like a cage, for the protection of the President.

To my mind the whole idea is un-American and uncalled for. I do not expect that if this bill, if enacted into a law, is going to have weight only by reason of the penal statutes that it contains, but it is going to have its moral force upon the American people. It is going to be an expression of the public opinion of this country that the people believe in stamping out anarchy and in stamping out every sentiment in favor of the forcible overthrow of the Government of the United States or the government of any country. It stands as an expression of public opinion, and, Mr. Chairman, what is the foundation of the Government of this nation but the expression of public opinion? Why, our Federal Constitution and the constitution of every State in this Union can be changed, directly or indirectly, through the ballot box. The people are sovereigns. If they want to change their Constitution, they have got the right to do it. If they want to change the constitution of any State, they have the authority, through the ballot box, acting either directly or indirectly, to change it; and they can change every constitution, every Federal statute, and every State statute through the power which they have in the manhood suffrage which exists in every State in this Union.

Now, it is not so in the case of the countries across the sea. In England the landed estates have controlled the politics of that country for six centuries. Not so with us. We have no property qualification and we have no educational qualification in any State excepting a few, and there the educational qualification is one which a schoolboy of 10 years of age could easily comply with. Why, when these anarchists talk about the forcible overthrow of government they do not take into consideration that this Government exists at the pleasure of the people, and whenever the people want to change this form of government they have the right and authority to do it. Whenever they want to change our Constitution they may do it.

Whenever they want to change any law they may do it, and the people, it seems to me, in this country have demanded that there shall be a law—a law, not only because it will have its effect by reason of the penal elements that the law will contain, but because it will go upon our statute books as the public expression of 80,000,000 of people that they will not entertain and they will not harbor a sentiment that looks to the forcible overthrow of the Government of the people, and that is exactly where we stand on this proposition. We say that there is not the slightest reason to suppose that these anarchists or nihilists, as they were formerly called, who fifty years ago came into existence in Russia under a form of oppressive government, are going to get a foothold in America. Why, our public-school system will sooner or later overthrow them. Public sentiment will overthrow them. Last year the United States expended for the free compulsory education of its children more money than was expended by Great Britain, Germany, France, Spain, Italy, and Belgium combined. What does that mean?

It means that the Government of the United States stands prepared to educate an intelligent citizenship, and an intelligent citizenship knows that the highest personal liberty must exist in a good government; that a good government is that government which takes from no individual any more of his rights and privileges than are absolutely necessary for the protection of his life, his liberty, and his property. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the bill which has been framed by the House committee, with all its safeguards, with all its provisions—that of looking after immigration—with its provisions for undertaking to ferret out this sentiment against government wherever it exists, and, more than that, with its provisions carried to that extent that they will accomplish the purpose and at the same time do not interfere with the liberty of speech or with the liberty of the press, will become a law.

In a few years from now we will look back upon this scene and will regard it a remarkable circumstance that after more than a century of free republican government in America Congress was forced to take into consideration the enactment of law to better protect its chief ruler against assassination by those who would strike him down in the name of liberty.

The country to-day simply asks this Congress to put upon the statute books some expression of the sovereignty and the will of the people, which they ask shall be enforced to its farthest for the protection of our institutions, for the protection of freedom and liberty, and for the advancement of mankind. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. VAN VOORHIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5491. An act granting an increase of pension to John R. Sandsbury;

S. 2295. An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes; and

S. R. 111. Joint resolution limiting the gratuitous distribution of the Woodsman's Handbook to the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the Department of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9597. An act for the relief of Thierman & Frost; and

H. R. 720. An act for the relief of Lieut. Jerome E. Morse.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11249) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Rains Paul.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and at the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on the first Monday in June in each year.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RAY of New York. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] five minutes.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, the provisions of this bill may be divided into two classes, those that provide for the punishment of the overt act, both in the case of the principal and in the case of his accessories, and those which are framed to prevent the repetition of the crime that resulted in the death of the late President William McKinley.

To my mind the people of the United States are most concerned in those provisions which prevent the repetition of such a crime.

No one can possibly find fault with the speedy and dignified manner in which the officials of the State of New York visited justice upon the assassin of our late President.

Special inquiry from those who are conversant with the methods employed in Europe against the so-called party of anarchists, and consultation with lawyers of eminence in this country who have given this subject a great deal of thought, have resulted in my coming to the conclusion that special legislation against the possibility of a recurrence of a crime of this kind, except in the case of persons who are considered of unsound mind, is injudicious, and it is unwise to admit the possibility of the existence of such a class of people under the freedom and liberty which is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

No one will deny for a moment or would take exception to the statement that anyone holding what are called extreme anarchistic views is a person of unsound mind. I do not refer to those who are attracted by such doctrines simply from the honor and eclat that they might get, or from the possible benefits that might accrue to them. But I do feel that it is only proper to consider those persons who enunciate anarchistic doctrines as persons of unsound mind. I therefore give notice of and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time, on page 5, section 8, after line 22, striking out all to the bottom of the section and inserting a paragraph which shall read as follows:

That any person who advocates—

And so forth—

shall, upon conviction by the proper court, thereafter be considered a dangerous lunatic, and his property shall become subject to the courts which administer the estates of persons of unsound mind.

Nobody wants to be considered of unsound mind, and in my judgment no greater punishment could possibly be imposed upon an individual for any crime than to class him and to incarcerate him among a body of men who really are lunatics, as a dangerous lunatic. Even those that we meet in insane asylums are actuated as their principal object to try to explain that they are of sound mind and not of unsound mind. I therefore feel that we could not impose a greater hardship or a more severe punishment upon those who express doctrines which every one of us believe to be the emanation of an unsound mind than to incarcerate them in an insane asylum.

I ask unanimous consent to have this amendment printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an amendment which he proposes to offer at the proper time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 5, line 22, strike out all after the word "act" and insert the following:

"Shall, upon conviction by the proper court, thereafter be considered a dangerous lunatic, and his property shall become subject to the courts which administer the estates of persons of unsound mind."

Mr. LANHAM. I yield one hour to my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, some legislation on the subject now before the House is demanded by the people—not as a matter of sentiment, but as a matter of right and justice. The demand is not limited by geographical, political, or religious lines. It is not a sectional demand, but a call from all parts of the nation: from all classes; from the people to their representatives for full national legislation on this subject, and the unanimity shown with reference to it is the highest evidence that the people believe this to be a nation with national powers, having a Congress willing to execute the will of the people to the utmost of its constitutional powers and write into the statute book their express wishes in this regard.

That reconciliation has been brought about between all sections of the nation, and any attack upon the nation will conclusively show not only that the people are united in their love of country, but that the attack will be resented by all its citizens, and the blood of the people will quicken in defense of the nation, whether the heart beats in the cold blasts of the North or under the sunny skies of the South.

Measures of this kind show the difficulty of legislation. At the opening of this Congress the average person throughout the country was of the opinion that any bill presented on the subject would pass not only early but without opposition, but when the practical work commences the opposition and difficulties appear.

Discordant elements are expected to present a united front. Report a bill sufficient in law and detail for the purpose intended and to satisfy an expectant public, but at the threshold we are met with the question of want of power in Congress, the wisdom or need of the legislation if the power exists, and a compromise must be reached of such extreme views that will permit of united action.

I accord to all those who oppose my views honesty of purpose and as devoted to our common country as I am. Neither do I question their judgment or motive, and I know that they honestly and firmly believe themselves right, as I do.

I do not question the loyalty of those who represent a constituency that believe in the doctrine of State rights. Neither do I question the loyality of the constituency they represent. I simply think they are wrong on this great question, and firmly believing in the loyalty of the people of the South, I am convinced that they will insist that their representatives should contend for and support the doctrine that this National Government has the power to punish the person taking or attempting to take the life of the President of the United States, and that Congress should exercise the full limit of that power without limitation, condition, or qualification.

So that my views may be better understood, I desire to refer to what I have heretofore said as to the proper relations between the several States and the General Government:

Long since the people of the reconstructed States became reconciled to the restoration of their States to their constitutional relations to the Union, and from the close of the war there was never any doubt in the minds of the patriotic, liberty-loving Union people of the United States but that the people of the reconstructed States wanted to return to their political duty as citizens of a common country and do their best to make this nation all our forefathers intended it should be, but were prevented from making it by causes forcing themselves upon the convention. We are now in truth and in fact a reunited people, a nation composed of the several States of the Union, and the time has come in American history when the distinction between Federal and State rights should no longer exist, but all should be classed as citizens of the United States cooperating for the common good, recognizing the just powers of the nation and the constitutional rights of the several States, without any intention to impair the one or invade the other.

Much work remains to be done. These questions can not be settled as long as the people are sectionally divided. Sectionalism must never return. It is our duty to-day to do all we possibly can to prevent it. Earnest efforts must be continued for the upbuilding of the nation for the common good of all. Keeping steadily in mind the equality of the States and equality of all before the law, allowing each elector and each State to exercise constitutional rights without force or denial, answerable to a higher power and intelligent surroundings, peace and prosperity will be with us as a nation. (June 1, 1898, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, vol. 31, part 6, p. 5404.)

Mr. Chairman, I do not think any apology is necessary from anyone who desires to support a measure that will protect the life of the President of the United States; but I do not want any gentleman here this morning to think that I am fully in accord with the views of the gentleman from Texas simply because we, who from a high sense of duty are compelled to oppose the House bill, are also compelled to go to the Democratic side of this Chamber to obtain recognition to express to this House our views on this great question.

I speak this morning from a high sense of legal and representative duty. If I did not feel this question very keenly, I would not occupy the time of this House in discussing this question; but having been assigned, under the rules and procedures of this House, to the committee that reported this measure, I feel it to be my duty to bring to this House all the experience I have obtained as a member of this committee, to assist this House and the country in regard to this question, whether it is in accord with the views of the majority of the committee or not.

As I say, if I did not feel it to be a sense of duty I would not take the time of this House in discussing this question. As I understand the question here to-day, so far it has not been presented to this House on constitutional or legal grounds, and so far as the report of the committee is concerned, I stand alone. But I want this House and the country to understand that the views I express are peculiar to myself. I do not want them to understand that so far as the report of this committee is concerned it is sustained by a single member of the committee.

But I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I am right, and I want it distinctly understood that while I stand alone here so far as this question is concerned, I am standing here and taking the time this morning in the interest of the Republican party, and I am standing here also in the defense of national power, and standing here this morning in defense of the power of Congress. I am in favor of legislation expressive of the powers of Congress sufficient to satisfy the urgent demands of the people without being rash, extreme, or radical, not doing to-day what the country to-morrow will disapprove of.

But, Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration does not come up to my expectations. It does not represent my views; it does not represent a single principle of the Republican party, not a single one. It has absolutely denied to this great representative legislative power the powers that the Constitution has conferred upon it, and it tends expressly to limit the powers and impair the powers of the nation.

The bill does not go far enough, according to my views of this question. Failing to go far enough in one direction, so far as upholding the full and just powers of this Government are concerned, it starts off in another direction and adopts, in my judgment, unconstitutional measures. It also adopts measures that are extreme, and, while they might be constitutional, are absolutely unnecessary. There has been so much discussion in regard to the powers of government since this bill came before the House on yesterday that we might almost understand that there is no national government.

Now, I want it distinctly understood, so far as I am concerned, that I am not satisfied with it, but I believe this House when it becomes familiar with the measure will not approve of this bill. The Republican party, by their representatives here assembled, can never afford to give their approval to it by their votes—no person can deny to-day but what we have a national government. I want to refer to the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution of the United States as expressive of the power to-day of this Government.

The opening words of the Articles of Confederation, that were in force in this country prior to the adoption of the Constitution, read as follows: "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union;" and conclude with these significant words, "fully and entirely ratify and confirm each and every of the said Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union."

The opening words of the Constitution of the United States are as follows:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union.

Here, Mr. Chairman, we have the significant statement in the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution of the United States that we have a "perpetual union" made "a more perfect union," and there ought no longer to be any question about the powers of this nation.

But conceding at the outset, for the purpose of this discussion, that we have a dual system of government—and no one appreciates the situation more fully than myself; that we do have a dual system of government—a government of the States and a government of the United States. I am willing to concede with my learned friend from Texas that the Federal Government is a government of limited powers. If you want to find out whether or not the Federal Government can exercise a power, you have to resort to the Constitution of the United States in order to determine whether or not Congress can act. I do not disagree with some of the statements made by my friend from Texas, and while I disagree largely in some matters, I want to say to this House, inasmuch as the gentleman said on yesterday that this was possibly his last speech in this House, as he expects to go to his State and perform State duties, that we never had an abler, a more honest, intelligent, or a more conscientious man on the floor of this House than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

And when he spoke against this bill he spoke from the bottom of his heart as one of the greatest and closest friends that President McKinley ever had. Do I not remember well that, sitting with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and the late President McKinley, as he was calling attention to the fact how fast the members of Congress they had associated with were passing away, the tears came into the eyes of my friend from Texas when those two able men were discussing the fact that they were almost left alone? We did not think then that within a few short days the hand of the assassin would remove the late President McKinley and leave my friend from Texas practically alone.

I think I have a right at this time to say these few words in indorsement of my friend from Texas, and I know it pained his heart to antagonize this bill, simply from the fact that he loved—absolutely loved—the late President McKinley, and would go further than any other man I have met to do honor to his memory. But as we start into this important discussion we are confronted with the old doctrine and the old question of State rights.

I know there has always been, and there always will be, gentlemen of different minds on this great question. I have no fault to find with my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] for his views raised in the atmosphere of State rights; but when the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] and his Republican colleagues deny to this National Government the power of protecting the President of the United States at all times and under all circumstances, I disagree with them.

I think I have a right to exercise my judgment as a Representative on this floor in regard to this question. I have no words with my Democratic friend, who has been raised and educated to the belief that the States are more powerful than the National Government, but I have no sympathy with my Republican colleagues who will join in the doctrines and policies of the gentleman from South Carolina, the late John C. Calhoun, and deny the Congress of the United States to-day the power under all circumstances and at all times to protect the President of the United States.

No one can justly charge me with desiring to uphold the nation at the expense of the State, or of impairing the power of the State as the same existed when the Federal Constitution was adopted, or with any desire of interfering in any manner with the rights and liberties possessed by the people before the adoption of the Constitution, strengthened by the adoption of the Constitution. My colleagues on the Judiciary Committee, and particularly the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], will have to defend me in this proposition, that I have always believed in the doctrine that the police power of this Government should be exercised by the States and never should be divided, and I uniformly have stood upon that position.

I am absolutely and utterly opposed, as I have said, to impairing the powers of the nation, and also to invading the just powers of the State. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a vast difference between taking away the just powers of the State, or encroaching upon their rights and prerogatives, and exercising the constitutional power of Congress to make it a crime to murder the President of the United States. We are not standing here to-day, as my very able and ingenious friend from Texas would have you understand, to distinguish one man from another. That is not our position. That is not our doctrine. We are simply standing here to-day in defense of the constitutional right and power of Congress.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes, but my friend will have to get a little nearer, for I can not hear him.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand my friend to say that he is in favor of the States exercising all the police powers under the Constitution. I would like to ask him if he voted for the oleomargarine bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be interrupted by any silly question, and I think I am justified in making that reply to the gentleman from Georgia. I want to say that if anyone has any question he desires to ask with reference to the matter under discussion, I will gladly yield.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was about to say, when interrupted by my friend from Georgia, that it is impossible for Congress to-day to take away any of the power of the States. There is no attempt on the part of gentlemen advocating this bill, whether we agree or disagree, with reference to its various provisions, to take away the just powers of the State.

The only power the Federal Government has got to-day it derives from the Constitution created by the State, and if we want to exercise a power to-day which we do not enjoy under the Constitution we have got to go to the several States and obtain from them the necessary power, or it does not exist. But it is more appropriate now than at most any other time for us to remember that we are not State rights men. We are not Federalists, we are American citizens, conceding to the States every power that they enjoyed and have never parted with; and, on the other hand, it is our bounden duty to uphold every power possessed and enjoyed to-day by the Federal Government.

We are not seeking to take away any power of the State. We are seeking to-day to exercise the just and constitutional powers of Congress, trying to supplement the power of the State in the suppression of crime. Now, I want to direct a few moments to the report of the committee, or perhaps to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] that found expression in the report of the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question in reference to this bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to know if he agrees with the gentleman from New York in reference to his argument as to the right to protect the President, why should the law be extended down and include all the different heads of departments that may succeed to the Presidency? If the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin is correct for the purpose of protecting the President, why go farther down the line?

Mr. JENKINS. If my friend will bear with me a few moments I think he will understand my position. I can not make my speech all in one minute. But I will say to my friend from Georgia that so far as concerns the question which he has just suggested, I disagree entirely with the report of the House committee. I think there is a limit, and if the gentleman from Georgia will read the substitute which I propose to offer it will be discovered that I am in accord with his views.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman says he "thinks there is a limit." Will he be kind enough to state what he thinks the "limit" is?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, my dear friend, I can not make all my argument at once.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If you have the full control of your intellectual faculties, there is no reason why you should not answer the question.

Mr. JENKINS. I will answer, I think, in the course of my remarks, to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Maine.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to simplify this matter, I will ask that there be read in my time a bill that I have introduced which expresses my views on this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14695) for the protection of the President, Vice-President, and any person acting as President of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That every person within the United States or any place under the sovereignty of and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who knowingly, willfully, and maliciously kills or attempts to kill the President of the United States or the Vice-President of the United States, or any person acting as President of the United States pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall suffer death.

SEC. 2. That every person within the United States or any place under the sovereignty of and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who aids, abets, causes, procures, commands, or counsels another to kill or attempt to kill the President of the United States, or the Vice-President of the United States, or any person acting as President of the United States pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall suffer death.

SEC. 3. That every accessory to any one of the offenses mentioned in this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment at hard labor not more than twenty years.

Mr. JENKINS. Now I will yield for the question of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This bill of the gentleman does not provide for the protection of officers who are in the line of Presidential succession?

Mr. JENKINS. No, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Are we to gather from the gentleman's statement that he does not think we have the power to protect those officers, or that he simply believes it is not politic to undertake to do so? I only wish to understand the gentleman's legal position.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to my friend that the bill which I have just had read goes to the very extreme limit.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So that, if I understand the gentleman correctly, we have not, in his opinion, the power to protect the officers in the line of succession farther than provided in the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. In other words, the bill just read is expressive of the full power of Congress in this respect.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And if we undertake to exercise the power to protect the officers in the line of succession, such a bill, as I infer from the trend of the gentleman's argument, would, in his opinion, be an infringement of the powers of the State? That is the gentleman's proposition, is it not?

Mr. JENKINS. Just so far as their relation to the Presidency is concerned. I do not want to have that matter confounded with the other proposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then when we come to the case of an officer in the line of succession, the terrible bugbear of State rights intervenes and prevents Congress from taking cognizance of those officers. Is not that the result of the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, I can not make my whole argument now, but I want to have it understood that there is a distinction in my mind between the other officers of the Government and those in the line of succession. That distinction I will try to make clear as I proceed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Are we to understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] proposes at the proper time to offer the bill just read as a substitute for the bill of the committee?

Mr. JENKINS. I do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the position taken here, I may say, under the leadership of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY]. That will better express the idea than anything else I could say. What I understand is that the majority of this committee—every gentleman of the committee except the gentleman from Texas and myself—insist that Congress has no power to punish offenses against officers of the United States, unless engaged in the performance of official duties, or because of their official character, or because of official acts done or committed.

Now, here is where I divide with the learned chairman of my committee. My insistence is, as I have said and will endeavor to make clear, that the Congress of the United States has express power under the Constitution of the United States to protect the President of the United States at all times, asleep or awake, whether he is in the discharge of his official duties or doing duties that are nonofficial, without qualification, without limitation, and without resorting to all of the uncertain language of the bill. And I want also to call attention to the fact that the gentlemen who are supporting——

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, may I ask my colleague a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. Supposing the President of the United States should so far forget himself—just suppose a case——

Mr. JENKINS. I wish to state to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that this time must be given to me if he wants to take up my time.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly; but I want to ask the gentleman this question: Supposing that the President of the United States should so far forget himself some time—our present President would not, but some might—that he should go up to Chicago, a wicked city, and go out with the boys, incog, disguised, get full, nobody knowing he was President, nobody knowing who he was or anything about him, and suppose he gets into a fight in some low-down saloon, and some fellow, angered at him, because of something he does there, kills him. Do you think that the Federal jurisdiction is so broad that it may in that case take hold of the offender and punish him, based on the simple fact that this man—the President, in fact, incog, and in that place, under these conditions—was slain by somebody in a petty quarrel?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to my friend that the American people have never yet and never will elect a man that will so lower himself, and I regret that the chairman of this committee has ever asked such an unreasonable question to bear out his views.

Mr. RAY of New York. There you have it. I knew that the gentleman would dodge the question.

Mr. JENKINS. I will not dodge the question, but I have a high respect——

Mr. RAY of New York. Just answer the question.

Mr. JENKINS. I have a high respect for the President of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then answer the question.

Mr. JENKINS. I would not answer any question that so disgraces the high office of the President of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is not an answer to the question.

Mr. JENKINS. If I do not answer it to the satisfaction of the gentleman from New York, before I get through I will answer it to the satisfaction of the country, but I will not answer any question that so lowers and disgraces the high office of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; that is just it. That presents simply the proposition——

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I want protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. RAY of New York. And the gentleman declines to answer it?

Mr. JENKINS. I will not answer anything so disgraceful and so disrespectful.

Mr. RAY of New York. Because the gentleman can not answer it, and does not dare answer it.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say in defense of that position that the American people, while they may divide politically, have never made any mistake as far as the high character was concerned of the Presidents of the United States. I want to tell you all the way down through they have been men that will always live in the history of this country. I am going to get along, and I want the gentlemen present to understand that if there is any gentleman on this floor who wants to ask a question that has any merit in it, any decency in it, or any intelligence in it, I want to answer it, and I stand here prepared to do it; but I do not propose to stand here and be charged with cowardice and inability to answer a question that is asked me here simply because I refuse to answer it on the ground that it is disrespectful to the highest office the people of the United States enjoy.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I want protection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JENKINS. I want to be permitted to make my argument.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly not.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman just said he would; he just said that he would answer any questions.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, when I have got to go to the Democratic side of this Chamber for an opportunity to present my views on the question I do not want to waste my time on the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.] It is the first and only time I have ever had to go to the Democrats for a favor, and if it had not been for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] I would never have enjoyed the opportunity of addressing the House on this occasion.

I was saying, Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted, that the Judiciary Committee has confounded this whole question. It has placed the President in the same category as a deputy marshal, and I want to ask any gentleman here who honored the chairman of my committee yesterday by listening to his address, if the chairman of this committee or any gentleman who has addressed the House so far on this question referred to the Constitution of the United States? Not a word of it.

They never referred to the Constitution of the United States, but absolutely ignored it, and that is the source of our power. As I have said, if we do not find the power in the Constitution of the United States, then Congress has no power to act. But they ignored that and never paid any attention to it.

And, as I say, they have placed the President of the United States, with his great duties under the Constitution, in the same category as a marshal or a deputy marshal of the United States, confounding the whole subject and mystifying it, if it is possible to mystify it, from the language used.

I want to notice the inconsistencies as presented here by my learned friend from New York [Mr. RAY] and as supported by the report of the committee, which I understood he drew. The position of the gentlemen who oppose me is that any bill of this character is absolutely unconstitutional unless it provides, with all of these qualifications, for the killing of the President. In other words, it is unconstitutional to provide in general terms for the killing of the President of the United States.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I beg the gentleman's pardon?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think that possibly inadvertently the gentleman stated his proposition wrongly. He did not contemplate any bill that provides for the killing of the President, but he contemplates a bill that prohibits the killing of the President. Inadvertently he stated it the other way.

Mr. JENKINS. Of course, the gentleman takes a contrary view of this question from myself, and so I am not surprised when he does not agree with me.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Inadvertently, perhaps, you stated your proposition wrongly. You refer to the bill as providing for the killing, but what you mean is a bill that prohibits the killing. Am I not correct about that?

Mr. RAY of New York. I think not, because the whole argument is based upon the other proposition.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be protected against the gentleman from New York for a few minutes. I listened to him for pretty nearly three hours yesterday without interrupting him, and unless he has a sensible, reasonable question to ask, I want to ask him not to interrupt me.

Mr. LANHAM. We are engaged in the business of protection here, and so the gentleman ought to be protected. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS. It does not make any difference whether I misspoke myself or not. I meant to speak correctly; but I think my friends around me will appreciate that it is very difficult to discuss a great legal and constitutional question like this with constant interruptions and irrelevant questions. But I understand my friends to argue that it is unconstitutional to pass a bill in general terms providing for the protection of the President of the United States, and that in order that Congress may protect the President there has to be qualifying words in the bill; that is, that you must kill him when he is engaged upon some official duty, or you must kill him because of his official character, or because of some official act or omission.

And yet at the same time my friend from New York [Mr. RAY] argued yesterday—and I want to call him my friend notwithstanding his opposition to me—that the President is always in the discharge of his duties. Now, when I first came to Washington to attend the opening of this session of Congress, one of the ablest men in this country came to me and said, "I understand you are interested in this question, and I want to tell you that the President is at all times in the discharge of his duties." We had a controversy, and only a few days ago he sent me a note to say, "I have reconsidered that doctrine and I join you in what you said, that it is nonsense to argue that the President of the United States is always in the discharge of his duties." The President of the United States is no more always in the discharge of his duties than any other official, and I do not propose to rest this great power on the narrow doctrine that the President of the United States is always in the discharge of his official duties.

But my friends opposed to me go further, and while they insist that he is always in the discharge of his duties, the report says, although my friend did not discuss it yesterday, that the courts would always hold that he is always in the discharge of his duties, a position which is not true. But he goes further than that, and then introduces what is called section 13 in the bill changing the order and burden of proof. And the other day when he was assaulting me for taking away the right of trial by jury, when he was standing here saying that he always stood in defense of the liberties of the people, I wanted to ask him why he wanted to change the organic law of this country and say that for the purpose of protecting the President of the United States we will wipe out a rule that has been observed by all civilization, changing the rule and saying the burden is upon the defendant to exonerate himself.

The section does not help it. But look at the inconsistency of the position: First, that it is necessary to introduce qualifying words into the bill; second, that the courts will always hold that the President of the United States is at all times in the discharge of his duties; third, that if there is any attempt when he is not in the discharge of his duties we can not protect him; fourth, that we have introduced section 13, and by it have said as a matter of law that the President of the United States is always in the discharge of his duties. I want to say to my genial and able friend from Texas——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. At the risk of not putting a proper question—I do not want to disturb the gentleman, but I would like to have the gentleman examine that section 13——

Mr. JENKINS. I can not discuss this whole question at once. I am coming to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Right on the point you are discussing. I understand you state that that section stands as a presumption of law.

Mr. JENKINS. I have not come to that, and if I do not answer the point you have in your mind before I get through, you please call my attention to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman at the present referred to that section.

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, no; you are wrong.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now the gentleman is discussing——

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman proposes to apologize for the bill?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman need have no apprehension of any apology the gentleman will make.

Mr. JENKINS. I have none. Before I get through I will come to that section.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman knows I am not responsible for that section. Before you get through I wish you would be kind enough to call the attention of the committee to the language that makes it a presumption of law that is not refutable, that the President is always in the discharge of official duty.

Mr. JENKINS. If my friend had listened to the argument of the gentleman from New York, or only read it, as I have, he would have discovered from his statement that it is a presumption of law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I discovered it was a presumption of fact, and that is refutable. Discuss it right now and answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman must not misrepresent "the gentleman from New York."

Mr. JENKINS. I will state to the gentleman from New York that I want to be permitted to discuss this question.

Mr. RAY of New York. But the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. JENKINS. I decline to yield to the gentleman from New York. I can not stand here——

Mr. RAY of New York. But, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. RAY of New York. That all may be, but he must not misrepresent "the gentleman from New York."

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I listened for three hours to the gentleman from New York yesterday as he misrepresented the law, and I want to be permitted the same latitude. [Laughter.]

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, with these preliminary remarks, I want to call attention to the fact that in this great discussion one of the most important questions that ever came before this House, that no gentleman has yet discussed, is the powers of Congress; and that is what I propose to call attention to. As I have said, I concede a dual system of government. I concede with my friend from Texas that if Congress wants to exercise a power it must resort to the Constitution of the United States to determine the right to exercise the power; and therefore I am going to call attention now to this constitutional question.

I want to do it, because my friends who are standing here in support of this bill have entirely and absolutely ignored the Constitution of the United States, and have said that they rest their positions upon the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I want to say here with respect to their statement, and I do not want to insult any gentleman, that if you look until you are so old you can not see you will never find a single parallel case; you will never find a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, or any other court, holding that Congress can not pass a law to protect the President of the United States.

The cases that they state are mere ropes of sand, and I propose in my brief argument to call attention to the point plainly and so pertinently that every gentleman will concede that on this question those who rely upon the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States have got no foundation whatever.

I propose, instead of giving decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, to invite the attention of the House upon this question to the Constitution of the United States as to the powers of Congress. I concede, and want it understood, that my position is that every power is expressed, every power is enumerated, and that the power that I am insisting upon is not only expressed, but broad enough to protect us and to justify my position. Now, then, look at the powers conferred upon Congress with reference to this officer.

I have not time, Mr. Chairman, to enter into a discussion of where the line of demarcation should be drawn between the President of the United States and the smaller officers so numerous in the United States. I am only contending to-day and undertaking to justify this position, that the Congress of the United States has got ample, expressful, and plenary power to protect the President of the United States if he is shot down ruthlessly in any State of this Union without reference to the powers of the States or the rights of the States.

I do not want to go so far and be so extreme that I can not get my Democratic friends to stand on my platform. I propose to be absolutely fair in my legal position here. I think that every gentleman, no matter what his views may be with reference to State rights or Federal powers, can all agree upon this great proposition.

But I want to invite attention now to the powers of Congress. Among the enumerated express powers conferred upon Congress is to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a Navy, and to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. I want to invite attention to the Constitutional power conferred upon the President of the United States so as to distinguish that high and great office from a deputy United States marshal.

The Constitution of the United States confers upon the President of the United States the following enumerated express powers: First, he is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He has the exclusive power over and control of the Army and Navy, so extensive that when war is declared Congress can not stop the war only by refusing appropriations. The President and Senate can, by treaty, stop the war. The President of the United States is also required to give opinions in writing; he has the power to reprieve and pardon; he has the power to make treaties, nominate officers, give information to Congress, and even to adjourn Congress, receive ambassadors and ministers, see that the laws are faithfully executed, and commission all officers of the United States.

Now, then, passing that, Mr. Chairman, and coming down to another provision of the Constitution, which was briefly referred to by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS], Article I, section 8, subdivision 18, says:

> To make all laws that shall be necessary and proper to carry into execution the foregoing powers and other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

This is a very comprehensive provision. What did Chief Justice Marshall say with reference to this great provision of the Constitution? In the case of McCullough against Maryland (4th of Wheaton, p. 360), in order to determine as to the power of Congress in this regard: "Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional."

One of the greatest men that ever sat in this House, John Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, wrote a work on the Constitution of the United States that ought to be read by every lover of government; and what did that great man say with reference to this provision and with reference to this opinion of the great chief justice of his State? I appeal to my Democratic friends to consider what that jurist said with reference to this provision, because it will help them in the discharge of their great political duty now.

He said that this canon of construction is not in the interest of strict construction but a fair and liberal one. This will be found in his work on page 361.

Now, I want to say to my friends who are doing me the honor of listening to me on this occasion that if you want to find out whether Congress can act you must resort to the Constitution of the United States to find whether any power is conferred on an officer of the Government, upon any department of Government, or upon the Government of the United States, or upon the Congress of the United States. It is worth while to reread Article I, section 8, subdivision 18 of the Constitution:

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

Let us go back a very little and see, Mr. Chairman, as to the power of Congress. That power which I have just read is the general power which authorizes Congress to make all details necessary to make every one of the powers in the Constitution operative and effective. I say that because I do not think there is any gentleman on the floor of this House, I do not care how democratic he may be, I do not care how much he may be wedded to the State rights doctrine, but at the same time he has got a kindly feeling for the power of the Federal Government. and he knows that it must be exercised, and that at times it ought to be exercised. I think I might say in passing now, Mr. Chairman, that we are not trying to usurp any powers of the State. Whatever we are doing here to-day is in obedience to the power and demand of the people of this nation.

I know that when I left my home every Democrat, every Republican, every Catholic, and every Protestant demanded of me that I do what I could to have Congress pass some legislation to protect the life of the President of the United States, and when I first had the pleasure of meeting one of my colleagues, Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin, he said to me that the last and practically the only word that was sent to him by his people was to defend the dignity and the power of the Federal Government to protect the President of the United States, and I know to-day——

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am fully in sympathy with my colleague in his desire to make this measure as strong as possible for the protection of the President, but the Constitution provides that the executive power shall be vested in the President, and then defines his powers. Later it provides that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the Supreme Court and other inferior courts, etc. I am quoting only from memory.

Now, then, is there any difference, so far as the principle is concerned, in the officers of the court and in the President? While the duties of the office of President may be more multitudinous and more important, are they different in principle from those which are discharged by any other officers of the Government? I would like to have it clearly pointed out, so that I may see why the President is entitled to absolute protection at all times different from other United States officers, particularly the officers of the Federal courts.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, while it may compel me to digress a little from my argument, I will endeavor to answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin, because I think he is a thoughtful and reflective and careful gentleman, and he has asked this question from the very purest and best of motives. There is, as I have tried to point out since I commenced this argument, a vast difference under the Constitution of the United States between the President of the United States and a deputy marshal of the United States. The President, as I have just been reading, has large constitutional powers conferred upon him, and one of these minor officers is never mentioned in the Constitution of the United States. I can not quote with any more accuracy than can my friend from Wisconsin what the Constitution says with reference to the Supreme Court, but I know that it is general in language.

Mr. BARNEY. But while the officers of the court are not mentioned, yet when the court is established and when the Constitution provides that the judicial power shall be vested in the Supreme Court and other inferior courts, that necessarily implies the judges and marshals and other officers of the courts, so that they are really as much constitutional officers as the President or any other officer named.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Wisconsin is legally right, as far as that is concerned, but there is a vast difference under the Constitution between those officers. The only reference that the Constitution has in respect to the Supreme Court is to the Supreme Court as a body, and not with reference to any individual, and I think before I get through this branch of it I will have satisfied my friend from Wisconsin and any other gentleman who has the same trend of thought, for there is no more thoughtful or reflective man on this floor than my friend from Wisconsin.

I invite attention again to the Constitution of the United States, because, as I have said, all powers that we exercise must be derived from that great instrument; and when we are asked to exercise a power the only question that confronts us is whether we can find that power in the Constitution of the United States.

Now, go back a little. We find first an express power conferred upon the Congress of the United States to raise and support armies. Now, the general provision to which I have invited attention confers upon Congress absolute power to make all laws necessary and proper to make that provision effective; and the great Chief Justice says, in order to determine that question ask yourself the question, Is the end legitimate? Is it within the scope of the Constitution? And if so, all means are appropriate.

Now, if we have power to raise and support armies, have we not power to protect them? There is not a word said in that great instrument with reference to the color of the clothes, the quality of the clothes, or what we shall feed the soldiers. Every one of those details has to be ascertained from the general clause to which I have invited attention. But the power exists to raise and support armies. The other general power is that Congress shall have all power necessary and proper to make that great power effective.

How can it be effective unless we can legislate so as to make it effective? The Constitution says that the President shall be the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. If we have power to feed the Army and Navy, if we have power to protect them, I want to ask why it is that we have not power to protect the head of that great army? We have power to provide and maintain a navy. We have power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. If we have power to make laws regulating the government of the Army and Navy, can we not include, under that definition of the great Chief Justice, the power to protect the President of the United States, who, by the Constitution, is the head and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States?

And when we get down to those distinctive powers that the Constitution confers upon the President of the United States—and I will just take one or two, in order to save time—it will appeal to any gentleman on this great question that I am right. One of the first provisions of the Constitution is, as far as the powers of the President are concerned, that he shall be the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. Take the general power providing for the details of legislation, which says that the Congress of the United States shall have all power necessary and proper to carry into execution that great power.

Are you going to argue that you can provide as to the numerical strength of the Army, as to what they shall eat, as to what they shall drink, as to what they shall wear, and to who shall officer them, and then deny to the Congress of the United States the power to protect the life of the Commander in Chief of that great Army and Navy? And yet under the leadership of the Republican wing of my great committee they say that this Government has not the power to protect the life of the great Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States unless he is killed under certain conditions mentioned in the bill, to which I will refer later.

Mr. BELLAMY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. Do you take the position that if the President of the United States, who is Commander in Chief of the Army, leaves Washington on a hunting expedition and goes down to Currituck Sound, as Grover Cleveland did, and takes along with him a party of friends, and is assaulted on the duck-hunting expedition, that it is competent for Congress to give him greater protection while duck hunting than it is for Congress to give General Corbin, who goes along with him?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, I am very glad my friend from North Carolina has asked me that question, because it gives me an opportunity to express my views on that subject. I want it distinctly understood that whether it is Grover Cleveland, whom my friend from North Carolina dislikes, or whether it is William McKinley, whom my friend from North Carolina absolutely worships, if I read the Constitution of the United States rightly, and if my judgment is worth anything, the President of the United States can be protected by the Congress whether he is Grover Cleveland or whether he is William McKinley. [Applause.]

That is my position, and I do not want any mistake about it. I am insisting upon the full powers of the Congress and I am trying to relieve the position that my Republican friends have gotten into because they read too much of John C. Calhoun and too little of William McKinley. Now, as I was saying, when you go back—and I want particularly to answer the question of my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. BARNEY], because that question is full of meat, as I appreciate. I say that the President of the United States has great constitutional powers conferred upon him, separate and distinct from the powers conferred upon Congress to raise and create and maintain the Army and the Navy.

When we look into the Constitution of the United States we find the great powers conferred. Finding them conferred, we resort to that other clause of the Constitution which says that Congress shall have the power to make all laws necessary and proper to make that power effective. How can it be made effective, I ask my friends, I ask the people of this country interested in this great question, how can you make it effective if people can at liberty shoot down the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States and assassinate him at all times and under all circumstances? How can you make it effective?

In a little time your Army will be wiped out. If you can provide enough numerical strength for the Army, you certainly, without any great violation of the Constitution of the United States, can find power conferred to protect the life of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I will yield further time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. I will not abuse the concession of time.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield sufficient time to the gentleman from Wisconsin to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. As I have been saying, the gentlemen on the floor of this House, whose views I oppose, rely upon opinions delivered by the Supreme Court of the United States. And I desire to refer to the fact that I have been emphasizing the position that the gentlemen opposed to me have absolutely ignored, the Constitution of the United States, the fountain of all of our power, and have insisted that they are relying upon certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to sustain their contention that Congress has not the power to legislate generally, but must, if they legislate at all, introduce qualifications and limitations, which I am insisting are absolutely ineffective, and as I have publicly stated that no case can be found to sustain their contention that the question we are now considering has ever been before the courts or the country, that it is absolutely a question of first impression, and as they have ignored the Constitution and seem to rely upon the Federal cases, I will briefly refer to those cases for the purpose of demonstrating what I am insisting upon, that no case can be found having any relation to the question under consideration.

You can not cull out certain general expressions and use the same for the purposes of argument. In the 182 United States, on page 258, the Court, in speaking upon this question, said: "General expressions in an opinion must be taken in connection with the case in which they are used. Courts are not bound by any part of an opinion not needful to the ascertainment of the question between the parties." In other words, if there are any general expressions in an opinion not necessarily involved in the determination of the cause, the same can not be considered as authority.

Now, take the principal cases referred to. One of the cases strongly relied upon by the gentleman from New York is that of the United States v. Cruikshank et al (92 U. S., 542). The defendants in that action were indicted for conspiracy under the sixth section of the act of May 30, 1870, known as the enforcement act (16 Stat. L., 140). There were 32 counts in the indictment. In short, the law under which the indictments were drawn was to prevent two or more persons banding or conspiring together or to go in disguise upon the public highway or upon the premises of another with any intent to violate any provisions of the act referred to, or within the language of the act, to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen with attempt to prevent or hinder his free exercise and enjoyment of any right or privilege granted or secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States or because of his having exercised the same.

The action was tried in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, and the question came into the Supreme Court upon a certificate of division of opinion of the judges of the court below. The Supreme Court held, in effect, that the law referred to was unconstitutional, and the defendants were discharged. I can see that the reasoning to sustain the judgment of the court was very general. In fact, considerably beyond what was necessary to sustain the judgment of the court. The oft-repeated doctrine was again presented that the people of the United States resident within any State are subject to two governments.

Nothing new was decided by the court, for there is not a lawyer in the United States to-day but what will concede that the case was rightly decided upon the facts involved. Any other decision would have been a disappointment not only to the legal profession, but to every lover of State and Federal Government in the Union. The most extreme Federalist does not deny, as I have been conceding, but what the Government of the United States is one of delegated powers alone, its authority defined and limited by the Constitution, derived entirely from the States, and all powers not granted to it by the Constitution of the United States are reserved to the States or the people, and that whatever power Congress possesses is derived from the Constitution, and if there is no power in that instrument for Congressional action, any legislation by Congress is null and void.

The case is not an authority for the question under discussion, and does not support the position of the majority of the committee. In other words, Congress passed a law to protect citizens of a State against violence offered by their cocitizens—a vast difference between such a case and asking Congress to pass a law under its constitutional power to protect the President of the United States.

Another case much relied upon and referred to by all the gentlemen who have preceeded me is in re Neagle (132 U. S., p. 1). The facts in this case are very familiar, and in my humble judgment the case is no authority whatever as far as the question under discussion is concerned. Briefly stating it, Mr. Justice Field, a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, was in California in the discharge of his official duties. A person by the name of Terry had considerable feeling toward Judge Field on account of having been beaten in some legal proceedings pending before Judge Field, and it being well understood that the life of Judge Field was endangered by Terry, the Attorney-General of the United States directed a deputy United States marshal to accompany Judge Field and protect his person from violence.

Terry made an assault upon Judge Field while in the dining room of a hotel in California, and Neagle, in defense of Judge Field and possibly himself, killed Terry. Neagle was arrested by the State authorities of California and made application to the Federal court for a writ of habeas corpus under section 753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the material part of the same being as follows:

> A writ of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to a prisoner in jail unless where he is in custody under or by color of the authority of the United States, or is committed for trial before some court thereof, or is in custody for an act done or committed in pursuance of a law of the United States.

The majority of the court held that Neagle was in custody for an act done in pursuance of a law of the United States. The court conceded that there was no express statute authorizing the appointment of a deputy marshal to attend a judge of the Supreme Court when traveling in his circuit to protect him against assaults; but the court protected himself in its judgment behind the position of a general obligation imposed upon the President of the United States by the Constitution to see that the laws be faithfully executed. Mr. Justice Lamar and Chief Justice Fuller very vigorously dissented.

The opinion of the court held that Neagle was justified in defending Justice Field in the manner he did; that in so doing he acted in discharge of his duty as an officer of the United States, and therefore could not be guilty of murder under the laws of California, nor held to answer to the courts of California for an act for which he had the authority of the laws of the United States. The dissenting opinion held that Neagle was not performing an act in pursuance of a law of the United States; that the Attorney-General, who directed him to accompany him, was not the President of the United States; that to discharge Neagle on a writ of habeas corpus issued out of the Federal court prevented any further inquiry in any court, State or Federal; that there should be a trial of the case in order to determine the guilt or innocence of Neagle. In short, the court held that the section of the Revised Statutes under which Neagle sued out the writ did not extend to a case of this kind.

There is not a line or a word in the case that can be construed as an authority for or against the proposition now pending. It will be noted that no power of Congress was involved, no constitutional question raised, The statute referred to limited the power of the Federal court to issue writs of habeas corpus and the court was called upon to construe the statute and say whether or not upon the facts stated the Federal court could issue the writ. This was a very important case, and as conceded by everything that has followed it, should have been tried in the State courts, and if the supreme court of the State of California was against the defendant, the case could reach the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of error, when that court would have before it the evidence to determine as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

It will be unnecessary to examine any further cases. I simply say to any gentleman here or elsewhere interested in this question that up to this time they will never find a decided case upholding the doctrine that Congress has not the power to protect the President of the United States at all times and under all circumstances. For my purposes I do not care whether the President of the United States forgets his duty or not. The Federal Government simply lays a restraining hand upon the person who would strike a blow at the Government by striking down the Chief Executive of the nation.

I have said there are many unconstitutional provisions in the House bill. I believe it. Limited time will prevent my discussing it. I simply content myself by trying to point out that this case presents a very important question of government. I am standing up for the powers of Congress, and am satisfied no successful argument can be made against it. I will not discuss with any gentleman as to whether or not it is necessary to enforce our power. I think when the people demand it we should act. I do not want to have it understood that I stand alone as far as outside views are concerned. I desire to have read in my time an article from the Boston Evening Transcript. This article appeared promptly the day after the report of the committee was made public. The writer of the article thoroughly understood the subject, and the article can be read with profit.

[Boston Transcript, Monday, February 17, 1902.]

AN AMBIGUOUS BILL.

The bill which has been reported to the National House of Representatives from the Committee on the Judiciary relative to "the protection of the President of the United States and the suppression of crime against government" is a measure which is lame in construction and which may, should it become law, prove difficult of enforcement. It provides that "any person who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kills the President of the United States while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of any of his official acts or omissions, shall suffer death."

Similar safeguards, under similar qualifications, are thrown about the persons of those in the Presidential succession and about ambassadors. The qualification expressed in the phrase, "while he is engaged in his official duties," etc., will appear to many persons unfortunate, or unnecessary at least, since there is no time while the President is in office that he really loses his official character. If he is not engaged in the discharge of his official duties at one moment, he may be at the next.

An official whose functions include or may include the command of the Army and Navy, the execution of the laws, the initiation or supervision of our foreign relations, has little time save when he is asleep when he is not "engaged in his official duties." Under this construction of the bill it might prove as a law effective, but how can we be sure that such construction would always obtain by common consent. The ingenuity of the trained criminal lawyer never sleeps. It would be quite adequate to raising the point that if a President were assassinated in the interval of official duties, say, while on a vacation or on a pleasure trip, that the Federal law did not apply and the trial should be remanded to local courts, under laws that provide but imprisonment as the penalty for murder.

The definition of the interruption or cessation of official duties would be a nice point of which shrewd attorneys would make the most. Thus it could not be questioned that Lincoln was slain because of his official acts as President and Commander in Chief. He was killed by one who sympathized with the Confederacy, and who frantically hated him as the successful champion of the Union. Whether Garfield, when shot down in a railroad depot while about to start for Williams College commencement, was engaged in his official duties is fairly a question within the meaning of this bill.

The committee seems to realize this doubt, for in the report accompanying this bill it is maintained that Garfield was assassinated because he, "as President, had refused to grant certain requests, and possibly because the assassin desired the exercise of the Executive functions to be in other hands which he thought would the more readily serve his interests." The committee adds: "Lincoln and Garfield were murdered because of official acts or omissions, McKinley because he represented organized government."

This is true; but it can not be seriously contended that Lincoln, sitting in a theater watching a play, Garfield standing in a railroad waiting room, McKinley at a public reception, were engaged in the discharge of their official duties at the very instant when they were struck down. It is this failure to specifically throw the protection proposed by the bill around the President at all times that makes the bill defective. It breathes a spirit of compromise between Federal and State jurisdiction in this respect which is expressed in the committee's reference to the Vice-President:

"The Vice-President can not act until Congress meets. His constitutional duty is to preside over the Senate." But we may ask, Would the killing of the Vice-President, by its interruption of the established succession, be any less a blow at organized government because the crime was committed when he had waived the exercise of his constitutional duties, a president pro tempore presiding over the deliberations of the Senate? We know that Vice-Presidents have from time to time waived this duty, but they were none the less Vice-Presidents. Convenience counts for a great deal in all legislative bodies.

A considerable portion of the time of the House is passed with some one else than Speaker HENDERSON in the chair, but none the less Speaker HENDERSON remains Speaker HENDERSON during his absence from the Chamber of the Capitol.

The bill is already criticised in Washington as exhibiting the tendency of distinguished lawyers to "keep on refining" when the task referred to them calls for a very short and simple measure.

I have no private opinion in regard to this matter. I am simply discharging my duty as a member of the committee to present my view, and whatever the House may see fit to do will be entirely satisfactory to me. But I do not want the power of this Government impaired without my most earnest protest.

I want to invite further attention to what Chief Justice Marshall said in reference to this very important question. I am not arguing here to-day that my friends ought to go with me in violation of the Constitution of the United States to invade the powers of the States.

I want to repeat again, as I have additional time, that there is no man who stands on the floor of this House that is more prepared to-day to defend the absolute power of the States than I am. I believe to-day that every police power in the nation ought to be exercised through the States rather than through the Federal Government, but at the same time I must say, within constitutional limitations, that I am wedded, strongly wedded, to the powers of the Federal Government.

While I admire, love, and respect the States, I want to say to-day that we would be absolutely insignificant unless we had a great Federal Government that we could all look to in times of danger; and while I propose to stand by that Federal Government on all occasions within just and constitutional limitations, I do not propose to invade the powers of the States under any circumstances or any time. As I have said, I am simply standing here to-day because I want in this bill to express the full powers of the Federal Government. I think it would be absolutely humiliating to a great Federal Government here to-day to say that we had no power to pass a bill in accordance with my views, and that in order to pass it we have got to introduce a large number of qualifications and limitations which render the bill absolutely valueless in my judgment.

Now, what did the great Chief Justice say further in support of my views:

It may with great reason be contended that a government intrusted with such ample powers, on the due execution of which the happiness and the prosperity of the nation so vitally depends, must be intrusted with ample means for their execution.

Again, in the case of The United States against Fox, in 95 United States, 670, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

There is no doubt of the competency of Congress to provide, by suitable penalties, for the enforcement of all legislation necessary and proper for the execution of the power with which it is intrusted.

And I say to the people of this country who are interested in this great nation, it certainly ought to be conceded by every person interested in the welfare of the Government that whenever an express power is created or vested by the Constitution Congress has ample power to make the express power enumerated effective and operative.

The Supreme Court of the United States has aptly spoken on this subject:

The founders of the Constitution could never have intended to leave to the possibly varying decisions of the State courts what the laws of the Government it established are, what rights they confer, and what protection shall be extended to those who execute them.

It is argued that the preservation of peace and good order in society is not within the powers confided to the Government of the United States, but belongs exclusively to the States. Here again we are met with the theory that the Government of the United States does not rest upon the soil and territory of the country. We think that this theory is founded on an entire misconception of the nature and powers of that Government. We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent.

This power to enforce its laws and to execute its functions in all places does not derogate from the power of the State to execute its laws at the same time and in the same places. The one does not exclude the other, except where both can not be executed at the same time. In that case the words of the Constitution itself show which is to yield. * * *

If we indulge in such impracticable views as these, and keep on refining and re-refining, we shall drive the National Government out of the United States, and relegate it to the District of Columbia, or perhaps to some foreign soil. We shall bring it back to a condition of greater helplessness than that of the old Confederation.

The argument is based on a strained and impracticable view of the nature and powers of the National Government. It must execute its powers, or it is no government. It must execute them on the land as well as on the sea, on things as well as on persons, and to do this it must necessarily have power to command obedience, preserve order, and keep the peace; and no person or power in this land has the right to resist or question its authority so long as it keeps within the bounds of its jurisdiction.

(See Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. Reports, 25; ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. Reports, 371.)

Now, then, let me call attention to one or two more illustrations that I think are very pertinent. The Congress of the United States has power under the Constitution to establish uniform rules on the subject of bankruptcy. Now, every gentleman upon the floor of this House, every single lawyer in this nation, knows that under that great power Congress has the power to pass punitory legislation. It has frequently, and during my connection with this House, exercised that power. There is no detail of legislation in the Constitution, but, as I say, no one has ever questioned that great power.

Now, if we have got power to punish a man because he violates the bankrupt law of the United States, have we not got power to punish a man absolutely and without qualification that kills the President of the United States? Congress has also the power under the Constitution to establish post-roads and post-offices. Under this power, coupled with the power to which I have invited your attention, Congress has the power to pass all laws necessary to make that power effective; they rent buildings, make roads, carry the mail, and punish any man that violates the postal laws of the United States. And yet my friend from New York and his Republican colleagues, excepting myself, deny to Congress the power to punish a man who will, under absolutely indefensible circumstances, kill the President of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, passing from the power of the Government to the bill itself, I want to invite particular attention to it. It is important that we do it. Congress is asked to create a statutory offense. If this bill is written into the statutes it will be highly penal. Every gentleman connected with the law on the floor of this House will confirm this statement. It will be liable to strict construction, and it can not be extended by construction. Every gentleman who has ever practiced law knows that one of the English statutes provided that whoever killed sheep or other cattle should be punished in conformity to the provisions of the statute. When a man killed a cow it was held that he was not liable, simply because it was not a sheep. That shows how strict they construe penal provisions.

Now, the bill under consideration proposes to make it a crime to kill the President of the United States under certain circumstances, not generally and under all circumstances, but within certain limits. Hence it appears from the language of the bill that the President may be killed and yet it would not be a crime within the pending bill. They say before you can make it a criminal act you must find that the President was killed when in the discharge of an official duty, or because of his official character, or because of his official acts or official omission.

I want to say to the country upon this occasion that my friends have very ingeniously pointed out to any man who wants to kill the President of the United States that he can kill him and not be liable under this law. I want to say to every gentleman interested in this question, as I have persistently urged whenever I had an opportunity to do it, that a man can kill the President of the United States and absolutely be immune under this provision. I can not conceive of any provision more favorable to a criminal than the one they are trying to write into the statute books upon this occasion.

Now, look at it for a moment. The bill provides that a man can only be punished under this act when he kills the President while in the discharge of his duty. We have had three Presidents killed since we have been on earth, and not a single one of them killed in the discharge of a public duty. Now, I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that they are trying to divide by legislation this great power. Here is a provision that the duties of the President are divided into two classes—official and non-official. In one case it is a crime to kill the President and in another it is not.

Now, when you say by legislation if you kill the President when he is engaged in official duties, that implies that there is a time and circumstances when he is not engaged in the discharge of his official duty, and the report in this case and the argument of my friend from New York yesterday was that if there is one moment of time when the President of the United States is not in the discharge of his official duty no man can be punished under the power of Congress.

Within a short space of forty years, within the time of every gentleman on the floor of this House, we have had three Presidents assassinated in this country; and I do not blame the people of this country for rising, without reference to their politics or religion, and demanding that the Federal Government pass some legislation with reference to this great question. But not one of them, Mr. Chairman, was killed in the discharge of his official duty.

I want to combat most strenuously, at the expense of the charge of repetition, by saying that it is absolutely impossible for a man to be in the discharge of his duties all the time. Was President Garfield in the discharge of his duty from the moment he was shot until his death? Every man knows that he was not. Was Lincoln in the discharge of his duty at the time he was shot? Not for a moment. Was McKinley in the discharge of his duties from the time he was shot until his death? Not for a moment. And yet, under the proposed bill, if any man had stepped in there and shot again President Lincoln and he had died as the result of that second shot, the man could not be punished under this bill.

Following that out, if any man had shot Garfield at any time after he was first shot, and he had died as the result of that second shot, you could not punish him under this bill. Following that out, as far as McKinley was concerned, if any man had shot McKinley after that fatal shot at Buffalo and before he died, and as the result of that shot he died, no man could be punished under this bill. For they say that if there is a moment of time that the President of the United States is not engaged in the discharge of his official duties no man can be punished for shooting him. All on the theory that Congress has no power to punish generally and under the limitation in the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman said just now that if anyone had shot President Lincoln after the first shot he could not be said to be then in the performance of his official duties. Does the gentleman hold that President Lincoln was in the performance of his official duties when he was shot?

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, no.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly not.

Mr. JENKINS. I am coming to that, I will say to my friend. I am insisting, and I thank the gentleman for asking me that question, for it assists me in my argument, that there are times—I do not care how multitudinous the duties may be that are forced upon an officer by the Constitution—there are times when he can not be in the discharge of his duties. I was illustrating that to demonstrate that he stood on the same plane as though he was asleep, and I want to protect the President of the United States when he is asleep or when he is awake, whether he is playing polo or whether he is writing his message, because I insist that this great Government has the power to do it and that we ought to do it.

That is my insistence, and I do not think we are begging the question or invading the power of the States when we start off in support of that position. Why, no; the lamented Garfield never was in the discharge of his duties for a single moment after he was shot, nor was any one of the others whom I have mentioned. Now, let us take up the question and let us look at it a minute. Since I have been here in Congress I had the pleasure of going down into Virginia, the burial place and home of the great George Washington, to listen to an address by the late President McKinley at the tomb of Washington.

Is there any gentleman here to-day who dares to support the position that the late President McKinley went down there in an official capacity? Not at all. Why, I am told here that in the social life in Washington there are a great many of us who are invited out because we are Congressmen, and that if we were not Congressmen we would not be invited out at all. Now, I do not want any gentleman to arrogate to himself the belief that he is invited out only because of his official capacity. He is invited out because he is a Congressman just exactly as our President of to-day was invited down to Charleston.

If he had not been President, he would not have been invited there. He did not go down there in an official capacity. It is true, I say to my friend here, that he went down there because he is President of the United States. He went down there simply because he was President of the United States, and no doubt he did honor to the occasion, as he always does upon any occasion and at all times. But, at the same time, I say that if he had been shot down there, the man that shot him could not have been prosecuted under this act if it had been in force at that time.

Now, I am not here urging that we pass this law because the States are going to be recreant to their duties. I am one of those men here who have as much confidence in the people of Texas or the people of Alabama as I have in the people of my own State. I do not question their loyalty to the Union; I never have and I never will as long as I see such evidences of loyalty all along the line. [Applause.]

I have the idea that if this last murder had been committed down in Texas, where my Christian friend who spoke so eloquently here yesterday lives, they would have strung that fellow up to a telegraph pole, and he never would have been tried. They would have vied with each other to have vindicated the law, and I do not mean any insult or disrespect to the people of the South because I say that, but I know that they love this nation so strongly that there is no question about their loyalty.

I am not advocating this measure because I doubt the loyalty of any State in the Union, whether it is my own beloved State or some State of the South, but I am here insisting to-day that we ought to pass some law expressive of the power of government, because the people have demanded it and Congress has the power to act and therefore it should not refuse to put that power into operation simply because there is some danger of an invasion of State rights, or some intervention of that kind.

No, Mr. Chairman, I would not libel the people of the South. We are not asking this because we expect our President to go South by and by and we want him to be protected; we know that when he enters any State in this Union every man there, without reference to politics or his political sympathies, will stand up like a man and protect the President, but we want to put in operation a power of national government that the people of this Government have demanded of us that we should put in operation.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman permit a question just at this point?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. Suppose the Federal Congress had authority to take cognizance of an offense of this sort committed within a State, would not the person committing the crime have to be tried in the district where the offense was committed, and would not the jury have to be selected from the same body of citizenship as they would be chosen from in the event of a State trial?

Mr. JENKINS. I should answer my friend from Texas in the affirmative. His legal conclusions, according to my view, are absolutely correct. There is no question about them, not at all. We do not doubt (and that confirms what I have been arguing and advocating) the people or the power of any particular State——

Mr. LANHAM. Then what is the necessity for enacting any statute at all?

Mr. JENKINS. The necessity, I will say to my friend, in answer to his question, is this: We ought to have uniform legislation. The necessity is simply because the people of this Government have demanded it by thousands, and thousands of names have come to us on petition asking that Congress legislate, because their attention was sharply called to it when the late President McKinley was killed.

There was a great question as to who should exercise the power of punishment and as to what the punishment should be, but as was well said yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], there are States in this Union where punishment is not extreme. Had that unfortunate murder been committed in the State that I have the honor in part to represent, the murderer would only have been punished by imprisonment in the State prison for life. In other States he would have been sentenced to death. We want uniform punishment; but I am contending to-day that the power is ample, and as long as the people of this country are demanding that we should exercise the power, I think that the Congress of the United States would be cowardly in refusing to legislate with reference to a power conferred by the Constitution, and I do not care if more than a hundred years have elapsed and we have not exercised that power.

There must be a beginning, and to-day, after the people have suffered a loss of three Presidents—and their loss has been universally mourned all over the country—they are demanding that we should legislate with reference to it. We would be recreant to our duty if we did not legislate. And I want to say, in order that my position may not be misunderstood, that I do not care how objectionable the bill under consideration may be, I am going as far as I can. All I regret is that the majority of this committee have not gone as far as I think they ought to go with reference to the power of Congress, and I regret exceedingly that they have gone off to protect others to whom the Constitution does not afford any protection.

I think I have very fully covered my objections to the bill; but I want to confirm my opening, that under this bill it is going to be absolutely impossible to convict any person. Why? Because it says here the Government is so absolutely weak that you can not punish a man unless he murders the President within three limitations. First, the President must be engaged in his official duty. As I said, none of the three Presidents who were murdered was engaged in an official duty when he was murdered. Second, that he must be punished because he killed the President on account of his official character.

Why, you can not separate the character. We are Congressmen from the day we are elected until we go out of office by death, resignation, or limitation. You can not separate the official from the nonofficial. Or, they say, you must kill him because of some official act or official omission. I am told that my friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEVIN], who is doing me the honor to listen to me now, is one of the ablest debaters that ever discussed a question of this kind. He is going to follow me. I know he is a man of ability, and I want to address my questions to him.

Suppose he was the judge of a court. He would say, "Gentlemen of the jury, before you can convict this man of killing the President of the United States under this law you must find one of three conditions. You may find them all, but if you find one it will be sufficient. You must find that this defendant killed the President at a time when he was engaged in the performance of an official duty; or, if you do not find that, you must find that he killed him because of his official character. Or, if you do not find that, you must find that he killed him because of the fact that he officially failed to do something or officially did something obnoxious to the defendant. If you do not find that, you must acquit him." Now, that is pointing out to a man that under the Federal law he can go and kill the President of the United States and be absolutely immune under any law that Congress passes, if this bill becomes a law.

Mr, KLEBERG. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. And is it not true that if he were acquitted in the Federal court the State court could not try him on account of having been once in jeopardy?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly; the State court could not try him. I agree with my friend from Texas fully. I say you are pointing out to a man how he can kill the President and not be punished for it. When the late President McKinley went down and delivered the great address over the tomb of Washington, did the President go there in his official capacity? Why, not at all. It is true he went down there because he was President of the United States. If he had not been President of the United States, he would not have been invited. But he was not in the discharge of an official duty.

Now, supposing some person had taken offense there because the President of the United States felt like eulogizing Masonry. Washington was a Mason, and I understand that the late President McKinley was a Mason. Naturally he would eulogize Masonry.

Supposing some person had taken offense at that utterance and had pulled out a gun and shot him. Under this act you could not punish him, for he did not shoot him when he was engaged in any official duty. He did not shoot him because of his official act or official omission, and he did not shoot him because of his official character, but he shot him because he was standing there in defense of Masonry.

Suppose, further, that the shot was fired when the President was not in the discharge of a public duty, and there is nothing to indicate the motive or purpose of the shooting.

He escapes under this law. Now, my insistence, as I am appealing to my Republican friends, is that we can protect the President of the United States in general terms under the great constitutional powers. That is what I am insisting upon. I do not care under what circumstances the shot is fired. How are you going to prove it when the murderer is silent? The President goes out riding; he goes out to New York to deliver an address; he goes out to Detroit, Mich., to speak on some great question. Some person takes offense at him and shoots him. He does not open his mouth. He sits there at the trial with his mouth closed. How are you going to prove under what circumstances he shot him?

I am inviting the attention of those gentlemen who are forcing this bill upon the country as to how you are going to convict. I am calling attention to it, because I say you are weakening the bill, you are weakening the law, when you throw this doubtful provision into it. Why, all that a man has got to do when he has shot the President is to keep his mouth shut. How are you going to force him to state under what circumstences he did it? You may call on him to state whether he did it while he was in discharge of his duty, and he will say "No." Then you may ask him whether he did it on account of his official character, and he says "No." You may call on him to state whether it was on account of any official act or omission; he says "No."

But my learned friend from New York says that we have introduced section 13 in this law, by which we are going to change the law of civilization, the law of nations from time immemorial down to to-day; we are going to change the law in order to carry out our purpose, and we are going to say to any man that we will make a presumption of fact a presumption of law, and I can not tell from reading the efforts of yesterday as to what that presumption shall be; but they are so much afraid of their position that they say that we declare as a matter of law that the President shall be presumed to be at all times in the discharge of his duties, and therefore if a man kills the President of the United States it devolves upon him to prove that he was not in the discharge of his official duties.

Why, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] ventilated that question yesterday when he asked the gentleman from New York with reference to it. It was an absolute disposition of the question and makes it unnecessary for me to discuss it. It answers it, and there is no possible chance for argument with reference to it.

A man steps up and shoots the President of the United States. He does not make any declaration as to how or under what circumstances he shoots him. To get rid of that question of fact we are asked to say that it shall be made a matter of law that if any man shoots the President of the United States it shall be presumed that he was in the discharge of his duties. Why, look at it. It is absolute nonsense, if I may say so and speak respectfully of this great question.

Take the illustration of it that I have given, when the late President McKinley went to the tomb of Washington and delivered a Masonic address. Suppose he was shot then? They say we will establish it as a rule of law, according to the language of the gentleman from New York, that he was in the discharge of his duty, and the defendant must prove he was not.

Now, I insist that such things are absolutely unnecessary. I insist that if the President of the United States is killed the man that kills him should be punished. Why, because, Mr. Chairman, I am insisting that when a man shoots the President of the United States, in contradistinction of the argument of my very learned friend from Texas, he is really striking a blow at the Government, not striking a blow at the individual. We are not seeking here to-day to protect the individual, but we are seeking here to protect the instrument, the representative of government.

That is what we are doing. We are not trying to say that if a man holds a high office in the Government he shall be protected as against the humblest individual of the United States or the nation or the State. We are simply to-day exercising the power possessed by the Federal Government—a power that was never exercised. That is what we are attempting to do. We are not seeking to do anything, but in obedience to the demand and the great call of the people of this nation we are seeking to put into operation the power of the Government to aid in the protection of the President of the United States. The people are demanding it. It is not as federalists we are demanding this legislation.

It is not as though the extreme and radical were demanding this legislation. We are simply acting in obedience to the great demand of the people who say there ought to be a national law. It is not confined to the North, but it comes from the South; it comes from the West, and it comes from the East. They are all demanding that this great power that has been dormant for over one hundred years be put into action. That is all they are demanding. We are not violating any principle of the Constitution, we are not invading the power of the State. There is not a single man that wants to invade it.

Now, I am in honor bound to hurry along, but I want to call attention to the difference between the Senate bill and the House bill. Mr. Chairman, my learned friend, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has insisted that the Senate bill is unconstitutional. To a certain extent I agree with him, but I insist that the Senate bill is infinitely preferable to the House bill.

The difference between us and the Senate is that the Senate absolutely agrees to my position. The Senate says, without division, without debate, without a question, with those great Democratic members sitting there in the Senate, that there is no question but that the Congress of the United States has the absolute power to protect the President of the United States, asleep or awake, whether he is engaged in official duty or nonofficial duty. It makes no difference when he is killed. They say it is punishable per se, and I say so.

I say so, Mr. Chairman, because the man that kills the President of the United States does not merely kill an individual; he does not kill a man, he kills the representative of the executive branch of this Government. He strikes a blow at government. That is what we are aiming to protect. We are aiming to protect the Government of the United States, and not the individual who fills the position. It may mean lots to this great Government to have a President of the United States killed. We may have no Vice-President, and it may mean a great change, it may make a great difference, and we want to warn all men that they must not kill the President of the United States, whether he insults them or not.

I will not indulge, as far as I am concerned, in any such reflection. I know, as I have said in answer to the gentleman from New York, that we have never had a man, and I know that we never will have a man elevated to that high position, who will so far forget himself as to insult any man and provoke him to murder; and if he does, let the responsibility rest upon the murderer instead of upon the nation.

I insist that a man must keep his hands off. He may want to kill the President, but I do not care what you suggest may be the reason or motive, I am insisting to-day that the man that kills the President of the United States strikes a blow at the Government and the individual liberty of every citizen of the United States. It is not killing simply a man. If it was, we would not be exercising or attempting to exercise the power to-day. I would not insult any State in this Union by asking that the Federal power be invoked, because I think that any State would discharge its duty. I know no State would be recreant to its duty on an occasion of this kind.

I am asking you why anyone should find fault because the Congress of the United States proposes to put into execution one of the great powers confided to it by the Constitution of the United States. We do not want to impair the power of a State; we do not want to invade, and we never will by my action invade the power of a State. I know that no lover of this Government will ever insist on any such proposition.

I want to refer to two or three provisions of the bill, and I tell you it will take some good lawyer to explain it. Out in our country when they get confused in reference to a legal proposition they say it will take a Philadelphia lawyer to explain. What that means I do not know. I never had it explained to me. But I tell you it will take more than one lawyer to explain to me some of the provisions in this bill.

Now, I have not the time to go through it seriatim, but I wish I had. I have tried to point out in my feeble way and with my limited time that while I agree with my colleague that the power they seek to invoke is constitutional, they do not go far enough. They have yielded to democratic influence; they have denied the just and full powers of this Government. I have given my views in the bill which has been read from the Clerk's desk, because I think that goes as far as the Federal power can go.

We can not protect a man who seeks to come in to occupy that high place in case there is a vacancy. There is no need of passing any law with reference to the Vice-President of the United States. He is amply protected, because the only duty he performs is right here under the Dome of this Capitol. Therefore there is no necessity for any legislation as far as he is concerned. And when we go out of our way to protect the ambassadors, there is no difference between the House bill and the Senate bill.

As I have said, I think the Senate bill is infinitely preferable to the House bill, because it recognizes the just and full power of Congress in this great regard. It goes further than I wish it did, because it seeks to protect foreign potentates abroad. We have nothing to do with them, and I agree with the learned chairman of my committee when he says that that provision of the bill is absolutely unconstitutional, but there is one thing in this bill that I do not understand, and I want some gentleman who follows me to explain that provision.

If you will read that bill you will see that the House bill provides, first, that if a person should kill the President of the United States when he is in the discharge of his duty, or on account of his official capacity, or on account of his official omission or official act, he shall be punished with death; but, referring to section 5 of the bill, if a man should assault the President of the United States and get into a rough-and-tumble with him and in the event of that struggle the President should die, he can only be punished by life imprisonment.

In other words, there are two contradictory provisions in this bill. First, if you kill the President of the United States, you shall suffer death; second, if the President die from some assault that you make upon him, then you shall only go to State prison for life. I want to invite your attention to it because of the contradictory provisions of that bill. I can not understand it. I could not understand it when the provisions were considered, nor can I understand it now.

I am standing here and saying that I think that such provisions are absolutely unnecessary. My insistence is, first, as I have presented this bill to this House, that a man who kills the President or makes any assault upon the President of the United States with an intent to take his life should suffer the extreme penalty of the law, not because he has attacked an individual, but because he has attacked the sovereignty of this Government. That is what I am insisting upon, and I think it is pretty near time that we settled this great question of State rights and the power of this Federal Government.

I am willing this great Government on this question should go to the people of the several States, whether it is North or South, I do not care where they come from. As I have said, I know that the people of the South are going to insist that their representatives should stand up in favor of the power of the Government. The wisdom of the execution of the power may be another proposition. I am simply standing here in defense of the power of this Government, and I do not want it belittled.

I am insisting that the Constitution says that we have ample power to act, and I think that on account of the fact that in less than forty years we have had three Presidents of the United States assassinated in cold blood there is nothing wrong in correcting the powers of government. When we do this we are working no outrage on any State of this Union. I do not want it to go to the several nations of this globe that Congress has no power at all times to protect the President of the United States. I have no words of condemnation, no quarrel with my colleague who insists that it is not wisdom to enforce that power.

I am simply insisting, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come when we ought to exercise that power, and I am insisting here to-day that we have got the power and that we will be recreant to every duty unless we do exercise that power and write into the statute book that any man who kills or attempts to kill the President of the United States shall suffer death.

We say here to-day it is not the individual; if you make an attack upon the President of this country you are making an attack upon the people of the United States, North, South, East, and West, and we will rise up here in our dignity and defend the power of the nation. [Applause.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEVIN] such time as he desires.

Mr. NEVIN. Mr. Chairman, when the shot fired at Buffalo had done its fatal work the people of the country, in their eager and earnest desire to suppress such occurrences for all time, seemed to forget everything except that something must be done, some law of some kind must be enacted. The Committee on the Judiciary had literally hundreds of names, scores of petitions, and dozens of bills of all kinds providing a punishment for what in general terms was called anarchy. There were bills offered which made the killing of the President of the United States punishable by death; not the unlawful killing, not purposely killing, not maliciously killing, but just to kill the President, no matter how or why, was to be punished by death.

Out of that multitude of bills the Committee on the Judiciary began to examine and to prepare what in its judgment would be a constitutional, conservative bill, worthy the dignity of the subject and the American Congress. All of the members of that committee upon our side save the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. JENKINS] have submitted to the House the bill as it is presented to you to-day. All of these questions that have been argued here were presented there, and I may say that it did not require any great investigation for us to arrive at the conclusion that it was not only constitutional, but that the inherent power rested in this Government to pass a law punishing anyone who unlawfully killed not only the President, but any officer of the Government of the United States.

I differ from my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] on the proposition that the President of the United States stands in any other relation to this Government as an officer than does a deputy marshal. So far as the Government is concerned, the President is an officer, no more and no less, save that he has multitudinous duties to perform and of a higher and more dignified kind. He differs in degree, it is true, but he is an officer of this Government, elected as other men are elected and as some are appointed, with precisely the same right to be protected, and no other. As a citizen he has just the same right, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] said the other day, that any other citizen has. We have been taught from earliest infancy that, so far as men are concerned, there is no difference in this country between those who hold office and those who do not, and I agree to the fullest extent with the remark made by my friend from Texas that, so far as the citizen is concerned, it is just as much a crime to kill one good man, though he be the humblest in the community, as to kill any other good man, though he be President of the United States.

Therefore, starting out with the proposition that we have the inherent power to protect our own Government, the same inherent power that all governments have, we have reached this conclusion. What is the Government? It is that which rules a people or a nation; and unless it can protect itself, it is nothing. It is less than a wisp of straw or a rope of sand. It must have the inherent right, regardless of any Constitution, written or unwritten, to protect itself, and therefore to protect its officers and its agencies. Therefore we had no differences in the committee in the opinion that we have the right to pass a law punishing anarchy, punishing the killing of a President or a Vice-President; and although I listened intently to my friend's reading of the Constitution, I failed to hear anything to-day, as I have failed from an examination of it heretofore, to find anything which would indicate in the least that the President differs in any way as an official from any other officer of this nation.

Now, what did we find when we began to examine the decisions? We found that from the very beginning of this Government there had been recognized the right of the State only and alone to punish the citizen; that in whatever jurisdiction you were, there the citizen, the man, the homo should be protected, and if assailed his assailant should be punished according to the law of that place. And why was it not right? Whatever is good enough and strong enough and righteous enough for the citizens of Texas ought to be good enough for the citizen of Ohio who goes down there, as I hope I may when my friend [Mr. LANHAM] is elected governor. Anything which will protect a citizen in Ohio ought to be good enough for any alien or any citizen of another State who goes there, ought it not, if the law is rightly and faithfully administered? And therefore it is that in all the decisions of all the cases it has been held over and over again that the punishment to the citizen must be in the forum or in the place of venue where the offense occurred.

Now, we intended to go beyond that, not to protect the President as a citizen, but to protect him as an officer of this Government. And then what did we find? Why, we found the opinions over and over, as Judge RAY said, at least a dozen times, expressed that this could only be done in reference to him in his official capacity. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] says he can not differentiate, that he can not tell when a man ceases to be President and when he becomes a citizen. Well, I assume that is a question of fact, like any other question of fact. My friend says we have had three Presidents killed in the last few years and that not one of their murderers could have been punished under this law. There was not one of those assassins who could not have been punished under this law. There was not one of those Presidents who was not killed on account of his official character, whether he was in the performance of an official duty or not, whether by reason of the fact that he omitted to do something or had done something required of him or not.

It was on account of his official character that each one was slain. Take the last one. Why, gentlemen, say that you should answer as you would if you were a judge trying the case. Very well; take the last case. The assassin would have been brought forth for trial and, the Government having rested, he would have been put on his defense. There is no claim that he had ever spoken to President McKinley, that he had ever seen him, that any act of his as an individual had caused the assassination. He absolutely had no reason to kill him save on account of his official capacity—because he was the President of the United States—and under this bill, if it had been a law——

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. NEVIN. Certainly.

Mr. McDERMOTT. You have as to one case made it a presumption by law—killed him because of his official capacity. If he made no utterance at the time of the killing or thereafter, the jury could not find that he killed him because of his official capacity, because there could be no evidence, and the presumption would be that he did not kill him because of his official capacity, but that he killed him in the way that would best be in accordance with innocence. Then, in the thirteenth section, you provide for a presumption of law. Rightly speaking, the presumption would be the other way in the absence of affirmative evidence that he killed him because of his official capacity; that not being proved, he would be entitled to acquittal by the jury.

Mr. NEVIN. You are correct in the statement of the law, but I differ from you as to the statement of fact. Suppose the case goes to the jury. There are certain presumptions of law. Every man is presumed to be sane until the contrary is shown. Every man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act until the contrary is shown. If I take a pistol loaded with powder and ball and fire it into your body, I am presumed to intend to kill you if death results. Suppose for a minute that you and I shall be seen together late at night, and a pistol shot is heard, you are killed, and then I shall be found with the pistol in my hand, the presumption of law is that the person firing the shot intended to kill you, and the jury would find as a fact that I had done so. Does not the gentleman think that any jury would so find?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No.

Mr. NEVIN. I rather think they would. I would hate to be put into that box. [Laughter.]

Mr. McDERMOTT. The presumption of fact and the presumption of law are entirely foreign to my question. Where is there any legal principle for it being established, if the President of the United States has been assassinated? What legal principle would you invoke to justify the jury, in the absence of a statutory law of Congress, in presuming that the man killed the President of the United States because he was President?

Mr. NEVIN. I will answer that now by taking your own illustration. Suppose, only to illustrate, that I take the history of the assassination of Mr. McKinley. Let us take the facts and put them to the jury. Under this Federal law he is indicted in the Federal court, and he is brought before the jury, and the proof comes out that he had never spoken to the President, he had perhaps never seen him, so far as the proof would show—I am talking about the proof that goes to the jury——

Mr. McDERMOTT. Carry it a step further. If there was no evidence that he had any knowledge that he was the President.

Mr. NEVIN. Ah! but that could not be, because you must assume that every sane man must know the President. The jury would certainly presume that he knew that Mr. McKinley was the President. The law presumes that every man knows what the law is. If you can presume him sane, you can presume he knew the President. Take the assassin, put him before the jury, with all the facts just as they existed in this case and nothing else, and is there any jury in the world that would not presume the fact—that is, the official character of the person killed—upon which it could return its verdict?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To find as to the fact?

Mr. NEVIN. Yes; I am using those as synonymous terms.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I should imagine any civilized court would overturn the verdict of a jury which would find a fact upon which there was no evidence. Now, let me go a step further, right in that line, if I am not interrupting you too much?

Mr. NEVIN. Not at all.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Another question. You have in section 13 a presumption—

That in all prosecutions under the provisions of the first seven sections of this act it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the President of the United States or Vice-President of the United States or other officer of the United States entitled by law to succeed to the Presidency, as the case may be, was at the time of the commission of the alleged offense engaged in the performance of his official duties.

I take it that the draftsman has attempted to create a presumption of law. No presumption of law would stand in any case where a President has, up to date, been assassinated, for this reason——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman from New Jersey means a presumption of fact?

Mr. McDERMOTT. A presumption of law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. A presumption of law is not rebuttable, and this presumption is rebuttable by the language of the section.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Now, take, for instance, the assassination of President Lincoln; he was assassinated during a theatrical performance. President Garfield was assassinated when about to take the train for a pleasure trip. President McKinley was assassinated while addressing his fellow-citizens at a fair for the encouragement of Pan-American commerce. Now, that fact being shown to the jury, the case on review would stand this way: That it was shown that President Lincoln was not engaged in an official action, that President Garfield was not engaged in official action——

Mr. NEVIN. I can not agree to the gentleman's statement of fact.

Mr. McDERMOTT (continuing). That President McKinley was not engaged except so far as you load him with the Presidency; the individual was not engaged in Presidential duty; and it would necessarily appear on the part of the prosecution by the Federal Government that he was not engaged in the performance of an official duty. Therefore, having proven your case for the State, you necessarily have proven the negative which is here proposed, and you have overcome the presumption necessarily in the presentation of your case that he was engaged in any official duty, and your act shows and provides that that presumption shall exist only until the moment that the contrary is proven. It would be impossible—I do not say in future cases, but in cases that we can illustrate from assassinations that have taken place—impossible for the United States to have established its case without overcoming this presumption rendering the defendant at the bar entitled to the direction of acquittal; and if it was not given, the conviction would be reversed.

Mr. NEVIN. I can not agree with the statement of facts made by the gentleman from New Jersey. This presumption set out in article 13 to start with—take any one of his illustrations, I do not care which one—would start out with the presumption that he was at the time of the assassination engaged in the performance of some official duty.

Mr. McDERMOTT. But the proof would show that he was not.

Mr. NEVIN. No. You see there is where we differ. What would you or I say if we were trying a case as to what constituted official duty? For example, I say, and I believe that the President of the United States is as much within the performance of his official duty in the case I am about to illustrate as though he was absolutely writing his message to Congress.

The President is sitting down and writing a message to Congress. He is engaged in the performance of his official duty beyond question. He gets tired, and to brighten his intellect and rest his body he strolls to the window and stands there smoking his cigar and looking at the stars, and a man comes along and kills him. I say when killed he is as much in the performance of his official duty as though he was absolutely sitting with the pen in his hand writing his message. I say that President Lincoln, tired and worn out, overburdened with the mighty strain that had been put upon him, went to the theater as a recreation to enable him to perform his duties the next day, and when he was assassinated I say he was assassinated during the performance of a duty, and a jury would have a right to say and so find, and there would be no such thing, as the gentleman states, of evidence to rebut it.

Mr. RAY of New York. The courts have said in all cases, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided in several cases that the officer is in the discharge of his official duty at any time when he is charged with the performance of that duty. This may be termed impliedly so engaged. Now, the President of the United States is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The executive authority is vested in him, and it is his duty to execute the law at all times and to see that it is executed, and therefore there is no time when he is not engaged in the performance of an official duty—that is, in and about the performance of his official duties—unless he might be in some position where the court might find, in some extreme case, he had gone entirely outside and divorced himself from his duties, thrown off his duties; as, for instance, if he had resigned, or left the United States, or become insane, then he would not be engaged in the discharge of an official duty, of course not.

This illustration was brought up by a distinguished lawyer, who said: "Suppose the President should go to New York on business and stop at a private house over night where no one knew him or of his official character. While he is asleep a burglar breaks into his chamber, and the President resists the burglar, and the burglar, not knowing who he is or his official character, kills him. Now, certainly there is a case where the President is not actively engaged in the performance of his official duties, but still he is charged with the official duties, and therefore he is in and about the discharge of his official duties, and this law would protect him and protect the Government."

Mr. McDERMOTT. But that is not the wording of the act at all.

Mr. RAY of New York. And this man who kills him can not escape upon the theory that the President was not in the discharge of his official duties, and he can not escape because he did not know that he was killing the President, because a purpose to interfere with the Government of the United States is not essential to the criminality, and there is nothing in the bill that makes the intent a necessary ingredient of the crime.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Section 13 of the bill does not provide that a certain result shall follow from conditions that may be stated as these when he is President of the United States or when he is charged with an official duty. The distinctive words are these: "When in the performance of an official duty." The President of the United States is always, from the date of induction to the expiration of his term, charged with an official duty, and therefore I believe during that time that the assassin should be dealt with as provided by this bill. What I am afraid of is that you are providing a loophole of escape. The bill does not provide certain results shall follow during the time he is charged with the duties of President, but that the result shall follow if the assassination is while he is in the performance of his duties.

Mr. RAY of New York. The courts so hold that while he is charged with the performance of official duties he is in and about the performance of his duties. We have used the language of the Supreme Court—a good authority.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I did not propose, Mr. Chairman, to intrude upon the time of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. NEVIN. That is all right.

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BOWIE. There has been very considerable suggestion throughout the United States that an anarchist who, because of his views, attempts to kill the President of the United States ought to be punished by death, just the same as if he had succeeded. For instance, if Mr. McKinley had gotten well, there was a considerable view throughout the United States that the man ought to be punished by death anyway and that that was a defect of the law. Now, I would like to have some explanation of it, why it is that the committee in its wisdom did not think that the anarchist who fired at McKinley was just as guilty and just as deserving of death if McKinley had gotten well as if he died. I think his guilt is just the same.

Mr. NEVIN. That matter was considered in committee, of course, and discussed there. I remember its being stated, and we found it to be so, that in no civilized country has an attempt to commit a crime ever been punished the same as the successful act. We do not know anywhere in any civilized country of Europe or on the globe where an attempt to do a thing is punished with the same degree of punishment as the completion of the act, nor ought it to be.

Mr. BOWIE. There was a very strong sentiment throughout the country to the contrary.

Mr. NEVIN. It is true that the intent is the gist of the crime. It is true that the act of a person who kills another may be absolutely harmless in that, there being no intent, he was not guilty of the offense. I do not believe it to be right to make the punishment for a mere attempt, even though it be a severe attempt, the same as though the crime had been completed.

Mr. BOWIE. Does the gentleman not think there is a difference between the ordinary case of murder for private malice and that of a man undertaking to destroy the Government, which an attack on the Chief Magistrate is? It seems to me there is quite a distinction.

Mr. NEVIN. Yes, so far as the result is concerned. So far as the intent is concerned, no. I would have much more sympathy for a poor, deluded, half-witted person or lunatic who has been led into committing a crime of that sort than I should have for a cold-blooded assassin who killed another in order to wreak his vengeance or for gain.

Mr. BOWIE. But the public danger is not so great.

Mr. NEVIN. That is true; but I may say that in drawing this bill the Judiciary Committee attempted to make it severe and yet not so severe as to defeat the purposes we had in view.

Mr. LANHAM. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. NEVIN. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. I want to draw attention to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] relating to this last section of the bill—section 13. In a criminal trial, as I understand, it is an elementary rule laid down, as old as the law books, that the guilt of the defendant must be fully established by the Government.

Mr. NEVIN. Beyond a reasonable doubt.

Mr. LANHAM. I fully agree with the proposition that a man is presumed to intend the legitimate consequences of his own act, and he is presumed to be sane, and if he sets up the plea of insanity, then the onus probandi is shifted from the State to the man to show that as an affirmative fact. But here you are presuming, not as to the defendant, but as to the person killed. Are you not reversing this elementary and fundamental principle of evidence and presuming against the innocence of the defendant?

Mr. NEVIN. No; you are not presuming against the innocence of the defendant; you are simply presuming that something is the fact as to the person who was killed. It may not affect the innocence or guilt of the defendant at all.

Mr. LANHAM. Then are you not shifting the burden of proof?

Mr. NEVIN. As to that, yes; certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. Do you think such a thing is sound in criminal jurisprudence?

Mr. NEVIN. There can not be any question of that fact; that is just what we are doing. What I was about to say is that we have tried to frame a bill which will be severe enough and far-reaching enough in its effect to make all these so-called anarchists—these assassins—understand that they must deal with the Government of the United States, that in Federal authority is vested the punishment of the crime, and that in just so far as all the resources of this Government can be put to that end they will be hunted down and extinguished. The moral force back of the law—the idea that the Government will hunt them down—we believe to be one of the great merits of this bill.

Perhaps every one of you has read more or less of the history of the assassins, how the term assassin originated, and how the band took its origin. It is said that along about the eleventh century there were three persons, students of an illustrious teacher at Nishapur, called Mowafek. These three students were Omar Khayyain, Hassan Sabah, and Nizain ul Mulk, afterwards vizier to the Sultan Alp Arslan; that they agreed with each other that if either one of them should rise to great eminence he should take care of the other two. One of them became vizier of the Sultan, next in power over the country to the ruler himself. Then Omar and his fellow-student, Ben Hassan, made their claim upon him for recognition. To Omar, who turned out to be a great astronomer and a Persian poet, he gave an annuity.

This one of the trio settled down to reading the stars and writing poetry, one of his productions being the Rubaiyat, which has been translated into English and will live forever. But Ben Hassan sought a place in the Government, and as soon as he was placed in power by his friend and fellow-student began to form intrigues to suppress his benefactor. In this effort he would have succeeded had not his scheme been discovered; and then he was driven away. He went out and became "The old man of the mountains."

From his name Hassan has come the word "assassin"—a word recognized among all the people of Europe. With Hassan originated this organization. The old man went out into his mountain fastnesses, from which, instead of sending armed bands against his enemies, he would choose one of his followers to go against his enemy and kill him with dagger or knife, for there were no pistols or guns in those days.

Thus that little band grew until it became the terror of all that eastern country. Finally, however, it was hunted down by just such an effort in those days as this bill will be on behalf of our Government. The strong hand of government was stretched against that organization. Gradually those assassins were hunted down till they ceased to exist and their power was no longer feared. It is the certainty rather than severity of punishment that deters.

You all know, too, of the history of the Thugs of India—a band of murderers, stranglers, assassins, bound together by a creed, a religion, worshiping the Goddess Bowanee—a band that slew literally by the hundreds and thousands. Yet strange to say they never strangled nor slew one single Englishman. An Englishman could walk through that country alone, unarmed, right among those bands of Thugs and he would not be molested. No attempt was made to put a rope around his neck to strangle him. Why? Because in the person of an Englishman was represented the majesty and the dignity and the celerity of the English law. Those Thugs knew that if one of them slew an Englishman he would be hunted down, his whereabouts would be searched out, he would be finally discovered, and then the strong arm of the English Government would be directed against him. Eventually the English Government enacted laws for their suppression and from that hour they were doomed and in a few years the Thugs ceased to exist.

So in this country the anarchists were beginning to do as did the Old Man of the Mountains at the head of his band of assassins—as did the Thugs, organize and issue their propaganda. The members of this organization of assassins were coming over here from all parts of the world; they were sending their emissaries from here across to Italy to kill its King. These anarchists were going here and there to carry out their infamous purpose. We were making an abiding place for them. We were almost welcoming them as if they were good, law-abiding citizens. But now, let this law be passed and all will change; let us enact this bill into a law—a law which provides not only for the execution of persons who thus kill, but that keeps from our shores all persons that do not believe in organized government—and their doom is also sealed.

Let it be understood that the secret-service arm and power of this Government—yea, the Army and Navy, if necessary—and, above all, the sentiment of the whole American people, as embodied in this law, are arrayed against them, and very soon, as in the case of that "Old man of the mountains" and the Thugs, you will find these modern assassins melting away; not so much by reason of the severity of the law, not so much by reason of the fact that these crimes will be punished any more certainly and swiftly than they have been under the State governments, but by reason of the fact that these assassins will know when the effort to discover and punish is once started it will never cease, that the vigilant eye of the Government will be on them, and that, as in the case of counterfeiters, post-office robbers, and the like, there will be for the persons who commit this crime against the Government of the United States no place from one end of the earth to the other where they can feel secure. [Loud applause.]

I say to you, gentlemen, that in my judgment, if you take this law just as it is—and it is the best we could do for you; we considered it long and earnestly; we considered it conscientiously—I say if you will take and pass this law, in my opinion in less than one year from to-day you will drive the red flag of anarchy from the land, as you have already driven the black flag of piracy from the sea. [Applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. I yield now to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire especially to thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. He knows that my views on this bill are not his views. While he thinks that the Constitution does not extend to the protection of the President of the United States and the suppression of crimes against the Government in the way provided by this bill, I believe it does so extend. We both feel and know, however, that this legislation is not one of mere politics. We stand together in our wishes.

Three Republican Presidents have died by the hand of an assassin. Democratic Presidents may die by the assassin's hand.

It is well that this bill has now come before the House for action. It ought to have been the first work of this session. It is unfortunate that any differences of opinion in committee have delayed the bill so demanded by the whole people of the United States, who insist that the majesty of the law should step in to provide against the change of government by assassination, from whatever motive.

I am for this bill, if we can not secure a better one, but I wish a better one. I believe that in the well-considered words of the Judiciary Committee of the House, far superior to those of the Senate: "Any person who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kills the President of the United States" (I omit the limitations) "should suffer death," without limitation as to motive.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. There is one feature of the bill that is troubling me a little, and that is this: Suppose a man is indicted in the Federal court for a violation of that statute. Now, under the Kentucky law, where there are different degrees of the offense, a defendant is always presumed to be guilty of the lesser degree. Under this statute you make him guilty, presumptively, of the higher degree. In other words, you presume under that statute that the President has been killed by reason of the fact that he is President.

Now, suppose that that can not be established in the progress of the trial, and the man should be acquitted of that particular offense; could he afterwards be indicted in a State court for murder? Could he plead once in jeopardy, in bar of a subsequent prosecution in the State court?

Mr. PARKER. If the gentleman had listened to me he would not have asked that question.

Mr. GILBERT. I tried to listen.

Mr. PARKER. I have left out provision as to the motive of the act. It should be left out of the law. The man who unlawfully, purposely, and knowingly kills the President should suffer death, and you should not look into the question whether he has a governmental or a personal motive.

Mr. GILBERT. But that is not the wording of the law.

Mr. PARKER. I will vote for the law if I can not strike out those words. But I am with my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] that the majesty of the people demands——

Mr. GILBERT. But still now, as a lawyer, and construing this statute or this bill as reported by the majority of the committee, what, in your judgment, would be the result of an acquittal in the Federal court for this specific offense?

Mr. PARKER. I think it would be dangerous.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The trial for the Federal offense would be in a Federal court, and the trial under the State law for murder would be in the State court. The two cases would be in different jurisdictions, and therefore the question of once in jeopardy would not arise.

Mr. PARKER. Excuse me. Did the gentleman from Maine desire to say anything?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No.

Mr. PARKER. I think it is dangerous. It would, perhaps, result in an acquittal in the State courts. A man could, perhaps, not be called to account twice for the same offense. If we mean to take hold of this subject, we must take hold of it by a law which the people will recognize as meeting the issue and which in the minds of the people shall not be ridiculous.

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman from Maine just now suggested that because the man would be tried in two different jurisdictions the doctrine of once in jeopardy would not apply. I do not think that is good law in my State. If a man is tried for violation of a municipal law in a municipal court in Kentucky, and is acquitted, that does not prevent his being tried under the State law in a State court.

Mr. PARKER. I have no answer to make to that now. Those are details with which the gentleman from Maine may deal when he takes the floor. I propose to argue now why those words should be left out, why every Democrat and every Republican should insist that those words limiting the motive, intention, and circumstances should be left out of this statute. Whether this should be done by the substitute of the gentleman from Wisconsin or by amendment striking out those words from the particular section is another question.

Mr. Chairman, the country demands action. The gentleman from Texas and the gentlemen on the other side, South and North, West and East, concede that the time has come for action. At the time of the Revolution the doctrine of the right of resistance, by rebellion, if necessary, was popular. It has been established in this country.

But there was not one of the great men who stated the crimes of George III and aroused the people of this country by a declaration of independence to make war against him by land or sea. There was not one of them who would have said yea if assassination had been proposed. They felt as we did years ago, that this was impossible, and that except in the tragedies of Henry IV and William the Silent civilized nations knew nothing of assassination as a means of change of government, and that it was needless to provide special penalties against that crime.

But what have we seen? The great President of the civil war was stricken down in the moment of his triumph. "Sad life cut short just when its triumph came." We have seen Garfield murdered. And now we have seen that lovely man, the friend of the people, whom we all knew, struck down by an assassin. And the roll is not exclusively American, not merely of three Presidents in forty years. It includes the Czar of the Russias, dynamited; the President of France; the liberal premier of Spain, Canovas; alas! it also includes the sweet and lovely and mourning Empress of Austria.

In the presence of these calamities "the Old World and the New, from sea to sea, utters one voice of sympathy and shame." The New World as well as the Old says that this must not longer be. We agree except as to the form of the law. But as to the form, the whole people demand that it shall not be doubtful and that it shall be made effective so far as the President is concerned.

We have agreed upon provisions for carrying out international law as to ambassadors, but I do not argue that. I agree with the provisions of the bill, and differ with my friend from Wisconsin, that the succession should be protected, as well as the President; but I do not argue that. The danger, the practical difficulty, which we must always consider when we are discussing the meaning and the purpose of a penal statute, is the fact that the dagger and the pistol are so often directed against the man who is first in the State.

Be it from principles of anarchy, be it from lunacy, be it from that wondrous conceit which sometimes leads a man to crime for the mere sake of notoriety; be it from private quarrel, be it from any motive that is unworthy in any case, to strike down the President is a crime against the Government. Why need we argue that the killing of the President is a crime against the Constitution of the United States? We have read our Blackstone, those who are lawyers, but common sense also tells us that any injury to the public weal, to the commonwealth can be rightly punished as a crime. The question is not of injury to the man.

Lincoln, that long-suffering martyr—death brought cessation of the woes of war and of the responsibilities of peace. It was upon the people of these United States that the blow fell, when the bitterness of the North, the victorious North, was aroused against the conquered South. It is they that mourned him and it is we that mourned him. But the hand of the assassin, whether his motive was, as he shouted, "Sic semper tyrannis!" (So always to tyrants!) or whether it was the vanity of an unsuccessful actor—whether he was crazed or half crazed or not—his blow fell not on that long-suffering man who sat for long-needed rest in a theater, but upon the people of the whole country. When such an injury is done, Congress may rightly make it a crime.

When McKinley fell—he who was trusted by all, he who had brought together the two parties of this country under one flag, he whom they were ready to follow in the reconstruction of our new possessions—the blow fell not upon him. He departed from a hard-working, tiresome life to that place where the good are rewarded. The blow fell upon us—upon the people. Surely the killing of the President is an interference with government and injury to the Constitution. When that Constitution was adopted, to have killed the President would have put the Presidency in the hands of the opposite party.

Up to a few years ago it would have put the Presidency first in the hands of the President of the Senate and then in the hands of the Speaker of the House, and they might well have belonged to the opposite party, and the whole policy of the Executive might have been changed. As it is now, the work of the assassin takes the Presidency from the hands of the man who was elected thereto, and puts it first in the hands of the man who was elected only as a substitute, and then with those who are named by that substitute in the Cabinet.

Can any man pretend that the act itself, whether or not done by reason of official character or done by reason of official acts or done to a President engaged in official duties—can anyone pretend that that act, however done, does not have a wrongful, harmful influence, which is not contemplated by law, upon the institutions and the Government of the United States, changing the policy with its Executive, and perhaps introducing anger and malice, as the death of Canovas brought Weylerism into Spain. We remember our own examples. This is not mere theory law; it is elementary law. Treason by the English law was not odious because it was an act against the king, against his person, but because of the attack upon the realm. I read from the seventy-seventh page of the fourth of Blackstone:

> When a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the King, the King here intended is the King in possession, without any respect to his title, for it is held that a King be de facto and not de jure, or, in other words, an usurper that hath got possession of the throne is a King within the meaning of the statute, as there is a temporary allegiance due to him for his administration of the Government and temporary protection of the public, and therefore treasons committed against Henry VI were punished under Edward IV, though all the line of Lancaster had been previously declared usurpers by act of Parliament.

Blackstone says distinctly that every crime against the Government may involve likewise a private injury—that is to say, a person in imagining the King's death involves in it conspiracy against the individual—that is to say, a civil injury—and as this species of treason in its consequence principally tends to a dissolution of the Government, and destruction thereby of the order and peace of society, that is denominated a crime of the highest magnitude.

> III Blackstone, page 2: Public wrongs are a breach and violation of public rights and duties which affect the whole community, considered as a community, and are distinguished by the harsher appellation of crimes and misdemeanors.
>
> IV Blackstone, page 5: Public wrongs or crimes and misdemeanors are a breach and violation of the public rights and duties due to the whole community, considered as a community, in its social aggregate capacity. * * * Treason, murder, and robbery are properly ranked among crimes, since, besides the injury done to individuals, they strike at the very being of society, which can not possibly subsist where actions of this sort are suffered to escape with impunity.
>
> In all cases the crime includes an injury; every public offense is also a private wrong and somewhat more; it affects the individual, and it likewise affects the community. Thus treason in imagining the king's death involves in it conspiracy against an individual, which is also a civil injury; but as this species of treason in its consequences principally tends to the dissolution of government and the destruction thereby of the order and peace of society, this denominates it a crime of the highest magnitude.

Let us apply these words. A man who conspires against and kills the President commits a crime against the State in killing an individual and disturbing the public peace. That is tried by the State and not by the United States. But, at the same time, and inasmuch as he likewise disturbes the General Government and the peace and order of society in that Government by killing the President, it is rightfully a crime against the United States and all who support that Government.

Mr. GILBERT. Could he be punished for both?

Mr. PARKER. I think the greater includes the less. This is a new question, and I answer it with all humility, as a lawyer must do a question that has never been determined. If a man is indicted for murder, and acquitted, he can not be afterwards seized for assault and battery. I think that may be so here.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman says it is a new question. If the gentleman will turn to the RECORD, to the cases I have cited in connection with my remarks on this bill, he will see times that where some act offends against the General Govern- that it is not a new question—that it has been decided a half dozen ment and also against the State the offender may be tried by the General Government for the act, and, if convicted, he must satisfy its judgment, and then the State may take him for the same act and try him and imprison him again, not for the same crime, for the crimes are different.

Of course, if one has taken the life of the criminal, he is beyond a second punishment. And vice versa. In the one case it is an offense against the United States, an infringement of the power and sovereignty or the United States, and in the other it is punished by the State because it is an infringement of the sovereignty of the State, a breach of its peace, and therefore one may punish and then the other, and a plea that he had been convicted for a crime growing out of that act—not that offense, because it is not the same offense—in the United States court, is not a bar to a prosecution in the State court.

Mr. GILBERT. But suppose a man is being imprisoned in execution of a judgment of the Federal court, or suppose he is in the penitentiary in execution of a judgment of a State court, can he be taken out of the jurisdiction of one and transferred to the other while the punishment is going on?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, the gentleman is asking if the United States would go into a State where the State had convicted a man and put him in prison—if the United States would take him from the State and proceed against him while the punishment under the State judgment was being executed.

Of course the United States would not do that, even had it the power, nor would the State do it against the United States, because the United States is supreme. The United States might possibly have power to take a prisoner away from a State, but I do not believe it would; and if it had the power, it would never exercise it But a law may be enacted to cover such cases and permit a trial by the Federal authority even when the judgment of the State is being executed.

The gentleman ought to know there is no doubt of the constitutionality of a bill doing that very thing because the Committee on the Judiciary has reported such a bill in this Congress and I think at his request—a bill I am informed introduced by him—a bill which will permit the taking of a prisoner from one jurisdiction to be tried in another jurisdiction and providing for his return to the jurisdiction from which he was taken, and after satisfying this other jurisdiction. The gentleman knows perfectly well that that can be done by law; but it would have to be done with the concurrence of the two jurisdictions.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Can the gentleman conceive of the case of a person tried for murder in a Federal court and acquitted and then tried by a State court for the same offense?

Mr. RAY of New York. A man can not be tried in the United States of America in a Federal court for a murder committed within a State, because, as has been held over and over again, the offense of murder is cognizable only by the State; murder is an offense against the State, the peace of the State, and the State only.

But if the man murdered is an officer of the United States, then it is not the offense against the State which the United States punishes. It punishes the offense against the Government of the United States, the sovereignty of which is infringed and resisted when an attack is made upon an officer of the United States. The ground of jurisdiction and action in the two cases is entirely different.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Suppose this bill should be passed and Mr. Roosevelt, being President of the United States, should be killed in the city of New York. Suppose the murderer is indicted and tried here in the city of Washington under this bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. That could not be. No such thing could be done; because the Constitution of the United States in express terms says that whenever an offense is committed against the United States the offender must be indicted and tried in the State in which the offense is committed.

Mr. LANHAM. In the district.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; and in the district in the State previously defined by Congress.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. But under this bill, suppose the man in the case I have supposed is tried before a Federal court and jury and is acquitted, could he then be indicted and tried in a State court?

Mr. RAY of New York. In New York?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. In New York.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly. That has been settled a dozen times. The ground of the offense being different, he may be tried first by the State and then by the United States, not for the same offense but for different offenses, both growing out of the same act. I refer you to United States v. Cruikshank.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes additional to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding to me. I am speaking on his side and have done so from the beginning. I differ with him only in that I want to make the bill absolutely effective. I thank the gentleman for the elucidation he has made of the point that was brought out by a question. That point, however, is not essential to my argument. The law ought to be such that both crimes may be punishable, and that a man who has been guilty of murder may be punished for murder. An assassin should be punished for murder in the State courts if the United States law prove ineffective. But we hope that our bill may be so drawn as not to be ineffective. We owe that to the people, and they will hold us to the performance of that duty.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PARKER. I would rather proceed at present.

The nation has the right generally to protect its President from unlawful killing in order to protect itself. The personal motives of the criminal have nothing to do with the question. Personal motives do not justify an attack on a private citizen, much less upon the President of the United States. Self-defense makes an act lawful; but if it is unlawful personal motives do not prevent its being murder. Personal motives do not prevent an act being a crime against the Government if it be such an act as directly and necessarily interferes with the powers and functions of the Government.

No personal motives can justify or even excuse an injury to the whole people. Imagine the case of personal grudges being allowed to excuse an attack upon the President. We humble men may go through this world without much risk of a quarrel with the few men whom we are called upon to meet. But if every man who has a personal grievance with the President is allowed to attack him and find justification or excuse by reason of his personal grievance, think what would be the consequences. Think how many persons the President may meet every day. Think of how many thousands may feel themselves injured by something he has done.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. PARKER. I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Only a question.

Mr. PARKER. Very well; I yield for a question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understood the gentleman to state that the intent—in other words, the motive—of the party had nothing to do with the crime. Did the gentleman really mean to be so understood?

Mr. PARKER. In the sense in which I have given it, yes. When you take a pistol and hold it at my head and shoot, your intent to kill is presumed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, yes.

Mr. PARKER. Your motive in the act is of very little importance. Personal motives sometimes excuse, though they do not justify, an attack upon a man. No personal motive can justify an injury to the whole people. Personal motives in the case of grave injuries sometimes excuse a man in taking a rifle and shooting another. They may not justify him, but they excuse him in the minds of a jury. But if that man stands in the midst of a crowd of innocent people, so that the rifle shot from his hands may kill an innocent person, he is held to the consequences. So here.

A man might have personal motives against the man that is President, but if he act upon those personal motives, those personal grudges, or that personal quarrel, and kills the President, he shoots, through the President, at the whole people of the United States. He breaks up the Government. He can not be justified in the law; he must be held to have intended what he did, namely, to change the Executive of a nation by violence. No law will meet the demands of the people which asks to go into what his reasons were, if he intentionally, willfully, and unlawfully did the act.

Now, the common law continually makes the distinction, and makes lawful private acts unlawful whenever they interfere with the public peace or governmental functions. You can take an execution lawfully against a man to take his body, but on that execution you can not break the door of his private dwelling because it disturbs the public peace. Even a lawful act is thus unlawful where it interferes with the peace of the community, just as what might be an excusable act may be unlawful where it interferes with the peace and government of a nation. The law allows a private owner, by gentle resistence, to prevent trespass upon his land, but if he finds it will lead to bloodshed he must yield rather than break the peace.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. PARKER. Wait until I get through with the sentence. The law allows a man to pass through the public streets. It orders him not to pass if his passage would add to a riotous crowd. The law allows a man to repel violence, but not by such means as would fall upon innocent parties. The law always in dealing with public matters deals with the question of public welfare and even takes away private rights. Much more shall it hold that a wrong to a man which likewise interferes with governmental functions shall be held an injury to the Government, a governmental crime. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAY of New York. I understand the gentleman to say—and I will repeat it to see that I did not misunderstand him—that a man might by gentle force repel another who undertook against his will to trespass or force himself upon his land.

Mr. PARKER. On his land, not in his house.

Mr. RAY of New York. But that he could not go beyond that. Is that what I understand?

Mr. PARKER. The law in our State is that if it will lead to bloodshed, he must go no further. I know the other to be the common law.

Mr. RAY of New York. But we are talking here about United States law, and the Supreme Court of the United States—and I will call the attention of the gentleman to the case—has decided that the owner of land in peaceable possession may stand there and forbid a man to come on, and he may repel him by gentle force. If he still persists in coming, he may defend the possession of that land, as well as his house, by the exercise of necessary force, even to the taking of life.

Mr. PARKER. Let me admit it. I do not want to dispute with the gentleman. The law in England held the contrary and the law of many of the States holds the contrary. I am simply giving examples in which the law makes the public benefit paramount, and I may say, as in this case, that to kill a President is not so much an injury to the man as an injury to the country, and that the man who does that injury willfully and maliciously shall be punished for that wrong to the nation.

All these cases are governed by the great legal principle that private rights may not be set up in such a manner as to invade public rights, and even that the private injury shall be merged sometimes in that of the public, so that sometimes the only remedy is by indictment and only the public injury may be prosecuted. These principles are fundamental. It is against all principle of government that a man may prosecute his private injury against the President by personal violence which would interfere with the President's official action. It is not because there is any divinity in the man. It is because the whole nation hangs upon the office, and therefore, without limitation of motive, whosoever in the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction willfully, maliciously kills or causes the death of the President should be subject to death.

There is no political question in this. The great Democratic lawyers of the Senate have united in a section which so says. It seems to me that in the endeavor to follow decided cases and case law the gentlemen who have reported in favor of this limiting clause of the bill—not of the bill, for I am in favor of that, but the gentlemen who have reported in favor of the limitations—have entirely escaped and forgotten the principles upon which a statute of this kind should rest.

Those cases do not support their views. They have been so thoroughly analyzed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], a member of the committee, that it is only necessary briefly to point out to the House what those cases decide. There is a long line of cases decided in the Supreme Court holding that a marshal or deputy marshal can not be indicted and convicted except for an act performed within his official duties.

Mr. RAY of New York. You do not mean that. You do not mean what you have just said.

Mr. PARKER. I do not mean that. I mean that the person who interferes can not be convicted, except when the marshal is engaged in the performance of an official duty.

Mr. RAY of New York. The person assaulting or resisting one of these officers can not be indicted by the United States courts except where the officer is engaged in the performance of an official duty if the offense be committed within a State.

Mr. PARKER. The person who attacks the marshal can not be indicted unless that attack be made against the marshal in the performance of his official duties——

Mr. RAY of New York. That is right.

Mr. PARKER. Now, gentlemen, do not interrupt me, but please let me go ahead. I object to that sort of an interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. RAY of New York. I simply want to ask a question, that is all.

Mr. PARKER. Fifty questions would divert me from my argument.

Mr. RAY of New York. I only want to ask one question.

Mr. PARKER. Go ahead and ask one question. I was in the middle of a sentence.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to ask the gentleman if it was not held in England that if the lawful king was out of his office and a usurper was in, that then it was not treason to kill the lawful king?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; it was so held.

Mr. RAY of New York. Therefore——

Mr. PARKER. No; let me answer that. I do not want to be further interrupted. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that, for it is in what I have read. It was held that to kill the lawful King was not treason, because he was not reigning and the people were not depending upon him. It was held that to kill the usurper was treason, because the people were depending upon him. You will find that in 4 Blackstone, 77. The point was always whether the man the King was vested with the actual office, and the point in this case is not whether the President is signing a paper, but whether he is President, charged with the duties of that office—functus officio. If so, to kill him is to take away that office from the choice of the people and put it in the hands of some other person not chosen by the people.

Now, the gentleman has interrupted me in the middle of a sentence with an outside question. The cases cited by him were cases which said that a man could not be indicted for assaulting a marshal unless the marshal was engaged in the performance of his official duties. It is true; but if anyone here in this House will look at section 5398 of the Revised Statutes he will find that it is provided by statute that any man who obstructs, resists, assaults, or prevents a marshal from executing a writ intrusted to him shall be punished, and the decisions of the courts were under that statute. I quote from memory.

Gentlemen do not notice the next section of the Revised Statutes, section 5399, which I commend to their consideration, although it is not in point, except on the point that they now bring up. Section 5399 provides that every person who corruptly or by threats or force endeavors to influence, intimidate, or impede any witness or officer in any court of the United States in the discharge of his duty, or corruptly or by threat or force obstructs, impedes, or endeavors to obstruct or impede the due administration of justice therein, shall be punished.

It has never been held under that statute that you had to threaten the witness when he was in court giving testimony. It has been held that it was an infringement of that statute for a man to threaten with a pistol a man who was counsel, and tell him if he proceeded with the examination he would kill him. The point is not whether he was actually engaged in those duties, but whether those duties were laid upon him. If those duties were laid upon him, to tell the truth or to proceed as counsel, and as an officer, just as greater duties are laid upon the President of the United States, and a mere threat is criminal, much more the killing of a man, to prevent the performance of that duty.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PARKER. If it is on this point.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is right on this point. You cite section 5398 as well as 5399. I understand you to say that the decisions are under that section?

Mr. PARKER. No; not all your decisions.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, very well. I understood you to say so.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman name any one decision that I have cited that is under that section? I have failed to discover any in the discussion of that section.

Mr LITTLEFIELD. Not a single one.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not a single one, and every case I have cited was under the other section of the statutes or not under any statute at all.

Mr. PARKER. I think that the decision which is cited by the gentleman—I do not know whether I could turn immediately to the page, as I am not as familiar with his own report as he is—but I think you will find one dicta of the court to which he refers——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But not the same section, except one.

Mr. PARKER. I will not discuss that question. I am giving my opinion, and I only incidentally turned to this subject.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But I am going to state——

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman must not interrupt me. It is a quarter to 5, and I want to conclude my remarks in that time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, the gentleman does not want to make any imputation, as has been made.

Mr. PARKER. There is nothing in anything that I have said in which I meant any imputation upon the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I did not think you did.

Mr. PARKER. But he did not, I hope, understand that such an imputation had been made.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But I thought your remark applied to me.

Mr. PARKER. I did not intend it. I never had anything but courtesy from the gentleman, and never intend to have anything else. He and I are good friends. I know what any man suffers who comes under his lash.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But you need have no fear about that.

Mr. PARKER. Well, there will be no question about that, then.

Now, there are other cases referred to by the committee—cases under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution and civil-rights act. They are not cases as to officers, but only decide that the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution will prevent the States from passing laws which would impair civil rights, but do not confer upon the United States the right to pass laws to take charge of those rights and guarantee them. Have I stated that correctly?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. Now, the last case particularly referred to by the committee is the Neagle case. I looked over that case some months ago. It is oddly enough founded upon a statute. Neagle, remember, was a marshal of the United States; he was attending the judge passing from one part of California to another while holding circuit, and he shot down a man who attempted to attack him.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Would the gentleman desire aid to correct him in his recollection?

Mr. PARKER. Not in this.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Because the majority and the minority opinions state that there was no statute. That was the great controversy in the case.

Mr. PARKER. On the contrary, there was a statute.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In that case?

Mr. PARKER. In that case. I have been through it, and I challenge the gentleman with reference to my recollection in this matter.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I may be wrong, possibly.

Mr. PARKER. There was a statute of the United States which gave the marshal of the United States the same power as the sheriff of the State in which the district was situated.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You are right about that.

Mr. PARKER. There was a statute in the State of California which gave to the sheriff the duty—I am speaking not in exact words—the duty of attending and taking care of the court while the justice was upon the circuit. Thereupon the question came up, first, as to whether the marshal had the same powers as the sheriff, and that was decided in the affirmative in the interests of the United States.

The question likewise came up whether the judge traveling the circuit was to be considered as holding court, so that the marshal was actually in charge, and it was decided that in traveling from one point to another it should be held that he was holding court. The point, therefore, was whether the attack was made upon him when he was in the discharge of his official duties, when the marshal was his personal protector under the statute of California. Now, the sheriff, under the political code of California, had the right to "prevent and suppress affrays, breaches of the peace, riots, and insurrections." There is a statute which made the sheriff attend upon the judge at the time of the court.

Mr. RAY of New York. If the gentleman will permit, there was a statute of the United States which gave to the United States marshal precisely the same power and the right to exercise precisely the same duty as the sheriff in the State of California. Now, if you have the statute, I will not state it further.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There is a statute which the gentleman from New Jersey referred to, but the use made of it in that case was not the use which the gentleman had in his mind.

Mr. RAY of New York. There was no statute giving jurisdiction to anybody to protect the officer, either in the performance of his duty or otherwise. The Attorney-General directed it to be done. He acted for the President.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It was a statute that provided that the officer should prevent breaches of the peace.

Mr. PARKER. It was a statute giving the sheriff power to prevent breaches of the peace and riots and insurrection.

Mr. RAY of New York. And giving the United States marshal the same power that the sheriff had under the laws of California. The point of it is that there was no statute providing especially for the protection of the justices of the Supreme Court. Hence the decision defining the jurisdiction of the United States in such cases under the Constitution.

Mr. KLEBERG. There is a civil statute that requires the marshal to attend and open court.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the use made of the statute was not the use that the gentleman from New Jersey had in his mind. I am absolutely certain of that, for I have read the case within two hours.

Mr. PARKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Neagle case is not authority here. In order to assert the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States court in the Neagle case—that is to say, the right of the United States court to take the marshal away from the State court, where he was held under indictment for murder—it was necessary to assert and to prove that the marshal was then engaged in a particular duty imposed upon him by the law. It was held to be his duty to attend the judge while holding court.

It was essential to show that in doing what he did he acted within his duty and powers as marshal of the United States; otherwise the United States jurisdiction was not exclusive under the statute. But that does not say that the United States can not pass a law which shall protect the President and his office, for his office is his duty. It does not say that Congress may not say that no man with a pistol shall destroy the office of President and turn it over to some one else. It does not say that a pistol shot against the Executive shall be merely a murder unless the President is sitting down with a pen in his hand and engaged in his official duty.

It does not say you shall look into the motives in the mind of the man in doing the act when the consequences of whose act are so direct that an intention to interfere with the Government of the United States must be presumed. Neither does the Constitution declare any such folly. The law has been decided over and over again, and first by Chief Justice Marshall in the great case of McCulloch against Maryland, that the Government has all powers that are necessary in order to carry the Constitution into effect and to protect its operations. And the greatest of all these operations of the Constitution, the greatest vested in any one man, is the executive power and the discretion vested in the President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I have not concluded what I have to say.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have leave to proceed and finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has five minutes remaining.

Mr. PARKER. I will use that five minutes, Mr. Chairman, and may be able to get through in that time. The natural and necessary result of a successful assault upon the President would be to prevent his doing his official duties.

What difference is there if he is then engaged in them? If so engaged, the assault stops the performance of his duties. If not so engaged, the assault prevents the performance of those duties. They are not special and single duties imposed upon him by any writ or warrant. They are continuous, or, rather, recurrent, and the recreation he takes—his sleep, rest, and recreation—are but his preparation for continuing those duties. It is not an interference with his action at any particular time that constitutes the crime. It is the interference with his office that is the crime. No divinity or sacredness is given to the man; it is only for the protection of the office that he is to be protected.

Now, I pass, if the committee pleases, to the question if there is any harm in these provisions of limitation reported by the committee. They tell us that they do no harm because he is always engaged in his official duties. Engaged in his official duties! The statute recognizes that he sometimes is engaged and that sometimes there are cases when he is not so engaged. The jury, under the instructions of the court, must decide that fact. If the facts are before them, the presumption declared by the last section stands for nothing, even if it is right, to presume a man guilty rather than innocent.

To insist that it must be proved that the President was killed because of his official character or because of his official acts is to put the burden of proof upon the Government—to compel it to prove what is immaterial and what may not be proved. The act is there; its consequences are direct. The motive to bring about those consequences must be presumed. If you shoot a man, it is no defense to prove that you had a different motive from that of killing him. Sir, such a rule would absolutely tie up courts and juries.

This bill will not commend itself to the people without amendment. We are relied upon to enact a law which shall be effective. We are trusted to do it. We shall never be forgiven if we put upon the statute books an act which is not adequate to deal with the crime. That crime is the killing of the President of the United States willfully and unlawfully. The question is not why or wherefore, or where the President is or where he is going to be. It is the fact that he is vested with this office, and that to kill him is to interfere with the functions of the office. That is the crime against which we are ordered to protect the country.

I believe that the gentlemen who have introduced those limitations are not really and heartily in favor of them. I believe that they have introduced them out of extra caution, lest the Supreme Court, following old cases, may set aside the act. Sir, there is a caution which is more dangerous than the courage which proceeds upon direct principle, which looks first to see whether there is a public injury, which determines that there is a public injury and interference with the Constitution of the United States in killing the President, and then provides that this act shall be punished by death, and which even goes further and declares that the attempt shall be punished by death. I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio, who says that the attempt shall not be punished by death. Why, sir, the man who is successful gets the glory sought by the vain; but if he knows he is not to be punished except to a measured extent when there is a want of success, he will take the risk.

This country must have what has been found necessary in every other nation, what we thought we could get along without, what we believed the sentiment of the people would permit us to dispense with. We must have a law which will punish severely the compassing of the death of the Chief Executive of this country, not because he is any better man, not because of any injury to the man, but because such an act breaks up the Government, destroys the confidence of the people, because it separates the President from the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. PARKER. I will say only in conclusion that I support this bill as it stands, but I shall vote for an amendment striking out the words which I have commented upon.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GROSVENOR reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 2295. An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

S. R. 111. Joint resolution limiting the gratuitous distribution of the Woodsman's Handbook to the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the Department of Agriculture—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FEELY, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILLER, for three days, on account of sickness.

And then, on motion of Mr. RAY of New York (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2845) to purchase from the compiler, Francis B. Heitman, the manuscript of the Historical Register United States Army, from 1789 to 1901, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2345); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12155) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Robertson, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2343); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2, Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk, and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. R. 274) requesting the Secretary of War to report to the House a detailed itemized account of expenditures made by General Wood as military governor of Cuba, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 2342); which said resolution and report were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5104) relinquishing to Genevieve Laighton, widow of Capt. Samuel Laighton, title of United States to certain lands in the State of Arkansas, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 2344); which said bill and report were ordered to lie on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. OVERSTREET: A bill (H. R. 14898) relating to jurisdiction on appeals in the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and transcripts on appeals in said court, and to quiet title to public lands—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 14899) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Florence Crittenton Mission"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 14900) to authorize the laying and maintaining of a pneumatic-tube system between the Capitol and the Government Printing Office, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CAPRON: A bill (H. R. 14918) for the construction of a submarine boat of the Moriarty type—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14919) relating to the allowance of exceptions—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 14920) to provide for the erection and maintenance of a Soldiers' Home in the Fifth Congressional district of Alabama, and an appropriation of $100,000 for same—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMSON: A bill (H. R. 14901) for the relief of the legal representatives of W. L. Gordon, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BEIDLER: A bill (H. R. 14902) to correct the naval record of John Rohrer—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 14903) granting an increase of pension to James H. Martin, of Cullman County, Ala.—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOSS: A bill (H. R. 14904) for the relief of Charles Sommer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL (by request): A bill (H. R. 14905) for the relief of the representatives of M. F. Merritt, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LESSLER (by request): A bill (H. R. 14906) for the relief of Anna M. King—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McLAIN: A bill (H. R. 14907) granting an increase of pension to John F. Davis—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14908) granting a pension to Henry McGlodry—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14909) granting a pension to Bunyan H. Byrd—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 14910) granting a pension to Edith L. Draper—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: A bill (H. R. 14911) granting an increase of pension to David Love—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY C. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 14912) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILEY: A bill (H. R. 14913) granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Morrison—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14914) to relieve the Italian-Swiss Agricultural Colony from the internal-revenue tax on certain spirits destroyed by fire—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14915) for the relief of M. Esberg and others—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 14916) granting an increase of pension to William W. Gilbert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARNOCK: A bill (H. R. 14917) to give credit to Jacob Parrott for receiving the first medal of honor for services in our late civil war—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILDEBRANT: A resolution (H. Res. 288) to pay E. G. Johnson for services in caring for and regulating the House chronometer—to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL: Sundry petitions of various posts of the Grand Army of the Republic in the States of Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Montana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Wisconsin, Washington, West Virginia, Wyoming, and Oklahoma Territory for the passage of House bill 13986 to modify and simplify the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEIDLER: Papers to accompany House bill to amend the record of John Rohrer—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, resolutions of Liquor Dealers' Benevolent and Protective Association of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring House bills 178 and 179, for reduction of tax on liquor—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of St. Patrick's congregation, of Cleveland, Ohio, protesting against the administration of affairs in the Philippines, especially against the disregard of the Catholic faith and institutions of the people—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. BURKETT: Petitions of citizens and old soldiers of Kearney, Nebr.; Lime Creek, Piedmont, Everton, and Gainsville, Mo.; Sylvia, Ark., and citizens of the State of Kansas, in favor of the passage of House bill 7475, for additional homesteads—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the executive council of the Bankers' Association of Nebraska, in opposition to the so-called branch banking bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency,

By Mr. DALZELL: Papers relative to continuing and compiling the House reports from the Forty-sixth to the Fifty-sixth Congresses—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. FOSS: Petitions of Turn Gemeinds Verein and Socialer Turn Verein, of Chicago, Ill., in relation to House bill 12199—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HANBURY: Resolutions of Electrical Workers' Brotherhood No. 3, of New York City, indorsing House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HITT: Memorial of Mr. Jefferson Chandler, asking for the purchase by the Government of the buildings and contents known as the "Halls of the Ancients," in the city of Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HOWELL: Petition of fire commissioners of Hoboken, N. J., favoring the passage of House bill 6279, to increase the pay of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. JACKSON of Kansas: Resolutions of the Industrial Council of Pittsburg, Kans., favoring the passage of the Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KAHN: Resolutions of Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners' Union No. 304, of San Francisco, Cal., in relation to the Boer war—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LESSLER (by request): Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Ann M. King—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LITTLE: Papers to accompany House bill 14852, granting an increase of pension to Melvina Dunlap—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: Petition of citizens of New York City, in favor of the passage of House bill 12203—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORRIS: Resolutions of Willis A. Gorman Post, No. 13, of Duluth; Wallace T. Rines Post, No. 142, of Princeton, and Buzzell Post, No. 24, of Annandale, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, favoring House bill 3067, relating to pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHEA of Virginia: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of Leander J. Keller—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Resolution of Men's Assembly of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Middletown, Conn., in favor of reciprocal commercial relations with Cuba—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RYAN: Resolutions of the General Society of the Sons of the Revolution, favoring the erection of a statue to the late Brigadier-General Count Pulaski at Washington—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. SCOTT: Resolutions of the Industrial Council of Pittsburg, Kans., favoring the passage of the Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions of National Business League of Chicago, Ill., favoring the establishment of a department of commerce and industries—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HENRY C. SMITH: Resolutions of Welch Post, No. 137, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, favoring the passage of House bills 12203 and 12204—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPERRY: Resolutions of the Men's Assembly of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Middletown, Conn., for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 5, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

CHANNELS AT NAVY-YARDS ON PACIFIC COAST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, certain information from the Chiefs of the Bureaus of Yards and Docks and Navigation, relative to the depth of water at different places, at low tide, in the channel leading from the sea to the Mare Island Navy-Yard, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills:

A bill (S. 4071) granting an increase of pension to George C. Tillman; and

A bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented a memorial of the Western Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, of Seattle, Wash., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to maintain the gold standard, to provide an elastic currency, to equalize the rates of interest throughout the country, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FORAKER presented petitions of the Liquor Dealers' Benevolent and Protective Association of Cleveland, of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, and of 10 citizens of Cincinnati, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue laws relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Turngemeinde of Dayton, Ohio, expressing sympathy with the people of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Masillon; of the Central Labor Council, of Cincinnati, and of the Central Trades and Labor Council, of Zanesville, all of the American Federation of Labor, in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Huron County; of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Greenwich, and of sundry citizens of Peru, Norwalk, Wellington, and North Fairfield, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called anticanteen law; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the D. Rothschilds Grain Company and sundry other business firms of Peoria, Ill., and the petition of W. O. Potter and 93 other citizens of Williamson County, Ill., praying for a reduction of the tax on distilled liquors; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Lodge No. 24, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Galesburg, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called Grosvenor anti-injunction bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McCUMBER presented petitions of the Minnesota Total Abstinence Association, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of liquors at immigrant stations and in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of Portland, Oreg., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men of the Life-Saving Service, and to their widows and minor children; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Washington Council, No. 9, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Springvale, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Municipal Board of San Juan, P. R., praying for the adoption of an amendment to section 3 of the joint resolution of Congress approved May 1, 1900, relative to the number of acres of land that may be owned and managed by companies operating in that country; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5906) declaring the Osage River to be not a navigable stream above the point where the line between the counties of Benton and St. Clair crosses said river, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11657) allowing the construction of a dam across the St. Lawrence River, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2283) granting an increase of pension to William F. Angevine, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 12774) granting an increase of pension to John M. Brown;

A bill (H. R. 8109) granting an increase of pension to William H. McCarter; and

A bill (H. R. 14359) granting a pension to Luther G. Edwards.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5865) providing for the drainage of Lake Traverse, lying on and along the boundary line between the States of Minnesota and South Dakota, and to prevent the overflow of the waters of the Red River of the North, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12085) providing for the completion of a light and fog-signal station in the Patapsco River, Maryland, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 11400) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1898; and

A bill (H. R. 14050) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3900) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported adversely thereon, and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 5495) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia," approved March 1, 1899;

A bill (S. 5671) to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 72) to regulate the height of buildings on residence streets in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4426) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan arms to the institutions having companies of the Boys' Brigade connected therewith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PROCTOR on the 23d ultimo, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate is hereby authorized to appoint an assistant clerk at the compensation of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 6071) granting an increase of pension to Mary Manes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 6072) granting an increase of pension to Jacob M. Zartman; which was read twice by its title, and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi introduced a bill (S. 6073) for the relief of the heirs of Lewis Cato, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 6074) for the extension of Erie street, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Dirtrict of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 6075) granting an increase of pension to John F. Oviatt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6076) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James H. Lappeus; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 6077) granting an increase of pension to Wilson E. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 6078) granting an increase of pension to Joseph J. Fry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment authorizing the United States consul at Odessa, Russia, to receive the same salary for the fiscal year 1903 as he is receiving for the fiscal year 1902, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the opening, grading, and regulating of Quincy street NW., from Twenty-ninth street to Pierce Mill road, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the construction of a warden's dwelling at the District jail, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MARE ISLAND NAVY-YARD.

Mr. HALE. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill. I ask that it be read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and printed.

The amendment was read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HALE to the bill (H. R. 14046) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, viz: Insert the following:

Whereas the United States navy-yard at Mare Island, Cal., is situate remote from the seashore and can only be approached by the smaller vessels of the United States Navy, no battle ship ever having been sent to the yard; and

Whereas large sums of money have been expended by the United States in attempts to dredge the channel of said yard, a large part of such work having been made useless by the refilling of the channel through natural deposits; and

Whereas property of the Government of great value has been lately destroyed and needs to be replaced: Therefore

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to appoint a commission of three persons, consisting of one officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army, one officer of the Civil Engineer Corps of the Navy, and one experienced and expert civil engineer from civil life, whose duty it shall be to examine the situation at said navy-yard, the channel leading from the sea thereto, and further to examine the shores of the bay of San Francisco and the waters nearly adjacent thereto, for the purpose of selecting a suitable site, having ample deep water, for the purpose of establishing at such place a new United States navy-yard, to which, in due time, all Government property now in the Mare Island Navy-Yard shall be moved, so far as the same shall be practicable; said commission shall report to the Secretary of the Navy the full results of their examinations and a full description of the site selected for a new navy-yard, which report shall be transmitted to Congress at its next session, with any recommendations thereon that the Secretary of the Navy may see fit to make.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. BURROWS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. SIMON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to request the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11599) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions. It is a bill which was prepared by the Department of Justice, and it is a matter of some importance. It will require but a moment to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read on a former day in the Senate. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WACCAMAW RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I should like unanimous consent to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 14380) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Waccamaw River at Conway, in the State of South Carolina, by Conway and Seashore Railroad Company.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. CRAINE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6040) granting an increase of pension to John W. Craine. This is an urgent pension case, and I should like to have the bill go to the other House at once.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John W. Craine, late of Company A, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 159) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona-fide settlers in the north one-half of the Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, and reserving the public lands for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Washington, but when that bill is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to take up the Military Academy appropriation bill. I hope there will be no further bills called up until we can dispose of that measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill indicated by the Senator from Washington will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. That bill will need some explanation, I think.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. I do not understand it. It certainly will take time.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. The bill provides for opening up of the north half of the Colville Reservation. The land——

Mr. STEWART. I understand something about the Colville Reservation.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. The Government has never paid any money to come out of the Indian funds for the land.

Mr. STEWART. It is a reservation the Government opened without having a treaty ratified, and the law under which it was opened provided that as the lands were sold the proceeds should go to the Indians. Now the bill——

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. The Senator is mistaken. The law did not provide that the money should go to the Indians.

Mr. STEWART. For a certain time.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. The land was opened to settlement and the money was to be covered into the General Treasury. The Indians never owned the land. These lands were set aside in 1872 by Executive order. Bands of Indians from the different tribes in the Northwest were roaming about over a great extent of territory and causing a great deal of trouble to the Government. In order that they might be better looked after and controlled, it was thought best to confine them to a prescribed territory, and for this purpose an Executive order was issued setting apart certain lands upon which these Indians were to be placed. A mistake was made in the description of the boundaries, and this order was vacated and another one issued properly describing the limits of the Colville Reservation. The reservation, as originally located, covered about 3,000,000 acres of land. There were less than 2,000 Indians on the reservation.

In 1892 an act was passed providing for a survey of the north half of this reservation and making provision for allotting the lands to the Indians and opening up to settlement the unallotted lands. This act provided that the unallotted lands should go to homesteaders who were required to pay $1.50 an acre for the land in addition to complying with the homestead laws; this money to be paid in three installments, the first one to be made within two years from date of entry. This act also provided that the money paid by the settlers should go into the public Treasury subject to appropriation by Congress for public use, but that until it was appropriated it might be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the education of the Indians. There was no liability to the Indians recognized and the money could at any time be appropriated by Congress for any purpose.

When the bill was passed in 1892 the Senate committee, in its report expressly stated that the Indians had no title to this land and that they occupied it simply by license of the Government, and that there was no obligation whatever upon the part of the Government to pay the Indians any sum for the land, and it was upon this basis and theory that the bill was passed.

These lands were opened to settlement under proclamation by the President October 10, 1900, and the first payment will come due this fall. The settlers upon many other reservations have been relieved from payment where the Government has actually paid money to the Indians for their lands or has agreed to pay them and it certainly is unjust that the settlers on this reservation in the State of Washington should be required to pay when the Government has not obligated itself to pay the Indians anything and has not paid them anything for the land while settlers upon reservations in other States have been relieved from a burden which the Government must bear. Every Indian, man, woman, and child has been allotted 80 acres of land, and, furthermore, in the south half of the reservation, which has not been opened to settlement, there are 1,500,000 acres of land remaining. This surely is enough for these Indians. The lands settled upon are semiarid in character and the settlers at the best only make a living, and it would work very great hardship to require them to pay for their holdings. In fact, they can not make these payments, and I certainly think that the Senator from Nevada should not make any objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. STEWART. There are a great many questions involved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I should like to have the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] make a statement about it.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it can be explained in half an hour to my satisfaction.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. QUAY. What is the bill?

The bill was read by title.

Mr. STEWART. Besides, I should like to have the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] here. We have been considering this very matter at some length in the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. The bill retains its place?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It retains its place on the Calendar.

LONDON DOCK CHARGES.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me just to give a notice?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota to give a notice.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the close of the routine business, I shall move to take up for consideration the bill (S. 1792) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property."

This is commonly known as the London dock clause bill. I shall ask the Senate to consider it from day to day prior to 2 o'clock, at the close of the morning business, without interfering with appropriation bills.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that notice will not interfere with the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaties, if I do not get them through to-day. I gave notice that I would attempt this morning to have them considered, but a large part of the time has already been spent on bills. It relates to tribes in the Indian Territory, and the Department is very anxious that the treaties shall be ratified. They are closing up that business, and action here is very important.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to take up the Military Academy appropriation bill, being House bill 13676.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13676) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I will state that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] had the floor when we discontinued the consideration of the bill yesterday. The bill is now up and we are ready for him to proceed.

Mr. BATE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, this is one of those bills in which all of us ought to take an interest. I am aware of the fact that the appropriation bills are generally left almost exclusively to the committee and that Senators generally who do not belong to the committee are not apt to give them that consideration which their merits require. I want to ask the Senators, such of them as are here, to look at this bill, on pages 29 and 30, and see the amendments there which seem to me, and some other members of the committee, to be objectionable, and determine if the committee shall be sustained.

This bill has been reported by the committee favorably, but the right was reserved to submit a minority report if desired. We have not seen fit to do that, but present objections to such points, under a motion to strike out, while the bill is under consideration in the Senate.

Now, the point of objection in this matter, so far as I am concerned, consists in the section of the bill beginning on page 29, which is a kind of addendum to the bill. The bill passed the House making the annual appropriation for the current expenses from the last of June to the end of the fiscal year, July 1, 1903. The bill was sent to the Senate and was considered by the Military Committee and favorably reported to the Senate.

This bill embodies an expenditure of six and one-half million dollars, something very extraordinary, which never occurred before in connection with the history of this institution.

By those who have done themselves the credit to investigate it as they ought, and to see what the various items are, it will be observed that the Academy has been well provided for by the House independent of this increased amount. All the appropriations have been made which were required for its proper conduct, for the payment of its professors, for the payment of the students—even an increase for that has been provided for. That appropriation for the next year's expenses has been liberal beyond measure—amounts, I think, to over $800,000—and then, as an addendum to that, comes this House appropriation of five and one-half million dollars for the purpose of establishing a plant there, and which has been increased $1,000,000 by the Senate committee, making six and one-half million dollars in addition to that liberal appropriation for next year's expenses.

Mr. WARREN. I know that the Senator does not want to be incorrect.

Mr. BATE. No; I do not.

Mr. WARREN. He will be incorrect if he states that the bill makes an appropriation of $8,000,000.

Mr. BATE. I said six and one-half million dollars.

Mr. WARREN. I understood the Senator to say that that is in addition to the regular appropriations, which reach about $8,000,000.

Mr. BATE. No; I said that this large item is independent of the annual appropriation. The expenditure for the current fiscal year, ending the 30th of June, is $772,000. Now, there is a like amount and a little increase, perhaps making $800,000, independent of the six and one-half millions. It is proposed now to give $2,000,000 for this current year by way of commencing, and then winding up with four and one-half million dollars as it may be needed in order to complete the buildings, etc., making in all six and one-half million dollars, independent of the appropriation for the coming year. That is what I said. It does not make $8,000,000, but it makes six and one-half million dollars, with the $800,000 added thereto. The papers show that to be a correct statement.

The present Congress has been very liberal toward this institution, as has been the case in all preceding Congresses. It has, among other things, increased the compensation of those young cadets quite considerably with an additional ration. I have been unable to find any such item, by that name, in the last appropriation. I can not find any such appropriation in the preceding bill; but in this bill, in addition to the $500 given to each one of the cadets, there is an allowance of 30 cents each day, and not only that, it is not to be paid out of the fund we appropriate here in the bill under consideration, but says it shall come out of the subsistence department independently of this bill.

We have, in this bill, increased the appropriations for the buildings and all that is needful connected therewith, making them more comfortable.

In the last year's bill there was also an increase of a considerable amount. There was an increase last year of $46,000 for a south wing to the hospital, and for a two-story brick addition, $4,200, and for enlarging the cadet mess hall, kitchen, and servants' quarters, to be immediately available, $69,450. Then, after that, the total for building and grounds was $258,150, as shown by the last year's appropriation bill, from which I read.

Now, these are enormous expenditures which the Government has incurred for the purpose of making this place what it ought to be, comfortable and attractive, and meets my approval, and, I believe, that of the country.

I want to see a splendid institution and, perhaps, without an equal anywhere, in its utility and attractiveness, but, Mr. President, I do not propose to be one who will forget all ideas of economy in this Government. Although it is said we have a surplus in the Treasury, yet, sir, it should be the duty of wise men to husband it, take care of it, and pay our debts with it, and not run wild in extravagance. Extravagance begets corruption. It has been said, and wisely said, that it is a misfortune for any country to have a surplus in its Treasury, and when I see such raids as this upon it I believe it is true, and that it is unfortunate to have a surplus in the Treasury, because it leads to extravagance, and extravagance to corruption.

There is not one observant and thoughtful man who does not see this extravagance demonstrated almost every day in the Congress of the United States. Such extravagance as we have had here of late years has never been equaled in this country, or perhaps in any other, and it is time for Senators, and all right thinking men to look into it narrowly and check it if we can. I know of no better place to begin than here and now.

What inspires all this extravagance of late years in the military line, and everything connected with the military? I do not know or pass upon the motive, but think I can foresee the general effect of it, and have no doubt that it tends to enlarge the standing Army and centralize power, and with this increase of the military will vanish the old volunteer. That is what it means, Mr. President, for although we have 70,000 men now under arms, there is not a volunteer in all that number. I fear he is already a thing of the past. He belongs to history and can not be taken from its pages. He has, to a large extent, made the military history of this country. Who was it who saved your Revolutionary war in its darkest hour and won victory at King's Mountain and other places? The volunteers of our country. Who was it that saved in 1812 our Northwest and Southwest country from the British and Indians but the volunteer?

Who was it, Mr. President, that won the Mexican war for our Government and won victory from the enemy at Monterey and Buena Vista but volunteers? Who made the wonderful march with General Scott to the very capital of the enemy in Mexico, with a few thousand men, but the volunteers? Sir, it was the volunteer force of this country, the men who enlisted through patriotic impulse, that gave it honor and glory.

I believe the only sure protection that this country has for its liberties lies not in your armored vessels, not in your military academies, but in the volunteer strength of the land. You may surround our coast with guns and line the seas with ironclads and dot every State with a military academy, yet, Mr. President, the real defense of this country, its glory, and its honor depend upon the spirit that inspires the volunteer when he enlists under the banner of his country. With him we are safe; without him we are not.

I mean no reflection upon the regulars, because they have demonstrated to the world their patriotism, courage, utility, and their genius. But I do object to legislating so that when war does come the volunteer shall be given back seats altogether and let all the officials come from military academies. The right to appoint regimental, company, and staff officers has been virtually taken away from the governors of States and lodged with the President. This is a movement toward centralization. It is indirectly giving power to the Army of the country, which is, I think, objectionable to the vast majority of the people of the country.

That is one of the reasons, Mr. President, why I object to this wholesale appropriation of the public moneys for the purpose of increasing the military power beyond the necessity for it.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not read the bill. I know that every Senator ought to have read it, but, as the Senator knows, we all can not do it. What are these appropriations for? What are the buildings? Is it proposed to enlarge to some extent buildings already existing?

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir; I understand so, and to improve the grounds and beautify the place and make it healthful.

Mr. WARREN. And to add very largely to the water supply.

Mr. BATE. Certainly. But I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin to remember that there has been a general increase and improvement upon the buildings there every year. If there was an appropriation proposed here of $100,000 or $200,000 toward that purpose, to increase by degrees the plant there, I would not object to it, but when it comes to inaugurating a plan to build an establishment there which will cost six and a half million dollars or five million dollars or four million dollars, I stand here to object to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I only asked for information.

Mr. BATE. And I sought to give it to the Senator as far as I could.

I believe I have answered the Senator's question, and will state to the Senate what my proposed amendment is. It is to strike out the section which contains the proposition to appropriate six and a half million dollars, beginning on page 29, after the words "five thousand dollars," in line 16, and striking out all down to the words "dollars per annum," in line 23, on page 30.

There is another proposition added to this item here in regard to the purchase of the island known as Constitution Island. That is a separate matter, independent of the $6,000,000, authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase it by negotiation, and it is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. I do not object to that so much.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator to look again and see if that is in addition to the appropriation of six million and a half. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BATE. I understand it so. I have not looked at it closely, but I meant to say I offer no objections to the purchase of Constitution Island, on Hudson River, opposite and near West Point, in order to prevent the erection of gambling and other objectionable houses in the immediate neighborhood of the Military Academy. I want every proper guard put around them, and I do not object to that. I think that is not intended to be paid out of the six million and a half dollars referred to in the bill. Certainly the section does not say so.

The paragraph which I propose to strike out, beginning, as I said, at page 29, line 17, reads as follows:

To increase the efficiency of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings and for other necessary works of improvement in connection therewith, and to provide—

This is an amendment of the Senate committee. And to provide—for an increased water supply at a cost not to exceed $100,000, made necessary by the increased number of cadets now authorized by law, immediately available and to remain so until expended, $2,000,000.

That is the first installment.

Provided, That before any part of this amount is expended, except so much as may be necessary to provide an immediate increased water supply, to install a heating and lighting plant, and to complete the improvements begun on the cadet mess building, complete plans shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of War, covering all necessary buildings and improvements at West Point, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, which plans shall involve a total expenditure of not more than $5,500,000, including the sum herein appropriated:

That is what the House provided. The Senate committee amended it so as to read:

Six million five hundred thousand dollars, including the sum herein appropriated.

That means the $2,000,000 already appropriated; including that and making it a part of the six million and a half.

Provided further, That after the preparation and approval of the plans herein provided, the Secretary of War is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for any part or all of the improvements herein authorized within the said limit of cost, to be paid for from the appropriations annually made for this purpose.

It is not the sum, as I said, appropriated annually for this purpose.

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, in his discretion, a consulting architect, during the preparation of plans and the construction of buildings, at a compensation not exceeding $5,000 per annum.

I propose to strike out that and to leave the bill with an appropriation amounting to nearly $800,000, I think, between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars, for the Academy, for carrying it on as usual in all its departments and making it as comfortable as possible, to improve the buildings and increase their capacity if necessary, such as is provided for in the former part of the bill. I propose that the appropriation shall be all that is necessary, but I shall move that the appropriation of six and a half million dollars here mentioned be stricken out. That is the position I take in reference to this bill.

Now, Mr. President, we see that one of the reasons given for this proposition is the increase in the number of cadets. Some of us, especially those upon the Military Committee, will remember that one of the chief arguments made two years ago for the purpose of increasing the number of cadets was that there was surplus house room at West Point and the increase in number would require no additional buildings. Congress gave 2 at large from each State, making the number 90, and in addition to those the President had been authorized to appoint for several years 10 at large, as it is called. He was given authority to make additional appointments.

As you are aware, each Representative in Congress has a right to appoint one cadet; each member of the Senate has the right to appoint one. The number of appointments by the President was increased to 30 two years ago, and now this bill proposes to increase the authority of appointment by the President, making the number 40 instead of 30, as the law now stands.

I do not care about these things or as to the manner of the appointments made by the President, but I object to the constant increase of cadetships and the rapid increase of the military power at the expense of civil authority in this country, which certainly tends in the end to the destruction of the Volunteer Army. These young cadets have been well provided for in this bill, and among other things their pay has been increased.

Furthermore, I believe it increases the number of professors and favorably affects their rank, as that is what is meant by "assimilated rank." I do not think that is an objection, but I merely state it as showing that everything in the bill, where possible, seems to have been increased, and as showing the tendency to strengthen and build up such institutions and encourage the increase of the military power of the country by the expenditure of public money.

The taxpayers are the persons who are the sufferers for such unusual extravagance. We ought to have some regard for the people in the expenditure of their money. In the pending proposition and in other legislation it looks as if the taxpayers were entirely forgotten. Because we have a surplus in the Treasury we are continually making increased appropriations; every day they grow larger; and I think it time we should begin to decrease them.

Mr. President, here is another point. This six and a half million dollars proposed to be appropriated here does not include in any way whatever the annual expenditures to be made in the future. For the next year you will find another $700,000 or $800,000, or whatever it may be, appropriated as though the six and a half millions had not been set apart for the use and benefit of this Academy.

As I said, for the last ten years the appropriation has run from $400,000 to five or six hundred thousand dollars annually, and up to $700,000 in the last year. That includes the increase of the 90 men who have been appointed by Senators as cadets, and also the additional number that the President has appointed.

In the last appropriation act every possible convenience that was asked for at West Point was granted; and yet we are now asked to appropriate here six and one-half million dollars. I think that if Senators will look at the situation they will see that there is no necessity for it whatever, and that the cadets are now amply provided for.

The men at West Point are men that we well may be proud of, and we are proud of them and of their history. Mr. President, in the early days the institution was not half what it is now. Those young men had but little if any of this pocket money or but few of those little kindnesses which are now extended to the West Point cadets.

Not only so, but we have provided to pay the transportation of the young men who are selected for appointment at West Point; but no provision is made for the poor fellows who take the examination and fail, whilst the men who are selected have their transportation paid under this bill. From another fund is also paid the additional daily compensation of 30 cents. This other proposition to pay transportation from the Quartermaster-General's Department is also outside of this appropriation. So it is in addition an increase, according to the policy of this bill.

I make no complaint of that, however, but as to the bill in its present form I do complain and enter my protest against the appropriation of this six and a half million dollars, and I propose to strike out the provision for the appropriation of the six and one-half million dollars. It is unnecessary now, and will have a tendency to destroy the rights and virtue of the volunteer and militia forces of the country.

Mr. President, if we should have a war—I hope we will have no more; I have seen enough of war, and I hope to see no more; I hope the day will come when we shall have universal peace and that our people will always be satisfied—but suppose a war was to break out and we wanted troops, the governors of the States, I suppose, could not, under existing law, appoint a single captain or colonel or a lieutenant or any staff officer.

A recent act of Congress lodged that power with the President, and I believe he exercises it in every instance. It is a long stride on the highway to the centralization of power. There is the keynote, in my opinion, of this whole legislation in regard to increasing the military strength in this country. It is a centralization of power, which is a danger that always menaces a country like ours. We should stand like a stone wall against this increase of centralized power and say, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther."

I propose to enter my protest against this pending proposition, which seems to lead in that direction. I am willing we should say the cadets should have what they need, what is necessary, what is comfortable, and what is reasonable, but I am not willing that we shall give six and one-half million dollars of the people's money for the purpose of enlarging that establishment now.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not want to take very much time, but after the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] I think it necessary to say a few words about this appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee to move to amend the bill.

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir; I wish to amend the bill, but have not yet formally made that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late to do so without reconsideration of the vote by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. BATE. I asked at the time, Mr. President, that I should have the privilege of doing so; and I will now ask the Chair to put the motion which he has suggested as necessary in order to enable me to move an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until that has been done, the bill is not in amendable condition. The Chair understands the Senator to make the motion for a reconsideration of those votes.

Mr. BATE. I do ask that the bill may be put into an amendable condition, so that I may move my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the votes by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Now the bill is in an amendable condition. The Senator from Tennessee will kindly state his amendment.

Mr. BATE. I now move to amend the bill by striking out on page 29, beginning with line 17, and going down to line 23, on page 30.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the time has arrived, in the estimation of those connected with the Military Academy and the several Boards of Visitors to the Military Academy who have carefully looked over the situation there of late years, when there must be some comprehensive plan adopted regarding West Point. Shall we rebuild or shall we go on patching, making additions and patchwork, to be eventually torn away, as it certainly must be, and the place rebuilt later on at greater expense?

The Government has seen fit as to its Naval Academy to do exactly what is proposed to be done at West Point, only on a much more magnificent scale. If my memory serves me right, more than $8,000,000 were used in rebuilding and improving the Academy and grounds at Annapolis, and this notwithstanding that there are only two-thirds or three-quarters as many cadets at Annapolis to provide for as are to be provided for at the Military Academy.

The conditions at the Military Academy are these: Some of the buildings were erected as long ago as 1816—perhaps before that. They are old; they are insanitary; they are worn out. The time has arrived when it is like pouring water into a rat hole to be appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars to be expended in patchwork. So we propose in a systematic manner to mark out what shall be the future of West Point, putting no more money on these buildings that are unfitted for further service and building everything hereafter in a way to fit the general plan.

The present bill carries $2,000,000 toward that reconstruction under a limit of total cost $6,500,000. The House Military Committee reported the amount to the House at six and a half million dollars as the total limit upon the entire rebuilding, refitting, preparation of ground, and the final turning it out as a finished institution, so that thereafter there might be no appropriations but the amounts of the regular supply bills. On the floor of the House the limit was cut down to five and a half million dollars.

Your subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs thought that it was better to restore the six and a half million dollars, and so reported to the general committee. The full committee agreed with the subcommittee that the bill should be reported to the Senate at six and a half million dollars; and it is my opinion that it will be better for the Senate to now pass it at six and a half million dollars and let it go to conference, so that in conference the House conferees may present their reasons to the Senate conferees for cutting the amount down and there may be a decision somewhere, along proper lines, at six and a half million dollars, or five and a half million dollars, or somewhere between the two amounts.

The conditions at West Point are such as the Senator would not like to have prevail if his son were there as a student, and such as I would not like to have if my son were there. At the present time there are in many cases three and even four cadets in one room, with one window and only one gaslight in the middle of the room. With the study and hard work which we know are incumbent upon the student if he is to succeed there, everyone will admit that to have a small room with four boys in it and but one small gaslight suspended from the ceiling is not the kind of convenience or comfort necessary to success and good health. We give our boys more than this at home, and we expect them to have more and better accommodations than that at any other school.

Again, the buildings are insanitary; they are without proper plumbing; they have not sufficient lighting or heating capacity; they have no bathrooms; they have no water; so that a student, sick or well, in the night or in the day, must go down and out of the building and over quite a long open space of open ground in order to get to a bathroom or to draw a bucket of water or to provide himself with any of those necessities which are provided in modern buildings.

It is desired to preserve all that is good of former West Point; but that portion which is insanitary, that portion which is in a tumbled-down condition is to be removed, and in time—it may be in one year or it may be in ten years—we shall, under this bill, rebuild and remodel West Point at a cost not to exceed in all six and a half million dollars.

The Senator from Tennessee finds fault with the increase of pay for the cadets. I want to ask the Senator what we have been doing all these years with the naval cadets?

Mr. BATE. I want to correct the Senator about that. I do not object to that increase. I am glad of it.

Mr. WARREN. I am very glad the Senator is.

Mr. BATE. I approve of that.

Mr. WARREN. I understand; but the Senator took up the provisions of the bill generally and read us a lecture on general extravagance and the necessity for economy, and he spoke, in passing, of the fact that we had increased the pay. We have reduced the pay, but made an increase in the way of an allowance of a ration, so that hereafter, if this bill passes unamended, the West Point cadets will get exactly what the naval cadets have been heretofore getting, nothing more and nothing less.

In the matter of hospital facilities they are crowded, inconvenient, and in a way insanitary, and if any of the cadets should be afflicted with some infectious disease, scarlet fever or something of that kind, there is no place provided in the way of an isolated ward or room.

The Senator speaks of the repairs authorized in the bill of last year. Sundry amounts were provided for repairs, it is true, but they were not nearly enough; so it is necessary that we shall provide this lump sum or else continue to appropriate for repairs a half million or a million dollars each year, and then when we are all through we shall have an aggregation of imperfect misfit buildings and accommodations instead of an entirely modern plant.

However, if I understood the Senator correctly, his main objection to this bill is that it tends toward an increase in the Army.

Mr. BATE. No; not the increase altogether; but such will be the tendency and final result.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps it does not cut any figure in this debate, but I want to observe that the way to have a good army is to have plenty of educated officers. The American Army is the finest in the world. There is no army better and there never has been a better army than that of the United States.

I agree with the Senator that the Volunteer Army of America is a great and grand force; I will agree with him entirely in that observation. But the schoolmaster is oftentimes eventually excelled by the student. In fact, the student often arrives at a very much higher place than that ever reached by the schoolmaster who taught him; but this does not do away with the fact that the school-teacher is necessary, and that the student could not have surpassed the schoolmaster if, in the first place, the student had not received the teaching. To have a good volunteer army we must have well-educated officers to educate that army.

In what condition are we to-day? When we called on the States for troops for the Spanish war, we were provided with volunteers who had been under instruction of United States Army officers at our agricultural colleges, our military academies, our private schools, and elsewhere. These young men had been taught by United States officers detailed to duty in those schools.

But later on every one of those teachers had to be withdrawn because of the necessities of the war, and we are in a situation to-day where we have not a sufficient number of officers for Regular Army uses, to say nothing of educational necessity; so that if in five years from now we should call upon the several States for militia or volunteers we would find quite a different state of affairs.

The excellence of our Volunteer Army comes from, first, the superior character of the men who compose the rank and file, from what there is in American citizenship, from what there is in American manhood; but, sir, in order to make an effective army we must have an educated army, and in order to have an educated army we must waste months, or even years, with the green material unless we have a sufficient number of educated military officers to act as teachers in the art or science of war. In the long run we must have the rank and file infiltrated with those who have received a good military education.

The Senator would strike out, by his amendment, the water supply at West Point. We find West Point dependent absolutely upon certain watersheds and certain ponds lying near. This land and water will never be cheaper, but, of course, will be higher; and they are absolutely without sufficient water to-day at West Point to provide for adequate drinking, cooking, and other domestic purposes. The Senator would strike out, by his amendment, the proposition to buy one or two of these watersheds adjacent to the grounds of the Academy, which must be had in order to have and sustain a military academy at that place.

There are certain appropriations in this bill for additions and repairs. Some of these may be used, even if we provide for rebuilding; others will not be used, although appropriated for. It was necessary in making up the bill on the part of the House to so provide that if the proposition of rebuilding should not be accepted they would not be without some fund to go on and provide room and pressing needs, so that they could in some way get along until a later day.

Now, the question arises, Mr. President, shall we to-day take up the matter of rebuilding West Point, or shall we go on and say that at some later time we had better do so, and in the meantime expend hundreds of thousands, nay, millions of dollars in patchwork and repairs upon the old buildings and then finally have to tear out and rebuild?

If the Senate concludes that six and a half million dollars is too much, it can make the amount five and a half millions. If five and a half millions is enough in the opinion of the conferees when they meet—and I take it the Senator from Tennessee will be one of such conferees—then I shall be satisfied. But it strikes me that it is an absolute necessity to provide now and at this time a sufficient appropriation and limit of cost to establish and commence at once a general and comprehensive plan of rebuilding and improving West Point.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, in reply to and explanatory of some remarks made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] who has just taken his seat, I beg to just simply read from the appropriation bill of last year. On the point in regard to bathing, etc., which we are considering, the provision found in the law of last year is:

For constructing a south wing to the hospital, to correspond with the present north wing, for the accommodation of the sick, to be built of stone, with brick annex for lavatories, baths, and water-closets, including cost of labor, plumbing, gas fittings, radiators, etc., $46,000.

That we did last year for that very purpose; and not only so, but we provided:

For two-story brick addition (about 28 by 75 feet) to north end of cadet laundry, finished to correspond to main building, to be immediately available, $4,200.

For adding second story of brick to 1-story addition, 15 by 28 feet (boiler room), on south end of main building, to be immediately available, $1,000.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, that portion of the hospital which has been already provided for will be useful and will be used in future under this new plan.

The Senator forgets when he remarks that last year we provided for as many cadets as we are to have in the future that such is not strictly the case, because he will recall that there has been a redistricting under the last census and an increase in the number of Congressmen, and consequently an increase in the number of cadets. As a matter of fact, at the time of which he is speaking, when the small appropriations which he mentions were sufficient, we had but from 300 to 350 cadets, and now the number will reach nearly 500 by the operation of laws already in force and amendments proposed in the pending bill.

Mr. BATE. I stated that there would be an additional number of cadets to those already there. There are members of Congress who are not yet elected, who will be, I suppose, elected next fall, some 13 or 15, or whatever the number may be, and there will be, consequently, that additional number of cadets at West Point. That is correct; and I stand corrected in that respect if I was in error in the statement I made.

But, Mr. President, the point I make is in regard to the great increase in the expense for West Point and for these buildings. What has become of the appropriation made last year for these objects, if we appropriated all the money which was then necessary, though it does seem that since then we may have increased the number of cadets a few?

Let me read further. I do not wish to be diverted from reading from the last year's appropriation bill:

For enlarging cadet mess hall, kitchen, and servants' quarters, to be immediately available—

How much do you suppose was appropriated for these purposes last year?

Sixty-nine thousand four hundred and fifty dollars.

Complaints are made that these young men have not sufficient comfort, and that two or three of them are placed in a room.

Mr. WARREN. Three or four.

Mr. BATE. I suppose that depends on the size of the room. Complaint is also made of insufficient light, and yet we find the following appropriation was made last year:

For wiring for electric lights for mess hall, kitchens, pantries, bakery, cold-storage rooms, dormitories, and for chandeliers, brackets, switches, and machinery, to be immediately available, $2,500.

Then there was an appropriation:

For repairing and renewing plastering, painting, and calcimining, repairs to woodwork, reflooring, rearranging rooms, increasing sinks, baths, and for other incidental repairs to the building, $10,000.

Then—

For removing and replacing the asphalt and galvanized-iron roofs and gutters of the Academy building by copper or other durable material, $11,000.

That was also appropriated last year.

For rebuilding north dock, $4,200.

For filling the ditches and leveling the parapets of the modern portion of Fort Clinton, to be immediately available, $5,000.

The total money appropriated for buildings and grounds in the bill of last year was $258,150.

It is impossible that we should give these additional amounts for the same purposes. As to the lack of bath houses at West Point my friend has made some complaint. I find this appropriation in the bill of this year now pending:

To increase the section room and lavatory facilities of the Academy building and furnish same, to be immediately available, $10,894.

So it goes, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think that $10,000 for plumbing cuts much of a figure in a place where there are between 1,600 and 2,000 people altogether?

Mr. BATE. Where Congress has made an appropriation for the same purpose in the preceding year I do. It seems to me that with the appropriations heretofore made there ought to be no necessity for the appropriation of such a sum of money for the same purpose as is now proposed.

The Senator complains that the buildings at West Point are old buildings. They are large buildings; they are beautiful buildings; they have a reputation abroad, and I have seen, and the Senator has seen, pictures and photographs of those buildings distributed around this country, and they have even been sent to Europe. Those are pictures of West Point as it now is, and that institution has a reputation abroad.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for stating that, but I wish to say to him in that connection that all buildings such as he describes are to be preserved. I wish to say to him also that not only has West Point a reputation abroad, but it has been stated by many military leaders from all over the world that we have at West Point the best military academy in the world, the best institution of war learning known.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that a matter of four or five or six million dollars, spent perhaps during the remainder of the lifetime of the Senator from Tennessee and myself, is not too much to create or maintain a school that is the pride not only of this country, but of the entire civilized world.

Mr. BATE. We all have a pride in that institution, but it is not necessary to make this expenditure of six or eight million dollars. Those buildings are now beautiful in their present form, and I see no necessity for this expenditure.

Not only so, but West Point is much more beautiful now than it was a few years ago; it has many more conveniences now than it had a few years since, when such men as Grant and Lee and Johnston and Sherman, Bragg and Rosecrans, McClellan and Schofield and others of national character were educated there and developing into the great characters they did. When they were taking their course at West Point the buildings there were good enough for them; you never heard any complaint, and no additional appropriations were then asked for.

Two years ago, when we passed the law giving authority for the appointment of additional cadets, the buildings were then supposed to be good enough, and it was distinctly stated—and it was one of the chief arguments used on this floor and in committee—that we had the buildings there at West Point; that there was a surplus of room; that it should be utilized, and that the institution should be filled up. We have filled it up pretty well, and now it is proposed that an additional appropriation of six and one-half million dollars shall be made.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the position taken by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] in regard to these appropriations. So far as I am concerned, I have always looked upon West Point as one of the institutions of which we should be supremely proud. It has been the nursery of some of the most distinguished men in our military history. They have gone through a course there without complaining, enduring hardships that would be regarded as absolutely cruel now. But that is not any reason why these conditions should be continued. They were great men and received a magnificent education under many hardships and in spite of hardships, which were inexcusable then and are much more so now.

I want to see enough cadets graduated every year from West Point to keep the Army at least filled up in the lower ranks of its officers with educated men. We have not reached that point yet, but we will some day get to it. When you look at the Army Register you will be absolutely astonished to see how few West Pointers there are as subaltern officers. There are not half enough of them. So far as I am concerned, I should like to see at West Point a corps of cadets of a thousand men, so as to eventually fill up the ranks of the subaltern officers, and if there should be any surplus men with that magnificent training and education, let them go into civil life.

I have sometimes thought it would be a magnificent idea if we would follow the example which the State of Virginia inaugurated a good many years ago. She has built up a superb military school at Lexington, to which cadets receive appointments from each representative district and receive their tuition free of charge. In addition to that, cadets are permitted to enter and take the course, who pay the expenses of their tuition, and I do not see why that principle should not be adopted at West Point. I do not see why any brave, bright boy, who desires to have a first-class military education, should not be permitted to go to West Point and acquire that kind of a scientific education at his own expense and then take his place in the ranks of civil life. Such graduates would constitute a magnificent reserve force, and Virginia found that it was absolutely invaluable to her, and all through the South the influence of that kind of education at the Virginia Military Institute is felt.

I was at West Point two years ago and I was utterly astonished at the inadequacy of the quarters, at the insufficiency of the hospital accommodations, at the lack of sanitary regulations and provisions everywhere. There are some beautiful-looking buildings there, but they are small.

Mr. BATE. May I interrupt the Senator to ask if that is true why he did not put in this bill or the bill of last year a sufficient appropriation to correct that condition and to make it as it should be?

Mr. HARRIS. The Board of Visitors considered the matter very seriously, and a great deal was said and a great deal was urged as to the necessity for action at that time. But it was considered as better perhaps to try to get along, as far as possible, with the then existing accommodations, as we were then undergoing enormous expenses and it was not considered an advisable time to ask for additional appropriations.

But we did ask for enough last year to provide one additional ward in the hospital. We did ask for enough to enlarge the mess hall a little bit. We did ask for enough to replace the old academic building. The walls of the academic building were being stained by the snow and ice, which melted and ran down the walls and rendered the rooms absolutely unfit for use. We saw three or four cadets in a little, narrow, dark room. We saw that the cadets had to go, it seemed to me, a quarter of a mile to get a bucket of water. There was not a drop of water in the whole cadet building. There was not a closet of any kind in it. There were no conveniences. A first-class thoroughbred cattle barn would be luxurious in comparison with what the cadets had to submit to in that way.

I was then in favor of asking for additional appropriations so as to rebuild and to provide the new buildings with adequate sanitary and plumbing appliances, which are absolutely indispensable. The riding hall was insufficient. There is a tumble-down old hotel on the ground there absolutely useless. The whole thing needs reconstruction and building up on modern and improved ideas. We might as well attempt to fight the wars of to-day with the old flint-lock muskets of 1812, and say our ancestors used those and fought bravely, and therefore we should not adopt modern ordnance.

We want magnificently educated officers and we ought to provide them with at least comfortable quarters in which to live. To quarter two cadets in a room is limited enough in accommodations, but to put four men in such a room is cruelty. There is one little drop light. The boys are poring over the desks, trying to study their lessons in the dark winter evenings of that climate. The surgeon himself told me it was the source of more diseases and trouble of the eye than anything else that could be imagined, and everywhere we saw cadets using spectacles who had gone there with absolutely sound and perfect eyesight, the eye trouble having been caused by the inadequate light. We saw cadets trotting across the campus to get a pitcher of water, and things of that kind. It was an absurdity. We need an adequate riding hall, as I have mentioned. That is one of the limitations. We need additional quarters. Let us build up West Point on the same kind of a plan that has been adopted for Annapolis, the twin magnificent school which we have in this country.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, a word in reply. I know nothing about Annapolis, and therefore I can not speak of it. But I understand there were no buildings there at all scarcely until last year.

Mr. HARRIS. A great many distinguished men have been graduated there.

Mr. BATE. I am speaking of Annapolis.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes. We have had magnificent officers in the Navy from Annapolis.

Mr. BATE. Certainly; I am addressing myself to this point. The graduates of Annapolis have done wonders. I accord them all the credit they deserve. But, as to what the condition there is, I know not. However, if an error has been committed there, it is no reason why we should repeat it at West Point.

I do not want the Senator nor the country to understand that I am opposed to appropriating everything that is necessary absolutely to afford the convenience and facilities for study to young men as cadets at West Point. I said that in the commencement. I say it now. But the amount heretofore appropriated annually and the amount in the bill here now, independent of the $6,000,000, is sufficient, and the only question is whether we shall virtually throw aside those old buildings and build up a new establishment to cost six and a half million dollars. That is the practical proposition.

The Senator from Kansas has been to West Point since I was there and may know about these matters. I have no doubt he speaks of them correctly. But there have been since he was there the appropriations made which I have read, $69,000 in one instance, $48,000 in another for the improvement of these buildings, $5,000 in another for the building of additional rooms. I say if that has to go on every year, we had better stop and do something else.

I want to see the establishment increase. I do not object to an increase in a proper way, according to the increase of our population. I do not propose, though, for one, to let young men be educated at Government expense at West Point for the purpose of turning them loose when they are educated to go back into the civil ranks of the country. I think, sir, that the young men who would go there for that purpose should be educated by their own people and not by the general public. I think such education at Government expense is wrong, except for military purposes, as that is a military academy.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator think it would be a good plan for every school or college where there is a military class to have a graduate of West Point as a teacher in military drill and tactics?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. That duty alone would take more than we graduate.

Mr. BATE. Very well. But you look at the number of those who have graduated at West Point and who are retired and are drawing three-fourths pay. They are the ones who ought to be assigned to that duty, and that would be justice and right to the taxpayers of this country and not unjust to those who have been educated by the Government and are now supported by it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4848) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first acted upon in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, line 25, after the word "Atoka," to insert "Indian Territory;" so as to make the clause read:

4. The term "Atoka agreement" shall be held to mean the agreement made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes with the commissioners representing the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians at Atoka, Indian Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, before the word "extend," to strike out "shall" and insert "may;" and in line 13, before the word "include," to strike out "shall" and insert "may;" so as to make the clause read:

7. Every word in this agreement importing the masculine gender may extend and be applied to females as well as males, and the use of the plural may include also the singular, and vice versa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 3, before the word "shall," to strike out "tribe" and insert "tribes," so as to read:

12. Each member of said tribes shall, at the time of the selection of his allotment, designate as a homestead out of said allotment land equal in value to 160 acres of the average allottable land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, as nearly as may be, which shall be inalienable during the lifetime of the allottee, not exceeding twenty-one years from the date of certificate of allotment, and separate certificate and patent shall issue for said homestead.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 13, before the word "exceeding," to strike out "nor" and insert "not," so as to make the clause read:

13. The allotment of each Choctaw and Chickasaw freedman shall be inalienable during the lifetime of the allottee, not exceeding twenty-one years from the date of certificate of allotment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 18, after the word "regulations," to insert "and on terms;" so as to make the clause read:

14. When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 5, before the word "nor," to strike out "date of the patent" and insert "time at which said land may be alienated under this act;" so as to make the clause read:

15. Lands allotted to members and freedmen shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated under this act, nor shall said lands be sold except as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 17, after the word "freedman," to insert "after thirty days' notice by the Commission, then;" so as to make the clause read:

17. If, for any reason, an allotment should not be selected or a homestead designated by, or on behalf of, any member or freedman after thirty days' notice by the Commission, then it shall be the duty of said Commission to make said selection and designation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, after the word "than," to strike out "the smallest legal subdivision provided for in paragraph 11 hereof" and insert "10 acres;" so as to make the clause read:

18. In the making of allotments and in the designation of homesteads for members of said tribes, under the provisions of this agreement, said Commission shall not be required to divide lands into tracts of less than 10 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 14, after the word "agent," to insert "at the;" and in line 17, after the word "to," to strike out "him" and insert "such allottee;" so as to make the clause read:

23. Allotment certificates issued by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes shall be conclusive evidence of the right of any allottee to the tract of land described therein; and the United States Indian agent at the Union Agency shall, upon the application of the allottee, place him in possession of his allotment, and shall remove therefrom all persons objectionable to such allottee, and the acts of the Indian agent hereunder shall not be controlled by the writ or process of any court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 3, after the word "in" to insert "both;" in the same line, before the word "Chickasaw," to insert "the;" in line 6, before the word "land," to strike out "said," and insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "office," to insert "in the nation in which his land is located;" in line 11, after the word "land," to strike out "office," and insert "offices;" in line 24, after the word "at," to insert "one;" in line 25, before the word "land," to strike out "the" and insert "said;" in the same line, before the word "and," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "office," and insert "offices;" so as to make the clause read:

After the opening of a land office for allotment purposes in both the Choctaw and the Chickasaw nations any citizen or freedman of either of said nation may appear before the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes at the land office in the nation in which his land is located and make application for his allotment and for allotments for members of his family and for other persons for whom he is lawfully authorized to apply for allotments, including homesteads, and after the expiration of ninety days following the opening of such land offices any such applicant may make allegation that the land or any part of the land that he desires to have allotted is held by another citizen or person in excess of the amount of land to which said citizen or person is lawfully entitled, and that he desires to have said land allotted to him or members of his family as herein provided; and thereupon said Commission shall serve notice upon the person so alleged to be holding land in excess of the lawful amount to which he may be entitled, said notice to set forth the facts alleged and the name and post-office address of the person alleging the same, and the rights and consequences herein provided, and the person so alleged to be holding land contrary to law shall be allowed thirty days from the date of the service of said notice in which to appear at one of said land offices and to select his allotment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 20, before the word "land," to strike out "the" and insert "said;" and in the same line, after the word "land," to strike out "office" and insert "offices;" so as to read:

If any citizen or freedman of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations shall not have selected his allotment within twelve months after the date of the opening of said land offices in said nations, if not herein otherwise provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 13, after the word "located," to insert "when practicable;" so as to make the clause read:

And the acre so reserved for any church or school in any quarter section of land shall be located when practicable in a corner of such quarter section lying adjacent to the section line thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 25, before the words "Indian Territory," to insert "the," and on page 15, line 4, after the word "is," to strike out "rights" and insert "right;" so as to make the clause read:

27. The rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizens and Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen shall be made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, in strict compliance with the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stats., 495), and the act of Congress approved May 31, 1900 (31 Stats., 221), except as herein otherwise provided: Provided, That no person claiming right to enrollment and allotment and distribution of tribal property, by virtue of a judgment of the United States court in the Indian Territory under the act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stats., 321), and which right is contested by legal proceedings instituted under the provisions of this agreement, shall be enrolled or receive allotment of lands or distribution of tribal property until his right thereto has been finally determined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 14, before the word "to," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Commission;" so as to make the clause read:

The rolls so prepared shall be made in quintuplicate, one to be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior, one with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, one with the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, one with the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, and one to remain with the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 14, to strike out the following:

31. It being claimed and insisted by the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations that the United States courts in Indian Territory, acting under the act of Congress approved June 10, 1896, have admitted persons to citizenship, or to enrollment as such citizens, in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, respectively, without notice of the proceeding in such courts being given to each of said nations, and it being insisted by said nations that in such proceedings notice to each of said nations was indispensable, and it being claimed and insisted by said nations that the proceedings in the United States courts in Indian Territory, under the said act of June 10, 1896, should have been confined to a review of the action of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, upon the papers and evidence submitted to such Commission, and should not have extended to a trial de novo of the question of citizenship; and it being desirable to finally determine these questions, the two nations jointly, or either of said nations acting separately and making the other a party defendant, may, within ninety days after this agreement becomes effective, by a bill in equity filed in the United States court for the southern or central district of Indian Territory, seek the annulment and vacation of all such decisions by said courts. Ten persons so admitted to citizenship or enrollment by said courts, with notice to one but not to both of said nations, shall be made defendants to said suit as representatives of the entire class of persons similarly situated, the number of such persons being too numerous to require all of them to be made individual parties to the suit; but any person so situated may, upon his application, be made a party defendant to the suit.

32. Notice of the institution of said suit shall be personally served upon the chief executive of the defendant nation, if either nation be made a party defendant as aforesaid, and upon each of said ten representative defendants, and shall also be published for a period of four weeks in at least two weekly newspapers having general circulation in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. Such notice shall set forth the nature and prayer of the bill, with the time for answering the same, which shall not be less than thirty days after the last publication. Full jurisdiction and authority to entertain said suit and finally determine said questions are hereby conferred upon the court for said southern and central district, as may be elected by the two nations jointly or either of them acting separately, as aforesaid. Any party feeling aggrieved by the decision of said court may appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States within ninety days thereafter. Said suit shall take precedence on the dockets of both courts, and shall be determined at the earliest practicable time. Said suit shall be confined to a final determination of the question of law here named, and shall be without prejudice to the determination of any charge or claim that the admission of such persons to citizenship or enrollment by said United States courts in Indian Territory was wrongfully obtained as provided in the next section.

33. The United States courts of the southern and central districts in Indian Territory shall have full jurisdiction of suits to annul and vacate judgments of such courts under the act of Congress of June 10, 1896, admitting persons to citizenship or to enrollment as citizens in either of said nations where, in a bill of complaint filed by the two nations jointly or by one of them acting separately and making the other a party defendant, it is charged and made to reasonably appear that any such judgments, for any reason other than those specified in section 31 hereof, does an injustice to either of said nations by according citizenship or enrollment to any person or persons not justly entitled thereto; but no such suit can be instituted after the expiration of ninety days after the final decision of the test case provided for in section 31 hereof. All such suits shall take precedence upon the court docket, and shall be as speedily determined as may be consistent with due consideration of the rights of parties.

No judge shall sit in any cause instituted in this section wherein it is sought to vacate a judgment rendered by him, and in such instance some other judge who did not, under the act of June 10, 1896, render citizenship judgments against either of said nations, shall be called to preside over the proceedings in such suit, and shall be fully authorized to conduct the same to a conclusion. The decision of such court in any such suit shall be final, save that at any time in the progress thereof it shall be competent for the trial judge to certify to the court of appeals of the Indian Territory, for its advice and final determination, any question or questions of law arising in said cause, deemed by the trial judge to be difficult and important. In the determination of any questions so certified, such court of appeals shall be composed of the United States judges in the Indian Territory, who did not render any citizenship judgments against either of said nations under said act of June 10, 1896, and of one of the judges of the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma, designated for that purpose by the Attorney-General of the United States. Notice of the institution of any such suit shall be personally served upon the chief executive of the defendant nation, if either nation be made a party defendant, and shall be served upon the other defendants in the manner in which under the laws and practice controlling the courts in the Indian Territory service is made in real actions.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

31. It being claimed and insisted by the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations that the United States courts in Indian Territory, acting under the act of Congress approved June 10, 1896, have admitted persons to citizenship or to enrollment as such citizens, in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, respectively, without notice of the proceedings in such courts being given to each of said nations; and it being insisted by said nations that in such proceedings notice to each of said nations was indispensable, and it being claimed and insisted by said nations that the proceedings in the United States courts in Indian Territory, under the said act of June 10, 1896, should have been confined to a review of the action of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, upon the papers and evidence submitted to such Commission, and should not have extended to a trial de novo of the question of citizenship; and it being desirable to finally determine these questions, the two nations jointly, or either of said nations acting separately and making the other a party defendant, may, within ninety days after this agreement becomes effective, by a bill in equity filed in the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court hereinafter named, seek the annulment and vacation of all such decisions by said courts. Ten persons so admitted to citizenship or enrollment by said courts, with notice to one but not to both of said nations, shall be made defendants to said suit as representatives of the entire class of persons similarly situated, the number of such persons being too numerous to require all of them to be made individual parties to the suit; but any person so situated may, upon his application, be made a party defendant to the suit.

Notice of the institution of said suit shall be personally served upon the chief executive of the defendant nation, if either nation be made a party defendant as aforesaid, and upon each of said 10 representative defendants, and shall also be published for a period of four weeks in at least two weekly newspapers having general circulation in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. Such notice shall set forth the nature and prayer of the bill, with the time for answering the same, which shall not be less than thirty days after the last publication. Said suit shall be determined at the earliest practicable time, shall be confined to a final determination of the questions of law here named, and shall be without prejudice to the determination of any charge or claim that the admission of such persons to citizenship or enrollment by said United States courts in Indian Territory was wrongfully obtained as provided in the next section. In the event said citizenship judgments or decisions are annulled or vacated in the test suit hereinbefore authorized, because of either or both of the irregularities claimed and insisted upon by said nations as aforesaid, then the files, papers, and proceedings in any citizenship case in which the judgment or decision is so annulled or vacated shall, upon written application therefor made within ninety days thereafter by any party thereto who is thus deprived of a favorable judgment upon his claimed citizenship, be transferred and certified to said citizenship court by the court having custody and control of such files, papers, and proceedings, and upon the filing in such citizenship court of the files, papers, and proceedings in any such citizenship case, accompanied by due proof that notice in writing of the transfer and certification thereof has been given to the chief executive officer of each of said nations, said citizenship case shall be docketed in said citizenship court and such further proceeding shall be had therein in that court as ought to have been had in the court to which the same was taken on appeal from the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and as if no judgment or decision had been rendered therein.

32. Said citizenship court shall also, upon the final ratification of this agreement, have jurisdiction of suits to annul and vacate judgments of the courts in Indian Territory rendered under said act of Congress of June 10, 1896, admitting persons to citizenship or to enrollment as citizens in either of said nations where, in a bill of complaint filed by the two nations jointly or by one of them acting separately and making the other a party defendant, it is charged and made to appear that any such judgment, for any reason other than those hereinbefore specified, as a basis for said test suit, does injustice to either of said nations by according citizenship or enrollment to any person or persons not justly entitled thereto, but no such suit can be instituted after the expiration of ninety days after the final decision in the test suit hereinbefore authorized. These suits shall be as speedily determined as may be consistent with due consideration of the rights of all parties, and notice of the commencement thereof shall be personally served upon the chief executive officer of the defendant nation, if either nation be made a party defendant, and shall be served upon the other defendants personally or by publication, as the case may be, in the manner in which, under the laws and practice controlling the circuit courts of the United States, service is made in suits to quiet title to real estate.

33. A court is hereby created, to be known as the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, the existence of which shall terminate upon the final determination of the suits and proceedings named in the last two preceding sections, but in no event later than the 31st day of December, 1906. Said court shall have all authority and power necessary to the hearing and determination of the suits and proceedings so committed to its jurisdiction, including the authority to issue and enforce all requisite writs, process, and orders, and to prescribe rules and regulations for the transaction of its business. It shall also have all the powers of a circuit court of the United States in compelling the production of books, papers, and documents, the attendance of witnesses, and in punishing contempt. Except where herein otherwise expressly provided, the pleadings, practice, and proceedings in said court shall conform, as near as may be, to the pleadings, practice, and proceedings in equity causes in the circuit courts of the United States. The testimony shall be taken in court or before one of the judges, so far as practicable. Each judge shall be authorized to grant, in vacation or recess, interlocutory orders and to hear and dispose of interlocutory motions not affecting the substantial merits of the case.

Said court shall have a chief judge and two associate judges, a clerk, a stenographer who shall be a deputy clerk, and a bailiff. The judges shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall each receive a compensation of $5,000 per annum, and his necessary and actual traveling and personal expenses while engaged in the performance of his duties. The clerk, stenographer, and bailiff shall be appointed by the judges, or a majority of them, and shall receive the following yearly compensation: Clerk, $2,400; stenographer, $1,200; bailiff, $900. The compensation of all these officers shall be paid by the United States in monthly installments. The moneys to pay said compensation are hereby appropriated; and there is also hereby appropriated the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to pay such contingent expenses of said court and its officers as to such Secretary may seem proper. Said court shall have a seal, shall sit at such place or places in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations as the judges may designate, and shall hold public sessions beginning the first Monday in each month, so far as may be practicable or necessary. Each judge and the clerk and deputy clerk shall be authorized to administer oaths. All writs and process issued by said court shall be served by the United States marshal for the district in which the service is to be had.

The fees for serving process and the fees of witnesses shall be paid by the party at whose instance such process is issued or such witnesses subpœnaed, and the rate or amount of such fees shall be the same as is allowed in civil causes in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas. No fees shall be charged by the clerk or other officers of said court. The clerk of the United States court in Indian Territory having custody and control of the files, papers, and proceedings in the original citizenship cases shall receive a fee of $2.50 for transferring and certifying to the citizenship court the files, papers, and proceedings in each case, without regard to the number of persons whose citizenship is involved therein, and said fee shall be paid by the person applying for such transfer and certification. The judgment of the citizenship court in any and all of the suits or proceedings so committed to its jurisdiction shall be final. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay out of any of the common funds of the two nations in the Treasury of the United States all expenses reasonably or necessarily incurred by such nations in the proper conduct, on their behalf, of the suits and proceedings provided for in this in the two preceding sections.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the amendment is adopted, I wish to state that I propose to offer an amendment in the last five or six lines of the section, but I suggest that the reading of the bill be concluded before the amendment is taken up. I think there will be no objection to the amendment on the part of the chairman. I would rather the reading of the bill should be finished, and then we will recur to this section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 18, after the word "year," to strike out "or" and insert "nor;" so as to read:

and the penalty for this offense shall be confinement at hard labor for a period of not less than one year nor more than five years, and in addition thereto, a forfeiture to the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of the lands, other tribal property, and proceeds so obtained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 41, page 32, line 5, before the word "months," to strike out "six" and insert "nine;" so as to read:

All persons duly identified by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stats., 495), as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, may, at any time within nine months after the date of the final ratification of this agreement, make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 48, page 35, line 5, after the word "any," to strike out "member of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations" and insert "person;" so as to read:

Whenever any tract of land shall be set aside for town-site purposes, as provided in said act of May 31, 1900, or by the terms of this agreement, which is occupied by any person, such occupant shall be fully compensated for his improvements thereon, out of the funds of the tribes arising from the sale of town sites, etc.

Mr. STEWART. The committee withdraws this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The amendment of the committee is withdrawn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That leaves the original language to stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the original language of the bill, the amendment having been withdrawn.

The next amendment was, in section 53, page 37, line 3, before the word "case," to insert "such;" so as to make the section read:

53. Such towns in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations as may have a population of less than 200 people, not otherwise provided for, and which in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior should be set aside as town sites, shall have their limits defined not later than ninety days after the final ratification of this agreement, in the same manner as herein provided for other town sites; but in no such case shall more than 40 acres of land be set aside for any such town site.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 5, to strike out section 54 in the following words:

54. All town sites heretofore set aside by the Secretary of the Interior on the recommendation of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 31, 1900 (31 Stats., 221), with the additional acreage added thereto, and all town sites which may be hereafter so set aside, as well as all town sites set aside under the provisions of this agreement having a population of less than 200 shall, after being divided into lots and blocks and a map or plat thereof made by the town-site commission, be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, appraisal of said town lots to be made as provided in the Atoka agreement for the valuation of improved town lots; and the purchaser of each of said town lots shall, within ten days from the date of his purchase, pay into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes one-third of the purchase price, and the balance in two equal annual installments, without interest, and when the entire sum is paid he shall be entitled to a patent for the same, and no lot shall be sold at auction at less than its appraised value: Provided, however, That when any lot so sold at public auction shall have thereon improvements erected by a person claiming possessory right to said lot, the said improvements shall be appraised by a committee, one member of which shall be selected by the owner of the improvements and one member by the purchaser of said lot; and in case the said committee is not able to agree upon the value of said improvements, the committee may select a third member, and in that event the determination of the majority of the committee shall control. And said committee of appraisement shall be paid such compensation for their services by the two parties in interest, share and share alike, as may be agreed upon, and the amount of said appraisement shall be paid by the purchaser of the lot to the owner of the improvements in cash within thirty days after the decision of the committee of appraisement.

And to insert:

54. All town sites heretofore set aside by the Secretary of the Interior on the recommendation of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 31, 1900 (31 Stats., 221), with the additional acreage added thereto, and all town sites which may hereafter be so set aside, as well as all town sites set aside under the provisions of this agreement having a population of less than 200, shall be surveyed, laid out, platted, appraised, and disposed of in a like manner, and with like preference rights accorded to owners of improvements, as other town sites in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations are surveyed, laid out, platted, appraised, and disposed of under the Atoka agreement, as modified or supplemented by the said act of May 31, 1900: Provided, That as to the town sites set aside as aforesaid, that the owner of the improvements shall be required to pay the full appraised value of the lot instead of the percentage named in the Atoka agreement, and where, because of his failure to purchase within the time limited in the Atoka agreement, the lot is sold at public auction the purchaser at such sale shall pay to the owner of the improvements the price for which the lot shall be sold, less the full appraised value thereof, and shall pay such appraised value into the United States Treasury, instead of the percentage named in the Atoka agreement.

The governor of the Chickasaw tribe and the principal chief of the Choctaw tribe, acting together, may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and upon such terms and conditions as said Secretary may prescribe, sell and convey in tracts of not exceeding 40 acres, or a quarter of a quarter section, at any one place, such lands adjoining or in the vicinity of a town site, as may be desired for the establishment and operation of a manufacturing or industrial plant, which will tend to encourage the cultivation of the land held by either of said tribes, or its members, or which will promote the general welfare of the community. The proceeds of any such sale shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior and be by him covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the two tribes, according to their respective interests therein. Where the lands so sold and conveyed are occupied or improved by any member of the tribe he shall be compensated for his right of occupancy or improvements out of the proceeds of the sale in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. After allotment has been made of any lands desired for the establishment or operation of such plant, the sale and conveyance thereof may be made by the allottee in the manner and subject to the restrictions herein prescribed, instead of being made through the chief executive officers of the two tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 56, page 41, line 17, after the word "auction," to insert "for cash," and in line 18, after the word "President," to insert "as hereinafter provided;" so as to make the section read:

56. At the expiration of two years after the final ratification of this agreement all deposits of coal and asphalt which are in lands within the limits of any town site established under the Atoka agreement, or the act of Congress of May 31, 1900, or this agreement, and which are within the exterior limits of any lands reserved from allotment on account of their coal or asphalt deposits, as herein provided, and which are not at the time of the final ratification of this agreement embraced in any then existing coal or asphalt lease, shall be sold at public auction for cash under the direction of the President, as hereinafter provided, and the proceeds thereof disposed of as herein provided respecting the proceeds of the sale of coal and asphalt lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 57, page 42, line 2, after the word "auction," to insert "for cash;" and in the same line, after the word "President," to insert "as hereinafter provided;" so as to make the section read:

57. All coal and asphalt deposits which are within the limits of any town site so established, which are at the date of the final ratification of this agreement covered by any existing lease, shall, at the expiration of two years after the final ratification of this agreement, be sold at public auction for cash under the direction of the President, as hereinafter provided, and the proceeds thereof disposed of as provided in the last preceding section. The coal or asphalt covered by each lease shall be separately sold. The purchaser shall take such coal or asphalt deposits subject to the existing lease, and shall by the purchase succeed to all the rights of the two tribes of every kind and character, under the lease, but all advanced royalties received by the tribe shall be retained by them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 59, page 43, line 11, after the word "shall," to strike out "after the expiration of two" and insert "within three;" in line 14, after the word "auction," to insert "for cash," and in line 15, after the word "President," to insert:

, by a commission composed of three persons, which shall be appointed by the President, one on the recommendation of the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, who shall be a Choctaw by blood, and one on the recommendation of the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, who shall be a Chickasaw by blood. Either of said commissioners may, at any time, be removed by the President for good cause shown. Each of said commissioners shall be paid at the rate of $4,000 per annum, the Choctaw commissioner to be paid by the Choctaw Nation, the Chickasaw commissioner to be paid by the Chickasaw Nation, and the third commissioner to be paid by the United States. In the sale of coal and asphalt lands and coal and asphalt deposits hereunder the commission shall have the right to reject any or all bids which it considers below the value of any such lands or deposits.

And on page 44, line 8, before the word "deposited," to strike out "and the proceeds thereof" and insert "The proceeds arising from the sale of coal and asphalt lands and coal and asphalt deposits shall be;" so as to make the section read:

59. All lands segregated and reserved under the last preceding section, excepting those embraced within the limits of a town site, established as hereinbefore provided, shall, within three years from the final ratification of this agreement and before the dissolution of the tribal governments, be sold at public auction, for cash, under the direction of the President, by a commission composed of three persons, which shall be appointed by the President, one on the recommendation of the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, who shall be a Choctaw by blood, and one on the recommendation of the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, who shall be a Chickasaw by blood. Either of said commissioners may, at any time, be removed by the President for good cause shown. Each of said commissioners shall be paid at the rate of $4,000 per annum, the Choctaw commissioner to be paid by the Choctaw Nation, the Chicksaw commissioner to be paid by the Chickasaw Nation, and the third commissioner to be paid by the United States. In the sale of coal and asphalt lands and coal and asphalt deposits hereunder the commission shall have the right to reject any or all bids which it considers below the value of any such lands or deposits. The proceeds arising from the sale of coal and asphalt lands and coal and asphalt deposits shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said tribes and paid out per capita to the members of said tribes (freedmen excepted) with the other moneys belonging to said tribes in the manner provided by law. The lands embraced within any coal or asphalt lease shall be separately sold, subject to such lease, and the purchaser shall succeed to all the rights of the two tribes of every kind and character, under the lease, but all advanced royalties received by the tribes shall be retained by them. The lands so segregated and reserved, and not included within any existing coal or asphalt lease, shall be sold in tracts not exceeding in area a section under the Government survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 66, page 48, line 2, before the word "appropriate," to strike out "a book" and insert "books;" so as to make the section read:

66. All patents to allotments of land, when executed, shall be recorded in the office of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes within said nations in books appropriate for the purpose, until such time as Congress shall make other suitable provision for record of land titles as provided in the Atoka agreement, without expense to the grantee; and such records shall have like effect as other public records.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the chairman of the committee in lieu of lines 22, 23, 24, and 25 on page 26, and lines 1 and 2 on page 27, that the following language be inserted in the amendment proposed by the committee:

All expenses necessary to the proper conduct on behalf of the nations of the suits and proceedings provided for in this and the two preceding sections shall be incurred under direction of the executive of the two nations; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, upon certificate of said executive, to pay such expenses as are, in his judgment, reasonable and proper out of any of the joint funds of said nations in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. I accept that amendment. It is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART. As the morning hour has about expired, I can go no further to-day, but to-morrow morning after the routine business I shall desire to call up the Creek treaty, which is a very short one, and have it passed.

Mr. STEWART subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Choctaw treaty was passed this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). The motion will be entered accordingly.

UTE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent to call up a local bill—the bill (H. R. 12796) providing for free homesteads in the Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, the question of transportation is one of the important questions of to-day. It has grown beyond the stage of facility, and is now being measured by the rule of economics. The canoe and the flatboat as a means of transportation upon our inland rivers and the primitive and crude vessels that plowed the salt seas have given place, as necessity demanded, to more improved and better facilities, forced by the growing commerce of the world. We do not know what the limit may be, but we appreciate that every decade brings new propositions which the minds of men governing these questions must solve. When we had reached the point where the iron horse had transplanted the canal boat, and it seemed that the waterways were useless, we began to wonder what the next transition might be. But nature has provided a means for the conduct of the transportation question on parallel lines. The waterways have been deepened and enlarged, vessels have grown in size and speed and economical management, to still lead in the question of economic transportation.

After we had learned and became accustomed to the rapid transit of the locomotive and the train we were no longer satisfied to travel at a slow pace upon the high seas; and that demand set at work the inventive genius which has created and put afloat the magnificent steamship, not only magnificent in its proportions for the accommodation and comfort of passengers, but on account of its enormous transportation of cargo.

Not satisfied to stop there, when the long routes to meet the growing commerce of the Orient and the Southeast demanded quicker transportation, there was a genius raised as if for the occasion. That man was De Lesseps. Almost in the face of universal condemnation as to his project he pursued it to a successful end. Even before he had consummated the project of the Suez Canal the people of the United States had had their attention called on several occasions, growing out of the enterprise and energy of some of her citizens, to the possibility of the construction of a canal across the Isthmus. There seemed to be a determination to sever the connecting link between North and South America for the purpose of bringing them closer together, and the commercial necessity for it seemed to grow as this subject was studied—not by the influence or aid of any government, but by the energy of private enterprise.

It is not my purpose to recite the particulars with regard to all the undertakings to build a canal across the Isthmus. In the report of the minority of the committee, after careful study, research, and preparation, we have put before the members of this body a report which I believe covers every question in point, and were I to have my choice as a matter of argument I would prefer to read that report. Therefore I can only urge upon all Senators to take my advice and read it carefully. There are some points connected with it, however, that I desire to emphasize.

First, admitting that there is a strong sentiment among the people of this country for an isthmian canal; that we have passed the experimental stage; that we have passed the sentimental stage, we are to-day confronted by the practical proposition, if a canal is to be built, where shall it be built? If we are satisfied that we want a canal—that a canal is necessary to the development of our commerce—our next thought necessarily must be that we want the best canal.

It is only very recently that the opportunity has come to us to consider other routes. For years we talked and wrote about the Nicaragua Canal until it has become a sentiment. It seemed to be the only route across the Isthmus available to this country or to its citizens for the construction of a canal.

Mr. President, I say we have dwelt upon the question of the Nicaragua Canal as a sentiment until we have grown to believe that there was no other route possible or available. Two years ago, when this thought seemed to be forced upon the people of this country with more than unusual interest, owing to the late war with Spain, when the passage of the famous war ship, the Oregon, from San Francisco to Cuba called the attention of the world to a feat which had never been equaled by any other vessel, it was an advertisement for our Navy, but at the same time it was an object lesson; and with our fleets divided and scattered broadcast over the world we seemed to be forced as a military necessity to the conclusion that a canal must be built.

Going back to 1882, when the French company was organized to build the Panama Canal, the inspiration of the name of De Lesseps brought to his support the entire people of France. What he had accomplished in the construction of the Suez Canal, its eminent success physically and financially, gave him the opportunity to command any amount of capital for any project which he might offer. With all the strength and assistance behind him that the people of France could give, with the experience he had had before he set to work, he called around him the most eminent engineers, and practical contractors for such a work were also at his command.

His first object was (always looking to the end for success) to find the best place on the Isthmus to connect the waters of the Caribbean Sea with the Pacific Ocean. Can any one doubt that before embarking in that enterprise every question bearing upon the success of it was carefully considered from every standpoint? Is it not fair to suppose that De Lesseps considered every question which we are liable to discuss to-day before he invested the money of his people and risked his reputation as to the success of it?

He chose the route of the Panama Canal. Work was commenced. I will not go into the details which resulted unfortunately for the company. I do not care to discuss the failure which brought down that great name from its pedestal. It was not an error of judgment or want of feasibility in the project that caused its suspension. It was in the administration of its affairs.

In the interim the United States had not been idle. We had sent one, two, aye, three commissions to examine what seemed to us to be the only unoccupied route on the Isthmus. The first report was for a small canal; the second for a larger; the third for a still larger.

But I echo the sentiment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] when he said yesterday it was a fortunate thing that none of them had been adopted. Any canal built along the lines of those first surveys and estimates would have been a failure—a failure because in the development of this great question of transportation our ocean ships have grown far beyond what would have been the capacity of that canal.

Those surveys and those reports had the effect to fasten upon the minds of the American people a belief that the only route in which we could possibly be interested was the Nicaragua route. I want to confess that, in common with all my fellow-citizens, I shared in that feeling and belief; and as the necessity seemed to grow and demand an isthmian canal, I would have been prepared, under the influences which then existed, to give my hearty support to that project; but it seems as if the fates were guiding us in the right direction, when, for some reason or other, we were deterred from building that canal which would have been obsolete to-day, and we were deterred from embarking in a project that, in the light of subsequent events, it seems to me would have been a mistake.

Mr. President, without going into detail, I want to call attention to a few reasons for which we are supposed to construct the canal.

First, we want the best route. What is the best route? The shortest route under like conditions. The Panama Canal route is 49 miles long, as against the 183 miles of the Nicaragua route.

There are physical conditions connected with the operation of the canal which are just as important as its length. Although you might have an ideal canal in all the physical conditions for which a canal is to be built, there might be other conditions which would render its operation almost impossible.

You build your canal for what? For the passage of vessels from ocean to ocean in the shortest possible time, at the lowest possible risk, and also on the most economical lines. That means success.

I am willing to concede that in the consideration of this question I am looking quite as much to the success of the canal commercially as I am to its existence as a means of defense. One without the other might call for criticism from people who look upon this question from different standpoints; but it is not so important, in my judgment, that a man-of-war can be passed from one ocean to the other in a shorter time than it would take to go around the Horn as it is that that great highway of commerce shall be not only of the greatest advantage to the United States, but to the whole world. When we are talking about the construction of a canal, naturally first considering our own interests, we must not forget the fact that we are building this canal for a world canal, for the commerce of the world.

It will be necessary, Mr. President, in considering the economic operation of that canal, to take into account the business that will be attracted to it, not only from the United States, but from every maritime nation of the world.

This question was taken up in the committee of which I am a member at a time when there seemed to be a change in the condition of things, when the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission first made was in print, and after the speedy action by the House of Representatives in passing the Hepburn bill. Only a week later a change came over the situation, following the proposition made by the New Panama Canal Company, and with which you are all familiar.

We had before us the closing paragraphs of the report of the commissioners, which is before you, advising the construction of the Nicaragua Canal because of the price asked for the Panama Canal, $109,000,000. That was followed immediately by a reconsideration on the part of the New Panama Company. The president of the French company, who had conducted the negotiations with the Commission up to that time, had been dethroned, and in an opportune time came the offer of $40,000,000, which was the very figure estimated by the Commission as the sum at which they would advise the purchase of the rights and property of that company.

The statement was made yesterday by the senior Senator from Alabama that in considering that feature of the question no inventory had been taken into account. I was surprised at that statement, because here is Senate Document No. 123, giving a complete inventory of the property and the prices, which led our Commission to place their estimate of $40,000,000 as the value of what we propose to purchase.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator yield to me to make a very brief statement on that subject?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not say that no inventory had been submitted. I said nothing about an inventory, except that there was no provision in the substitute, as offered, for an inventory; that there was no statement in that substitute of what the property consisted for which we are to pay $40,000,000.

I now state further that in the proposition that was made by cable from the Panama Canal Company to Admiral Walker there was no statement of what the property was that was to be conveyed except by classes. There was no inventory, and there is none provided for being taken in this substitute, and none is mentioned in it. I did not refer to outside correspondence that had taken place between M. Hutin and Admiral Walker. The substitute ought to state that an inventory is to be required, or it ought to state the articles that we want to buy.

Mr. HANNA. I suppose, Mr. President, we have got our information from the same source in all the particulars connected with this measure—the report of the Commission, the Senate document submitted through the committee and by the Isthmian Canal Commission for the information of the Senate; and here, on pages 4 and 5 of that document, we find:

> The "totality, without exception, of its property and rights on the Isthmus," mentioned in the cablegram of January 9, includes the following classes of property:
>
> There are 56 parcels of land to which the title rests in the canal company, amounting to about 30,000 acres, which, with the lands belonging to the railroad company, cover nearly all of the ground required for the actual construction of the canal. Some additional land must be acquired for the construction of the lakes at Bohio and Alhajuela and for the outflow from the Gigante Spillway, these additional lands being at present of little value.
>
> Under the law of Colombia dated December 10, 1890, the canal company became entitled to 250,000 hectares (about 625,000 acres) of the land grant provided for in the original Wyse concession. These lands have never been delimited and the company has not actually taken possession of them, but the right to them would pass to the United States. In case the United States should not wish to take and hold these lands, it might relinquish the right in favor of Colombia in the negotiations with that Government for new treaty rights.
>
> There are scheduled 2,431 buildings, divided among 47 subclassifications, used for offices, quarters, storehouses, hospitals, shops, stables, and miscellaneous purposes. Among them are two large permanent buildings in Panama, one used as the headquarters residence and the other as the general office; large general hospitals at Colon and Panama, and several important buildings at Colon. These buildings are furnished.
>
> There is an immense amount of machinery, consisting of floating plant (tugs, launches, dredges, etc.) and spare parts, with 24 subclassifications; rolling plant (locomotives, cars, etc.) and spare parts, with 17 subclassifications; stationary and semistationary plant (excavators, cranes, pumps, etc.), with 25 subclassifications. The Commission does not attach much value to this plant for the reasons given in its report of November 16, 1901.
>
> There are also many surveying and other instruments, office supplies and stationery, surgical and medical outfit, and miscellaneous supplies covering thousands of items.
>
> The excavation already accomplished upon the main canal line which will be of value in the plan recommended by the Commission was carefully computed and was found to be 30,689,966 cubic yards. As stated in the report of November 16, 1901, the amount of excavation which can be utilized in the Chagres diversion is 210,873 cubic yards, and in the Gatun diversion 2,685,494 cubic yards. Adding these together, the total quantity of excavation which will be of value in the new plan is 30,586,332 cubic yards. A temporary diversion of the Panama Railroad has been made at the Culebra cut, which also must be considered. Using the same classification of materials and the same unit prices as in the other estimates, with the 20 per cent added for contingencies, the value of the work done is found to be:

Canal excavation	$21,020,386
Chagres diversion	178,186
Gatun diversion	1,396,456
Railroad diversion (4 miles)	300,000
	22,895,028
Contingencies, 20 per cent	4,579,005
Aggregate	27,474,033

> Of the existing 70,000 shares of the Panama Railroad the canal company will transfer to the United States all but about 1,100 shares. These latter are held by a few individuals residing in various parts of the United States and in Europe.

Then it goes on to enumerate other properties; and from the estimates made by our engineers, at a bargain price, they say that all this property, personal and real, which is to be transferred under this proposition of $40,000,000, we are to buy at $40,000,000, according to their estimate; not with reference to what it cost the Panama Canal Company originally or what anybody else might say it was worth to them if they had competition for the purchase of this canal.

Mr. MORGAN. From what paper does the Senator read?

Mr. HANNA. I am reading from a Senate document.

Mr. MORGAN. Whose report is it?

Mr. HANNA. It is a message from the President of the United States of January 20, 1902, transmitting the Supplementary Report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, dated January 18, 1902.

Mr. MORGAN. A supplementary report?

Mr. HANNA. A supplementary report.

Mr. MORGAN. Does that refer to the report made by M. Hutin to Admiral Walker?

Mr. HANNA. This report is addressed to the President of the United States, and is signed by J. G. Walker, rear-admiral, United States Navy, president of Commission; Samuel Pasco, Alfred Noble, George S. Morison; Peter C. Hains, colonel, United States Corps of Engineers; William H. Burr; O. H. Ernst, lieutenant-colonel, United States Corps of Engineers; Lewis M. Haupt, Emory R. Johnson.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no inventory accompanying that report.

Mr. HANNA. I do not know what the Senator calls an inventory.

Mr. MORGAN. I call it a statement and description of articles of property that are proposed to be sold.

Mr. HANNA. I will call it a summary, if that will suit the Senator better.

Mr. MORGAN. A mere summary. There is no inventory submitted.

Mr. HANNA. When the transfer of the property is to be made, then we will go into details and have specifications as to what we are to buy.

Mr. MORGAN. That is exactly what I object to. I want Congress to know what it is doing.

Mr. HANNA. And I am trying to tell them. I may not be successful, but I am doing my best.

This is the report of the Commission who had themselves been upon the ground, who examined the works on the Nicaragua and Panama routes, and who had examined the property which was offered under this proposition. They had made their own estimate of value. Had that been accepted by the French company at the time it was made, there would have been no report from that Commission to Congress other than one advising the purchase of the Panama Canal; but because, as I have said before, the then president of that company insisted upon $109,000,000 for the property, and because the Commission were not willing to recommend to this Government the purchase of the property at that price, they reported adversely; and that brought about a change in the affairs of the French company and in their policy, and finally an acceptance by them of the figures virtually offered by our Commission as a price which the United States Government would probably consider. That offer was made, and it was considered so favorably by the President of the United States that he immediately reconvened that Commission with instructions to reconsider the question and make a supplementary report. This is their report—their supplemental report of January 18, 1902.

Then the Senate authorized the Interoceanic Canals Committee to call before them and personally examine the members of this Commission. That examination went on for several weeks. There appeared before our committee not only the members of the Commission, but many others who were summoned from whom we hoped to get information. I have the record in detail of the evidence given before that committee by every one of the members of the Commission. I will except one, Mr. Haupt, who varied his statement from his original signed decision—but six out of the seven members of that Commission answered interrogatories put to them. There are three large volumes of this record in very great detail; I have had it condensed on this one point so as simply to give the force of the judgment of the Commission.

The question was asked of Admiral Walker by myself:

Senator HANNA (referring to the Commission's final report). Now, as I understand this phraseology, the first section relating to the physical advantages, the shorter route, and the reasons given indicate your preference for the Panama Canal Company route, but owing to the conditions of the price asked you decided in favor of the other?

Admiral WALKER. Yes; we considered the price unreasonable; that it was so much so that we could not recommend it.

Senator HANNA. You consider $40,000,000 as reasonable?

Admiral WALKER. I consider $40,000,000 reasonable.

Senator HANNA. Had the price at that time been $40,000,000, what, in your judgment, would have been the report of the Commission?

Admiral WALKER. I think it would have been in favor of Panama.

Senator HANNA. For the reasons above stated—owing to the physical advantages and the shorter line?

Admiral WALKER. And various other reasons.

Next, Mr. Morison, the well-known, eminent engineer, a member of the Commission, in answer to the same interrogatory, answered:

Mr. MORISON. Well, I can only speak for myself in that respect. I never should have signed any report recommending the Nicaragua route in preference to the Panama route except on the ground I felt that the United States could not afford to be held up by a French organization.

Senator HARRIS. The reduction in the price asked for to $40,000,000 made it come within what you thought was a legitimate and proper price.

Mr. MORISON. I think that is a perfectly proper price. I think our Government could have better afforded to pay twice that price than to have built the Nicaragua Canal, if that had been the whole question; but the United States Government, as I look on it, has many other things to do than to build an interoceanic canal; and if it allows itself to be imposed upon through an unreasonable price for one piece of property, it may be for some others, and that feeling was what settled my decision.

Senator HANNA. From an engineering standpoint, from the standpoint of the physical conditions, you were in favor of the Panama route, as I understand you?

Mr. MORISON. I am, and always have been so since I have seen the two routes. I think the Panama route is decidedly the best, and for a good many reasons.

The next was Mr. Hains:

Senator HANNA. In short, had the value fixed upon the Panama Canal Company's property been $40,000,000, instead of $109,000,000, your report would at that time have been in favor of accepting the route?

Colonel HAINS. So far as I am concerned.

Senator HANNA. Of course I am only asking that.

Colonel HAINS. Yes. I should like to say right there, Senator, that the Isthmian Canal Commission has made three reports. The first report was a preliminary report, made in November, 1899. At that time it did not seem possible that any transfer of ownership of the Panama Canal rights could be passed to the United States. Now, the law under which we were acting provided that we were to report on the practicability and feasibility of building a canal to be under the control, management, and ownership of the United States. If it had been a question of mere practicability and feasibility uncoupled with anything else, I should have said that the Panama route was the most practicable and feasible; but coupled with this other condition, and seeing no prospect of getting a transfer, my idea was that the practicable route was the Nicaragua route.

When we came to make the other report later, the price charged for the Panama Canal was about $109,000,000, as stated there, and we regarded that as an exorbitant sum and on that account threw it out of consideration again.

The next is Colonel Ernst:

Senator HANNA. You signed this report and afterward the supplementary report?

Colonel ERNST. I signed both of them.

Senator HANNA. After a thorough examination. In the regular report, the synopsis of which we have here, in closing the Commission uses this language:

"There are certain physical advantages, such as a shorter canal line, a more complete knowledge of the country through which it passes, and lower cost of maintenance and operation in favor of the Panama route, but the price fixed by the Panama Canal Company for a sale of its property and franchises is so unreasonable that its acceptance can not be recommended by this Commission."

Did you understand that to mean that had the price fixed by the Panama Canal Company for the sale of its property been reasonable and satisfactory that you would have recommended the Panama route at that time?

Colonel ERNST. Yes; I did so understand it.

The next is the testimony of Colonel Noble:

Senator HANNA. You have signed the report of the Commission. In the next to the last clause of that report is this statement:

"There are certain physical advantages, such as a shorter canal line, a more complete knowledge of the country through which it passes, and lower cost of maintenance and operation, in favor of the Panama route, but the price fixed by the Panama Canal Company for a sale of its property and franchises is so unreasonable that its acceptance can not be recommended by this Commission."

In making that statement the Commission virtually decided that if the price fixed by the Panama Canal Company had been reasonable, they would have recommended the Panama route?

Mr. NOBLE. That could be assumed, I think, and that was the case as shown later.

Senator HANNA. That was the case?

Mr. NOBLE. That was the case later.

The next is Professor Burr:

Senator HANNA. In that report it stated that, owing to the unreasonable price fixed by the Panama Canal Company for the sale of their property, you, under those conditions recommended the Nicaragua route. If the price had been as it is now, $40,000,000, what would have been your judgment about it at that time?

Mr. BURR. I should have been in favor of the Panama route. I was then in favor of it, except for the unreasonable price put upon it. * * *

Then the same question was repeated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. So in the examination every witness, who had been charged by this Government with responsibility to it alone, called by that committee, verified the statement made that had the offer of the sum recommended by the Commission been favorably considered in the first instance by the Panama Canal Company, the first report would have been the same as the supplemental report, in favor of accepting the offer.

Mr. President, I want to discuss this question from the standpoint of loyalty to my country. Having assumed the responsibility of constructing a ship canal for the world, we owe an equal responsibility to every nation who shall enjoy the privileges granted by the United States. I do not understand that this is any selfish project, or that we are even considering the rate per cent that shall come to us as a reward for our venture. Therefore, in considering the proposition, I want to do so from the standpoint of the future, with a thought to the great development that will come as it has in the past; and I am anxious that we shall make no mistake in the selection of a route on which this canal shall be built.

I do not believe there is a member of this body, designing to vote unselfishly and correctly, who would undertake to say what we shall do upon his own responsibility and information without advice acquired from the finest experts in the world. I was once in favor, as I said before, of the Nicaragua Canal, and I would have been satisfied, perhaps, two years ago if we had made the experiment; but looking at this question from a practical standpoint, inspired by the desire to do the best thing for the project, I have been forced by stubborn facts and conditions to change my mind.

I, in common with many others, believed that a sea-level canal would have been best.

Upon the request a year ago of some gentlemen who presented the Darien route, which contemplated a tunnel 5 or 6 miles long, I was led carefully to consider that proposition; but this Government having secured the services of half a dozen of the ablest engineers in our country for the purpose of telling us what is the best thing to do, and those gentlemen having reported adversely on the proposition of tunneling the Darien Mountain, I abandoned that.

But, Mr. President, for what did we need an Isthmian Canal Commission if not to advise us upon all these questions of technique of which we are not supposed to be masters?

Some of them are loyally serving their country as officers in the Army and Navy; all were bound by their oaths, when they appeared before the committee, to tell the truth, without fear and without favor; and we have their unanimous report in favor of accepting the proposition of the Panama Canal Company.

I do not expect to be able to finish this afternoon all that I care to say upon this subject, having agreed to divide the time to-day with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]; therefore I wish to pass briefly to one or two other questions connected with the operation of the canal.

Volcanoes and earthquakes seem to be a burning question just now while Mount Pelee is discharging its fire, and they have led to a more careful consideration of that matter. I might go back to the great speech made by Senator Davis, of Minnesota, upon the very bill which was mentioned here yesterday as being the crowning effort of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and quote from him what is here verified by the map to-day as to the number of active volcanoes within the immediate range of the proposed route of the Nicaragua Canal. I can not discuss this question from a scientific standpoint, but before I am through with it I will produce evidence which should at least cause us to pause and not to treat lightly this warning of nature.

The Commission in their report state that earthquakes are frequent all through the Isthmus, but active volcanoes exist only from where you see the first red dot northwesterly; and every red dot is an active volcano, the black ones inactive volcanoes. I am not boasting merely about the size of my maps, for I believe the red lines indicating the Panama Canal, there [indicating], and the Nicaragua Canal, here [indicating], afford a pretty good illustration as to some of the conditions that would arise in the operation of a vessel on either route.

Mr. President, you must remember that this canal is to be only 200 feet wide on the surface and 150 feet wide at the bottom, and navigation through that tortuous canal under unfavorable conditions of weather is a very serious problem. If we are seeking to save time, we can not afford to measure it entirely from the standpoint of distance. But upon that matter I will submit figures later on.

The cost of construction, measured from the same unit of value, is $5,000,000 more for the Nicaragua Canal than for the Panama route. But there is another factor coming in here which, considered from a business standpoint, impresses me more than the difference in cost. The engineers' report is that it will cost $1,300,000 more per annum to operate and maintain the Nicaragua than the Panama Canal; and Colonel Ernst told me personally that the figure should have been $50,000 additional, because when the report was printed a mistake was made in omitting the figure

"5" and placing a "0" in its place; that it should have been $1,350,000. That sum represents the interest at Government rates on $65,000,000, and the $1,350,000 is to be paid annually. Put that to the credit of the Panama route.

But that is not all. Before I have finished discussing this question I will demonstrate as a fact, from authorities that can not be disputed, that the Nicaragua Canal can never be operated successfully at night. You must remember that our ocean-going steamers have grown from small vessels to vessels 700 feet long and 72 feet deep, with no evidence anywhere that they have reached the maximum, and when you consider that you are building this canal not only for to-day, or next year, but for all time, you must measure the results of this growth and development and prepare for it.

The Panama Canal was projected as a sea-level canal and intended to be such, and had all the money that was subscribed to that undertaking been faithfully expended I have no doubt the canal would be working as a sea-level canal to-day, at perhaps some additional cost.

When the old Panama Canal Company failed, public-spirited and energetic men in France undertook to revive it, and they proposed to raise $13,000,000 to continue the work. They had no connection with the old company, but were determined that the enterprise should not be abandoned, and with the care usually exercised by men of business and capital, they determined, before they expended one dollar of that money, to find out for themselves and through their own means of information exactly the situation on the Isthmus. There were selected, then, as an advisory board of engineers the following gentlemen:

Messrs. Robaglia, Bouvier, Fargue, and Martin, retired general inspectors of the department of roads and bridges of France; Gen. Henry L. Abbot, of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army; Mr. Castel, a retired general inspector of the French department of mines; Mr. Daymard, chief engineer of the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique; Mr. Fteley, of the aqueduct commission of New York City, the engineer who built that great aqueduct; Mr. Fulscher, of the department of public works of Prussia, formerly the directing engineer of the works of the Kiel Canal; Mr. Hersent, a distinguished civil engineer; Mr. Henry W. Hunter, chief engineer of the Manchester Ship Canal; Mr. Koch, chancellor of the department of public works, of the Technique Academy at Darmstadt; Mr. Skalkowski, former director of the bureau of mines of Russia; Mr. Sosa, chief engineer of the Republic of Colombia.

This was an international corps of the most distinguished engineers in the world, called to the aid of the gentlemen who were to invest their money in this project and who obtained (as we supposed we were doing) the best technical knowledge possible in the world to guide them. That body set about their investigations. A portion of them went to the Isthmus, among whom was General Abbot. They went over all the plans and specifications and estimates that had gone before. They took one whole year's time and more in arriving at their conclusion, and when arrived at and presented, the company went on, paid in its money, satisfied that this report had verified not only the technique but the policy and everything else which entered into the project of the construction of the canal.

With that verification of the enterprise, itself again verified as it has been by the most eminent engineers that the United States can produce, why should the United States Senate or the Congress hesitate? Why do we need to go further for more evidence to guide us in doing what is for the best interests of our country under these circumstances? It seems to me this is a practical question, in which we are all alike interested.

There is no politics, there is no sectionalism, there is no partisanship in this project.

It is a great, broad, liberal American policy for which we stand in the building of a world canal. I sympathize with all those who in other days, laboring for an isthmian canal, had but one star to guide them—Nicaragua—and who must now naturally feel like giving up an old friend to pass it by. But in this age of progress and development, Mr. President, the American people are looking to Congress to answer to them on this question without regard to sentiment, guided only by the best knowledge which we can obtain.

For one I should be glad could any other project better than this be submitted, but I understand that the route which is still shorter than all others, being only 30 miles long, and called the San Blas route, whether or not it is practicable as an engineering proposition, is impracticable because the route is absolutely controlled by the concession to the New Panama Canal Company.

If we have waited as long as we can or ought to wait, let us show wisdom enough in discussing and deciding this question to provide for any contingency which may occur in the future.

Let us adopt a route where as the Commission say it may be possible—aye, it is possible, being only a question of dollars and cents—that a sea-level canal can be built.

The Panama Canal was commenced and intended to be a sea-level canal, and it would have been a sea-level canal had the project been carried out. I am told by engineers that there is nothing in the way, even after the Panama Canal shall be completed with locks, during and while it is in operation even, to make it a sea-level canal by paralleling certain parts of it.

You will find when this subject opens up that not only the questions of distance and of curvature and of locks enter into it, but that in regard to the Nicaragua route, the trade winds blow every day in the year from 16 to 20 knots across the Nicaragua route. At the slow speed at which a vessel will be compelled to operate in passing through a narrow canal, those winds would make it an absolute physical impossibility to keep her off the banks without the aid of tugs. The more I have studied this question from the standpoint of the vessel, the more I have been convinced that we never have gone far enough in dealing with the successful operation of the canal, even when we had but the one route to consider. Upon that question I propose later on to furnish testimony.

I have said that the annual cost of operating the Nicaragua Canal is $1,350,000, or, say, $1,300,000, in excess of the Panama route. That is the interest on $65,000,000. The extra expense of $1,300,000 would, of itself, to any individual or private corporation proposing to invest their money in an enterprise like this, decide; and why should not the United States Government conduct its business upon business principles? While we may not be constructing the canal for the purpose, in the first instance, of making money, if we have an opportunity to have a canal, and one that will not be a burden to the Government, is it not better to choose that route when we have the choice?

Another feature connected with the expenses of the canal will be shown before the debate is closed, and that is that along the line of the Nicaragua route it is a very doubtful question whether either the Government of Nicaragua or of Costa Rica is the bona fide owner of all the land, and whether it could, if it would, pass the control of it to this Government without damages to other parties.

It is a matter of record and of history that the Maritime Canal Company was started a number of years ago under the auspices of one Menocal, who was quoted here yesterday as an authority. They spent some three or four or five million dollars, and purchased rights from Lake Nicaragua to the Pacific, which they claim to own to-day. They obtained concessions from Nicaragua and Costa Rica, which concessions they claim to-day have not been forfeited, and the record of the Interior Department shows that the United States Government has defended them as their right.

Those matters are to be settled with.

I know nothing about the validity of those claims. Others more competent to speak will discuss that question, but it is not a clean bill of lading we get from them.

No matter what their protocol is, which is no more valid and no more a benefit to us than the one from Colombia, that is all a matter for after consideration, deliberation, and negotiation on the part of this Government. There is nothing to bind the hands of the President when he makes the final bargain either with Colombia, Costa Rica, or Nicaragua.

Right in this connection, speaking to the spirit of the Spooner amendment, when the insinuation is made that those who advocate the Panama Canal are doing so from selfish motives or otherwise, to protract the discussion of the bill and defeat the construction of any canal, speaking for myself, I resent it. But if you are going to consider the question of rights which we can acquire or not, as bearing upon whether this Government will enter into the building of a canal, that applies both to the Panama and to the Nicaragua Canal.

The claim made, intended to have a most forcible and demoralizing effect, that it would be impossible for us to obtain a title from the French company of their rights or their concessions, and that this Panama Canal project was simply a subterfuge to delay and procrastinate, inspired the Senator from Wisconsin to offer as an amendment a provision that a canal should be built, no matter which route was selected. As I understand the spirit of that amendment, it is meant to say that if the title of the Panama shall be found imperfect and not to be corrected, if the concession is faulty and not to be made satisfactory, then the President of the United States shall have the right and the authority to go ahead and build the Nicaragua Canal, of course with the same provision that the title and the concessions shall be satisfactory.

Uncle Sam does not propose to go into that business unless he has a clean sheet from any of the countries granting concessions.

I for one am not disturbed with reference to the unsettled condition on the Isthmus, which it has been stated is a chronic condition in Colombia, and you might add that there are others in Central and South America. If this canal will do anything, in addition to accommodating commerce, it will be a peacemaker, because being owned and controlled and defended by the United States it will be a power for peace wherever it is built.

When our authority is placed anywhere along that Isthmus I have no fear of interference with the canal or with any citizen of the United States who may have charge of the management or conduct of the canal.

Mr. President, I will ask the indulgence of the Senate at this point. I am not able to continue longer, and I will gladly yield the floor and continue my remarks to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, it is with considerable diffidence and a great deal of hesitation that I shall attempt to follow the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] in a discussion of one of the greatest questions, to my mind, which has ever come before the American Senate. Being a member of the committee, however, and being one of the seven members of that committee who reported the House bill without amendment, I deem it to be a part of my duty, in connection with my duties here, to give the reasons, so far as I can, why the bill reported by the committee should, in my judgment, receive the approval of the Senate.

I have listened with considerable interest to the argument of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. It was able, ingenious, and plausible, but I think I shall be able as I proceed, as I anticipated somewhat the line of his argument, to show that the grounds upon which he bases the most, if not, indeed, all of his argument are not solid rock, but rather of a sandy nature.

The speedy construction of an isthmian canal by and under the control of the Government of the United States is one of the pressing demands of the age. It is demanded by national and international commerce; by internal and foreign trade; by the necessities of our military and naval service; by the spirit and progress of the times in which we live; by the material and physical development of a century stupendous in results and marked by achievements incomparable in character and unequaled by that of any that has preceded it.

It is demanded by a united voice coming from the people of the country, emphatic in character and in a tone which can not be misunderstood. Indeed, so pronounced is this demand on the part of the people of this country that both the great political parties, in both national and State conventions, have not dared to ignore it, and hence they have earnestly demanded of Congress that provision be made without delay for the commencement of this great national and international work. Indeed, so universal, so determined, so insistent has been the demand of the people for an isthmian canal that the few who are opposed to legislation looking to its early construction do not dare openly oppose such legislation, but, while professing to be in favor of a canal, are compelled to resort to all manner of devices for the purpose of defeating, by indirection, that which they dare not directly oppose.

And while it must be presumed that every member of this Senate who says he is favorable to legislation which will result in the early construction of the canal is absolutely honest in that profession, and while I know it is a fact that there is in this body an honest difference of opinion as to which route, the Nicaragua or the Panama, should be adopted, and also an honest difference of opinion as to the proposition or expediency of purchasing the Panama concern for $40,000,000, I give it as my deliberate judgment, after as thorough an investigation as I have been able to make, that a failure upon the part of the Senate to accept the House bill will simply mean an indefinite postponement, if not indeed the ultimate defeat of the canal.

But, further, it is my settled conviction that the purchase of the French plant and the adoption of the Panama route, although it might eventually result in getting the canal, will involve us in complications with the French Government and the French people that will be a series of entanglement and irritation for the next one hundred years. It will be another series of French spoliation claims similar to those growing out of our treaty with France one hundred years ago, and which have annoyed and troubled us ever since, and whose claims are even yet lifting their undying heads before the committees of this body at every session of Congress.

The National House of Representatives, the direct representatives of the people, never insensible or irresponsive to the people's demands, have responded to that demand with an alacrity and a unanimity well worthy of emulation by the American Senate, and now the responsibility rests with this body. Shall that responsibility be met bravely, firmly, resolutely, and without further delay, or shall we by extended discussion, by prolonging a debate that has been going on for more than three-quarters of a century, and engaging in entangling alliances with a foreign power, and complicating our Government and our people in an inextricable web, involving us not only in the meshes of French tribunals, but individual interests and personal claims of more than half a million of the French people—men, women, minors, trustees, and guardians—and thus in the end defeat the earnest demands and the just expectations of the American people?

The bill now before the Senate passed the House of Representatives on January 9, 1902, with but two dissenting votes. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals of this body on January 13, 1902, and from that date until the 13th day of March, 1902, that committee, composed of 11 Senators, was, either as a full committee or by its several subcommittees, engaged almost daily in hearing testimony, not only of the members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, but of many prominent engineers and others.

This investigation took a wide scope. All interests were carefully considered, and the two routes of Nicaragua and Panama were given full, complete, and thorough investigation. All witnesses desired by the friends of the respective routes were heard; able and extended arguments were listened to, and finally, on the 13th of March, 1902, that committee, by a nonpartisan vote of 7 yeas to 4 nays, reported the House bill back to the Senate without amendment, and recommended its passage. I have said the vote in favor was nonpartisan, 3 Republicans and 4 Democrats, one of those being that of the distinguished chairman of that committee, Senator MORGAN. This was the deliberate conclusion of your committee, after as thorough an investigation as it was possible for any diligent committee to make in the period of two full months.

The questions now confronting the Senate in reference to an isthmian canal are these—they are of a threefold nature:

First. Shall the Senate accept the House bill, which provides for the appropriation of $180,000,000 for the construction of the canal by the Nicaragua route; or

Second. Shall the Senate amend that bill and provide that this Government shall pay the French Canal Company $40,000,000 for its comparatively useless assets, and provide the further necessary amount of money—some $144,222,328—for the construction of a canal over the Panama route; or Third. Shall the Senate admit its incapacity and inability to determine which is the better route, and shirk its responsibility by remitting the whole subject and manner of determining as to which route shall be adopted, and incidentally, of course, the determination as to whether we shall pay the French company $40,000,000, to one man—the President of the United States?

Proceeding, therefore, with the consideration of the first proposition, let us inquire briefly as to the provisions of the House bill, popularly known as the Hepburn bill, and which has the approval of seven of the eleven members of the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

This bill authorizes the President to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, as may be desirable or necessary, on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is by this bill appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The amount of this appropriation, it will be observed, is not fixed, except as it is qualified by the amount necessary for the purposes indicated.

The bill further provides in section 2 that when the President has secured full control over the territory indicated he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito on the Pacific Ocean. It is further provided that such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth so that it may be used by vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Brito. And it is further provided that the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

It is further stipulated in this bill that the President shall cause such surveys to be made as may be necessary for said canal and harbors, and in the construction of the same may employ such persons as he may deem necessary.

It is further a provision of the bill that in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

It is also provided in this bill that in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

The bill then, in the sixth and last section, provides for the appropriation, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of the sum of $10,000,000 toward the project contemplated by the bill. And it is further provided that the Secretary of War be authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work that may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, defense, and completion of said canal, harbors, and defenses, the same to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time hereafter be made, on warrants to be drawn by the President of the United States, not to exceed in the aggregate $180,000,000.

This, in brief, is the pending bill now before the Senate, which has passed the House by a vote that was unanimous with the exception of 2, which has been reported to the Senate by your committee by a vote of 7 to 4, and is now before the Senate for its consideration.

THE NICARAGUA ROUTE IS FEASIBLE.

As this bill provides for the construction of a canal over the Nicaragua route—that is, through the valley of the San Juan River in Nicaragua and Costa Rica—the inquiry is pertinent, Is that route practicable? Is it feasible? And if so, what, if any, are its advantages over the Panama route?

In view of the numerous surveys and thorough investigations of this route, not only by one, but by many, commissions and engineering expeditions, always composed of men in all respects thoroughly equipped by their scientific and other attainments for the proper performance of the important work, the question of the absolute feasibility, the entire practicability, of this route is no longer an open question. So thoroughly well has this been established that even its enemies and the friends of other routes, I believe, do not deny it, although the distinguished Senator from Ohio to-day did intimate that in his judgment there are some reasons why a canal could not be built and maintained there, and I was very much surprised, I confess, at that statement, in view of all the reports of the engineers to the contrary.

Without referring to the many earlier surveys, such as that known as the survey of Col. O. W. Childs, a civil engineer of high standing, in 1850–1852, and of several others prior to that, all of which establish the feasibility of this route, it is sufficient to attract attention to the reports of the last two commissions, namely, that known as the Nicaragua Canal Commission, organized August 2, 1898, and composed of Rear-Admiral Walker, president, Col. Peter C. Hains, Corps of Engineers, and Prof. Lewis M. Haupt, civil engineer. This Commission was instructed by the Secretary of State that their report should be—

As full and conclusive upon the subject as it is practicable to make it, to the end that "the proper route, the feasibility and cost and construction of the Nicaragua Canal" may, if possible, be absolutely fixed and determined.

For two years, lacking about two months, this Commission was engaged in the prosecution of this great work. Their report, dated May 9, 1899, leaves nothing in doubt, no element of uncertainty as to any material factor involved as to the entire feasibility of this route. I beg to incorporate in my remarks that portion of the report of this Commission bearing upon the feasibility of the Nicaragua route and the conclusions reached by the Commission. And it must be remembered the three men who composed this Commission are also members of the Isthmian Canal Commission that made the later report. They report as follows:

Under this division of the subject the Commission would respectfully submit that it has failed to find any competent authority that denies the feasibility of constructing a canal across Nicaragua.

I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Ohio to that statement by three of the commissioners who compose the Isthmian Canal Commission and who were the sole members of the Nicaragua Canal Commission, in which they say that they have failed to find any competent authority which denies the feasibility of constructing a canal across Nicaragua. I put that statement of these three commissioners in their official report against the statement of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. But I put more than that against his statement. They give the reasons. The feasibility of the canal is conceded for the following reasons:

1. There are at this date sufficient precedents for ship canals capable of passing the largest vessels, so that any question of the navigation of such a channel is eliminated.

2. The ability to construct and operate locks of the requisite dimensions is sufficiently established by existing structures on the Manchester and Kiel canals, at Davis Island on the Ohio, and at the St. Marys Canal, Michigan.

The posibility of constructing the necessary dams, weirs, sluices, and embankments, which shall be sufficiently stable and impermeable to control the water required for navigation, as well as to regulate the floods, is within the resources of the engineering profession and is fully demonstrated by many hundreds of miles of embankments, levees, and dams, both at home and abroad. There is no reason to doubt the ability to build them out of native rocks and earth and to give them the required strength and tightness to retain or to discharge the water with safety.

4. There is no question as to the adequacy of the supply of water for all purposes at all seasons, nor as to its control in times of flood.

5. Neither is there any doubt with reference to the ability to secure good supporting ground for the trunk of the canal nor suitable sites for locks and dams.

6. The harbor question is only a matter of money, and it is believed that good, capacious, and safe artificial harbors can be created at a reasonable cost.

In brief, the Nicaraguan Commission concluded, the Commission sees no reason to doubt the entire feasibility of the project, but it realizes the necessity of exercising due care in the preparation for the specifications and in the conduct of the work, and that the details of construction be thoroughly inspected and properly executed under competent supervision.

CONCLUSIONS.

The Commission after mature deliberation has adopted and estimated for the route from Brito to Lake Nicaragua, called the Childs route, variant No. 1, and from the lake to Greytown, that is called the Lull route, variant No. 1. This line, leaving Brito, follows the left bank of the Rio Grande to near Buen Retiro, crosses the western divide to the valley of Lajas, which it follows to Lake Nicaragua. Crossing the lake to the head of San Juan River, it follows the upper river to near Boca San Carlos; thence in excavation by the left bank of the river to the San Juanillo and across the low country to Greytown, passing to the north of Lake Silico. It requires but a single dam with regulating works at both ends of the summit level.

The new location selected for the dam at Boca San Carlos eliminates one of the most serious engineering difficulties by avoiding entirely the San Carlos River, with its torrential floods and large volume of sediment, and by locking down immediately from this dam the difficulties and risks of the high embankments of the Menocal line are also avoided.

Instead of the dam at La Flor a lock and regulating works have been substituted at Buen Retiro, where the topography is well adapted for the purpose. It is also proposed to divide the surplus waters of the lake basin between the east and west sides, thus reducing the velocities in the San Juan and securing ample wasteway capacity for the maximum discharge that can ever occur, if stored and distributed over a short period of time. Ample provision has also been made for a possible fluctuation of the lake of 6 feet or more without injury to property by fixing the elevation at the bottom of the canal sufficiently low to cover seasons of minimum rainfall. The surveys have in general revealed better physical conditions than were heretofore supposed to exist, especially as to the amount of rock in the upper river, whereby it is possible greatly to reduce the estimated cost of construction. This fact will account largely for the comparatively moderate amount of the estimate when the enlarged dimensions of the project are taken into consideration. Other reductions are due to the improved methods and machinery available, as developed on Chicago Drainage Canal, and which can not be ignored in discussing a work of this magnitude.

The creation of sufficient capaciously interior harbors presents no unusual difficulties, and they can be secured at a reasonable cost.

The field work under the authority of this Commission has been carefully and well done and is believed to be all that is necessary for the preliminary location of a canal and to determine within narrow limits the final location of dams, locks, and other constructions. Should a canal across Nicaragua be authorized, it will be necessary to make further minute and careful investigations by borings to determine the exact location of locks and dams, for which the Commission has neither the time nor money, nor would it have been justified in doing work of this character until the construction of a canal was assured. The computations of amounts to be excavated have been carefully made and checked to guard against errors, and are believed to be accurate within narrow limits. All possible information has been sought with regard to cost of similar work in the United States and in Central America and a careful comparison made of the probable differences between Nicaragua and the United States.

To determine the proper unit prices for excavation, the average of prices actually paid to contractors on the Chicago Drainage Canal, which represents cost of plant, prices paid for work done, and contractor's profits, were taken. Up to this point the Commission dealt only with facts. To the prices paid at Chicago certain percentages have been added for the difference in location, climate, etc. These percentages are of course a matter of judgment, upon which men may honestly differ. But from all the information obtainable by this Commission and after careful consideration, with a desire to arrive at a proper conclusion, those used in the estimate are deemed fair and reasonable.

In obtaining the estimate for cost of locks, the prices actually paid for building the Government locks at the Sault Ste. Marie were taken, and 33 per cent was added for the difference of location. This percentage is believed to be ample, as a large part of the expense of constructing the locks will be for material, much of which can be furnished in Nicaragua at the same or only a small advance upon the prices in the United States.

After giving due weight to all the elements of this important question, and with an earnest desire to reach logical conclusions, based upon substantial facts, the Commission believes that a canal can be built across the Isthmus on this route for a sum not exceeding that stated in the estimate.

The dimensions of the canal proposed are much larger than any heretofore considered, and will be ample not only to meet the present requirements of commerce, but also for many years to come. A navigable channel of smaller dimensions than those proposed, only sufficient for present needs, can be constructed for a lesser sum, if deemed expedient.

I will here remark that this report of these three Commissioners, Admiral Walker, Colonel Hains, and Professor Haupt, who constituted the Nicaragua Canal Commission and all of whom are members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, declares in the most positive and unqualified terms that the Nicaragua route is, to quote their words, "an absolutely feasible and practicable route."

The distinguished Senator from Ohio has just told us we appointed commissioners to tell us what to do, and yet when we have a commission who tell us what to do we are met with an argument here on scientific and technical grounds, or rather an assertion to the effect that a canal which this Commission of distinguished men say can be built and maintained, can not be built or maintained.

The following are the estimates of this Commission of the whole cost of construction. There were two estimates. That of Commissioners Walker and Haupt was $118,133,790, while that of Commissioner Hains was higher by $16,684,518, or $134,818,308.

Soon after the Nicaragua Canal Commission had concluded their work (from whose report I have just read) another Commission was authorized by Congress, known as the Isthmian Canal Commission. This Commission was appointed January 10, 1899, a little more than three years ago. This Commission was composed of nine members. Among those were included Rear-Admiral John G. Walker, president; Col. Peter C. Hains, Corps of Engineers, and Lewis M. Haupt, civil engineer, all of whom had composed the Nicaragua Canal Commission. This Commission—that is, the Isthmian Canal Commission—made a preliminary report to the President of the United States November 13, 1900. In that report this Commission said what I shall read—and here again I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Ohio to what his own Commission says in regard to the feasibility and practicability of this route. I read from the report of November 13, 1900:

In view of all the facts, and particularly in view of all the difficulties of obtaining the necessary rights, privileges, and franchises of the Panama route, and assuming that Nicaragua and Costa Rica recognize the value of a canal to themselves and are prepared to grant concessions on terms which are reasonable and acceptable to the United States, the Commission is of the opinion that "the most practicable and feasible route for" an isthmian canal to be "under the control, management, and ownership of the United States" is that known as the Nicaragua route.

This Commission made a full and elaborate report to the President of the United States on November 16, 1901—last November. This report restated at great length and with much particularity, all of the elements, phases, and factors connected with the Nicaragua route, and reaffirmed in the most positive terms the feasibility and practicability of this route for an isthmian canal. No element of doubt remained in reference to the entire ability, from an engineering standpoint, to overcome any one of the engineering problems or difficulties to be overcome in the construction of this great work. The report, as I have said, was a distinct, clear, unambiguous, specific reaffirmation of the declarations of the various previous surveys and expeditions, to the effect that the route was practicable.

Furthermore, this Commission in this report of November 16, 1901, reached the following conclusions:

First. That "the investigations of this Commission," I quote from page 257 of the printed report, "have shown that the selection of 'the most feasible and practicable route' for an isthmian canal, must be made between the Nicaragua and Panama locations." And after discussing at some length the features and various advantages and disadvantages of the one over the other of the two routes—Nicaragua and Panama—the Commission concluded its report in the following words, page 263 of the printed report:

After considering all the facts developed by the investigations made by the Commission and the actual situation as it now stands, and having in view the terms offered by the New Panama Canal Company, this Commission is of the opinion that "the most practicable and feasible" route for an isthmian canal, to be "under the control, management, and ownership of the United States," is that known as the Nicaragua route.

This Commission, in estimating the cost of the construction of the canal on the respective routes, taking into consideration the work done on the Panama route and without including the cost of concessions from the Governments of Colombia and Nicaragua and Costa Rico, respectively, have stated the same in the following language, page 261 of the report:

The cost of constructing a canal by the Nicaragua route, and of completing the Panama Canal, without including the cost of acquiring concessions from the different Governments, is estimated as follows:

Nicaragua	$189,864,062
Panama	144,233,358

For a proper comparison there must be added to the latter the cost of acquiring the rights and property of the New Panama Canal Company. This Commission has estimated the value of this in the project recommended by it to be $40,000,000.

This Commission, in discussing the concessions necessary to be obtained from the Republic of Colombia on the Panama route and from the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rico on the Nicaragua route, make the following observations as to the two respectively. I ask the attention of the Senator from Ohio and other members of the minority of the committee to these statements of the Commission:

First. The Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rico are entrammeled by no existing concessions or treaty obligations, and are free to grant to the United States the rights necessary for the attainment of these ends, and in December, 1900, demonstrated their willingness to have their territory so occupied by the United States by executing protocols, by which it was agreed that they would enter into negotiations to settle in detail the plan and agreements necessary to accomplish the construction and provide for the ownership of the proposed canal, whenever the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire the necessary control and authority.

Second. The Government of Colombia, on the contrary, in whose territory the Panama route lies, has granted concessions which belong to or are controlled by the New Panama Canal Company and have many years to run. These concessions, limited in time and defective in other ways, would not be adequate authority for the purposes of the United States. But while they exist Colombia is not free to treat with this Government. If the Panama route is selected these concessions must be removed in order that the two Republics may enter into a treaty to enable the United States to acquire the control upon the terms that will be necessary and to fix the consideration.

No further citation or argument is necessary to show beyond all question the entire feasibility of the Nicaragua route for the isthmian canal.

SEVENTEEN REASONS WHY THE NICARAGUA ROUTE IS PREFERABLE TO THE PANAMA ROUTE.

I now propose, Mr. President, to give seventeen reasons why, in my judgment, it is the duty of the Congress to select the Nicaragua route. The advantages of this route over the Panama route may be summarized as follows:

First. Because, for the commerce in which the United States is mostly interested, that between our Pacific coast and Atlantic ports and European and American, the Nicaragua route is shorter by 600 miles, or one full day in going and coming by steamers, and the same advantages exist between our Atlantic ports and ports of the Orient.

This, too, Mr. President, is not my statement, but the statement of the Isthmian Canal Commission in their report of November, 1901.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio says he is in favor of the shortest route. So am I in favor of the shortest route, and therefore I am in favor of the Nicaragua route, which is 600 miles shorter than the Panama route he advocates.

Second. The construction of the canal on "the Panama route will," as stated by the Isthmian Canal Commission—here again I quote from the Commission—be simply a means of communication between the two oceans, * * * and the natural features of the country through which the route passes are such that no such considerable development is likely to occur as a result of the construction and operation of the canal—

While, as stated by the Commission—in addition to this use as a means of communication between the two oceans, a canal by the Nicaraguan route would bring Nicaragua and a large portion of Costa Rico and other Central American States into close use and communication with the United States and that of Europe. The intimate business relations—that would be established with the people of the United States during the period of construction, by the expenditure of vasts sums of money in those States, and the use of American products and manufactures, would be likely to continue after the completion of the work to the benefit of our manufacturing, agricultural, and other interests.

Continue the Commission—

Here, again, the Commission in their main report, before they changed base all of a sudden for some reason or other, which was, of course, a reason satisfactory to them, drew a comparison between these two routes and gave their reasons in unmistakable terms in favor of the Nicaragua route. No question of consideration or compensation or price entered into the determination of that particular matter. They said it is the best route. Why is it the best route? For the reasons stated here:

Third. The freedom from epidemics, the general condition of health, the hygienic advantages generally, are largely in favor of the Nicaragua route. This is fully and completely demonstrated, not only by the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, but by overwhelming testimony from various other sources. In their report of November 16, 1901, page 170, the Isthmian Canal Commission, in comparing the climate and health conditions of the two routes, say this. I quote from the report:

The climate of the isthmian canal regions is generally damp and enervating. The temperature is not extreme, rarely rising as high as 95° or falling below 70°, but the excessive humidity greatly restricts the capacity for physical exertion. The lowlands near the coast have long been known as insalubrious, and the seaports are subject to fevers. Perhaps the greatest difficulty to be encountered in the construction of the canal will be the procurement of an adequate force of laborers and the preservation of their health and efficiency.

In this respect the Panama route has a lugubrious history—

And it is the report of the Commission I am reading from—from which the Nicaragua route is free. The notorious mortality which attended the construction of the Panama Railroad, and later the operations of the Panama Canal Company, has taught a lesson which will not soon be forgotten for that route.

The Panama route.

Among the white employees of this Commission sent to Nicaragua there were fewer cases of sickness than there would probably have been among the same number of men employed in some parts of the United States. Among those sent to Panama the proportion of sick was greater. On the Nicaragua line, during the operations of the Maritime Canal Company, the health of the force was reported to be good. * * * In Nicaragua the trade winds are more liberal than at Panama, tempering the heat and removing miasma more effectively. * * * It is stated by Bunau-Varilla, at one time chief engineer of the old Panama Canal Company, that out of 100 individuals sent to the Isthmus, not more than 20, as an average, could remain there, and even those lost a part of their value. The negro alone could perform manual labor; the white man must supervise and direct. After costly and fatal experiments with other races, the company ceased sending to the Isthmus as laborers any but native Colombians and negroes from the British Antilles, particularly Jamaica. The Panama Railroad Company grants to its white employees from the United States two months' leave of absence each year, with transportation to their homes.

Some idea of the fearfully unhealthy condition of the Isthmus of Panama along the route of the proposed Panama Canal may be obtained by a reference to the report of the liquidator of the old Panama Canal Company made in 1890, in which he designates the expenses for hospitals, sanitariums, sanitary and medical expenses from 1881 to 1890 at the enormous sum of 9,183,657.34 francs. This sum total was made up of the following items:

	Francs.
Construction of central hospital	3,415,852.13
Hospital at Colon	375,399.60
Construction of houses on line	83,155.80
Amperador houses	33,272.53
Sanitarium at Toboga	665,606.80
Cemetery at Panama	23,184.23
Expenses central hospital	2,046,014.06
Expenses Colon hospital	1,203,365.01
Expenses Toboga sanitarium	366,415.63
Expenses on line	188,845.80
Expenses before establishing hospitals	99,134.66
Purchase of medicines	080,411.09

In this connection I desire to attract the attention of the Senate to the testimony bearing upon the question as to the comparatively healthy condition of the Nicaragua route. I quote first from the testimony of Gen. Edward Porter Alexander. It will be found on page 982, part 3, of the Hearings. This testimony was taken March 8 last before the Interoceanic Committee of the Senate, and is as follows:

Gen. EDWARD PORTER ALEXANDER appeared and was duly sworn by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. General Alexander, you are a civil engineer?

General ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been engaged in that pursuit?

General ALEXANDER. I graduated at West Point in the Corps of Engineers in 1857, and have been more or less at civil or military engineering, railroading, and kindred matters ever since.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not now in the United States Army?

General ALEXANDER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You resigned from the Army?

General ALEXANDER. I resigned at the breaking out of the war and served in the Confederate Army.

The CHAIRMAN. During the time of your service in the United States Army as an engineer, did you have anything to do with public works of importance?

General ALEXANDER. No, sir; all my services was with the engineer troops in the field.

The CHAIRMAN. After the civil war was over, did you have any connection with enterprises of a public character?

General ALEXANDER. After the civil war I was first professor of engineering and mathematics in the University of South Carolina for four years, and then I went to railroading, and I was engaged in railroading, generally as manager of roads with engineers doing work under me, for some twenty years, more or less. Since then I have been on two governmental commissions, one on the improvement of The Dalles of the Columbia River, The Dalles and Salido Falls in Oregon, and one commission on the connection between the Chesapeake Bay and the Delaware Bay. These were joint commissions of civilians and Army and Navy officers generally. Then for three and a half years I was employed as engineer arbitrator of the boundary survey between Nicaragua and Costa Rica by those two Governments.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you reside during the time you were thus employed by Nicaragua and Costa Rica?

General ALEXANDER. My headquarters were generally at Greytown, Nicaragua.

The CHAIRMAN. And how much of your time did you spend there?

General ALEXANDER. I suppose I spent three-fourths of the time there.

The CHAIRMAN. For how many years?

General ALEXANDER. Three and a half years.

The CHAIRMAN. You had your residence there, then?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have your family with you?

General ALEXANDER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you find the health conditions of Greytown during your residence there?

General ALEXANDER. I found them very good, indeed; never lived in a place that had less malaria.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there much population in Greytown?

General ALEXANDER. No, very small; only about 1,400.

The CHAIRMAN. What years were these?

General ALEXANDER. 1897, 1898, 1899, and part of 1900.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. What do you think of that region of country, including Costa Rica and other parts of Central America that would be accessible commercially to the canal, as a feeder to the canal, the income of it?

General ALEXANDER. I think it ought to be one of the richest tropical countries in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. Capable of sustaining large population?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What would you expect from the health of the people?

General ALEXANDER. There is no trouble about the health anywhere in that country, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. You found it healthy?

General ALEXANDER. I found it so, entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have as good health there as you had at home in South Carolina?

General ALEXANDER. Entirely so; yes, sir.

Senator MITCHELL. That condition as to health applies to both sides of the divide, does it?

General ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there extensive or valuable mineral resources in that region of country?

General ALEXANDER. I do not think anything to amount to a great deal. Gold is worked in several places. That is the only thing that I heard of, and nothing very extraordinary in that, but there are a number of small but profitable gold mines.

The CHAIRMAN. How much timber in the country?

General ALEXANDER. Unlimited timber.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it good timber?

General ALEXANDER. Yes; there is mahogany and cedar, and I forget the names of all the different kinds, but there is unlimited timber.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it in heavy, thick forests or is the timber scattered?

General ALEXANDER. Very thick indeed; one mass of forest over everything.

The CHAIRMAN. Large, tall trees?

General ALEXANDER. Enormous trees.

The CHAIRMAN. How about india rubber?

General ALEXANDER. There was quite a good quantity of india rubber constantly being gathered all the while I was there. Every merchant nearly in town had a few rubber getters who were paid to go into the woods. These rubber getters would go into the woods and be gone a month or two and come back with rubber which they would sell and then go out again. That was going on all the while.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you say it is a country that is likely to be very productive in rubber?

General ALEXANDER. I see no reason why rubber plantations should not be very profitable there. There was some work done while I was there in one or two places on the river above Greytown that were being planted in rubber trees, and I have heard of rubber plantations started near Bluefields. I saw one small rubber plantation over at Jenotepe on the Pacific side.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever visited Panama?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How often and when?

General ALEXANDER. I crossed the Isthmus in 1860, going west, and came back in 1861, and then in 1900 I spent a week at Panama, crossed the Isthmus. I went up to San Juan del Sur after spending a week at Panama.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the city of Panama?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

Senator MITCHELL. What time in 1860 did you cross?

General ALEXANDER. I went out in August, 1860, and came back in May, 1861.

Senator MITCHELL. The reason I asked you is because I crossed in May, 1860.

The CHAIRMAN. In going out you landed at Colon?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And took the railroad?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The railroad was completed through, was it?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And in coming back you landed at Panama, and took the railroad across to Colon?

General ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, during the time you stayed at Panama what was the condition of the health of that town?

General ALEXANDER. It was very bad indeed. There was yellow fever in the town and also what they call Chagres fever.

The CHAIRMAN. What year was that?

General ALEXANDER. 1900; and there was said to be a great deal of sickness among the troops that they had there. I knew nothing about that except what was told me.

I also attract attention to the testimony of Chester Donaldson, American consul for a long time at Managua, Nicaragua, taken before the Senate committee June 7, 1900, found in Senate hearings, part 3, page 994. Mr. Donaldson testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What office are you at present holding?

A. I am United States consul at Managua, Nicaragua.

Q. How long have you been in that office?

A. Since January 12, 1898.

Q. During that period of time have you resided in Managua?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you resided there before that?

A. Yes.

Q. How long?

A. I had resided there about two years before.

Q. In what capacity did you first visit Nicaragua?

A. In connection with the commission of 1895—General Ludlow's commission.

Q. Were you a member of that commission?

A. No; but I was employed by the commission.

Q. In what character?

A. As an engineer.

Q. Are you a civil engineer?

A. Yes.

Q. In what schools have you been educated?

A. Hamilton College is where I got my education—Clinton, N. Y., near Utica.

Q. Did you attend any other engineering schools?

A. I took a short course in Columbia School of Mines.

* * * * * * *

Q. I suppose your travels with the engineering parties you accompanied through the San Juan region have given you an opportunity to be stricken with any diseases of that country?

A. Yes; I have had plenty of opportunities. I have slept in all sorts of places.

Q. Slept in wet clothes?

A. I will not say I slept in wet clothes, because I always carried a bundle wrapped in rubber, so that I could have something dry to wear for the night. I have gone all day in wet clothes, have put on wet clothes in the morning, and have done so for months at a time; but at night I have always had dry pajamas to get into and a dry blanket, which I kept rolled up in a rubber sack.

Q. That was during your engineering work?

A. Yes.

Q. Were any of your party troubled with malaria or chills?

A. Nobody in our party had any sickness at all. We had 10 Americans in the party, besides natives.

Q. Taking Nicaragua from ocean to ocean, would you be willing to say that it is a healthful or an unhealthful country?

A. I should say that the country is perfectly healthful. The only unhealthful places are the cities, and that is owing to their filthy condition.

Q. You have a family of children?

A. I have three children.

Q. And they have been brought up in that country?

A. They have been in better health in that country than when they were in New York. My youngest little girl in this country had a bronchial trouble after she had had the whooping cough in New York at the age of 3, and naturally I felt somewhat anxious about taking her to Nicaragua. But she has come back to New York and is to-day one of the strongest little girls you ever saw—at the age of 8 now.

Q. Taking Nicaragua from ocean to ocean, through and through, you would say, I suppose, that it would be a very valuable country in the hands of people who had any industry and thrift?

A. Yes. By nature it is a rich country and perfectly healthful. There is nothing under the sun they need there but industry. It would make a fine country to live in.

Q. For small farmers, particularly?

A. Yes; you can get a splendid climate there by going up 2,000 feet, where you would not suffer from heat at all. It is only in the low country where you suffer. I have suffered much more in New York from heat than I ever have in Managua. There is nothing the matter with the country; there is nothing the matter with the climate; the whole difficulty lies with the people. They are too easy-going; they take life very easily.

I also, upon the point of the health of the respective routes, quote from the testimony of the Hon. William B. Sorsby, long United States consul at Nicaragua under the present Administration, as follows:

WILLIAM B. SORSBY, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

Senator MORGAN. State your place of residence and the business in which you are now employed.

Mr. SORSBY. My home is in Clinton, Hinds County, Miss. I am at present United States consul at Greytown (San Juan del Norte), Nicaragua.

Senator MORGAN. How long have you been in the consular service?

Mr. SORSBY. I was in the consular service four years under the Harrison Administration, and I have been in the service thirteen months under this Administration. I was four years in Ecuador under the Harrison Administration, and I have been thirteen months in Nicaragua under the present Administration.

Senator MORGAN. Do you speak the Spanish language?

Mr. SORSBY. Yes, sir.

Senator MORGAN. When did your term of service in Nicaragua commence?

Mr. SORSBY. I entered on my duties on the 1st day of January, 1898.

* * * * * * *

Senator MORGAN. How about the health of that region between the lake and the seaboard?

Mr. SORSBY. I can only answer that by referring to the men employed by the Nicaragua Canal Commission.

Senator MORGAN. Have no people settled in that region?

Mr. SORSBY. There are some settlements immediately on the river banks and up the various rivers emptying into the San Juan River.

Senator MORGAN. Leading into, you mean?

Mr. SORSBY. Leading into the San Juan River. I have seen a great many of those people—some foreigners are in there—living on the San Carlos and various other rivers leading into the San Juan River, and the universal expression is that it is healthy.

Senator MORGAN. Is there any yellow fever or Chagres fever in that country?

Mr. SORSBY. There is no yellow fever in any part of Nicaragua.

Senator MORGAN. Is there any chagres fever?

Mr. SORSBY. No, sir; nothing that resembles either yellow or chagres fever on the Atlantic side. There is no yellow fever in any part of Nicaragua, though at Granada and Managua they have malarial fevers. They are quite prevalent during what is known as the dry season up there.

Senator MORGAN. That is on the lake?

Mr. SORSBY. Yes, sir; on the two lakes. It is attributed to the bad sanitary conditions and the water that is used.

Senator MORGAN. If I understand you correctly, the valley of the San Juan River is very sparsely inhabited?

Mr. SORSBY. Yes, sir.

Senator MORGAN. Is the forest heavy?

Mr. SORSBY. The undergrowth is very heavy.

Senator MORGAN. Almost impenetrable?

Mr. SORSBY. Yes, sir.

Senator MORGAN. What is the effect of the rainfall in that part of Nicaragua upon the health and comfort of those living in that region?

Mr. SORSBY. I think it is beneficial to health. It is inconvenient. It has the effect of keeping fresh water in all the lagoons there. The engineers of the Canal Commission tell me that they drank their water out of the lagoons and streams and it was good. In Greytown it serves to freshen the atmosphere, and there is very little sickness during the rainy season.

Fourth. The engineering problems on the Nicaragua route are susceptible of complete and satisfactory solution. In no particular is there any element of doubt remaining. While those on the Panama route are clearly in the experimental region. There is, as to certain difficulties to be overcome on the Panama route nothing in the past history of engineering experience which can be invoked to render the solution of the problems an absolute certainty. These relate mainly to the power to successfully control the waters of the Chagres River, and to the possibility of maintaining a dam at Bohio.

Fifth. The construction of the canal on the Panama route excludes sailing vessels from transisthmian navigation, while the Nicaragua would not, the reason being on account of the calms, or doldrums, extending through many months for long distances on the Pacific side of the Panama route, while good sailing winds at each end of the Nicaragua route are experienced the whole year.

SAILING SHIPS.

To select the Panama route is to eliminate from the instruments of commerce that shall traverse the canal all sailing vessels, while to select the Nicaragua route is to bring into close and acute competition the vessels driven by steam and electricity with those driven by the everlasting winds of heaven. It is demonstrated beyond any question that for many months of each year the calms or doldrums extend out on the Pacific coast a distance of more than 400 miles from Panama, and no sailor can make any progress through these long distances of from 400 to 600 miles, and through which calms ships must necessarily go in order to enter and pass through a canal on the proposed Panama route, except by steam or other motive power than wind.

But the advocates of the Panama route, while compelled to accept these facts, respond in substance and effect, by way of answer, "Oh, the day of the sailer is past," and they point to the fact that no sailing craft pass through the Suez Canal as an argument to support the assertion. As to this point it is only necessary to point out the different conditions attaching to the two routes—that is, the Suez and the Nicaragua routes. The exclusion of sailers from the Suez Canal is occasioned by the constantly variable and conflicting winds and particularly tortuous and narrow channel of the estuary known as the Red Sea. This condition renders it inadvisable, unsafe, and impracticable for sailers to enter the Suez Canal.

But the assertion that the day of the sailer is past is an unwarranted one, and it is to be hoped, in the interest of the world's commerce, the day will never come when sailing vessels on our high seas will be dispensed with. The fact is, over 60 per cent of the marine tonnage of the United States is to-day composed of sailing vessels. According to the latest official reports the total tonnage of the United States at present is 2,095,000 tons, and but 810,000 tons of this tonnage is steam, while 1,285,000 tons is sailing crafts. Some other seafaring nations have a still larger percentage of sailing vessels. Norway and Sweden have a total tonnage of 1,770,000, of which but 726,000 tons, or less than 40 per cent, is steam.

Nor is it true, as is sometimes contended, that the use of sail vessels is on the down grade. This statement is either a misconception or a misrepresentation of existing facts. The very reverse of this is true. Improvements are constantly being made in not only the construction but in the manner of controlling sail vessels. It is true that some of the old square-rigged, two or three mast sailers are going out of use, but in their stead are being placed iron sailers of different build and of greater capacity.

The necessities of the American coastwise traffic are rapidly developing a great fleet of four, five, six, and seven masted schooners of American register. These are rapidly increasing in number. Numerous vessels of this character of from three to five thousand tons burden are being built in the shipyards of this country, notably in those of Maine and Massachusetts. Fifteen were constructed in Maine last year. There is now about completed, I understand, near Boston, a seven-masted steel schooner named Thomas W. Lawson, with a coal-carrying capacity of 8,000 tons. Germany is moving also in this direction, and has but recently added to her merchant marine a sailer of 5,000 tons burden, while France in 1901 built 40 steel sailing ships, with an aggregate tonnage of 90,000 tons—two of these register 2,300 tons each, with a carrying capacity of 5,000 tons each—while, during the same period, no progress whatever was made in steam tonnage in that country, and France is now to-day offering a large bounty for this class of vessels.

A glance at the history of the growth and progress of American marine tonnage, steam and sail, will show a gradual but constant advancement in both. Sixty years ago the whole number of ships entering New York Harbor was 1,843, and only 6 of these were steamers—1,837 sailers. The total tonnage brought in these sailers was 494,493 tons, showing the average carrying capacity of the sailers of those days to be but a fraction over 271 tons. A few vessels, of course, were of larger tonnage, but this was the average.

The selection of the Panama route is to call a halt in the shipbuilding industry of this country in so far as it might otherwise relate to the construction of sailers for transisthmian trade, and at the same time strike down all competition between sailers and steam vessels in use so far as transisthmian commerce is concerned. The whole country, and, in fact, all commercial nations, but especially and particularly the Pacific coast States of our own country, are vitally interested in the question of the construction of an isthmian canal on a route which will make it possible for sailing vessels to enter and compete with steamers in the carrying trade of our own and other countries. The great timber interests of the Pacific coast, a market for which is gradually opening on the Atlantic seaboard and in the South American States, as well as the interior, must as a rule be carried in sailers, as their construction enables them to stow timber of unusual lengths, which is the leading desirable quality of the Pacific coast product. Peculiarity of construction precludes in a great measure the ordinary steamer from carrying this class of products.

Another vital objection to the Panama route which will affect adversely those interested in the two great products, wheat and coal, is this fact: Possibly future development may demonstrate a sufficient supply of bituminous coal on the Pacific coast to meet the demands of that section. At present this is not so, and as the population increases and business develops the quantity required will largely increase. At present the import supply comes largely from Canada and England, chiefly from the latter as ballast, at a low rate of freight, in steamers calling for wheat.

American coal from the Atlantic coast can not now compete with this supply. Our wheat is now shipped to Liverpool mostly by steamers flying the British flag. They reach the Pacific ports mainly in ballast. Sometimes they ballast with English bituminous coal, coke, and pig iron, placing them on the market at a nominal freight charge. On account of the detriment caused by heat and moisture in the calm belts of the Tropics this wheat goes mostly in steamers. These are known as the English tramp steamers and are the all-around carriers of the world—ships that can enter the average ports of the world and pick up traffic anywhere and take it anywhere. They are from two to three thousand tons burden, drawing, as a rule, from 18 to 25 feet of water.

Now, if this wheat traffic should be carried through an isthmian canal by sailers, there can be but little doubt that a very large proportion of the wheat traffic between the Pacific coast ports and Liverpool would be controlled by sailing vessels. And if this sail marine can be introduced as a factor in the proposition, it would surely result in a very large reduction of freight charges to the people of the United States and especially to those of the Pacific coast.

But, aside from the fact that it will be a physical and marine impossibility for sailing vessels to engage in transisthmian trade through a canal located on the Panama route; for the reasons just stated, another insurmountable objection attaches to the traffic of the two important products, wheat and coal. Wheat on either steam or sailing vessels can never survive the terrible heat and doldrums, if compelled to pass through a Panama canal, while there is a constant liability of spontaneous combustion of bituminous coal in passing through the Tropics. Underwriters are now throwing many obstructions in the way of obtaining marine insurance on vessels carrying coal into the Tropics.

The production of coal in the various countries of the world and its distribution among the various people of the world who consume coal is one of the most powerful factors, and becoming more so every day, which enters into the world's commerce. Indeed this product in different sections of our own country and its exportation from the coal-producing regions of our own country to those regions of our own country where the consumption is largely in excess of the production is one of the most important elements of our domestic commerce.

The United States since 1899 has taken the lead among the nations in the production of coal, and since 1891 in the consumption of coal. Until 1899 Great Britain led in the production of coal, but in that year the United States exceeded Great Britain in coal production to the extent of 6,458,783 tons, while in 1900 the United States produced 50,000,000 tons more than it did two years before and led Great Britain to the extent of about 15,000,000 tons. Since 1870 the world has increased its output of coal 283 per cent; Great Britain 120 per cent, and the United States 750 per cent. Thirty-four years ago Great Britain produced more than 50 per cent of the whole annual output of the world and the United States but 14.35 per cent; while two years ago Great Britain produced but 30 per cent, while the output of the United States was 32 per cent of the total.

In 1900 the total output of coal in the world was 844,680,413 tons, while of this the United States produced 269,881,827 tons, or within a fraction of one-third of the total output of the world. In 1868 the United States consumed but 100,272,000 tons, or about 1.75 tons per capita; while in 1899, thirty-one years later, we consumed 226,883,000 tons, or 2.98 tons per capita. This per capita exceeds that of any nation except Great Britain, where the per capita consumption in 1897 was 3.87 tons. The fact that the United States is forging ahead in both production and consumption, and the further fact that Great Britain, Germany, and Belgium now produce about 60,000,000 tons annually more than those countries consume, and the further fact that Russia, Sweden, France, Italy, Austria-Hungary, and Spain consume about 20,000,000 tons more than they produce, leaving a balance of about 40,000,000 tons to be exported annually from Europe, present problems of immense importance in connection with the transportation and commerce of the world.

While the production of coal in the Pacific Coast States may not, and in all probability will not, ever meet the demands for that article on that coast, especially when a demand for export coal may for many years continue in the Philippines, in Hawaii, and in China, there is no good reason why the amount necessary to meet this demand should come from Canada or from Great Britain, or Germany or Belgium, or any other place except from the prolific coal regions of our own country. We should and will in a very short time in this matter of coal be able not only to meet our own demands in every section of the country, but we will be able to supply the demands of Sweden, France, Italy, Austria-Hungary, and Spain; in fact, we are already becoming a large coal-exporting country. But a few years ago there was no export of coal from the United States, but now the American anthracite coal is being shipped to France, Germany, and Belgium, while bituminous coal is being shipped from the United States to Italy and other countries.

The Russian Government has been negotiating but recently for a large amount of American coal for use in the Russian navy. During the year 1900 American coal was shipped to 37 foreign ports, including Cape Town, Algiers, Japan, Manila, Australia, Italy, Halifax, and even to Gibraltar for use in the British navy, and also the ports of the east and west coasts of South and Central America. Korea, Victoria, Queensland, New Zealand, South Australia, and Tasmania all import much more coal than they export.

But this is balanced by New South Wales, which exports enough to balance these imports. But it must not be forgotten that the Philippine Islands have now, and perhaps will have for many years, a large demand for coal, although it is probable, from what has been learned, that valuable coal mines will later on be developed in those islands. The United States should meet this demand, and would with the completion of the Nicaragua Canal. A large per cent of the Philippines is supplied by Great Britain, Japan, Australia, and the United States, but there is more English and Welsh coal shipped annually to the Philippines than there is Japanese and Australian, and again there is more Japanese and Australian imported into the Philippines than there is American coal.

Are not, then, the production and consumption of coal tremendous factors in the world's commerce? Does it require any prescience or superior knowledge to determine as to the incomparable importance to the United States in this connection with this one item of the world's commerce—of the speedy construction of the Nicaragua canal? And to no section of our common country will the benefits be so incalculable as to the Pacific coast States. Our immense products of wheat, lumber, fish, fruits, wool, and grains, beyond our demands for home consumption, will find a safe and speedy market, not only along the Eastern coast of the United States, but in Europe, South and Central America, and elsewhere.

The demand for lumber in all its varieties is gradually and rapidly increasing all along the eastern portions of the United States, and also in South America. Their forests are being rapidly exhausted. But turning to the Pacific States, we find forests almost inexhaustible of the finest timber that ever grew. In the States of Oregon and Washington alone there is to-day standing, according to the latest statistical reports, more than 430,000,000,000 feet of magnificent timber. The major portion of this timber in Oregon and nine-tenths of it in Washington, is located west of the Cascade Mountains and in close proximity to the shipping ports of the Pacific Ocean. Sixty per cent or more of this timber west of the Cascade Range is red or yellow fir. For single-stick topmasts or square-rigged vessels, and the masts fore and aft, no timber in the world equals this fir, or, as it is sometimes called, "Oregon pine."

In Oregon and Washington clear, straight-grained decking, free from sap, can be had in any desired length. This timber is now largely used for sheathing bottoms of steel ships. The supply in Eastern States for long lengths and large sections in dimension timber is rapidly decreasing, and the demand at increased prices for this product from the far West is rapidly increasing. Clear cedar for building small boats is almost exhausted in the East, and cypress and white pine are being substituted. The Oregon and Washington cedar and fir have straight, clear lumber of any width and length desired. This production, with the Nicaragua Canal completed, can be brought in sailing vessels to our Eastern ports at reasonable rates, where it would soon take the place of white pine and cypress and be used in a great variety of structures.

But not only so. On the coast alone, in the State of California, in the northern part of that State, there is, according to statistical experts, standing to-day more than 75,000,000,000 feet of redwood. That this wood, so desirable, beautiful, and easily manufactured, would, with the completion of the Nicaragua Canal, soon take the place of Eastern pine and other woods goes without saying. The construction of this canal will open to market the 500,000,000,000 feet of fir, cedar, redwood, and also an almost incalculable amount of hemlock, spruce, maple, larch, and myrtle, and the products manufactured therefrom, and all of which are easily accessible to the seaports of the Pacific Ocean. I tell my distinguished friend from Ohio that not one sailing vessel can ever pass through the Panama Canal, if one should be built.

Mr. BURROWS. Why not?

Mr. MITCHELL. If my friend the genial Senator from Michigan had been here and listened to my speech, he would have known why.

Mr. BURROWS. I admit that that is true, but I want to know why not.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can not go back and repeat at length, but I will tell the Senator from Michigan, briefly, why not. There are a good many reasons, but I will indicate some of the more important of them. It is settled beyond all controversy by expert testimony taken before our committee and by the history of the world that from four to six hundred miles out into the Pacific Ocean from Panama there are what are called doldrums or calms which are continuous for months and months at a time, through which no sailing vessel can go unless moved by either electricity or steam, or some other power besides the wind of heaven. That is one reason. Another reason is because, as between the two routes, the Nicaragua route for a sailing vessel is fifteen days shorter and for steam vessels it is 600 miles shorter. Those are two of the reasons.

Mr. HANNA. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HANNA. May I ask the Senator from what objective point he makes those figures?

Mr. MITCHELL. I make it from San Francisco or Portland, Oreg., to various ports on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. HANNA. I will answer that to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will come to that a little later on more specifically. I will say that the difference in distance in favor of the Nicaragua route is from 377 miles to 579 miles between San Francisco and ports on the Atlantic coast; that is, New York and New Orleans, respectively.

Mr. HANNA. The Senator mentioned fifteen days. Where did he get that figure?

Mr. MITCHELL. It would take sailing vessels from fifteen to forty days longer to go by the Panama route than by the Nicaragua route, if sailing vessels could go by that route at all. That is the testimony of some of the experts in this case. It is possible by waiting and catching on occasional breeze a sailor may get through from fifteen to forty days.

Sixth. Because of the commercial advantages of the Nicaragua route over those of the Panama route because of the prospective local development in the production of an infinite variety of valuable products indigenous to that country, such as coffee, sugar, rice, corn, rubber, bananas, indigo, cocoa, vegetables of all kinds, hard woods, mahogany, cedar—red and white—several varieties, besides cattle. In this respect the prospect for development is wonderful. One witness, Mr. Lyman E. Cooley, the engineer and constructor of the great Chicago drainage canal, in his testimony taken before the Senate Committee, compared Nicaragua, Honduras, and Costa Rica, an area of fifty to sixty thousand miles tributary to the Nicaragua Valley, to the island of Java, which, with an area of but 47,000 square miles, supplies a population of 24,000,000 people. Along the Panama route there could be no hope for any local development in trade or commerce to amount to anything.

Seventh. The military and naval advantages to the United States are very largely in favor of the Nicaragua route.

Eighth. If we cast our lot with the people of Colombia on the Panama route, we take up our abode with a revolutionary, hostile, and unfriendly people. More than 30,000 of these people are already occupying the canal belt at Panama, and they must be dealt with; they must be expelled; while within the limits of the canal concession on the Nicaragua route there is not to exceed 2,500 people, and they are not an objectional population.

Ninth. The opportunity afforded for the cleaning of ships' bottoms of barnacles and other accretions by going 102 miles through fresh water, averaging 200 feet in depth, of Lake Nicaragua is a great advantage in favor of the Nicaragua route and one not to be overlooked. On the Panama route the distance of fresh water navigation is but 12 miles, in water not 40 feet in depth.

Tenth. On the Nicaragua route we encounter no trouble in securing the necessary concessions from Nicaragua and Costa Rica for our great purpose of constructing, maintaining, and controlling an isthmian canal through those countries, hampered by no unreasonable conditions or restrictions; while with Colombia the very reverse of all this is true. The protocol of the proposed treaty, presented to the Senate for its consideration, is in many respects so unjust and humiliating in its terms and hedged about by so many unreasonable and unjust restrictions that it would seem quite impossible that any American, much less any American Senator, would think for a moment of accepting it.

Eleventh. The selection of the Panama route carries with it the necessity of paying the New Panama Canal Company $40,000,000, and by which we become involved in all the conflicting claims of the share and bond holders of the old Panama Canal Company, as well as of the New Panama Canal Company, and we become the heir and residuary legatee of controversies from which we are not likely to become wholly extricated in the next century. And this is true, even on the assumption "that a satisfactory title to said property can be obtained," and in this connection it might be proper to inquire just what we are to understand by a "satisfactory title." This is the language used in the Spooner amendment, and I take it the distinguished Senator means that the title must be satisfactory to the President of the United States. The President would very naturally, as would most men, regard a legal title as a "satisfactory title," and in most cases a legal title ought to be very satisfactory; but there are exceptions, and this is one of the exceptions, and a most important one.

For, while the New Panama Canal Company may possibly, in the judgment of eminent lawyers, be able to make a good legal title to the property in question, this is a case where, unquestionably, innumerable claims based on moral and equitable grounds may, and in all probability will, arise if the United States becomes the beneficiary of that property, and these are claims against which no legal title will indemnify us. And I go further—even conceding, for the sake of argument, that there may be no such equitable claims existing as could be rightfully enforced in a court of justice—there is nothing to prevent these French stockholders and bondholders from coming to the Congress of the United States with such an appeal as to give them a standing before Congress, and before the committees of Congress, to harass and annoy us for perhaps a century.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does the Senator discuss further the nature of the claims that could be asserted against the United States if we purchase this property and obtain satisfactory title?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then I will not interrupt the Senator further. I think it is a very important question, and I should like the Senator to show to us clearly and comprehensively the grounds upon which such claims could be enforced against the United States, either morally or in a court of equity.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will endeavor, before I conclude, to show that very thing. That is to say, that there will be strong reasons to justify the assertion of innumerable claims based upon the ground that the United States has become the beneficiary of a property their money created, and of which property they have been deprived by questionable judicial and other means, although claimants might not be able to enforce them.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I inquire simply for information.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is one of the things I started out to present to the Senate. I shall endeavor to do it before I conclude.

Twelfth. The Nicaragua route is preferable for the reason that the sea approaches to Greytown, on the Atlantic, and to Brito, on the Pacific, on the Nicaragua route are infinitely more preferable, being freer from both calms and storms, than are the approaches to Colon, on the Atlantic, and Panama, on the Pacific, on the Panama route. The approach to Colon, as all agree, is liable to frequent and destructive storms, while the approach to Panama for a long distance is for many months of each year an almost perpetual calm.

Thirteenth. The Nicaragua route is preferable for the reason that, as the strength of a chain is only equal to that of its weakest link, so it is true, if on either or both of these routes there is any engineering obstacle to overcome, then the feasibility of the whole route must depend wholly upon the power of the engineer to overcome the particular obstruction; otherwise the whole scheme is a failure, however feasible all other portions of the route may be. On each of these routes a great dam must be constructed. This is an essential on each route, and the entire safety, practicability, and efficiency of the canal in each case depends on the dam. This is agreed to by all engineers who have examined the two routes. In the case of Panama there is but a single place where the necessary dam can be constructed, if it can be constructed at all—this is at Bohio, on the Chagres River—while on the Nicaragua route there are several places where a dam might be constructed. But the place selected by the Commission is at Conchuda, a point some 3 miles above the mouth of the San Carlos River. In this case—Conchuda, on the Nicaragua route—the dam must be 28 feet below sea level at site of dam, where the surface of the river is about 50 feet above, making 78 feet under water. The construction of this dam involves no unusual or extraordinary engineering feat. It would involve the necessity of what is known as the pneumatic process. But pneumatic processes have frequently been used to a depth of 100 feet, and in one instance at least—but I believe this is the only one in this country—to the depth of 110 feet. This was at the east abutment of the St. Louis bridge. There is therefore no great difficulty from an engineering standpoint, or, in fact, from any other, in constructing a dam at Conchuda, on the Nicaragua route.

But the case is wholly different in reference to the Bohio dam on the Panama route. There is presented an engineering problem the like of which has never yet been solved by human science or human effort. The Isthmian Commission reports that in order to get a rock foundation, which is an absolute necessity for a dam at this point, they must go 128 feet below sea level. This involves the sinking of caissons or pneumatic tubes 18 feet deeper than has ever been done before. Not only so, the French engineers have been proceeding upon the idea of erecting this dam on a clay foundation. The Panama engineers, after boring down 93 feet, reached a stratum of hard clay some 35 feet thick, and upon this clay stratum they propose to erect an earthen dam. The American commissioners, however, and the American engineers regard this as wholly unsafe, and insist this 35-foot stratum of clay must be penetrated and the caissons placed on solid rock.

The construction and maintenance of this dam at this immense depth and on a torrential stream which in 1879, according to the report of the Panama Railroad Company, raised 43 feet in twenty-four hours is an engineering experiment. There is nothing in the history of the world, as I have said, in all the range of engineering experiment to which we can point as a star to guide us to success in constructing a dam of that kind; and as there is only one place for this dam on the whole Panama route, should it fail the whole structure is a failure. While there is nothing experimental in the construction and maintenance of a dam at Conchuda, on the Nicaragua route, should this dam at Conchuda give way there are several other places where the dam could be constructed that would meet the necessities of the case.

Why, therefore, I inquire, should the United States deal in engineering experiments which may or may not prove successful in entering upon the work of the construction of an isthmian canal?

Rear-Admiral Walker, president of the Isthmian Canal Commission, shows conclusively by his testimony that the construction and maintenance of the Bohio dam is in the experimental region, and that there is no certainty that it can be constructed and maintained. I point to the testimony, and I contrast and compare the testimony with the final report in favor of buying out the old concern from the Paris people and attempting to build a canal where in all probability it can neither be built nor maintained if built. The following is from his testimony taken before the Interoceanic Canal Committee at their recent hearings:

Senator HARRIS. The fact is, with regard to the Bohio dam, that the future of that is just as much an unknown quantity as the future of the dam at Conchuda?

Admiral WALKER. I should say it was more of an uncertain feature. It is a greater work and a more difficult work to build. The Conchuda dam I look upon as practically settled.

Senator HARRIS. So that we know no more about the possibilities and contingencies at Bohio than we do at Conchuda; in fact, less.

Admiral WALKER. We know less about the contingencies at Bohio, but that is the only point in the whole line about which we are at all uncertain.

"About which we are at all uncertain."

If they are uncertain, then they are not certain. That is a logical conclusion if there is not very much sense in the statement. The distinguished Senator from Ohio says we appoint commissions to tell us what to do and to make recommendations. Here the president of this Commission, Rear-Admiral Walker, in his testimony, given since he made the recommendation in favor of the Panama route, testifies that he, as a commissioner, as a distinguished naval engineer, is uncertain whether or not a dam can be built at Bohio.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that in the same evidence Admiral Walker stated that the Bohio dam was the vital point in the whole undertaking.

Mr. MITCHELL. Oh, certainly, as a matter of course. The fact is, the dam in each case is the vital point in the plan.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator if a similar question was propounded to Mr. Morison, for instance, who is acknowledged to be one of the greatest engineers in the world.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know whether that precise question was or was not propounded to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. In other words, have the other engineers on the Commission admitted that there is much uncertainty about the possibility of constructing this dam?

Mr. MITCHELL. I think there is a vein of uncertainty in regard to the absolute success of the dam at Bohio running through all the testimony of the engineers and the experts who have been examined, while three of the Commissioners, Rear-Admiral Walker, Commissioner Morrison, and Commissioner Haupt, express themselves to the effect that the success of the problem is in much doubt.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? It seems to me somewhat incredible that if there is a serious question in the mind of this great Commission it should have recommended this route in preference to the other.

Mr. MITCHELL. It seems so to me, too.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will permit me, in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire I will say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say that Mr. Morison, one of the ablest engineer members of the board, recommends an entirely different plan and considers it far better, being without any element of uncertainty. Not only that, but Professor Haupt, one of the best engineer members of the Commission, differs with the rest of the Commission in toto in regard to this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. While that is true of Mr. Morison, it is equally true that he signed the report in favor of the Panama route. I am not quite sure that Professor Haupt is not about right—that there is a better route than either of these two. I think that may develop later on.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is possible. I will proceed to read from the testimony:

Referring to the Bohio dam—

Senator HARRIS. But that is the vital point.

Admiral WALKER. That is the vital point. Yes, it is vital to the canal, because the safety of the canal depends on the integrity of the dam in both cases.

Senator HARRIS. And the control of the river?

Admiral WALKER. Yes.

So, although the president of the Commission in his final report recommends that the canal be built at Panama, contradictory to three other reports that he signed, we have him telling us that he is in doubt about a dam which he says, and which all agree, must be successfully constructed and maintained at Bohio in order to make the canal a success.

Fourteenth. I favor the Nicaragua route because it can be completed at an earlier date than can the Panama route. The maximum excavation at any one point on the Nicaragua route is, according to the testimony of the engineers taken before your committee, but 18,000,000 yards as compared with 43,000,000 yards at the Culebra cut on the Panama route. The New Panama Canal Company has been excavating there at the average rate in the last five years of 1,000,000 yards a year. At that rate it will require forty-three years to complete the cut. And although the Commission figures on the ability, with sufficent force, to remove 5,000,000 yards a year, it is a question of considerable doubt, inasmuch as the material must all be taken out at the ends of the cut, whether a sufficient force can be employed with advantage to remove that amount, or anything like that amount, in a year. When Engineer Lewis M. Haupt, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, was before the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals in March last he testified upon this point as follows—I quote from the testimony:

Senator MITCHELL. Do you know the extent and force of machinery employed by the canal company?

Mr. HAUPT. Yes; they had when we were there about 3,000 men employed, but I can not give you offhand the number of cars and engines, nor the miles of track, etc., but you have seen the illustrations of the work in their reports, showing how they have taken out the material in benches, and they have distributed it on the spoil banks.

Senator MITCHELL. From your knowledge of the whole situation, how much increase, if any, in the operating force could be made there?

Mr. HAUPT. There would have to be a capacity of five times the present force and plant at least in order to do the work of taking out that cut in eight years.

Senator. MITCHELL. I understand that; but how much force could be increased there and worked to advantage?

Mr. HAUPT. The Commission has expressed itself in this wise on that point: That the study of that question has not been as yet carefully worked out, but it would require to be thoroughly systematized before any work should be let on that.

Senator HARRIS. That material all had to be taken out of the ends of the cut; there is no other way of reaching the spoil banks.

Mr. HAUPT. They can work from both ends and on both sides. By working in benches you can put a large force in there, just as you would drive a tunnel, by first driving the heading, then the bench on one side, followed by that on the other, then the bottoming, and finally the trimming and lining. You could distribute your force so as not to interfere seriously with each other.

Senator HARRIS. There is a limit, of course, to the number of men that can be worked.

Mr. HAUPT. You can only attack it in a certain number of points. The fact that it is so concentrated is an objection and a difficulty which has weight in giving the preference to the Nicaragua route, where there is a larger volume, but more generally distributed. The maximum excavation at any point in the Nicaragua route is 18,000,000 yards, as compared with 43,000,000 yards in the Culebra cut.

Senator HANNA. In your judgment, can that cut be completed in eight years?

Mr. HAUPT. I think it would be a difficult thing to do it. It would require complete organization and exemption from epidemics and various things of that kind, which are contingencies, and on which no man can make definite predictions, as no one can foresee them.

Senator HARRIS. In working in benches one above the other—I am doing a work on a much smaller scale with the same process—a slip or a slide in one of the benches practically retards the work on that whole slope.

Mr. HAUPT. Certainly; it might, if serious, everything below that and perhaps above.

Senator HARRIS. That is one of the serious results of an accident at any point.

Mr. HAUPT. The average haul also is much longer in this case than it would be in the other, and that at a great disadvantage. Everything must be moved longitudinally from the Culebra cut out to the dumping grounds at the ends; whereas on the divide cut at Nicaragua it is simply a lateral movement, just as it was in the Chicago drainage canal. It is only necessary to put in a force and conveyors and run the material off on the berms and dump it, making the average haul very much less in that case than in this, and that would reduce the cost of movement and the efficiency of the working plant.

Senator HARRIS. The most serious cuts to be encountered, in fact the only ones of very considerable magnitude, on the Nicaragua line are east of the lake at the Tamborcito ridge.

Mr. HAUPT. Yes, sir.

Senator HARRIS. That is a rock cut of very considerable depth, but only 3,000 feet from end to end.

Mr. HAUPT. The Tamborcito cut is a very narrow one, running up to over 200 feet in height, and, as you say, it is 3,000 feet at the base and largely rock, which would be used for riprap or paving, for protecting the canal, and that is the deepest cut of any on the line.

Mr. HANNA. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HANNA. If I remember the Senator's statement it was that Mr. Haupt spoke about information that he had got when he was there. Was he there?

Mr. MITCHELL. At this particular place?

Mr. HANNA. Yes; on the Panama route.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not now able to say, but I believe he was.

Mr. HANNA. Am I correct in quoting the Senator from Oregon as saying that Professor Haupt reported that when he was there he saw certain things?

Mr. MITCHELL. I simply stated what he testified to before the committee.

Mr. HANNA. But the Senator used the words "when we were there."

Mr. MITCHELL. Was I then reading from his testimony?

Mr. HANNA. It was where you commenced.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will repeat what I said before I commenced reading his testimony and then I will re-read his testimony. What I said was this:

When Engineer Lewis M. Haupt, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, was before the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals in March last, he testified upon this point as follows—I quote from the testimony:

Mr. HANNA. Go on.

Mr. MITCHELL. With the testimony?

Mr. HANNA. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now I quote the testimony:

Senator MITCHELL. Do you know the extent and force of machinery employed by the canal company?

Mr. HAUPT. Yes; they had when we were there about 3,000 men employed.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. Haupt was not there at all.

Mr. HARRIS. He has been at Panama.

Mr. HANNA. He has been across the railroad at Panama. He did not go out with the Commission on the investigation or examination of either the Panama or the Nicaraguan route during the exercise of his commission. He so testified before the committee. He said he never had been on the line of the Panama route.

Mr. MITCHELL. Unless my stenographer has made a mistake in copying the testimony, he stated in his testimony that he was there.

Mr. HANNA. I will answer that to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will look it up. It is possible, I will state to the Senator from Ohio, that my stenographer has made a mistake in copying the testimony. I will look it up carefully. Of course, I do not wish to misrepresent the fact.

Mr. HANNA. Oh, no; I merely wanted to correct the Senator, because Mr. Haupt was not there.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the way it is quoted here—that he was there—but we will see later. I have sent for the official testimony.

Fifteenth. Another very strong reason why the Senate should select the Nicaragua route is because it is perfectly apparent that to fail to do so and to adopt an amendment to the House bill, either adopting the Panama route or leaving it to the President to select either route, will create an unnecessary issue between the two Houses of Congress, which will at least cause unnecessary delay, and in all probability will result in defeating all legislation on the subject in this Congress.

The House of Representatives, direct from the people, has in the present and preceding Congress, by a practically unanimous vote, selected the Nicaragua route. This has been done after a most careful and thorough investigation by one of the leading committees, and after thorough discussion. Congress has all the evidence before it bearing upon the question necessary to a determination of the question as to which is the better route, and is better able, I submit, to make an intelligent selection, than either the President of the United States, or the President and his whole Cabinet combined, or any other person or tribunal or jurisdiction whatever. The Senate is competent, as is the Congress, to make the selection. It is its duty to make such selection, and to shirk such duty, whatever may be the motive or the pretense, however patriotic, honest and sincere the purpose—and honesty and sincerity of purpose must be accorded to every Senator—the effect of such action, I respectfully submit, will not tend to an early construction of an isthmian canal, but, on the contrary, will be sure to result in delay, and in all probability will defeat the construction of the same.

Sixteenth. But an insurmountable objection to the selection of the Panama route rests in the fact, in my judgment, and in the judgment of a majority of the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals, that it is, as described by the testimony taken before your committee, absolutely impossible for the New Panama Canal Company, either with or without the consent of the Republic of Colombia, or either with or without the consent of the Old Panama Canal Company, or either with or without the consent of the French Government, or either with or without the consent of the New Panama Canal Company, to vest a title in the United States to the Panama property that will not be eternally and forever clouded by an infinitude of claims and charges, arising, if not on strictly legal grounds, upon moral and equitable grounds, upon the part of the share and bond holders, both of the Old and the New Panama Canal Company, to say nothing of the outstanding shares in the hands of numerous persons of about 1,100 shares in the Panama Railroad Company.

And it appears from the testimony of Charles Colne, late general agent and secretary of the American committee, taken before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals on February 17 last, that there are in France about 800,000 subscribers to the stock and bonds of the Old and New Panama Canal companies, and all of whom would have obligations of a greater or lesser amount in the event of the construction of the canal by the New Panama Canal Company, and all of whom, it is believed by your committee, would have moral and equitable claims against the United States in the event we should become the beneficiary of the property of the New Panama Canal Company by purchase of the same from that company. In support of this statement I quote from the testimony of Mr. Charles Colne, above referred to, which will be found on page 216 of the Hearings before the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals, part 1:

Senator HAWLEY. About how many claimants are there in France? How many people have stock or obligations of any kind that have been made as claims against this company in case it goes on and builds a canal?

Mr. COLNE. About 800,000 subscribers.

Senator HAWLEY. About 800,000 people?

Mr. COLNE. Yes.

Seventeenth. Another formidable objection to the selection of the Panama route arises from the fact that a part of the property owned by the New Panama Canal Company is 68,900 shares of the 70,000 shares of the Panama Railroad Company. These shares in the Panama Railroad Company are a part of the property of the New Panama Canal Company, for which we are called upon to pay the New Panama Canal Company $40,000,000. This Panama Railroad Company is a private corporation, organized under a special charter granted by the legislature of the State of New York many years ago. The New Panama Canal Company is not the owner of the Panama Railroad or any part of its steamships or other property. It has no power to transfer or sell this property to the United States. This property is under the management and control of the Panama Railroad Company, having its place of business, its offices, and its officers in the city of New York.

The United States, moreover, has no authority or power, as I insist, to hold stock in this corporation. Certainly the New Panama Canal Company has no power to sell, or in any way dispose of or control any of the property of this railroad company, outside of such control as it might exercise by reason of being a stockholder in the company controlling a majority of the stock. Certainly as to the 1,100 shares of stock—which it is admitted by all hands it does not own—it has no control whatever. The construction of the proposed canal on the Panama route, moreover, involves the necessity of a change in location, a virtual destruction, of a portion of the present Panama Railroad—this for quite a distance, as the route of the canal lies on the very track of the present railroad.

Will any lawyer claim for a moment that this can be done by the United States on the holding simply of a majority of the shares of the stock in the railroad company against the protests of the outstanding shareholders? Does any lawyer doubt the power of the holders of the 1,100 shares of stock in the Panama Railroad Company to prevent the United States—not directly, I admit, but indirectly—from tearing up the track of the railroad by obtaining an injunction against the men engaged in such spoliation of their property? Will the Congress of the United States assume such responsibilities as must thus necessarily come by reason of any attempt to ignore the rights of the minority shareholders in this railroad company?

Mr. President, I have just been handed an official copy of the testimony of Prof. Lewis M. Haupt, in reference to which we had a friendly contention a few moments ago. I will read from the official report. I observe that this is not the part of the testimony I desired to quote, but as it is part of the testimony of Professor Haupt I will read it:

The CHAIRMAN. Before you go ahead, Professor, I want to call your attention to a former statement that you made before this committee, on page 107 of a former report, for your own information.

Mr. HAUPT. In looking at the statement on page 107, I find it refers especially to the difficulties of construction of a dam at Bohio. That is one of the engineering details of the project, and with the consent of the committee I think it would be better to have me take up the project from a broader standpoint and then to take up the engineering details subsequently.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursue your own course as to that.

Senator HARRIS. Before you begin that, I would like to have you indicate that you were on the first Nicaragua Canal Commission and then afterwards a member of what is called the Isthmian Canal; that you served on both of those commissions.

Mr. HAUPT. Yes; answering the question of Senator HARRIS as to my qualifications, I would say that I have served on both of those commissions and have been over both of the routes critically, have assisted in the preparation of estimates and reports, and feel that I am reasonably competent to give an opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. By both routes do you mean both the Nicaragua and the Panama routes?

Mr. HAUPT. Yes. As the question before this committee is largely one of the selection of two routes, I beg leave to say that while conceding to the wishes of the majority and signing a report in order to make it unanimous, and so, if possible, to secure legislation at this session, I still feel and did then that there were certain economic, physical, engineering, sanitary, and commercial advantages inherent to the Nicaragua route which gave it a decided preference over the Panama route.

That is the testimony of one of the Commissioners, who signed the report under protest for the sake of having unanimity and in the hope of getting a canal built at some place somewhere. Here he states in the most unqualified terms, under oath, that when he signed that report he felt and still feels that there are certain economic, physical, engineering, sanitary, and commercial advantages inherent to the Nicaragua route. He says further:

In this, of course, I do not consider the cost of the concessions nor especially the cost of constructing the canal, but I think the others are of so preponderating weight as to overbalance any differences in the latter two items.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator give the page from which he is reading?

Mr. MITCHELL. Page 518. Professor Haupt continues:

The economic advantage is, a priori, the most important factor in the operation and utility of an interoceanic waterway, and that is briefly summed up in the report of the Commission by the statement that the Nicaragua Canal possesses an advantage between home ports of one day for all northbound commerce—that is, whether it be of European or American origin, or whether it has its destination in the Orient or North Pacific ports—and for all Gulf ports it would save about two days.

I have made an estimate of that saving based upon the average cost of moving vessels of about 3,000 tons capacity, which I have figured at about $250 a day. Some of these vessels have cost as high as $1,000 a day to operate and maintain, and some of them as low as $100 a day, but taking it at that average and estimating on a basis of 10,000,000 tons, of which, say, 75 per cent is north bound, the economy on that basis would amount to about $650,000 a year on steam alone. But as a large percentage would be carried by sail if this route be opened, the economy would probably be 50 per cent more, or about $1,000,000.

Senator KITTREDGE. Where did you obtain the tonnage?

Mr. HAUPT. The 10,000,000 tons?

Senator KITTREDGE. Yes.

Mr. HAUPT. That is approximately the amount of tonnage which would be available at the time of the opening of the canal.

Senator KITTREDGE. From what source did you secure that?

Mr. HAUPT. That is taken from a digest which I have made of all the estimates of tonnage from the time this project was actively discussed by the commercial world.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you allow me to ask right there whether the subcommittee to which you were assigned had in charge the subject of the economic value or advantages of the canal?

Mr. HAUPT. Yes; it had.

The CHAIRMAN. You made a study of it?

Mr. HAUPT. I was a member of that committee and have been studying and working on that subject for some three years past. This statement which I have prepared is rather a long one to enter upon the minutes, but I have here a compilation of all estimates accessible to me as to the amount of probable tonnage available, ranging from Mr. Nimmo's estimates of only 300,000 registered tons up to a possible maximum tonnage in the year 1899 of 15,750,000 tons.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MITCHELL. In one moment. I have just now received the official copy of the testimony which I alluded to a while ago, and I will read from the official record:

Senator MITCHELL. Do you know the extent and force of machinery employed by the canal company?

Mr. HAUPT. Yes; they had when we were there about 3,000 men employed.

That is the testimony correctly copied by the stenographer. Now, I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HANNA. I simply want to reiterate the statement I made. Professor Haupt never went over the route of the Panama Canal in connection with the Isthmian Canal Commission. On a former survey of the Nicaragua route he went over the Panama route in a cursory way. I have produced that testimony. He says that he never went over the Panama route while a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and what he detailed there was simply information that he had gathered from whatever statistics he obtained from the other engineers. I know nothing about his mental reservation when he signed the report.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is quite immaterial, I should imagine, whether he was there at one particular time or another. He was there, as he states in his testimony, twice, and he was over both routes. Just when he was there of course I do not know, and it is not material. He states that he made all the examination necessary in order to enable him to come to a conclusion.

THE EARTHQUAKE ARGUMENT.

But the opponents to an isthmian canal, especially those opposed to the Nicaragua route and in favor of investing $40,000,000 in the Panama fraud, ever on the lookout for new arguments to sustain their position, imagine Providence has furnished them with a new and unanswerable argument in the terrible catastrophe that has so recently come to the people of Martinique by reason of the eruption of Mount Pelee, and this is seized upon with vigor and evident satisfaction as an argument against the construction of the canal on the Nicaragua route.

But what is the conclusive answer to all this? It is found in the well-established facts, first, that all the history of the past fails to furnish any evidence to justify the conclusion that the possibility of destruction from earthquakes is a factor of any importance whatever in opposition to the construction of the canal on either of the two routes; and, second, that past history shows a much larger percentage—a percentage of about 100 per cent greater—of danger from earthquakes on the Panama route than on the Nicaragua route. In support of this assertion there is ample evidence of different kinds. But that which ought to be conclusive is found in the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, submitted to the President November 16, 1901, in which it is asserted there have in the past been double the number of earthquakes in the Panama than in the Nicaragua region. I bring to the attention of the Senate the following extract from that report:

The doctrine that volcanoes are safety valves which diminish the violence of earthquakes in their vicinity is accepted by such writers as Baron von Humboldt, Sir Charles Lyell, Prof. Charles Daubeny, and J. Le Conte. In general terms, then, the region of volcanoes is the region of earthquakes, but the immediate vicinity of the volcanoes is not necessarily the most dangerous part of the region. * * * No portion of it is exempt from earthquakes. The record of those which have occurred is meager, being, as a rule, confined to those severe enough to inflict damage upon buildings or otherwise attract general attention. * * * The record for points upon the line of the Nicaragua Canal shows fourteen earthquakes.

Two of these were felt at Greytown, which has been supposed by some writers to be exempt. The only one which is reported to have caused serious damage was that of 1844. Rivas was almost destroyed, and great damage was done at Greytown. Rivas is 4 miles from the canal. * * * For Panama the records show 28 earthquakes. * * * The only one that could be called destructive was that of 1621, which destroyed nearly all of the houses of Panama. The next most severe was that of September 7, 1882. During this earthquake a part of the front of the cathedral in Panama was thrown down, * * * the railroad had its track and roadbed in places thrown out of line, and the masonry of three or four bridges and culverts was damaged.

It is evident this list is not complete enough to justify a comparison between the Nicaragua and Panama routes as to either the number of earthquakes or their severity. They are on precisely the same footing historically and geographically. * * * With the exception of the injury to Panama in 1621 and Rivas in 1844, the worst that has ever happened at the Isthmus on either line was to throw down or crack a few walls, and even in those cases it is to be remembered that comparatively few of the houses were substantially built. * * * It is possible and even probable that the more accurately fitting portions of the canal, such as lock gates, may at times be distorted by earthquakes, and some inconvenience may result therefrom.

That contingency may be classed with the accidental collision of ships with the gates, and is provided for in the same way, by duplicate gates. It is possible, also, that a fissure might open which would drain the canal, and if it remained open might destroy it. This possibility should not be erected by the fancy into a threatening danger. If a timorous imagination is to be the guide, no great work can be undertaken anywhere. This risk may be classed with that of a great conflagration in a city, like that of Chicago in 1871 and of Boston in 1872.

It is the opinion of the Commission that such danger as exists from earthquakes is essentially the same for both the Nicaragua and Panama routes, and that in neither case is it sufficient to prevent the construction of the canal.

In this connection I desire to attract the attention of the Senate to the testimony of Engineer Lewis M. Haupt, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, who in March last, before your Committee on Interoceanic Canals, when this subject was under consideration in that committee, said:

As to the question of seismic disturbances, I would only add that it has been shown by students of seismology that the presence of active volcanoes act as a safety valve for internal disturbances; and the number of craters along through Nicaragua and Costa Rica being quite large, it affords a vent for any internal stress of the earth, and therefore there are fewer injurious earthquakes in that section of the world than at Panama or elsewhere; and I was very much surprised, in studying that subject, to find that the percentage of earthquakes was lower in Nicaragua than in almost any other portion of the world. Now, we have had some earthquakes in this country recently—one in St. Louis and one in Oregon and many in California—so that, so far as that goes, it shows that there need be little anticipation of trouble from that source.

Senator HARRIS. You say that your investigation shows that Nicaragua is the freest from earthquakes of any country in the world?

Mr. HAUPT. Yes; from serious earthquake trouble; but they have had some earthquakes there. Panama was badly shaken in 1858, and again in 1882, when Colon was rent with a seam across the town. The iron railroad bridge at Barbacoas was shifted out of position. So that the Commission has put those on a parity and dismissed the subject, with the belief that the canal works being buried in the earth would not be seriously interfered with by earthquakes in either case. I think, Mr. Chairman, that that probably covers most of the points.

But it will seem superfluous and also absolutely unnecessary, after the exhaustive speech on this subject on yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], chairman of the committee, for me to pursue the subjects of earthquakes and their probable bearing upon the construction of an isthmian canal any further.

Mr. President, I find it impossible for me to conclude what I have to say unless I should ask the Senate to remain in session for an unreasonable hour, and if the Senate will permit me to go on to-morrow I should like to stop here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. As the Senator from Oregon does not care to go on this afternoon, I will move an executive session.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will yield to the Senator.

PATAPSCO RIVER LIGHT AND FOG-SIGNAL STATION.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12085) providing for the completion of a light and fog-signal station in the Patapsco River, Maryland. The bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce this morning. It makes an additional appropriation of $60,000 for the purpose. I have here the report.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUDLEY CARY.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5140) granting an increase of pension to Dudley Cary.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Dudley Cary, late of Company D, Forty-sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH CREEKS.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. STEWART. I appeal to the Senator from Connecticut to withhold that motion for a few minutes, that I may have the Creek treaty passed. It is a short bill, and it will pass in a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am obliged to leave the Chamber, and I desired to have an executive session at which I should be present, but I will yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. The bill can be passed in ten minutes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4923) to ratify and confirm a supplemental agreement with the Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes.

Several SENATORS. It is a long bill.

Mr. STEWART. It is not very long.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I think I will renew the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 6, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 5, 1902.

CONSUL.

John F. Jewell, of Illinois, to be consul of the United States at Martinique, West Indies, vice Thomas T. Prentis, deceased.

MARSHAL.

William L. Morsey, of Missouri, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Missouri, vice Louis C. Bohle, whose term expired April 17, 1902.

NOTE.—This nomination is to take the place of the nomination of May 26, 1902, of William M. Morsey, the correct name being William L. Morsey.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 5, 1902.

PROMOTION IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Second Assistant Engineer John B. Turner, to be a first assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

POSTMASTERS.

James E. Stevens, to be postmaster at Goodland, in the county of Sherman and State of Kansas.

Daniel Surface, to be postmaster at Richmond, in the county of Wayne and State of Indiana.

Newton R. Spencer, to be postmaster at Greenfield, in the county of Hancock and State of Indiana.

Eugene Lane, to be postmaster at Suncook, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire.

Elisha H. Carr, to be postmaster at Newport, in the county of Sullivan and State of New Hampshire.

Simeon M. Estes, to be postmaster at Meredith, in the county of Belknap and State of New Hampshire.

Edward H. Clough, to be postmaster at Manchester, in the county of Hillsboro and State of New Hampshire.

Frank E. Shoemaker, to be postmaster at Neodesha, in the county of Wilson and State of Kansas.

Alonzo H. Williams, to be postmaster at Holton, in the county of Jackson and State of Kansas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 5, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

GEORGE C. TILLMAN.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Pension Committee, I submit the following conference report on the bill (S. 4071) granting an increase of pension to George C. Tillman, and ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in its place.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits the conference report on the bill (S. 4071) granting an increase of pension to George C. Tillman and asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in its place. Without objection, this course will be pursued. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement to accompany report of committee of conference on disagreeing vote of the two Houses on Senate bill 4071, granting an increase of pension to George C. Tillman.

This bill originally passed the Senate at $25 per month, but was amended in the House to $16 per month. The result of the conference is that the House recedes from its amendment, and the conferees agreed to a rating of $20 per month. Your conferees therefore recommend that the bill pass at $20 per month.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
J. H. BROMWELL,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 4071, "An act granting an increase of pension to George C. Tillman," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the House insert "twenty;" and the House agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
J. H. BROMWELL,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
WM. J. DEBOE,
E. W. CARMACK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BROMWELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HATTIE M. WHITNEY.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Pension Committee, I submit the following conference report on the bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in its place.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in its place. Without objection, this course will be pursued. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement to accompany report of committee of conference on disagreeing vote of the two Houses on bill (S. 4927) granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney.

This bill originally passed the Senate at $50 per month, but was amended in the House to $35 per month. The result of the conference is that the Senate agrees to the House amendment, and your conferees recommend that the bill pass at $35 per month, as it originally passed the House.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
J. H. BROMWELL,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4927) "An act granting an increase of pension to Hattie M. Whitney," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
J. H. BROMWELL,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
N. B. SCOTT,
JAS. P. TALIAFERRO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BROMWELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY], and, if he should require it, thirty minutes.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, when loving hands had consigned to mother earth the mortal remains of William McKinley, that sense of justice which is so predominant in American character demanded in tones seemingly unmistakable that there should be made the clear and distinct declaration that those who plotted treason to the Government and advocated murder of rulers should find that a land enriched by the blood of patriots and martyrs, that a nation broad and boundless in its area as our own, was all too small to hold those few who should openly conspire for its overthrow. The patriotism of our nation believed that almost the first act of the American Congress would be so to legislate that in the future neither a Johann Most nor an Emma Goldman, the more responsible authors of such crime, should escape punishment. If the criminal who commits the overt act is to be punished, how much more should punishment follow those who incite the criminal to the perpetration of his deeds of violence.

Notwithstanding the fact that the first recommendation made by the President in his annual message to Congress dealt with the subject, six months have rolled around, and for the first time this is a topic of discussion in this body. One of America's great orators and statesmen has delivered in this Chamber a eulogy upon the life and character of our late President, but it remains, so far as I am aware, for a member of either House to stand in his place and indicate that the policy to which his life was devoted is still and shall be the polar star by which the destinies of the nation are to be guided. How seldom, if ever, have members of this body invoked his teachings for guidance in matters of difficulty and doubt.

> One of the lives that illumine the ages;
> One of earth's prophets, one of her sages;
> Resteth from labor, ceaseth endeavor;
> Speaketh, though dead, and teacheth forever.

Can we fail to recognize the grandeur of that lofty character who has bequeathed to us for guidance words of counsel and of wisdom applicable to the solution of almost every perplexing problem of government?

In the few remarks I shall make upon the question now before the House, may I crave indulgence in offering some words of tribute reflecting my opinions of the late President? In attempting to do so I can but realize that in pulpit and upon platform tongues voicing the spirit of love and more eloquent than mine own have already done so and will so long as the tale of our country shall be told by orator or historian.

His life is now behind us, but the memory of that life shall ever shine brightly as a beacon light before us. His labors have ended and he has gone to meet his reward. He has solved the great mystery and has passed out into the deep and dark unknown—not dark, unknown, and forbidding to him. When, upon the morning of the day before his death, he asked that the curtains be drawn aside that he might see the beautiful trees, who doubts that even before his death the loving Father, whose counsels he had ever followed and in whose mercies he had ever trusted, drew back the curtain which hides the future and let the weary sufferer look out upon those statelier mansions and behold that fairer tree which grows on either side of the river of life?

William McKinley needs no eulogy. He is beyond the censure or praise of men. Yet to me it will ever be a fond recollection to recall the fact that long before his death he knew the respect and affection I entertained for him. Many of you knew him much better than myself. What, then, must be your memories of this matchless man! Who among us so strong, so patient, so tender? What man in public life so truly represented the Christ spirit or so faithfully followed in His footsteps?

The Republic is young. In the coming generations the history of the present day will be condensed. The names of many men of genius and of patriotism will be forgotten, or but barely mentioned by the historian; but through the ages, so long as liberty is loved, so long as virtue is revered, the names of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley will shine with ever-increasing brightness. [Applause.]

A matchless man, a peerless patriot, rests from his labors, but his works do follow him, and the memory of his works and words remains and shall remain the richest legacy that the fathers of the nation can transmit to their sons. Judged as a statesman, who surpasses him? Judged as a man and a statesman, who is his equal?

I am not here to eulogize William McKinley the statesman, but to speak of William McKinley the man. To repeat the record of his public services, the triumphs of his Administration, is a work of supererogation. Even the children know the condition of the nation, fiscal and industrial, when the chief magistracy of our country was committed to him in trust. He found a deficit in our national budget and left us with an overwhelming surplus. The previous Administration was engaged in selling bonds to meet the expenses of the Government. His Administration has been engaged in the payment of these bonds and lifting the burden of obligation from its citizenship.

In a time of peace, with his predecessor it had been a problem of sufficient revenues. Under William McKinley, even with the great expense of carrying on to successful termination two wars waged for humanity, the problem which confronted the present Congress was what disposition to make of our surplus revenues. He found the artisans of the nation idle; his policy opened the mills and set them to work. He saw paralysis and stagnation in our industrial and commercial life; his fingers pressed the key and started the wheels of industry in motion. He found capital idle and honest labor begging food at the doors of the soup house. He saw misery in countless American homes, and opened the windows and let the sunshine of prosperity stream into the homes and hearts of his fellows. He saw the door closed against the exportation of our products; he threw open to America the markets of the world. He found the value of our exports confined chiefly to our agricultural products, and lived to see our export of manufactured products rival them in value. He found us a nation of importers, and left us on the verge of the successful conquest of the markets of the globe.

His Administration found us a nation overwhelmed with disaster and almost in despair. He found an army of tramps and Coxey marchers. He left us an industrial hive, where wage-earners of every class or calling receive the highest pecuniary reward their services ever commanded. He found labor in lamentations, and sent it forth with songs of rejoicing. He found us insular, and has left us a world power, respected not more for the valor of our arms, not more for the genius of our civilization, than for the moderation and mercy manifested to the conquered. He waged a war with Spain, and in less than three years from the outbreak of hostilities gives Spain again to America as her cordial friend. He waged a war in China, and withdrew our successful forces from that country, leaving with the people of China the knowledge that of all the family of nations the United States is her most unselfish friend. He found us nearly forty years after the civil war still divided, and left us truly United States of America.

I shall not attempt on this occasion to render justice to his qualities as a statesman, and have referred in only the most cursory manner to those matters which are known and read of all men. My thought is to speak of him as a man.

Who that has visited the grand cathedrals of the Old World but has been impressed with their vastness, their glory, their magnificence? The arts of the world have been with all the lavishness of love poured out upon their adornment. Their massive domes, glittering pinnacles, and lofty towers pointing heavenward show the honor that loving hearts do pay to Him who when on earth had nowhere to lay His head. Oh, Galilean, majestic as are the monuments which love doth rear to Thy memory, how much more are Ye honored that in this era there live those who so truly catch the inspiration of Thy master spirit! Commemorate with vast cathedrals, with altars designed in highest art and adorned with richest treasure, the memory of One who walked this earth and preached the gospel of love, worthy, well worthy, all material tributes loving hearts can bestow; but can lofty piles of marble or cunning skill of architect or artisan so honor the Master as one life lived upon the plane where William McKinley lived? Who shall survey his works? Who that has listened to his generous words, who that has known and caught his kindly impulse, but feels himself a truer man therefor? What man entered his presence and left it without seeming to bear away a benediction? The Christian of every sect throughout the world can point to him and say to every scoffer, "Find in this man's life and death your answer."

Not long since one of the personal friends of William McKinley, but of opposite political faith, said, speaking of him, "He was a great politician," meaning thereby that he was a wise and successful leader of his party. He was the greatest and best politician, the wisest and most successful party leader we have ever known. All men could sit at his feet and learn the art of politics as taught by him—love of country, love of man, and love of God. Sincerely and reverently serving all three, what man of his mental grasp could fail to lead to victory? From every American home and heart the call should be for more politicians cast in such heroic mold. The people followed his leadership because he ever sought to lead them toward the highlands of life—social, industrial, and moral. Recognizing as he did his responsibility to his party, he realized still more his obligations to his fellow-men and to his Creator. Ah, truly, here was a "life pure in its purpose, strong in its strife;" a life dedicated to his country in service, a death consecrated to his country in sacrifice.

I do not present him as a flawless man; earth has produced but one such. But search him with all the X rays of human criticism, and point, if you can, to a character more perfect in its equipoise; candid, brave, patriotic, unselfish, chaste in speech and in thought; temperate, truthful, tender, trusting. His political enemies charged him with seeking imperial dominion and aspiring to a crown. They cartooned him as wearing imperial robes, a kingly crown upon his head, and the scepter of power within his hand. Too often, alas, his crown was a thorny one, while the only crown to which he ever aspired he has already attained in the fulfillment of that blessed promise, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." More than once his fellows voted him a triumph as an earthly victor, and, having overcome the world, he is now crowned as victor over the last great enemy—death. He needed no scepter wand to make him master, for he was conqueror and ruler over self. Ah, sir, to such a character death comes not as the end, but the beginning, "not as the curse, but as the coronation."

Who does not honor Ohio for the men she has given to the nation? We can rejoice with you, citizens of Ohio, that it was yours to give him to his country. Rear at his home your monument to his greatness and his goodness, and thus shall Ohio pay still higher honors to her own citizenship. But he belonged to us all, of every State and Territory and dependency. He belonged to the whole brotherhood of man the wide world round; and here at the nation's capital, here at the center of government, here at the scene of his conflicts and his triumphs, here where all interests unite, here upon ground common to all Americans let the patriotism and the Christianity of the land join in the erection of an arch which shall stand as much longer than those of ancient Rome as the virtues of William McKinley surpassed those of the men the citizens of Rome sought to honor. Erect here that monument which shall commemorate his virtues, and when the youth of the land who visit the nation's capital shall ask their fathers "Why this stately pile?" they shall repeat the story of his life; they shall recount his humble beginnings, his fidelity, his patriotism, the triumphs of his statesmanship, his Christian ministrations, and under the providence of God it shall prove a factor in stimulating untold thousands to higher ideals, until from the very summits of life humanity stands triumphant over the forces of evil.

How the world admires, even against its will at times, the strong man, the strong wrestler, the strong swimmer, the strong athlete, the strong warrior, the strong ruler. Truly, strength is glorious amid the daily tasks of life, in the arena of the humdrum as well as in the clangor of battle. Permit me to present William McKinley as the strong man, not because he as helmsman could guide the great ship of state through shoals and breakers into the harbors of prosperity and peace, not that he ever sought to demonstrate that he could bend a Congress to his will and usurp the functions of the coordinate branches of Government. Nevertheless, he was a strong man. He had strength of character and strength of conscience, strength of will to lift himself from humble beginnings and from narrow environments, under God's blessing, to the highest seat of honor and power. He had the strength to stand for truth, for justice, for honor, the strength to keep a steadfast purpose, strength to stand still even when urged to go forward, and that higher strength and courage permitting him to reverse his own judgments when convinced that his position was wrong.

"It takes great strength to train to modern service your ancestral brain;
To lift the weight of the unnumbered years, of dead men's methods, habits, and ideas;
To hold that back with one hand and support with the other the weak steps of a new thought.

"It takes great strength to bring your life up square with your accepted thought and hold it there;
Resisting the inertia that drags back from new attempts to the old habit's track.
It is so easy to drift back, to sink; so hard to live abreast of what you think.

"It takes great strength to live where you belong when others think that you are wrong;
People you love and who love you, and whose approval is a pleasure you would choose.
To bear this pressure and succeed at length in living your belief, well, it takes strength, and courage, too."

William McKinley never failed in such strength or courage.

Goaded by those baser passions which cry out for wider license, ignorance and depravity have struck a blow at liberty; not a blow at one man, but the dagger and the pistol at the heart of 80,000,000 of freemen. He whom we shall ever mourn during these mortal lives was stricken, not for any fault, not by reason of any personal grievance, not for some fancied sin of omission or commission, but because he stood as the sign and symbol of representative government. That shot was aimed, not at our national leader, but at our national life. The one is dead. Shall the other also perish? God forbid! Though stunned with the horror of this tragedy, the Christian patriotism of America believed that the God who guided our fathers at Concord and at Lexington, at Bunker Hill and at Princeton; that He who fed the faltering faith at Valley Forge and crowned liberty the victor at Yorktown; that He who inspired with wisdom the framers of our Constitution; that the God who through long years of civil strife supported those who trod the wine press of his wrath until the bonds of the last slave were broken; that He who from war to peace, from division to unity, from hatred to love, had knit all sections of our country into closer bonds of brotherhood; that He who maketh even the wrath of man to praise Him, would vouchsafe to us the wisdom and courage to meet, arrest, and throttle this slimy monster hatched on foreign soil. [Applause.]

Anarchy lays down as its postulate the declaration, "There is no God." Every schoolhouse on the hill, every church, every benevolent and fraternal organization, every asylum for those feeble in body or mind, every public library and university, every hospital, every impulse of the human heart which finds expression in the ministration to another's need, thrusts the impious lie back down the throat of anarchy. Every star and every planet, whirling through the long swing and sweep of its orbit, guided by unerring law, gives anarchy the lie. When sun and moon, when earth, stars, and planets shall glow by chance or wander aimlessly through the trackless realms of space, controlled only by individual impulse, then, and not until then, shall law be overthrown and anarchy be crowned the victor. Not until night is fairer and brighter than day; not until vice is more to be revered than virtue; not until might wields the scepter and love of right is banished from the consciences of men; not, indeed, until God shall abdicate His throne shall the monstrous cult of anarchy find acceptance either in the minds of men or in the domination and control of matter. [Applause.]

For years, unchecked, organized bands of assassins have plotted murder in our midst. We were not the victims, and we closed our eyes. For years, unpunished, they perfected plans and carried to successful issue the murder of men and women. We heard lamentations in the house of mourning and stopped our ears. For years men have openly, blatantly, defiantly cried out against law and order, have trampled upon the American flag, and marched under the red banner of anarchy, have openly proclaimed their purpose and conspired to overthrow constituent government, and we have sat supinely, because it was easier to sit than to act. Have we even patted them on the back at times because they had a vote? O Lord, that Thy stern rebuke should come is but just. In our agony of sorrow we cried out in bitterness against Thy decree. Would no other sacrifice suffice? Were no other atonement possible? Upon the altar of sacrifice it must be the lamb without spot or blemish.

For the atonement the one perfect man of all the ages hung upon the tree, and even now, as of old, the strongest and noblest, the fairest and purest, the highest and truest, the foremost and chiefest, has laid his life upon his country's altar. As in Rome, the rent in the forum could be closed only by the gift of the most virtuous man in Rome, so this rent must be closed which would otherwise engulf and destroy society and make mankind as fierce and conscienceless as a pack of hungry wolves, which, when they can devour nothing else, rend and feed upon one another. Was ever more monstrous heresy preached on earth, that brute force may work its savage will upon its weaker neighbor, uncontrolled and uncontrollable, may give license to its passions, regarding neither the rights of man nor the laws of God? Are the monuments which mark the advancing steps of nineteen centuries of Christian civilization to be overthrown?

Are the temples wherein is taught the message of love to God and love to fellow-man to be ravaged and made as lairs of wild beasts? Is society to be organized upon the principle that the man with more brute strength than mine may have unhindered his hand in deadly clutch upon my throat, or I may have my hand at the throat of my weaker brother? Shall no man have the right to the fruits of his own field or his own toil? Is the family tie to be dissolved and humanity sink to levels below the brute creation? Has average man yet attained that sense of justice where each may safely act, prompted alone by the desires of his heart and limited only by the strength of his arm or the cunning of his brain? When shall such monstrous teachings meet rebuke? Shall we wait for other victims, or shall we grapple with this enemy now? Shall we wait for it to grow bolder in its insolence, or hesitate until, with knife and pistol at the breast of every lawmaker, our courage shall rise to the occasion? The doctrine so openly advocated by these men in our great cities is a menace to every man and woman on every farm and at every fireside in our broad land.

Can it be possible that any member of this House objects to the general features of this bill? My only criticism of it is that it does not reach far enough. When assassination is publicly advocated, either by a Johann Most, an Emma Goldman, or other emissaries of the powers of darkness, shall there be no punishment for them beyond a possible $500 fine or one year's imprisonment? Shall the criminal who commits the overt act suffer death and the responsible authors of the overt act escape with a fine? Shall we kill the viper and have no redress against those who hatch vipers and place them in the pathways where the feet of humanity must tread?

Shall William McKinley's martyrdom be in vain? No! No! Each drop of his spilled blood calls sternly, not for vengeance, but for justice. Has free speech rights above free action? Is license more than liberty? Shall so-called "freedom of the press" usurp the rights and overthrow the free man? Is treason no longer a cognizable crime? Can the lawbreaker overawe and terrorize the lawmaker? Can men split hairs about States' rights and the rights of anarchists and freedom of speech while the soul of Liberty herself bleeds from gaping wounds? Is God a myth, is self-government a failure? Then let us all cry, "Hoch die anarchie;" forget the virtues of our fathers and prove recreant, not alone to our country, but to our fellow-men and our Creator. Not so. In the strength of our purpose and endowed with the courage of our convictions we will send to anarchy and all her brood the message that Garfield once delivered, when upon the death of Lincoln this nation was plunged in panic and despair, "God reigns, and the Government at Washington still lives."

For the accomplishment of His sovereign purpose God calls one prophet home and lays His mantle upon the shoulders of another. He removes one master workman, but commits to another builder the erection upon broad foundations, after well-defined plans and in symmetrical proportions, the great temple of liberty. He calls one helmsman to higher service, but consigns the wheel to the strong hand, keen eye, clear brain, and stout heart of another pilot, who, in the sunshine and the calm or through the darkness and amid the mad rush of waters, holds in safety upon her steady course our great ship of state, freighted with the aspirations and destinies of 80,000,000 of freemen. In the forefront of conflict one leader falls, but another gathers up the standards of truth and honor and carries them to victory.

William McKinley is no more, but another, possessed of strength of character, with lofty ideals and undaunted courage, pledged to and determined in the execution of the policies of his predecessor, is clothed with the responsibilities of leadership. He is not to be regarded as the president of a faction or party. He is justly entitled to the confidence of every honest American, and stands as the exponent of our national life. And so long as his trumpet tones for guidance give forth no uncertain sound, so long will the patriotic people of America rally to his support, follow his leadership, cheer his heart, and help to lighten the burdens of him who by Providence has been appointed to uphold our national standards, and who in the faithful performance of his duty demonstrates the truth of the statement, "God buries His workmen, but He carries on their work." [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] such time as he desires.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before the gentleman proceeds I should like to submit a request. Mr. Chairman, by an order of the House debate upon this bill was put under the control of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. The gentleman from New York supports the bill that the committee reported. The gentleman from Texas, as I understand it, is opposed to any kind of legislation on this subject. This is quite an important measure, and there are a considerable number of members of this committee in favor of some legislation. They believe, however, that the bill reported by the committee ought to have some important modifications; and yet no opportunity is given to that class of membership to present their views, so far as I can see. When it comes to a vote, that may be an important question. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that before the debate closes I may at some time be allowed thirty minutes in which to present my views upon the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in control of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have already told the gentleman that if there was time after those who wanted to favor the bill had spoken I would yield to him, and I expect to have the time for him. I object at present, because I told him if I could possibly obtain the time he should have it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman only made his promise conditionally. I thought the committee would consent to thirty minutes' discussion of the bill from the standpoint that I have suggested.

Mr. RAY of New York. I say to the gentleman that I think I will be able to give him the time to-day, and if the gentleman will be ready I think he can have the time as soon as the other side have used half an hour or so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am ready at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the recollection of the Chair that the arrangement or division of time was made in the House, and if so the Committee of the Whole is powerless, even by unanimous consent, to change that order. The gentleman can rely, doubtless, upon the liberality of the gentlemen to whom the time was assigned.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Upon the gentleman's statement, I withdraw the request.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say in that connection that there is no purpose on the part either of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] or the gentleman from New York, myself, to interfere with the debate; but when we have promised time to certain gentlemen, either for or against the bill, we can not exactly violate those promises; but I again beg to assure the gentleman that there will undoubtedly be time for him and that it will be yielded to him.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is all the assurance I need.

Mr. LANHAM. There is no necessity for hurrying the time in any way. I want every man who wishes to speak on this subject on either side to have an opportunity to do so. We have time to spare.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, it is with feelings of great diffidence that I, an ordinary layman, venture to enter upon the discussion of a question that has been argued in this forum by such men and in such a judicial manner that even the spirit of John Marshall would hesitate long before entering the debate, controverting anything that had been said by those eminent jurists, the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. Harder still it is to come back to earth and attempt for a moment to discuss practical questions after the beautiful eulogy delivered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] to the memory of our lamented President, William McKinley. His assassination shocked the whole world. More real sorrow was felt all around this world than has been felt upon the death of any man within the memory of men or recorded in the pages of history.

Well do I remember at the time of his death, I was on the other side of the earth, eleven or twelve thousand miles from here, among a foreign people, there witnessing a real sorrow shown by those people for the man and for the Executive. I was present in the Federated Australian Parliament when that body paused in its labors while one of its ministers paid a most touching tribute to his memory. But, as legislators, we must come back to earth occasionally, because we are called upon to legislate not for to-day only, but for all time to come.

There should not be too great haste in legislation. If I might be permitted to prophesy, I should say that if this legislation should be suspended until next winter it would never be heard of again. I sympathize with the motives and realize as thoroughly as any man that in the sentiment prevalent here at this time men who oppose this measure will, at least for a time, be considered open to suspicion.

If I thought there was a word or line in this bill that would protect the life of the Executive of the nation, I would even accept the rest, if it were bad, if I believed it could possibly in any manner accomplish the object to be sought. Legislative bodies act oftentimes under impulse. It has been stated by several who have addressed this House that there is a substantially universal demand throughout the land that some legislation be enacted to protect the life of the President of the United States. Admit it. A measure was introduced in the Senate; such measure passed that body on the 21st day of March. That measure came to the House, was referred to the Judiciary Committee of this House, and we find that body of gentlemen, three or four months further away from that terrible tragedy, at least entertaining a doubt as to whether we have the right, the constitutional right, to enact this proposed legislation. I am free to say if I were to support either bill I would support the Senate bill, because that bill goes directly at the object sought to be attained. The Senate bill provides:

> That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or who shall willfully and maliciously cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

Now, the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, composed of eminent men, as good lawyers, as good jurists, as the eminent body at the other end of the Capitol, substantially say that we have no constitutional right to enact such legislation, and I think I understand correctly the position of the majority of the Judiciary Committee. At least three months' intervening time has convinced a majority of the Judiciary Committee that we have no constitutional right to provide that any person who maliciously kills the President of the United States shall suffer death.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LOUD. I do not care to be interrupted, unless it is on this subject.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is on this subject. The gentleman should understand that no man on the Judiciary Committee doubts the power of Congress to enact a law to protect or to make it a criminal offense to kill the President under the conditions and circumstances named in the House bill, that is, when charged with the performance of official duties or killed because of his official character, etc.

Mr. LOUD. That is what I propose to refer to, Mr. Chairman. The Judiciary Committee are evidently of the opinion that we have no constitutional right to provide that a person who maliciously kills the President shall suffer death unless he be in the performance of his official duties at the time.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is, when the offense is committed within a State. The gentleman ought to put that qualification in.

Mr. LOUD. I assume that it is unnecessary to discuss here the question whether it is committed in United States territory.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is right.

Mr. LOUD. I did not suppose anybody was big enough a fool to think that, layman as I am, I would discuss that question if the offense is committed upon the property of this nation.

Now, then, the Committee on the Judiciary say that you can not do that, to quote their language, unless—while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties or because of his official character or because of his official acts or omissions shall suffer death.

I say again this committee have admitted that unless he is in the performance of his duties that you have no right to enact legislation of this character. So the Judiciary Committee adopt a subterfuge. They say, of course, you can not do this directly, as the Senate have. But in section 18 we have got a presumptive section, which states that at all times and on all occasions the Chief Executive of the nation is engaged in the performance of his duties.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am very anxious that any person who shall kill the President or the Vice-President shall suffer the penalty of death as expeditiously as possible. I want to say in passing that we have not even a precedent that would demand legislation of this kind, even if such legislation were advisable. No man has ever assassinated a President of the United States that has not met immediate punishment, and no man will, permit me to say, in the United States ever take the life of a Chief Executive without suffering punishment if you let the law alone as it is now.

Mr. NEVIN. Will you yield to a question?

Mr. LOUD. How much time did the gentleman from Texas yield to me?

Mr. LANHAM. You shall have all the time you want.

Mr. NEVIN. In the State of Michigan, for example, it would be impossible——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Ohio that he must first address the Chair before seeking to interrupt a member who has the floor.

Mr. NEVIN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LOUD. I have heard the gentleman's question, and I yield to him.

Mr. NEVIN. You can not inflict the death penalty.

Mr. LOUD. I shall watch with some care the vote of the Representatives of the State of Michigan, which State has declared solemnly against capital punishment, and as they here represent upon this floor, I must assume, the sentiment of that great sovereign State, I shall watch with care their votes on this measure.

Mr. NEVIN. The same with New Jersey.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). But, however that may be, that is an incidental question. If there is a State in this Union that does not punish by death an offense of this character, why, there is a place that the President of the United States may keep out of. And I suppose he will still perform his duty, but if it becomes necessary for the President of the United States to go into the State of Michigan, I have no doubt but what he can declare martial law there and protect himself if it becomes absolutely necessary; and so that also is an incidental question, unworthy of discussion with the great judicial minds of the Judiciary Committee.

A gentleman gave me this morning some encouragement, however. He said: "You do not suppose for a moment that the provisions of this bill will ever be executed and called into effect?" Well, I never had thought of that phase of the case; but they might be. But still it may be called into effect, and the United States courts may take jurisdiction, and then they have got to go to another section. First, if you pass the Senate bill against the judgment of this great Judiciary Committee, you have got a provision that is unconstitutional, and the United States courts have jurisdiction, and they try him. He may be acquitted. What then? But, you say, State courts would not lose jurisdiction. I will not attempt to discuss the great question of once in jeopardy, it is wholly unnecessary; a condition of that kind at least, however, would be confusing.

But let us take it under your section 13, where you provide that at all times the President shall be assumed to be in the performance of his duty. Let us suppose, for instance, a case. Take the assassination of President Lincoln at a theater. The assumption is he was in the performance of his duty, as you say. But how are you going to prove it when President Lincoln alone could corroborate that? He is dead. That is the difficulty. The man alone who can prove it has passed away and his lips are sealed forever. President Lincoln might, at the time of his assassination, have been thinking of his public duty, but no other man in the world knew what his mind was thinking of.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I make this suggestion. The gentleman from California, without discussing the propriety of the amendment, that if the amendment became a law it would not be necessary for the Government to prove it, because it is presumed as a fact, and it is necessary for the defendant to rebut it.

Mr. LOUD. That is simply an assumption in the case.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; but——

Mr. LOUD. When you come to get your proof in rebuttal, where is the evidence?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is for the defendant, and so it does not bother the Government.

Mr. LOUD. But he can not show——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If he can not show it he is there, and he is convicted. The practical effect of the section is that the Government does not have to prove it. The respondent must rebut it, and if he can not rebut it he is convicted.

Mr. LOUD. Then, if the construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Maine be correct, it is wise legislation. Let me say that your names will go down in the history as wise jurists, as wise framers of law, in providing an impossibility.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I could go further and show that this is by no means unprecedented; I could give you a lot of State legislation in that line.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think there is anything unprecedented. I believe the case of the Field decision has been discussed as a precedent having some, or believed to have some bearing upon this subject of the protection of the President, and that matter has been determined. What matter has been determined? Simply that the court in this instance have protected themselves. That is all; and there is no court on the face of this earth but what will protect themselves. The judge and jurist is human after he goes on the bench, and the dignity of the bench, the dignity of the jurist, must at all times be maintained.

Here is a case where it was assumed that a gentleman in the State of California had attempted the life of Justice Field. I do not care to discuss the merits of that question. It was believed that if that deputy marshal was tried in the county where the offense was committed, that he would have been hung for murder, and the United States court, in order to protect themselves and its dignity, as it has many a time before, issued orders and mandates that, if applied to anyone else, would be in defiance of all constitutional or statutory law. So you will have precedents everywhere, not always exactly applicable, however, to that case.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman will pardon me, is it not a fact that there never was a trial of this man Neagle; that he never was tried by a jury of his countrymen, but was taken away under a writ of habeas corpus from the State of California, and never was brought before a jury?

Mr. LOUD. Yes. Oh, well, I think if a man will follow the decisions and the edicts of the court and assume them to be applicable to the facts and the law in another case, he will get decidedly muddled. [Laughter.] The difficulty about this case is that I have great faith in the judgment of my friend from New York [Mr. RAY]—he gets excited a little, once in a while—I listened with some pleasure to him, and I listened with pleasure to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEVIN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS], three of that great committee whom, I believe, substantially agree. I listened to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], and I find he entertains different views from the three gentlemen I have just mentioned. I listened to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], whom, I find, entertains different views, and I listened to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]; and so I find on the Judiciary Committee on this great question six members who stand three to three, or three to two and one.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is yet to be heard from. Where he is going to stand on this question I do not know. I saw only one dissent besides that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], and that comes from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS]. I did not see the name of the gentleman from New Jersey attached to the dissenting views. But I think it is an acknowledged fact that 8, or 9, or 10, or 12, or 13 of the Judiciary Committee, after considering this question all winter, have come to the conclusion that the provision of the Senate bill—the first section—is contrary to the Constitution. Do I state the matter correctly?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; the gentleman does not state it correctly. I hope the gentleman from California will allow me the time to answer his question intelligently. I will yield him five minutes additional of my time, although I do not expect myself to occupy that much.

Mr. LOUD. Very well.

Mr. RAY of New York. The Judiciary Committee, after thorough investigation, became satisfied—many of them absolutely and some of them in great doubt—as to the constitutionality of the first section of the Senate bill, and in the report the chairman of the Judiciary Committee said that that section of the bill was unconstitutional if the Supreme Court should ever hold that there is a time when the President can not be said to be engaged in the performance of his official duties—not of an official act, but charged with the performance of duties. All the members of the Judiciary Committee, with three exceptions—three or four—agreed to that proposition. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] differ, because they say that we have the constitutional right to pass that section of the Senate bill, and that it makes no difference whether the President is engaged in the performance of his official duties or not; that he is an officer of the Government, and that therefore it is within the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States to protect him by law and to punish all attacks upon him.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and some other members of the committee, while admitting the constitutionality in their judgment of the bill reported by the House committee, and while denying the constitutionality of the Senate bill, take the ground emphatically, as I understand the gentleman from California does—although I do not know exactly what his position is, and certainly do not mean to misrepresent him—they take the ground that even if Congress has the power to enact the House bill into law, such action will be unwise and unnecessary for the reason that there is ample power in the States to punish the offenses described when committed within the States, and that we already have a law of the United States covering the offenses when committed in the District of Columbia or in the Territories. I ask the gentleman from Texas whether I have correctly stated his position?

Mr. LANHAM. Substantially so, so far as I am concerned. I stated in the views submitted when the bill was originally reported that it was possible, by the ingenious use of language framed to meet a supposititious case, to construct a bill which would be constitutional upon its face and thus confer jurisdiction upon the Federal courts to enter within the territorial boundaries of a State and try offenders for crimes cognizable in the State courts. In other words, I held that by a careful use of language it was possible to make this bill constitutional, and I have not yet assailed the bill on the ground of unconstitutionality.

Mr. RAY of New York. And none of your colleagues took the ground in the Judiciary Committee that it was unconstitutional as now framed?

Mr. LANHAM. I think not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But they did take the ground that the Senate bill was unconstitutional?

Mr. RAY of New York. They did.

Mr. LANHAM. I was not present when the Senate bill was considered by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] knows the fact to be as I have stated.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I believe the opinion was universal among the members of the committee that the Senate bill was unconstitutional.

Mr. LOUD. I am glad that the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and the gentleman from Ohio have gotten into my speech. These explanations present the case exactly as I have understood these gentlemen, though making it a little more clear and concise.

Mr. RAY of New York. I hope the gentleman understands I have no wish to interrupt him or to utter a word during the course of his speech against his will. My only desire is to have a fair presentation of the case.

Mr. LOUD. I think that is right. I think that each gentleman's explanation ought to be before the country. I have no objection to such interruptions. But before I get through I think gentlemen will discover what are my objections to this bill. I am glad to be interrupted. I like to hear from these gentlemen at all times. In fact, I have no objection to an interruption at any time if I have the time to yield. Though sometimes gentlemen say I am loath to yield for interruptions, I have sometimes occupied this floor for three or four hours—pretty good evidence that I do yield for interruptions.

I think, then, that I state the case with substantial correctness when I say that the Judiciary Committee believes that the first section of the Senate bill is unconstitutional.

Mr. RAY of New York. All but two of them.

Mr. LOUD. And the House Committee are seeking to make the bill constitutional by the addition of section 13.

Mr. NEVIN. Oh, no.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not at all.

Mr. LOUD. I yield to the gentleman from New York for an explanation, although I think that after he gets through I shall understand the matter as I do now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman from California has just said that the Judiciary Committee is seeking to make the Senate bill constitutional by the addition of section 13.

Mr. LOUD. In effect, I mean.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; not in effect. That section has nothing whatever to do with the constitutionality of the bill. We make the bill constitutional when we follow the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in determining what the jurisdiction of the Federal Government is. That court says that we have power to define and punish offenses against officers of the Government when those officers are engaged in the performance of their official duties, or when they are assaulted because of their official character, or when they are assaulted because of some official act done or omitted. Therefore we followed the decisions of the Supreme Court, and in the first section by the use of that language seek to make it constitutional. Now, let me speak about the other section, and I think——

Mr. LOUD. I think we agree.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will give the gentleman five minutes more time.

Mr. LOUD. I am more convinced than ever.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, certain gentlemen objected to the use of those restricting terms. They said it threw a burden of proof on the Government that ought to be on the defendant; that is, the Government ought not to be compelled to prove as a matter of fact that the President was engaged in the performance of his duties. Well, now, I say, and the committee says—that is, the majority—the President is always engaged in the performance of—that is, charged with the discharge of his duty, but to make that claim, to put the burden on the defendant, the criminal, we make a rule of evidence presumptive as a matter of fact on the trial that the President was engaged in the performance of his official duties and leave it to the criminal who slays him to prove as a fact, if he can, that he was not.

Now, just one other word. I want to say this: The Supreme Court has decided that there is a wide distinction between being engaged in the performance of an official act and being engaged in the performance of official duties. A member of Congress here in Washington, going from here to his residence, or taking his dinner, is engaged in the performance of his official duties, but he is not engaged in the performance of an official act, as he is here when engaged in making some of his buncombe speeches or doing some other act, such as voting. I want the gentlemen to understand the distinction between being engaged in the performance of your official duties and being engaged in the performance of an official act.

Mr. LOUD. Then the gentleman in section 13 is attempting to enact a legislative fact?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; a rule of evidence.

Mr. LOUD. I know that the gentleman calls it a rule of evidence, but he is attempting to legislate a fact regarding a condition.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; that is not right.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I think, passing away from that provision, I can show to my mind, if to no one's else, that even the great jurists comprising the committee in the Senate and the House are not infallible. The Senate provides in section 3 that any person who shall aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the President, etc., shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding twenty years. In section 5 they provide that where he aids or abets by spoken words or by written or printed words, uttered or published, threaten to kill or advise or counsel another